

Digitized by the Internet Archive in 2007 with funding from Microsoft Corporation

<http://www.archive.org/details/academyliteratur46londuoft>

THE ACADEMY.

A WEEKLY REVIEW OF LITERATURE, SCIENCE, AND ART.

J U L Y — D E C E M B E R, 1894.

VOLUME XLVI.

PUBLISHING OFFICE: 27, CHANCERY LANE, LONDON, W.C.

1895.

LONDON :

PRINTED BY ALEXANDER AND SHEPHEARD, LONSDALE BUILDINGS, CHANCERY LANE, W.C.

CONTENTS OF VOLUME XLVI.

LITERATURE.

REVIEWS.

| | PAGE |
|--|------|
| Atkinson's (James) translation of Nizami's Laili and Majnun ... | 226 |
| — (Rev. J. C.) Memorials of Old Whitby ... | 323 |
| Bain & Whitaker's Philosophical Remains of George Croom Robertson ... | 415 |
| Baker's (James) Pictures from Bohemia ... | 324 |
| Barber's (Henry) British Family Names ... | 98 |
| Barker's (E. H.) Two Summers in Guyenne ... | 442 |
| Belloc & Sheddock's Edmond and Jules de Goncourt ... | 504 |
| Bert's (A. B.) translation of Chailley- Bert's Colonisation of Indo-China ... | 346 |
| Brandl's (Alois) Shakespeare ... | 41 |
| Brooke's (Rev. Stopford A.) Tennyson ... | 24 |
| Brown's (Dr. Robert) The Story of Africa and its Explorers ... | 225 |
| Burton's (Robert) The Anatomy of Melancholy ... | 185 |
| Caine's (Hall) The Manxman ... | 128 |
| — "Cambridge Historical Series" ... | 367 |
| Canton's (William) The Invisible Play- mate ... | 42 |
| Chailley-Bert's (J.) The Colonisation of Indo-China ... | 346 |
| Cobbe, Frances Power, Life of ... | 321 |
| Compayré's (Gabriel) Psychology applied to Education ... | 146 |
| Cotterell's (George) Poems, Old and New ... | 551 |
| Courtney's (W. P.) English Whist and English Whist Players ... | 304 |
| Crockett's The Raiders; Mad Sir Uchtfred of the Hills; The Lilac Sunbonnet ... | 344 |
| Curzon's (Hon. George N.) Problems of the Far East ... | 271 |
| Do Garmo's (Charles) Edition of Lange's Apperception ... | 6 |
| De Trenchard's (Max) West Grin- stead et les Caryll ... | 113 |
| Dacey's (Edward) The Peasant State ... | 145 |
| Dickens's (F. V.) Life of Sir Harry Parkes ... | 297 |
| Dobson's (Austin) Eighteenth Century Vignettes ... | 416 |
| Dostolevski's (Fedor) Biednie Liudi ... | 209 |
| Douglas's (Robert K.) Society in China ... | 250 |
| Drage's (Geoffrey) The Unemployed ... | 272 |
| Dufferin's (Lady) Songs, Poems, and Verses ... | 111 |
| Fasnacht's (Eugène) Select Specimens of the Great French Writers ... | 527 |
| Feilberg's (H. F.) Dictionary of Jut- land Dialects ... | 274 |
| Fiction, Writing, On the Art of ... | 273 |
| Firth's (C. H.) Memoirs of Edmund Ludlow ... | 79 |
| Fishwick's (Lieut.-Col. Henry) History of Lancashire ... | 419 |
| Fletcher's (William I.) Public Libraries in America ... | 209 |
| Flint's (Weston) Statistics of Public Libraries in the United States and Canada ... | 209 |
| Freeman's (E. A.) History of Sicily ... | 295 |
| Froude's (J. A.) Life and Letters of Erasmus ... | 343 |

REVIEWS—continued.

| | PAGE |
|---|------|
| Furneaux's (H.) Cornellii Taciti de Germania ... | 395 |
| Garnett's (Edward) An Imagined World ... | 325 |
| Garnier's (Russell M.) History of the English Landed Interest ... | 130 |
| Gillow's (Joseph) St. Thomas's Priory ... | 207 |
| Gladstone's (Rt. Hon. W. E.) transla- tion of The Odes of Horace ... | 487 |
| Gregory's (Lady) Sir William Gre- gory's Autobiography ... | 391 |
| Hare's (A. J. C.) Life and Letters of Maria Edgeworth ... | 525 |
| Harris's (Frank) Elder Conklin ... | 488 |
| Harrison's (Frederic) The Meaning of History, and other Historical Pieces ... | 441 |
| Hayes's (Captain) Among Men and Horses ... | 82 |
| Hill's (J. Hamlyn) The Diatessaron of Tatian ... | 62 |
| Hirsche's (Dr.) Prolegomena zu einer neuen Ausgabe der Imitatio Christi ... | 208 |
| Houghton's (Louise Seymour) transla- tion of Sabatier's Life of St. Francis of Assisi ... | 96 |
| Hunter's (Sir William Wilson) Bengal MS. Records ... | 23 |
| Hutton's (R. H.) Criticisms on Con- temporary Thought and Thinkers ... | 80 |
| Huysebe's (Wentworth) The Liberation of Bulgaria ... | 528 |
| Jebb's (Mrs.) Life and Adventures of John Gladwyn Jebb ... | 488 |
| Johnson's (Lionel) The Art of Thomas Hardy ... | 297 |
| Jones's (Benjamin) Co-operative Pro- duction ... | 370 |
| Kirby's (W. F.) The Hero of Esthonia, and other Studies ... | 550 |
| Kneuen's (Dr. Abraham) Gesammelte Abhandlungen zur Biblischen Wis- senschaft ... | 322 |
| Lagentiens, The Poetical Works of ... | 188 |
| Landon's (Joseph) Principles and Practice of Teaching and Class Management ... | 228 |
| Lane-Pool's (Stanley) Life of Sir Harry Parkes ... | 297 |
| Lang's (Andrew) Cock Lane and Com- mon Sense ... | 60 |
| Lange's (Karl) Apperception ... | 6 |
| Lavisse's (Ernest) La Jeunesse du Grand Frédéric ... | 250 |
| — Le Grand Frédéric ... | 250 |
| avant l'Avènement ... | 250 |
| Lee-Hamilton's (Eugene) Sonnets of the Wingless Hours ... | 145 |
| Leroy-Beaulieu's (Anatole) The Empire of the Tsars and the Russians ... | 418 |
| Liddon's (H. P.) Life of E. B. Pusey ... | 439 |
| Lilly's (W. S.) The Claims of Chris- tianity ... | 247 |
| Loening's (Richard) Die Hamlet-Tragö- die Shakespeares ... | 44 |
| Lucas's (Mrs. Henry) translation of Songs of Zion by Hebrew Singers ... | 528 |
| MacCunn's (John) Ethics of Citizenship ... | 105 |
| Macpherson, Stuart-Wortley, & Saints- bury's The Grouse ... | 113 |
| Masson's (Frédéric) Napoleon at Home ... | 470 |
| — Napoleon and the Fair Sex ... | 548 |

REVIEWS—continued.

| | PAGE |
|---|------|
| Medley's (D. J.) Student's Manual of English Constitutional History ... | 227 |
| Ménéval's Memoirs of Napoleon ... | 143 |
| Meredith's (George) Lord Ormont and his Aminta ... | 3 |
| Milman's (Lena) translations of Dos- toievski's Poor Folk ... | 209 |
| Montbard's (G.) The Land of the Sphinx ... | 371 |
| Moore's (Dr. E.) Tutte le Opere di Dante Alighieri ... | 505 |
| Nevins's (Dr. J. Birkbeck) Picture of Wales during the Tudor Period ... | 114 |
| Nigra's (Count) Count Cavour and Madame de Circourt ... | 25 |
| Nizami's Laili and Majnun ... | 224 |
| O'Rell's (Max) John Bull & Co. ... | 395 |
| Orleans' (Prince Henri de) Around Tonkin and Siam ... | 346 |
| Payne's (W. H.) translation of Com- payré's Psychology Applied to Edu- cation ... | 146 |
| Pinkerton's (Percy) Adriatica ... | 167 |
| Pitman's (C. B.) translation of the Prince d'Orleans' Around Tonkin and Siam ... | 346 |
| Prevost's (Marcel) Nouvelles Lettres de Femmes ... | 227 |
| Prothero's (G. W.) Select Statutes and other Constitutional Documents illus- trative of the Reigns of Elizabeth and James I. ... | 61 |
| Radford's (G. H.) Shylock and Others ... | 97 |
| Rae's (John) Eight Hours for Work ... | 187 |
| Ragozin's (Mdmé.) translation of Leroy- Beaulieu's Empire of the Tsars and the Russians ... | 418 |
| Ravnsley's (Rev. H. D.) Literary Associations of the English Lakes ... | 59 |
| Rose's (J. H.) The Revolutionary and Napoleonic Era ... | 367 |
| Sabatier's (Paul) Vie de St. François d'Assise ... | 96 |
| Sala's (Georgs Augustus) Things I have Seen and People I have Known ... | 129 |
| Saunders & Roseco's Speeches and Addresses of Lord Derby ... | 503 |
| Saunders's (Bailey) The Life and Letters of James Macpherson ... | 205 |
| Seth's (James) A Study of Ethical Principles ... | 415 |
| Shakespeare, Some German Works on ... | 44 |
| Sherard's (Robert H.) translation of Ménéval's Memoirs of Napoleon ... | 143 |
| Shilleto's (Rev. A. R.) edition of Burton's Anatomy of Melancholy ... | 185 |
| Simpson's (Rev. W. S.) St. Paul's and Old City Life ... | 489 |
| Smith's (Goldwin) translation of Spec- imens of Greek Tragedy ... | 5 |
| Stevenson's and Osbourne's The Ebb Tide ... | 272 |
| Strachan-Davidson's (J. L.) Cicero and the Fall of the Roman Republic ... | 346 |
| Street's (G. S.) The Autobiography of a Boy ... | 62 |
| Swinburne's (Algernon Charles) Studies in Prose and Poetry ... | 547 |
| Symonds's (John Addington) Giovanni Boccaccio ... | 460 |
| ten Brink's (Bernhard) Shakespeare ... | 41 |

REVIEWS—continued.

| | PAGE |
|---|----------|
| Thorburn's (S. S.) Asiatic Neighbours ... | 500 |
| Tomkinson's (Lieut.-Col. William) Diary of a Cavalry Officer in the Peninsular and Waterloo Cam- paigns ... | 166 |
| Torrens's (W. M.) A History of Cabinets ... | 393 |
| Waldstein's (Charles) The Work of John Ruskin ... | 506 |
| Wallis's (J. E. F.) Reports of State Trials ... | 526 |
| Ward's (Wilfrid) Witnesses to the Unseen ... | 127, 168 |
| — (Lester F.) The Psychic Factors of Civilisation ... | 165 |
| Wardrop's (Margery) Georgian Folk Tales ... | 82 |
| Way's (Arthur S.) The Tragedies of Euripides in English Verse ... | 267 |
| Webb's (Sydney & Beatrice) History of Trade Unionism ... | 95 |
| Wedmore's (Frederick) English Epi- cudes ... | 440 |
| Wedgwood's (Julia) The Message of Israel ... | 217 |
| Welsh Orthography ... | 114 |
| Wenley's (R. M.) Aspects of Pessimism ... | 415 |
| Weyman's (Stanley) Under the Red Robe ... | 371 |
| — My Lady Rotha ... | 371 |
| Wilkinson's (Spenser) The Great Alternative ... | 41 |
| Winser's (Justin) Geographical Dis- covery in the Interior of North America, 1534-1700 ... | 43 |
| Wright's (Thomas) Life of Daniel Defoe ... | 369 |
| Wylio's (James Hamilton) History of Eng and under Henry IV. ... | 4 |

NOVELS.

| | |
|--|-----|
| Adams's (Francis) A Child of the Age ... | 507 |
| Adcock's (A. St. John) An Unfinished Martyrdom, and other Stories ... | 373 |
| — A Drama in Dutch ... | 444 |
| Aglaia's Set Free ... | 100 |
| Alexander's (Mrs.) A Choice of Evils ... | 275 |
| Allen's (Grant) At Market Value ... | 344 |
| Altieri's (Princess) My Indian Summer ... | 504 |
| — A New Note ... | 344 |
| Astor's (John Jacob) A Journey in other Worlds ... | 276 |
| Bain's (R. N.) translation of Jokai's Midst the Wild Carpathians ... | 64 |
| Barr's (Robert) The Face and the Mask ... | 318 |
| — (Amelia E.) The Lone House ... | 340 |
| Barrett's (Frank) The Justification of Andrew Lebrun ... | 300 |
| Batson's (Mrs. Stephen) Adam the Gardener ... | 325 |
| Bayley's (Elizabeth Boyd) Zachary Brough's Venture ... | 552 |

NOVELS—continued.

| | PAGE |
|---|------|
| Becke's (Louis) By Reef and Palm ... | 530 |
| Bell's (R. S. Warren) The Businessess of a Busy Man ... | 103 |
| Bickerdye's (John) A Banished Beauty ... | 170 |
| Black's (William) Highland Consins ... | 372 |
| Blackmore's (Clementine) An Agitator ... | 529 |
| Blackmore's (R. D.) Perlycross ... | 209 |
| Blackwood's (Mrs. Hans) In a New World ... | 278 |
| Boevey's (S. M. Crawley) Conscience Makes the Martyr ... | 319 |
| Boyle's (Frederick) From the Frontier ... | 100 |
| Bray's (Clande) Sir Joseph's Heir ... | 28 |
| Broughton's (Rhoda) A Beginner ... | 6 |
| Buchanan's (Robert) Red and White Heather ... | 100 |
| Calder's (Monna) The Daughters of Danassa ... | 396 |
| Cameron's (Mrs. Lovett) A Bachelor's Bridal ... | 516 |
| Carey's (Rosa N.) The Old, Old Story ... | 847 |
| Caumont's (Mme. Armand) A Dish of Matrimony ... | 28 |
| Children of Circumstance, By "Iota" ... | 306 |
| Christian's (Sydney) Sarah ... | 83 |
| Christian's (Nell) Wanted to a Genius ... | 220 |
| Clarke's (Cecil) An Artist's Fate ... | 348 |
| Clegg's (J. Trafford) David's Loom ... | 148 |
| Cloak's (Colin) Norman ... | 230 |
| Cobleigh's (Tom) Young Sam and Sabina ... | 64 |
| Coghill's (Mrs.) The Trial of Mary Broom ... | 84 |
| Conway's (Katharine St. John) Husband and Brother ... | 508 |
| Coppée's (François) Blessed are the Poor ... | 148 |
| Cotée's (Mrs. Edward) A Daughter of Today ... | 132 |
| Couperus's (Louis) Majesty ... | 508 |
| Crane's (Lille) A Lady Dimple ... | 189 |
| Crawford's (F. Marion) The Upper Berth ... | 27 |
| Crellin's (H. N.) Romances of the Old Seraglio ... | 372 |
| Cresswell's (Henry) A Precious Scamp ... | 111 |
| Cunningham's (John) Broomieburn ... | 425 |
| Cuthell's (Edith E.) A Baireuth Pilgrimage ... | 115 |
| Dale's (Darley) The Game of Life ... | 189 |
| Davidson's (Hugh Coleman) Mad or Married? ... | 116 |
| Dave's (W. Carlton) The Confessions of a Currency Girl ... | 160 |
| Dean's (Mrs. Andrew) Lesser's Daughter ... | 415 |
| Diekens's (Mary Angela) A Valiant Ignorance ... | 7 |
| Doctor Quolibet, By the Author of "John Orlebar" ... | 131 |
| Downey's (Edmund) The Merchant of Killonye ... | 160 |
| Doyle's (A. Conan) Round the Red Lamp ... | 471 |
| Dunn's (George) Red Cap and Blue Jacket ... | 83 |
| Durham's (Emily J.) A Woman's Love Lesson ... | 520 |
| Dyan's (Meg) All in a Man's Keeping ... | 99 |
| Edmonds's (Mrs.) Amalgama ... | 445 |
| Edwards's (Mrs.) The Adventurers ... | 323 |
| Elmslie's (Theodora C.) Gladie's Sweetheart ... | 252 |
| Farjeon's (H. L.) Arion the Jew ... | 99 |
| Farr's (Florence) The Dancing Faun ... | 148 |
| Fenn's (G. Manville) The White Virgin ... | 148 |
| Flake's (Stephen) Jack's Partner, and other Stories ... | 46 |
| Fogarty's (J.) A Hunted Life ... | 131 |
| Forster's (Francis) Major Joshua ... | 116 |
| Gerard's (Dorothy) Lot 13 ... | 520 |
| Gilkes's (A. H.) The Thing that Hath Been ... | 100 |
| Ginsling's (Algernon) A Vagabond in Arts ... | 200 |
| Gorkin's (G. S.) The Evil Eye ... | 8 |
| Gold, Six Thousand's Tons of ... | 372 |
| Goldschmidt's (Henry) Our Alma ... | 28 |
| Goldwin's (A.) In Due Season ... | 170 |
| Goncharoff's (Ivan) A Common Story ... | 320 |
| Gordon's (Julien) A Puritan Pagan ... | 8 |
| Grange's (A. M.) Victims of Fashion ... | 115 |
| Gray's (Maxwell) A Conly Freak ... | 7 |
| Green's (Kevyn Everett) Plata ... | 230 |
| Green's (Gerald) The Green Generation ... | 348 |
| Green's (G. & W.) The Diary of a Nobody ... | 46 |
| Hainault's (Lewis) Time and the Player ... | 20 |
| Harcourt's (Alfred) For Love and Liberty ... | 45 |
| Harraden's (Beatrice) In Varying Moods ... | 20 |
| Hetherington & Burton's Led on ... | 251 |
| Hewitt's (E. M.) In a Cynque Port ... | 210 |
| Hilli's (Heaton) The Rajah's Second Wife ... | 296 |
| Hocking's (Silas K.) A Son of Reuben ... | 396 |

NOVELS—continued.

| | PAGE |
|---|------|
| Hodge's (E. B.) Keith Kavanagh ... | 116 |
| Hodgson's (G. E.) Viznettes ... | 132 |
| Holdsworth's (Annie E.) Joanna Trail, Sptuster ... | 210 |
| Hope's (Anthony) The God in the Car ... | 443 |
| Hornong's (Ernest William) The Boss of Taroomba ... | 131 |
| den Guest ... | 326 |
| Howard's (Blanche Willis) No Heroes ... | 210 |
| Howell's (W. D.) A Traveller from Altraria ... | 147 |
| Hume's (Pergus) The Lone Inn, &c. ... | 471 |
| Hutcheson's (Merie) Bravo the Conscript ... | 25 |
| Jokal's (Maurus) Midst the Wild Carpathians ... | 64 |
| Jones's (Charlotte Rosaly) The Hypnotic Experiment of Dr. Reeves ... | 252 |
| Keen's (Sydney) Both Worlds Barred ... | 348 |
| Keith's (Leslie) A Troublesome Pair ... | 148 |
| Kenard's (Mrs. Edward) The Catch of the County ... | 275 |
| Kennedy's (Walter) In the Dwellings of Silence ... | 190 |
| Kenyon's (M. E.) The Story of John Coles ... | 326 |
| Lambelin's (Roger) Fils de Chouan ... | 300 |
| Lander's (Harry) Consul's Passenger ... | 61 |
| Lawson's (Jessie K.) The Curse that Came Home ... | 252 |
| Le Clerc's (M. E.) A Rootless Benc ... | 552 |
| Lee's (Anbrey) John Darker ... | 490 |
| Leigh's (E. St. John) Raymond's Folly ... | 552 |
| Leighton's (Dorothy) Disillusion ... | 275 |
| Leith-Adams's (Mrs.) Colour-Sergeant, No. 1 Company ... | 420 |
| Lemore's (Clara) Penhala ... | 472 |
| Lester's (H. F.) Queen of the Hamlet ... | 552 |
| Locke's (W. J.) At the Gate of Samaria ... | 553 |
| Lucas's (Reginald) Hoist with her own Petard ... | 148 |
| Macdonald's (Rev. J.) Middleton ... | 252 |
| MacHeild's (Alec) A Question of Casuistry ... | 170 |
| MacLachlan's (T. Banks) William Blacklock, Journalist ... | 220 |
| MacLaren's (Ian) Beside the Bonnie Brier Bush ... | 419 |
| MacLeod's (Fiona) Pharais ... | 170 |
| Macquoid's (Katherine S.) Appledore Farm ... | 372 |
| Malot's (Hector) Her Own Folk ... | 444 |
| Marks's (Mary A. M.) Thorough ... | 27 |
| Marryat's (Florence) A Bankrupt Heart ... | 131 |
| Martin's (Mrs. Herbert) Suit and Service ... | 251 |
| McNulty's (Edward) Misther O'Ryan ... | 46 |
| Meade's (L. T.) A Soldier of Fortune ... | 7 |
| Red Rose and Tiger Lily ... | 491 |
| Mel's (F. H.) The Accountant ... | 553 |
| Meredith's (John) Laura Arbutnot ... | 148 |
| Meyer's (Charles) The Shadows of Life ... | 132 |
| Middlemass's (Jean) The Mystery of Clement Dunraven ... | 27 |
| Middleton's (Colin) The Foot of Destiny ... | 83 |
| Monk's (Thymol) An Altar of Earth ... | 508 |
| Moore's (Frank Frankfort) One Fair Daughter ... | 396 |
| Muddock's (J. E.) The Star of Fortune ... | 170 |
| Murray's (D. Christie) A Rising Star ... | 326 |
| Nisbet's (Hume) A Desert Bride ... | 325 |
| Norris's (W. E.) A Victim of Good Luck ... | 300 |
| Oliphant's (Mrs.) A House in Bloomsbury ... | 300 |
| Page's (J. Nelson) The Burial of the Guns, &c. ... | 508 |
| Pain's (Barry) The Kindness of the Celestial ... | 300 |
| Panta Rye, By Erebus and Another ... | 190 |
| Parker's (Gilbert) The Translation of a Savage ... | 46 |
| Paston's (George) A Modern Amazon ... | 7 |
| Patterson-Bathune's (Florence) Bachelor to the Rescue ... | 100 |
| Peard's (F. M.) An Interloper ... | 148 |
| Catherine ... | 276 |
| Pence's (Howard) The Mark of the Deil ... | 326 |
| Pendleton's (Louis) The Wedding Garment ... | 276 |
| Percival's (Dr.) The Flaming Sword ... | 300 |
| Peter's Wife, By the Author of "Molly Bawn" ... | 441 |
| Phillips's (F. C.) A Doctor in Difficulties ... | 472 |
| Mrs. Bouverie ... | 523 |
| Phillips's (Mrs.) The Birth of a Soul ... | 472 |
| Pinkerton's (Thomas A.) The French Prisoner ... | 420 |
| "Pioneer Series" ... | 348 |
| Pryce's (Richard) Winifred Mount ... | 27 |
| "Pseudonym Library" ... | 372 |
| Raimond's (C. E.) George Manderville's Husband ... | 252 |
| Rathburn's (F. P.) Suspected ... | 397 |
| Ruth's A Husband of No Importance ... | 372 |

NOVELS—continued.

| | PAGE |
|--|------|
| Roberts's (Morley) Red Earth ... | 508 |
| Robertson's (Andrew) Nuggets in the Devil's Punch Bowl ... | 508 |
| Ross's (Percy) The Eccentricities ... | 629 |
| Roswell's (Mary) The Friend of the People ... | 251 |
| Russell's (Dora) A Hidden Chain ... | 64 |
| Salway's (Reginald E.) Ventured in Vain ... | 396 |
| Saple's (W., junr.) Uncle's Ghost ... | 170 |
| Saxby's (Jessie M. E.) A Camsterie Nacket ... | 100 |
| Schonsaich-Carolath's (Prince) Melting Snows ... | 608 |
| Sergeant's (Adeline) St. Maur ... | 229 |
| Dr. Endicott's Experiment ... | 471 |
| Saxton's (Maurice J.) Lillieville ... | 491 |
| Sheldon's (Mrs. Georgia) Sister Angela ... | 563 |
| Shen's (Pigtail, The, and other Cues of Anglo-China Life, By Mr. M.) ... | 84 |
| Silver Christ, The, and a Lemon Tree ... | 230 |
| Smith's (Constance) A Cumber of the Ground ... | 63 |
| Somerville's (Ross) The Real Charlotte ... | 45 |
| Spender's (Mrs. J. Kent) A Modern Quixote ... | 490 |
| Stacpoole's (H. de Vere) The Intended Steel's (Flora A.) The Potter's Thumb ... | 63 |
| Steele's (Anna C.) Clove Pink ... | 190 |
| Strange's (Carlton) The Beechcroft Mystery ... | 397 |
| Stretton's (Hesha) The Highway of Sorrow ... | 444 |
| Sundermann's (Hermann) The Wish ... | 508 |
| Sunless Heart, A ... | 83 |
| Swan's (Annie S.) A Foolish Marriage ... | 84 |
| A Lost Ideal ... | 420 |
| (Myra) Shallows ... | 132 |
| Symington's (Maggie) Hollyberry Janet ... | 348 |
| Tadema's (L. Alma) The Wings of Icarus ... | 300 |
| Tennyson's (Mary H.) A Cruel Dilemma ... | 189 |
| Theodoli's (Marchesa) Candiduccia ... | 508 |
| Thomas's (Annie) No Hero, but a Man ... | 46 |
| Treherne's (Mrs. Arthur) The Mill on the Usk ... | 373 |
| Twain's (Mark) Tom Sawyer Abroad ... | 27 |
| Vandam's (Albert D.) The Mystery of the Patrician Club ... | 210 |
| Walford's (L. B.) Ploughed, and other Stories ... | 230 |
| The Hatchmaker ... | 490 |
| Ward's (H. O.) Max Reichner, Pastor ... | 491 |
| Warden's (Florence) A Scarborough Romance ... | 8 |
| West's (B. B.) Sir Simon Vanderpetter and Mending His Ancestors ... | 520 |
| Westall's (William) As a Man Sows ... | 420 |
| Whelwright's (E. G.) The Vengeance of Melea ... | 629 |
| Whitby's (Beatrice) Mary Fenwick's Daughter ... | 63 |
| Winter's (John Strange) Red Coats ... | 170 |
| A Born Soldier ... | 490 |
| Wood's (Walter) A Pastor's Vengeance ... | 210 |
| Woolam's (Wilfrid) With the Help of the Angels ... | 193 |
| Wyld's (Katherine) The Princess Royal ... | 472 |
| Young's (M.) Lost! One Hundred Pounds Reward ... | 300 |

MINOR NOTICES.

| | |
|--|-----|
| Abbott's (Charles Conrad) Travels in a Tree-Top ... | 65 |
| "Academical Dissertations, Catalogues of" ... | 349 |
| Adams's (Ellinger Davenport) The Disagreeable Duke ... | 531 |
| Addy's (S. O.) The Hall of Waltheof ... | 190 |
| "Africa and the East, Bibliographical List of English Books on" ... | 349 |
| Allcroft's (A. H.) History of Greece ... | 101 |
| Allen's (Grant) Post-Prandial Philosophy ... | 84 |
| Anclunty's (Arthur Compton) Oedipus at Colonus ... | 47 |
| Avery's (H.) The Orderly Officer ... | 532 |
| Bain's (F. W.) Body and Soul ... | 140 |
| Barber's (Dr. Henry) Furness and Cartmel Notes ... | 191 |
| Barlett's (John) Concordance of the Works of Shakespeare ... | 326 |
| Bell's (Mackenzie) Charles Whitehead ... | 84 |
| (Mary) Denny Dick ... | 532 |
| (M.) Primrose ... | 532 |
| Boothby's (Guy) On the Wallaby ... | 171 |
| Bo's (Dr. J. Ritzema) Agricultural Zoology ... | 211 |
| Bradshaw's (John) Concordance to the Poetical Works of Milton ... | 327 |
| Bridges's (Robert) Overheard in Aready ... | 445 |
| Buckingham's (Duchess of) Glimpses of Four Continents ... | 170 |

MINOR NOTICES—continued.

| | PAGE |
|--|------|
| Callan's (H.) From the Clyde to the Jordan ... | 531 |
| Chadwick's (J. Cooper) Three Years with Lobengula ... | 253 |
| Challice's (Rachel) translation of Valdes' The Grantee ... | 85 |
| Chatelain's (Heli) Folk-Tales of Angola ... | 307 |
| Children's Playing Games ... | 307 |
| Collard's (Clinton S.) On Sunny Shores ... | 283 |
| Common's (Prof. J. R.) The Distribution of Wealth ... | 47 |
| Conway's (Moncure Daniel) The Writings of Thomas Payne ... | 554 |
| Cupples's (George) Scotch Deerhounds and their Masters ... | 64 |
| Davis's (Richard Harding) Our English Cousins ... | 84 |
| (J. R. Ainsworth) translation of Bos's Agricultural Zoology ... | 211 |
| Dictionary of British Folk-lore ... | 307 |
| Earle's (Alice Morse) Diary of Anna Green Winslow ... | 553 |
| E. H. A.'s A Naturalist on the Prowl ... | 211 |
| Errera's (Leo) The Russian Jews ... | 374 |
| Foster's (Albert J.) Round about the Crooked Spire ... | 191 |
| From Spring to Fall, By A Son of the Marshes ... | 373 |
| Goodwin & White's First Four Books of Xenophon's Anabasis ... | 29 |
| Gordon, General, and Lord Dundonald ... | 373 |
| Graves's (C. E.) The "Wasps" of Aristophanes ... | 276 |
| Green's (E. Everett) Afterthoughts ... | 531 |
| Greville's (Lady) Ladies in the Field ... | 65 |
| Hallard's (James Henry) translation of The Idyls of Theocritus ... | 47 |
| Hamilton's (Gavin) Classic Moods: Latin, Greek, and English ... | 28 |
| (Walter) Dated Book-Plates ... | 340 |
| Hardy's (E. G.) Christianity and the Roman Government ... | 100 |
| Harper's (C. G.) The Revolted Woman ... | 445 |
| Hartland's (E. S.) The Legend of Perseus ... | 397 |
| Hauvette's (A.) Hérodote, Historien des Guerres Médiques ... | 101 |
| Helm's (Elijah) The Joint Standard ... | 47 |
| Hemingway's (Percy) Out of Egypt ... | 531 |
| Hill's (Thomas S.) The Registers of Bramfield, Suffolk ... | 101 |
| Hobson's (J. A.) The Evolution of Modern Capitalism ... | 48 |
| "Incunabula (Leo S. Olshchik's), Catalogues of" ... | 340 |
| Innes's (Arthur D.) Verse Translations from Greek and Latin Poets ... | 276 |
| Jenks's (Edward) Outline of English Local Government ... | 373 |
| Karnahan's (Coulson) Sorrow and Song ... | 253 |
| "Leyden University Professors, Catalogue of the Works of" ... | 349 |
| Löwy's (Bella) translation of Errera's The Russian Jews ... | 374 |
| Lubbock's (Sir John) The Use of Life ... | 445 |
| Lucas's (C. P.) Historical Geography of the British Colonies ... | 6 |
| Mackay's (Thomas) A Policy of Free Exchange ... | 149 |
| Macleod's (H. D.) Bimetallism ... | 149 |
| Mason's (R. B.) Walton and some Earlier Writers on Fish and Fishing ... | 64 |
| Mason's (Captain J.) Twelve Years' Residence on the West Coast of Scotland ... | 65 |
| Miles's (Alfred H.) The New Standard Eloquist ... | 445 |
| Miller's (Joachim) The Building of the City Beautiful ... | 373 |
| Milner's (George) Studies of Nature on the Coast of Arran ... | 253 |
| Monkhouse's (Allan) Books and Players ... | 252 |
| Montagu's (F. C.) Elements of English Constitutional History ... | 190 |
| Muggleton College: its Rise and Fall ... | 416 |
| Nixon & Smith's Parallel Verses Extracts for Translation into English and Latin ... | 28 |
| Park's (Godfrey R.) History of Hedon ... | 101 |
| Paul's (M. A.) Led by Love ... | 531 |
| Peacock's (J. H.) Tales of the Masque ... | 415 |
| Philp & Son's Geological Sketch Map of Western Australia ... | 0 |
| Philpott's (Eden) In Sugar-Cane Land ... | 9 |
| Porter's (Edward) The Englishman at Home ... | 55 |
| Price's (Eleanor C.) John's Lily ... | 531 |
| Ramsay's (Prof. G. G.) Latin Prose Versions ... | 28 |
| Rodrig's (M.) Paul's Partner ... | 532 |
| Ruskin, John, Letters addressed to a College Friend ... | 252 |
| Salk's A King of Dreams and Shadows ... | 373 |
| Scherren's (Henry) Ponds and Rock Pools ... | 211 |
| Scott's (Clement) Pictures of the World ... | 171 |
| Shuckburgh's (E. S.) History of Rome to the Battle of Actium ... | 276 |
| Smith's (W. P. Haskett) "Climbing in the British Isles"—J. England ... | 64 |
| Smith's (Horace) Interludes ... | 253 |

MINOR NOTICES—continued.

| | PAGE |
|--|------|
| Smith's (G. Barnett) Thoughts of William Ewart Gladstone ... | 531 |
| Stables' (Gordon) The Greenland and the Pole ... | 531 |
| Stanford's Map of British South Africa ... | 9 |
| Streatfield's (H. S.) Winifred Leighton ... | 531 |
| Sullivan's (Sir Edward) Tales from Scott ... | 373 |
| Taylor's (Susette M.) The Humour of Spain ... | 445 |
| Carlotta (John M.) Maximilian and ... | 553 |
| Theal's (George McCall) History of South Africa ... | 8 |
| Turner's (B. D.) Advanced Manual of Latin Prose Composition ... | 28 |
| Tutti's (J. W.) Woodside, Burnside, Hillside, and Marsh ... | 211 |
| Valdes' (Armando) Paisio The Grandee ... | 85 |
| "Wakashan Language, Bibliography of the" ... | 349 |
| Walker's (Rev. J. B. R.) Concordance to the Holy Scriptures ... | 327 |
| Wawn's (William T.) The South Sea Islanders and the Queensland Labour Trade ... | 9 |
| Whately, Elizabeth Jane, Life and Work of ... | 554 |
| Winchester's (M. E.) A Double Cherry ... | 531 |
| Wolski, El Doctor ... | 554 |
| Worsfold's (Rev. J. N.) History of Haddesley ... | 191 |
| Wright's (Mabel Osgood) The Friendship of Nature ... | 210 |
| Younghusband's (Captain G. J.) On Short Leave to Japan ... | 171 |

GIFT BOOKS.

| | |
|--|-----|
| Atkinson's (Blanche) The Real Princess ... | 491 |
| Bell's (Clara) translation of Van Eeden's Little Johannes ... | 508 |
| Bowen's (E. J.) The Adventures of Leonard Vane ... | 493 |
| Carrington's (Edith) Five Stars in a Little Pool ... | 509 |
| Church's (Rev. A. J.) The Fall of Athens ... | 492 |
| Clarke's (Mrs. Henry) James Godfrey's Wife ... | 494 |
| Cloves's (W. Laird) The Double Emperor ... | 493 |
| Crompton's (Frances E.) Messire ... | 509 |
| Cutts's (Rev. E. L.) The Villa of Claudius ... | 493 |
| Debenham's (Mary H.) The Whispering Winds and the Tales they Told ... | 509 |
| Dodge's (Mary Mapes) When Life is Young ... | 494 |
| Ellis's (E. S.) The Great Cattle Trail ... | 493 |
| Elmalie's (Theodora) Black Puppy ... | 494 |
| Eubule-Evans's (A.) The Young Pirates ... | 494 |
| Everett-Green's (E.) Shut In ... | 492 |
| My Cousin from Australia ... | 493 |
| Miss Uraca ... | 494 |
| Fawcett's (E. D.) Swallowed by an Earthquake ... | 493 |
| Fenn's (George Manville) The Vast Abyss ... | 493 |
| Forde's (H. A.) Across Two Seas ... | 494 |
| Garrett's (E.) Rob Bethune's Double ... | 494 |
| Hamilton's (J. A.) A Mountain Path, and other Talks to Young People ... | 494 |
| Henry's (Re) The Queen of Beauty ... | 491 |
| Henty's (G. A.) Wulf the Saxon ... | 492 |
| The Heart of the Rockies ... | 510 |
| Harvey's (Maurice H.) The Reef of Gold ... | 493 |
| Home's (Countess) Charlie Trench ... | 494 |
| Hope's (Ascot R.) Heroes in Homeopun ... | 493 |
| Tubby ... | 509 |
| Horsley's (Reginald) The Yellow God ... | 493 |
| Howard's (Blanche Willis) A Battle and a Boy ... | 491 |
| Hutchinson's (Horace) To Punish the Czar ... | 492 |
| Jersey's (Countess of) Maurice ... | 491 |
| Johnstone's (David Lawson) The Rebel Commodore ... | 509 |
| Knatchbull-Hugessen's (Hon. Eva) The Satellite, and other Stories ... | 509 |
| Lord's (Mrs. F.) Tales of St. Paul's Cathedral ... | 493 |
| Mackenzie's (Hannah B.) Crowned Victor ... | 494 |
| Magie Half-Crown, The . By the Author of "Crib and Fly" ... | 494 |
| Mansford's (Charles J.) Shafts from an Eastern Quiver ... | 493 |
| Marshall's (Emma) Lizette ... | 494 |
| Meade's (L. T.) Betty ... | 500 |

GIFT BOOKS—continued.

| | |
|--|-----|
| Miles's (Alfred H.) Fifty-two Stories of Boy Life ... | 491 |
| Girl Life ... | 492 |
| Molesworth's (Mrs.) Olivia ... | 494 |
| Moore's (F. Frankfort) The Two Clippers ... | 492 |
| Moulton's (E.) The Adventures of a Breton Boy ... | 492 |
| Mulholland's (Rosa) Banshee Castle ... | 509 |
| Newell's (P. S.) Topsy and Turveys ... | 509 |
| Nisbet's (Hume) Her Loving Slave ... | 492 |
| Overton's (Robert) "Lights Out!" ... | 510 |
| Oxley's (J. Macdonald) In the Wilds of the West Coast ... | 492 |
| My Strange Rescue, and other Stories ... | 494 |
| Pickering's (Edgar) In Press-Gang Days ... | 510 |
| Potter's (E. Scarlett) Walter Gaydon ... | 494 |
| Smith's (C. E.) Enchanted Ground ... | 494 |
| Stables's (Gordon) From Ploughshare to Pulpit ... | 493 |
| Steele's (Robert) The Story of Alexander ... | 491 |
| St. Leger's (Hugh) South-west and Sword ... | 492 |
| Swan's (Maggie) Through Love to Repentance ... | 494 |
| Thorn's (Isamay) Happy-go-Lucky ... | 491 |
| The Harringtons at Home ... | 494 |
| Van Eeden's (Frederik) Little Johannes ... | 598 |
| Vogel's (Jetta) An Unwritten Tale ... | 494 |
| White's (Roma) Moonbeams and Brownies ... | 509 |
| Wynne's (Dr. G. R.) Ralph Clifford ... | 493 |

THEOLOGICAL LITERATURE.

| | |
|--|-----|
| Bartlett's (J. Vernon) Early Church History ... | 301 |
| Beer's (Dr. Georg) Individual- und Gemeindepalmen ... | 116 |
| Bennett's (W. H.) The Books of Chronicles ... | 301 |
| Crocker's (Joseph Henry) The New Bible and its Uses ... | 116 |
| Driver's (Prof.) Introduction to the Old Testament Literature ... | 117 |
| Farrar's (F. W.) The Second Book of Kings ... | 301 |
| Lovett's (Richard) The Printed English Bible, 1525-1885 ... | 301 |
| Marson's (Charles L.) The Psalms at Work ... | 301 |
| Marti's (Karl) August Kayser's Theologie des Alten Testaments ... | 117 |
| Robertson's (J. N. W. B.) The Liturgies of John Chrysostom and Basil the Great, &c. ... | 301 |
| Walker's (Rev. J. B. R.) Concordance to the Holy Scriptures ... | 327 |

MINOR POETRY.

| | |
|--|-----|
| Bates's (Ario) The Torch Bearers ... | 230 |
| Bellezza's (Paolo) Le Ultime Poesi di Alfredo Tennyson ... | 302 |
| Bradley's (Reuben) The Flute of Athena ... | 231 |
| Chapman's (Elizabeth Rachel) A Little Child's Wreath ... | 132 |
| Clark's (K. McCosh) Persephone, and other Poems ... | 132 |
| Davenport's (David) Epictetus, and other Poems ... | 530 |
| Fullarton's (Ralph Maelod) Lallan Songs and German Lyrics ... | 132 |
| Gosse's (Edmond) In Russett and Silver ... | 530 |
| Hankin's (Mary L.) Year by Year ... | 421 |
| Herbert's (Auberon) Windfall and Water-drift ... | 531 |
| Here and There Lyrics . By E. A. N. ... | 530 |
| Homeward Songs by the Way . By A. E. ... | 241 |
| Idylls of the Dawn ... | 231 |
| Kendall's (May) Songs from Dreamland ... | 231 |
| Lindsay's (Lady) The King's Last Vigil ... | 530 |
| Major's (A. F.) Sagas and Songs of the Norsemen ... | 530 |
| Matheson's (Annie) Love's Music, and other Poems ... | 277 |
| McCall's (Patrick Joseph) Irish Nominis ... | 530 |
| Mitchell, Langdon Elwyn, Poems by ... | 230 |
| Morris's (Harrison S.) Madonna, and other Poems ... | 421 |
| Parkor's (Gilbert) A Lover's Diary ... | 132 |
| Phillips's (Stephen) Erebus ... | 248 |

MINOR POETRY—continued.

| | |
|--|-----|
| Prestage's (Edgar) Anthro de Quental ... | 133 |
| Rawnsley's (H. D.) Idylls and Lyrics of the Nile ... | 277 |
| Rhys' (Ernest) A London Rose, and other Rhymes ... | 248 |
| Ruete's (Edmund) Ausgewählte Gedichte von Robert Browning ... | 301 |
| Stanley's (A. an) Love Lyrics ... | 530 |
| Stockbridge's (George Herbert) Bader the Poet ... | 530 |
| Sturgis's (Julian) A Book of Songs ... | 231 |
| Thayer's (William Roseoe) Poems New and Old ... | 421 |
| Williams's (Francis) Howard The Flute-Player, and other Poems ... | 421 |

ORIGINAL VERSE.

| | |
|--|-----|
| Advice to a Young Blackbird ... | 150 |
| At Harvest ... | 172 |
| Cheviots, The, seen from the North ... | 278 |
| "Failed" ... | 10 |
| Freedom ... | 133 |
| Infinite, The ... | 88 |
| In Memoriam: Prof. John Nichol ... | 351 |
| ton, K.C.B. ... | 473 |
| In Rosae Honorem ... | 329 |
| Joyce, Dr. Patrick Weston, To ... | 375 |
| Life's Epilogue, A ... | 67 |
| Love in Autumn ... | 399 |
| Magdalen Bridge, From ... | 423 |
| Morgue, At the ... | 49 |
| Part and Counterpart ... | 447 |
| Pater, Walter ... | 102 |
| Poet's Meed, The ... | 303 |
| Press-Gang, The ... | 232 |
| "Primavera," of Rodrigues Lobo, From the ... | 118 |
| Rex Moritur Exsul ... | 213 |
| R. L. S. ... | 533 |
| Roundel of Years, A ... | 555 |
| Summer Sonnets from my Garden ... | 254 |
| Virelay ... | 511 |
| Webster, Augusta ... | 192 |

ORIGINAL ARTICLES.

| | |
|---|--|
| Bodleian Library, The ... | 11 |
| Civil List Pensions ... | 11 |
| Diocesan Registers, Notes from the ... | 151 |
| English, The New School of, at Oxford ... | 511 |
| Fountains Sale, The ... | 31 |
| Kinders, The: A Note ... | 399 |
| Slavica ... | 151, 303 |
| Teaching University for London, A ... | 11 |
| University Jottings ... | 10, 29, 40, 69, 102, 118, 160, 172, 212, 254, 278, 303, 328, 350, 374, 398, 423, 446, 473, 511, 533, 555 |

CORRESPONDENCE.

| | |
|--|-------------------------|
| Addison, Pope's Lines on ... | 449 |
| "Alichino" ... | 257 |
| America, The Peopling of ... | 173 |
| Baginbun Stone, The ... | 216, 235, 282, 305, 377 |
| "Ben Jonson, The Best Plays of" ... | 425, 449 |
| Betrothed Woman, Russian Name for a ... | 306, 331 |
| Browne, William, of Tavistock ... | 134 |
| Canterbury Tales, MSS. of the ... | 235 |
| Carew Stone, The ... | 257 |
| Carleton, Captain, Memoirs of ... | 104 |
| Chaucer's Works, The Canon of ... | 67 |
| "Prioresses Tale," Sources of ... | 153, 195 |
| Child-Marriage, Attempted, near Leominster in 1675 ... | 174 |
| Claragh, Ogham Inscription at ... | 154 |
| Covenanting Miracles ... | 376, 424 |
| Dante's References to Alexander the Great in India ... | 13 |
| Defoe, Autograph MS. by ... | 280 |
| Character of ... | 513 |
| "Dinner" ... | 50, 87 |
| "Domus Exilis Plutonia" ... | 425 |
| Donard, Ogham Inscription at ... | 118, 135, 174, 196 |
| Drage's (Geoffrey) The Unemployed ... | 306 |
| Ecclesiastes and the Psalter ... | 103 |
| and the Book of Job ... | 536, 558 |

CORRESPONDENCE—continued.

| | |
|--|-----------------------------------|
| Ethics, Greek ... | 538 |
| Faust Legend, The ... | 12 |
| Fethard Castle Stone, The ... | 257, 305, 353, 377 |
| "Fortuna Maior" ... | 352 |
| George (the First), Old Irish Glosses on ... | 50 |
| "God bless the Cow!" ... | 119 |
| Gothic King, the last, Tomb of ... | 13 |
| Gowran, Ogham Inscription at ... | 154 |
| Gregorian Sacramentary, Newly discovered Recension of ... | 280, 306, 331 |
| Group C and the Three Priests in the "Canterbury Tales" ... | 86, 104 |
| Halle, Honorary Degrees at ... | 120, 135 |
| "Hamlet," New Interpretation of a line in ... | 538 |
| "Hellequin, La Mesnie" ... | 257 |
| Hind with the Golden Horns, The ... | 419 |
| Homer, Rev. George, and the Coptic Versions ... | 377 |
| Ignatius (St.) and the New Syriac Gospel ... | 424 |
| Inscription in Unknown Letters on Baginbun Head, Wexford ... | 216 |
| Irish (Old) Glosses on the First George ... | 50 |
| Job, the Book of, and Ecclesiastes ... | 536, 558 |
| Killeen, Ogham Inscriptions at ... | 154 |
| Lavisie, M. Ernest ... | 282 |
| "Longanimity" ... | 419 |
| "Loover," The, of a Hall ... | 424, 536, 559 |
| Maimonides, Discovery of an unknown Work of ... | 195 |
| Menin ... | 30 |
| "Mersey," The Derivation of ... | 449 |
| Myths of Cosmogony by Dr. Politea ... | 425 |
| Namur; Ramillies; Menin; Original Letters ... | 30 |
| Nun Chaplain, Tho, in the "Canterbury Tales" ... | 104 |
| Ogham Inscriptions in Ireland ... | 118, 135, 154, 558 |
| X at Denard ... | 118, 135, 174, 196 |
| Inscriptions in Scotland ... | 330 |
| Pentateuch, Septuagint, Samaritan, and Hebrew Texts of the ... | 68 |
| Plagiarism, A Charge of ... | 373, 402, 423 |
| Pope's Lines on Addison ... | 449 |
| Priests, The Three, in the "Canterbury Tales" ... | 86, 104 |
| Preater, The, and Ecclesiastes ... | 103 |
| Psychology, The New ... | 402 |
| Rahab's Place in Dante's Paradise ... | 216 |
| Ramillies ... | 30 |
| Servener's Introduction to the New Testament ... | 217, 511 |
| Septuagint versus Hebrew Text of the Bible ... | 256, 280, 305, 329, 352, 376 |
| Seth's (James) Study of Ethical Principles ... | 538 |
| Sinaitic Codex of the Gospels ... | 400, 424, 447, 474, 512, 534, 556 |
| Slang, What is it? ... | 13 |
| "Song of Solomon," Has it been expurgated? ... | 12 |
| Stowe Missal, The, and St. Patrick ... | 304 |
| St. Patrick, Unknown Hymn in Honour of ... | 377 |
| Symonds's (J. A.) Giovanni Boccaccio ... | 512 |
| "Tank," Etymology of ... | 174 |
| Vita Nuova , A Variant in the ... | 448 |
| War, Losses in, Ancient Method of computing ... | 134, 216 |
| "Widdersins" ... | 306 |

OBITUARY.

| | |
|--|-----|
| Bullen, George, C.B. ... | 303 |
| Dobbe, Prof. John ... | 103 |
| Froude, James Anthony ... | 329 |
| Greenhill, William Alexander, M.D. ... | 232 |
| Greenwood, Dr. J. G. ... | 254 |
| Holmes, Dr. Oliver Wendell ... | 279 |
| Latras, Dionysios ... | 151 |
| Millard, Rev. James Elwin, D.D. ... | 232 |
| Mowat, J. L. G. ... | 102 |
| Nieloh, Prof. John ... | 303 |
| Nijhoff, Martinus ... | 232 |
| Pater, Walter ... | 102 |
| Salmoné, Anthony Habib ... | 556 |
| Stevenson, Robert Louis Balfour ... | 533 |
| Veitch, Dr. John ... | 172 |

NOTES.

| | |
|--|--------|
| Bodleian Library, Annual Report of the Curators of the ... | 49, 66 |
| Fifteenth Century | |
| Prints purchased for ... | 103 |

NOTES—continued.

| | PAGE |
|--|----------|
| Bowdoin College, Maine | 159 |
| Cambridge University Degrees for advanced study and research | 350, 446 |
| Antiquarian Society | 533 |
| "Literary Training" at | 555 |
| Chirality, A Problem of | 150 |
| Cobham's (Claude Delaval) Attempt at a Bibliography of Cyprus | 10 |
| Early English Text Society's Publica- tions | 85 |
| Gloucestershire Literature, Biblio- grapher's Manual of | 551 |
| Harvard University, Graduate School of 278 | |
| Hebrew Book of the Jubilees | 328 |
| Jowett, Prof., Marble Bust of | 153 |
| Kelmscott Press Publications | 251, 554 |
| Land, Archbishop, 250th Anniversary of the Death of | 554 |
| Matriculations at Oxford and Cambridge 328 | |
| New Spalding Club Annual Meeting | 555 |
| Novels, Three-Volume, The question of | 48 |
| Table of Selling-prices of | 66 |
| Oxford University Honorary Degrees | 118 |
| Finances | 350 |
| Post-Graduate Study at | 422 |
| Honours, 1220-1891 | 423 |

NOTES—continued.

| | PAGE |
|--|------|
| Oxford Delegacy of Non-Collegiate Students at | 416 |
| Bibliography of Printing and Publishing at | 533 |
| Sanders, Mr. Samuel, Bequests by | 66 |
| Science Research Scholarships | 66 |
| Solters' Pocket Bible, The | 102 |
| Spinoza Collection bequeathed to Cornell University | 66 |
| St. Andrews University L.A. Examina- tion | 85 |
| Tasso, Torquato, Third Centenary of the Death of | 48 |
| Weismann, Prof., on Romanes | 150 |

CONTENTS OF THE JOURNALS.

| | |
|---|-----|
| Altpreussische Monatsschrift | 255 |
| Antiquary 10, 118, 192, 303, 398, 422, 511, 532 | |
| Artist, Photographer, and Decorator | 328 |

CONTENTS OF THE JOURNALS—contd.

| | PAGE |
|--|------------------------------|
| Asiatic Quarterly Review | 232, 532 |
| Atalanta | 302 |
| Author | 172 |
| Blackwood's Magazine | 232, 422 |
| Boletín of the Real Academia de la Historia | 49, 255, 473, 534 |
| Boy's Own Paper | 302 |
| British Chess Magazine | 118 |
| Canadian Bookseller | 133 |
| Cassell's Magazine | 398, 532 |
| Century Magazine | 328, 398, 532 |
| Chambers's Journal | 532 |
| Chameleon | 472 |
| Contemporary Review | 422 |
| Country Month by Month, The | 65 |
| Economic Journal | 213, 556 |
| Emmanuel College Magazine | 118 |
| English Historical Review | 133 |
| English Illustrated Magazine | 212 |
| Expositor | 103, 172, 279, 375, 473, 555 |
| Expository Times | 555 |
| Fortnightly Review | 422 |
| Good Words | 302, 398, 555 |
| Hazell's Annual | 472 |
| Hermathena | 212 |
| Humanitarian | 232, 328 |
| Idler | 212 |

CONTENTS OF THE JOURNALS—contd.

| | PAGE |
|--------------------------------|-----------------------------|
| Jewish Quarterly | 86, 447, 532 |
| Liberty Review | 398 |
| Little Folks | 510 |
| Mind | 351 |
| Minerva | 473 |
| Monthly Packet | 555 |
| National Review | 328, 422, 532 |
| Newbury House Magazine | 422 |
| New Review | 66, 133, 212, 422, 532, 555 |
| North American Review | 350, 472 |
| Oxford Magazine | 302 |
| Pall Mall Magazine | 302 |
| Psychological Review | 351 |
| Quiver | 328, 422, 532 |
| Reliquary | 232 |
| Reviata Contemporanea | 255 |
| Scribner's | 398 |
| Senate | 328, 532 |
| St. James's Budget | 232 |
| Sunday Magazine | 532 |
| Theologische Tijdschrift | 40, 172, 375 |
| United Service Magazine | 302 |
| Westminster Budget | 398, 472 |
| Yellow Book | 67 |
| Young Man, The | 398, 532 |
| Young Woman, The | 398 |

SCIENCE.

REVIEWS.

| | PAGE |
|---|------|
| Bonafous' (Raimund) De Sex, Proprietis Amoris et Poesi | 88 |
| Brown's (James) The Forester | 355 |
| Delitzsch's (Fr.) Assyrisches Hand- wörterbuch | 403 |
| Drummond's (Henry) The Lowell Lec- tures on the Ascent of Man | 13 |
| Fick's (Aug.) Die Griechischen Perso- nenamen | 217 |
| Haldane & Simson's translation of Hegel's Lectures on the History of Philosophy | 32 |
| Hegel's (G. F. W.) Lectures on the History of Philosophy | 32 |
| Hegel's (G. F. W.) Philosophy of Mind | 32 |
| Hehn's (Victor) Kulturpflanzen und Hausthiere in ihrem Uebergang aus Asien nach Griechenland und Italien | 282 |
| Jespersen's (Otto) Progress in Lan- guage | 538 |
| Lafaye's (Georges) Calulte et ses Moyens | 377 |
| Miller's (E.) edition of Scrivenor's Introduction to the Criticism of the New Testament | 559 |
| Müller's (Prof. Max) Lectures on the Vedāta Philosophy | 155 |
| Monas-Arnold's (W.) Dictionary of the Assyrian Language | 475 |
| Nisbet's (John) Studies in Forestry | 175 |
| Scrivenor's (F. H. A.) edition of Hehn's Origin of Cultivated Plants and Domesticated Animals | 282 |
| Scrivenor's (F. H. A.) Introduction to the Criticism of the New Testament | 559 |
| Simcox's (E. J.) Primitive Civiliza- tions | 331 |
| Smith's (Worthington G.) Man, the Primal Savage | 120 |
| Spinoza, Benedict de, The Ethic of | 32 |
| Stephen's (O. Leslie) Sir Victor Brooke, Sportsman and Naturalist | 450 |
| Summers's (W. C.) A Study of Valerius Placcus | 306 |
| Terrien de Lacouperie's (Dr.) Begin- nings of Writing in Central and Eastern Asia | 425 |
| Thomas's (Llewelyn) The Earliest Translation of the Old Testament into the Basque Language | 101 |
| Tutts's (Prof. James H.) translation of Windeband's History of Philosophy | 32 |
| Tyrell & Purser's The Correspondence of M. Tullius Cicero | 258 |
| Wallace's (William) translation of Hegel's Philosophy of Mind | 32 |
| White's (W. Hale) translation of The Ethic of Benedict de Spinoza | 32 |
| Windeband's (Dr. W.) History of Philosophy | 32 |
| Wyatt's (A. J.) Beowulf | 69 |

MINOR NOTICES.

| | PAGE |
|---|------|
| American Journal of Mathematics | 196 |
| Behrens's (Prof. H.) Manual of Micro- chemical Analysis | 236 |
| Bertin's (G.) The Populations of the Fatherland of Abraham | 308 |
| Billerbeck's (A.) Susa | 308 |
| Bonavia's (E.) The Flora of the Assyrian Monuments | 307 |
| Bower's (Prof. F. O.) Practical Botany for Beginners | 136 |
| Carnegie's (Douglas) Law and Theory in Chemistry | 235 |
| D'Ocagne's (M. M.) Le Calcul Simplifié | 190 |
| Dupuis's (N. F.) Elements of Synthetic Solid Geometry | 52 |
| Glister's (Dr. John) Dr. William Smellie and his Contemporaries | 559 |
| Gregory's (J. W.) translation of Loe- wison-Lessing's Rock-forming Minerals | 156 |
| Henry's (Victor) Short Comparative Grammar of English and German | 283 |
| Hime's (Lieut. Col. H. W. L.) The Outlines of Quaternions | 190 |
| Holder's (Dr. Alfred) Alt-Celtischer Sprachschatz | 283 |
| Lefèvre's (André) Race and Language | 514 |
| Ley's (Rev. W. O.) Cloudland | 500 |
| Loewison-Lessing's (F.) Tables for the Determination of the Rock- forming Minerals | 156 |
| Mukhopadhyay's (Asutosh) Elementary Treatise on the Geometry of Conics | 52 |
| Niehmr's (Carl) Geschichte des ebrä- ischen Zeitalters | 514 |
| Oliver's (Prof. F. W.) translation of Von Marilaun's Natural History of Plants | 135 |
| Paton's (G. R.) Plutarchi Pythici Dialogi Tres | 53 |
| Pauli's (Dr. Carl) Altitalische Forsch- ungen | 250 |
| Pringle's (Andrew) Practical Photo- micrography | 217 |
| Quain's (Sir Richard) Dictionary of Medicine | 70 |
| Richardson & Ramsey's Modern Plane Geometry | 52 |
| Scott's (D. H.) Introduction to Struc- tural Botany | 136 |
| Smith's (John) Stalactites and Stalag- mites of the Cleaves Cove, Ayrshire | 217 |
| (R. Horton) Theory of Condi- tional Sentences in Greek and Latin | 356 |
| Sonntag's (C. O.) A Pocket-Flora of Edinburgh and the Surrounding District | 70 |
| Stephens's (Prof. George) The Runes, Whence came They? | 258 |
| Summe's (Hans) Tripolitanisch-tunes- ische Beduinenlieder | 515 |
| Von Marilaun's (Kerner) Natural His- tory of Plants | 135 |
| Vyryan's (Rev. T. G.) Analytical Geometry for Beginners | 52 |
| Wilson's (W. N.) Manual of Practical Logarithms | 196 |
| Weissbach & Baug's Die altpersischen Keilschriftenschriften | 307 |
| Wood's (Henry) Invertebrate | 158 |

ORIGINAL ARTICLES.

| | PAGE |
|--|----------|
| Anthropological Jottings | 176, 197 |
| Egypt, Literary Work in | 52 |
| Hieroglyphs in Crete | 136 |
| India, Vernacular Literature in | 89 |
| Indian Jottings | 309 |
| Johns Hopkins Oriental Seminary at | 105 |
| Meghaduta of Kālidāsa, The | 196 |
| Research Laboratory, New, at the Royal Institution | 15 |
| Abyssinian Inscriptions of Mr. Theo- dore Bent | 175, 217 |
| Andamans, The, Mistake about | 515, 539 |
| Astronomy, Babylonian and Greek | 379 |
| Hittite Inscriptions, So-called | 450 |
| Hyman Homeric (Ed. Goodwin, 1893) | 218 |
| Jenson, Prof., on the Hittite Inscriptions | 259 |
| Lindum, Was it a Colonia? | 380 |
| Margolich's "Arabic Papyri of the Bodleian Library" | 237 |
| Planets, Names of the, in the "Pistis Sophia" | 309 |
| Ripalda, Spanish Catechism of, Cam- panag's Basque Translation of | 560 |
| Suetonius's Life of Lucretius, Newly- discovered Fragments from | 236 |

CORRESPONDENCE.

OBITUARY.

| | |
|---------------------------------------|----------|
| Apte, Mahadeo Chinnaji | 403 |
| Darmesteter, James | 333, 380 |
| De Lacouperie, Prof. Terrien | 398 |
| Dillmann, Prof. August | 33 |
| Malan, Rev. Solomon Cesar, D.D. | 451 |
| Mallery, Col. Garriek | 426 |
| Topley, William, F.R.S. | 259 |

SCIENCE NOTES.

| | |
|--|-----|
| Anthropometry, Italian | 176 |
| Basque Race, The | 176 |
| British Association Grants for Scientific Purposes | 136 |
| Japanese Ethnology | 176 |
| Marine Biological Association, Report of Council of the | 53 |
| Royal Society's Medals, 1894 | 403 |

PHILOLOGY NOTES.

| | PAGE |
|--|------|
| Basque Pastoral of St. Helen of Con- stantinople | 71 |
| Dialect Society, American | 560 |
| English Words which have gained or lost an Initial Consonant by Attrac- tion | 127 |
| Hasdar Mirza's Tarikh-i-Rashidi | 404 |
| Hausa Language, The | 404 |
| Palestinian Syriac Lectionary, MSS. of the | 156 |
| Paton's (G. R.) Plutarchi Pythici Dialogi Tres | 53 |
| Prix Bordin (Académie des Inscriptions) | 516 |
| Sanskrit MSS. of the Mahārāja of Kashmir | 300 |
| Spain, Earliest mention of, in European Literature | 156 |
| Thomsen's (Prof., Vilhelm) Twenty- five Years' Jubilee | 15 |
| Tibetan Language and Literature, Study of | 71 |
| Wright's (Dr. Joseph) English Dialect Dictionary | 560 |

REPORTS OF SOCIETIES.

| | |
|--------------------------------------|----------|
| Anglo-Russian Literary Society | 15, 121, |
| Aristotelian Society | 177, 405 |
| Asiatic Society | 404, 452 |
| British School at Athens | 540 |
| Cambridge Philological Society | 71 |
| Antiquarian Society | 404 |
| Carlyle Society | 452, 516 |
| Clifton Shakespeare Society | 427 |
| Elizabethan Society | 309, 380 |
| English Goethe Society | 427, 561 |
| Hellenic Society | 63, 476 |
| Meteorological Society | 452 |
| Philological Society | 540 |
| Statistical Society | 451 |
| Viking Club | 561 |
| Zoological Society | 404, 516 |
| | 405 |

CONTENTS OF THE JOURNALS.

| | |
|--|--------------|
| Babylonian and Oriental Record | 121 |
| Classical Review | 53, 427, 516 |
| Geographical Journal | 71 |
| Hermathena | 60 |
| Indian Antiquary | 540 |
| Journal of Philology | 427 |
| L'Anthropologie | 176 |
| Natural Science | 71, 106, 237 |
| Nature | 237, 333 |
| Revue Celtique | 157 |
| Science Progress | 176, 219 |
| Semitistische Studien | 121 |
| Transactions of the American Philo- logical Association | 157, 197 |

FINE ART.

REVIEWS.

| | PAGE |
|---|------|
| Berenson's (Bernhard) The Venetian Painters of the Renaissance | 53 |
| Bottem & Aliprandi's Life and Work of Cima | 284 |
| Brine's (Vice-Admiral Lindesay) Travels amongst American Indians | 177 |
| Curtius, E., Gesammelte Abhandlungen von | 333 |
| Erman's (A.) Life in Ancient Egypt | 517 |
| Fergusson's (James) History of Architecture | 260 |
| Karoly's (Karl) Raphael's Madonnas, and other great Pictures | 428 |
| Lange & Fuhse's Dürer's Schriftlicher Nachlass | 157 |
| Müller's (W. Max) Asien und Europa nach Altägyptischen Denkmälern | 237 |
| O'Donoghue's (Freeman M.) Catalogue of Portraits of Queen Elizabeth | 197 |
| Petrie's (W. M. Flanders) Tell el Amarna | 15 |
| Smith's (Prof. George Adam) Historical Geography of the Holy Land | 121 |
| Spier's (R. Phené) edition of Fergusson's History of Architecture | 260 |
| Stephens's (F. G.) Danti Gabriel Rossetti | 72 |
| Tirard's (H. M.) translation of Erman's Life in Ancient Egypt | 517 |
| Ulmann's (Hermann) Sandro Botticelli | 137 |
| Williamson's (George C.) John Russett, R.A. | 541 |
| Wood's (Esther) Dante Gabriel Rossetti: and the Pre-Raphaelite Movement .. | 72 |

MINOR NOTICES.

| | |
|--|-----|
| Baldwin's (Francis) The Old Churches of Our Land | 562 |
| Balfour's (Henry) The Evolution of Decorative Art | 90 |

MINOR NOTICES—continued.

| | PAGE |
|--|------|
| Bibliothèque d'Education Artistique | 106 |
| Drawing for Beginners, A Few Words about. By J. B. | 218 |
| Gamlin's (Hilda) George Romney and his Art | 561 |
| Gentleman's Magazine Library | 561 |
| Hutchinson's (G. W. Caldwell) Some Hints on Learning to Draw | 218 |
| Knight's (William) The Philosophy of the Beautiful | 90 |
| L'Art | 106 |
| Logan's (Mary) Guide to the Italian Pictures at Hampton Court | 561 |
| Meyer's (Franz Sales) Handbook of Ornament | 218 |
| Monrean's (Adrian) Les Artistes Célèbres | 106 |
| Moore's (George) Modern Painting | 90 |
| Myer's (Isaac) Scarabs | 309 |
| Van Dyke's (John C.) Art for Art's Sake | 90 |
| Von Torma's (Sofic) Ethnographische Analogien | 309 |
| White's (Gleeson) Practical Designing .. | 218 |

ORIGINAL ARTICLES.

| | |
|---|-----|
| Adrian Hope Picture Sale, The | 17 |
| Art Club, English, The New | 405 |
| Ashburnham Rembrandt, The | 452 |
| Ashmolean Museum, The | 382 |
| Assouan, Proposed Dam at | 90 |
| Cima's Altar-Piece, "The Incredulity of Thomas" | 381 |
| Coins of the Mogul Emperors of India .. | 33 |
| Egypt, Recent Archaeological Discoveries in | 334 |
| — Exploration Fund | 356 |
| Egyptian History, Resene of | 310 |
| Gray (J. M.) Sale, The | 405 |

ORIGINAL ARTICLES—continued.

| | PAGE |
|----------------------------------|------|
| Indian Jottings | 261 |
| In Memoriam: Prof. Bruun | 122 |
| Limes, The, in Germany | 285 |
| Roussel, Mr., The Works of | 51 |

CORRESPONDENCE.

| | |
|---------------------------------------|-----|
| "Ancient Ships" | 357 |
| Assyrian Discoveries | 55 |
| Cinthis, King, A Coin of | 216 |
| Earthworks on the Yorkshire Wolds .. | 54 |
| Egyptian History, The Resene of | 310 |
| Tiles, Legionary, at Carlisle | 334 |
| Vandalism in Galicia | 106 |
| Wady Lulu, The | 138 |

OBITUARY.

| | |
|-----------------------------------|-----|
| Brierly, Sir Oswald Walters | 542 |
| Bruun, Prof. Heinrich | 122 |
| Hadding, Viscount | 90 |
| Layard, Sir A. Henry | 34 |
| Newton, Sir Charles T. | 470 |

NOTES.

| | |
|--|-----|
| Aesica, Excavations on the Roman Wall at | 335 |
| Asklepios, The Cult of | 178 |
| Bristol Fine Art Academy | 405 |
| Codex Atlantides of Leonardo da Vinci .. | 34 |

NOTES—continued.

| | PAGE |
|---|----------|
| Coins presented to the Bodleian Library .. | 73 |
| Cornish Art Brotherhoods, Works of the .. | 199 |
| Cuneiform Inscriptions found in Asia Minor | 406 |
| Delphi, Excavations at | 382 |
| Delos, Excavations at | 562 |
| Egypt, Ancient Atlas of | 73 |
| Eretria, Excavations at | 122 |
| Esperandieu's (Emile) Recueil des Caches d'Oculistes romains | 310 |
| Gallery of British Art, Pictures for the Hoarding, Art of the | 157 |
| Jerusalem, Excavations at | 106, 357 |
| Lamp, Roman, belonging to M. Martinelli | 454 |
| "Madonna and the Rocks," in the National Gallery | 91 |
| Madras Government Museum | 261 |
| Milestones, Roman, near Carlisle | 357 |
| National Portrait Gallery, Purchases made for the | 153 |
| Niffer, Exploration of the Ruins of .. | 542 |
| Palestine, Exploration in | 641 |
| "Posters," Artistic, Exhibition of | 335 |
| Ramannadesa, Antiquities in | 73 |
| South London Fine Art Gallery | 90 |
| Telloh, Excavations at | 429 |
| Watteau Religious Picture, An assumed .. | 122 |

CONTENTS OF THE JOURNALS.

| | |
|---|---------|
| American Journal of Archaeology | 199 |
| Archaeologia Aeliana | 219 |
| Art Journal | 81, 262 |
| Cornell Studies in Classical Philology .. | 178 |
| Epigraphia Indica | 261 |
| Illustrated Archaeologist | 55, 262 |
| Indian Antiquary | 73, 261 |
| Journal of the Asiatic Society of Bengal .. | 261 |
| Literarisches Centralblatt | 335 |
| Portfolio | 517 |
| Studio | 453 |

THE STAGE AND MUSIC.

THE STAGE.

ORIGINAL ARTICLES.

| | PAGE |
|--|------|
| Drama, The | 238 |
| "Gismonda" at Paris | 382 |
| "Iphigenia in Tauris," at Cambridge .. | 477 |
| "John's Dreams," at the Haymarket .. | 429 |
| Richepin's "Vers la Joie" | 310 |

OBITUARY.

| | |
|---------------------|-----|
| Oudin, Eugene | 383 |
|---------------------|-----|

NOTES.

| | |
|-------------------------------------|-----|
| "A Modern Eve," at the Haymarket .. | 17 |
| Theatre, The | 178 |

MUSIC.

REVIEWS.

| | PAGE |
|--|------|
| Ellis's (William Ashton) Opera and Drama: Wagner | 106 |
| La Mara's Letters of Franz Liszt | 74 |
| Maitland's (J. A. Fuller) Masters of German Music | 219 |
| Wagner's Operas and Dramas | 106 |
| Wallaschek's (Richard) Primitive Music | 170 |

MUSICAL PUBLICATIONS.

| | |
|---|-----|
| Albanesi's (Carlo) Deuxième Gavotte .. | 286 |
| Bach's (J. S.) Organ Works | 280 |
| Beaconsfield's (Earl of) Blue-eyed Maiden's Song and The Green Cavalier's Song | 286 |
| Best's (W. T.) Cecilia | 286 |
| Bordes's (Charles) Cent Chansons Populaires Basques | 286 |
| Clementi Sonatas | 286 |
| Donagrof's (V.) Berceuse | 286 |
| Dunsten's (Ralph) Basses and Melodies .. | 158 |
| Gatty's (Charles T.) The Sacred Festival-Drama of Parsifal | 91 |
| Hoffmann & Oxenford's Legend of Oriella | 286 |

MUSICAL PUBLICATIONS—continued.

| | PAGE |
|---|------|
| Jefferson's (W. A.) Original Organ Compositions | 286 |
| Johnson's (Noel) Good Night, Pretty Stars | 286 |
| Lott & Palmer's Organ Arrangements .. | 158 |
| Maitland & Squire's The Fitzwilliam Virginal Book | 219 |
| Martin's (George C.) Organ Arrangements | 158 |
| Mattei's (Tito) Come Back, Jeannot | 286 |
| Moir's (Frank L.) Thistle-down and To Mistress Rose | 286 |
| Molloy's (J. L.) The Hum of Bees and Scotch Johnny | 286 |
| Organ, Original Compositions for the .. | 158 |
| Parry's (J. Haydn) Abide with Me | 286 |
| Rose's (Algernon) Chimes | 286 |
| Taylor's (Franklin) Progressive Studies for the Pianoforte | 158 |
| Thomas's (Goring) Album of Ten | 286 |
| Tosti's (F. Paolo) Falling Leaves | 286 |
| Von Eschenbach's (Wolfram) Parzival .. | 91 |

ORIGINAL ARTICLES.

| | |
|--|----------|
| Birmingham Festival | 262, 285 |
| "Hänsel and Gretel," at the Daly Theatre | 502 |
| Opera at Covent Garden | 18, 74 |
| — at Drury Lane | 34 |

OBITUARY.

| | PAGE |
|--|------|
| Holmholtz, Hermann Ludwig Ferdinand .. | 199 |
| Rubinstein, Anton | 431 |

NOTES.

| | |
|---|---------------|
| CONCERTS:— | |
| British Chamber Music | 353 |
| Chamber Music Society | 454 |
| Crystal Palace, 335, 358, 383, 406, 430, 434, 478, 518, 542 | |
| Gompertz's | 406, 518 |
| Harrison's | 35 |
| Henschel's | 35, 383, 478 |
| London Symphony | 542 |
| Miss Muirhead's | 430 |
| Richter | 286, 311, 335 |
| Wolf Musical Union | 35, 454 |
| Delafosse, M. Léon | 55 |
| "Lady of Longford, The," at Covent Garden | 74 |
| Lehmann, Miss Liza | 55 |
| Mistowski's (Mr. A.) Quartet for Strings .. | 55 |
| Prout, Mr. Ebenezer | 454 |
| Rummel, Mr. Franz | 287 |
| Sauer, Herr Emil | 406 |
| "Tristan," at Drury Lane | 18 |

THE ACADEMY.

A WEEKLY REVIEW OF LITERATURE, SCIENCE, AND ART.

No. 1157.
[New Issue.]

SATURDAY, JULY 7, 1894.

PRICE 3d.
[Registered as a Newspaper.]

TABLE OF CONTENTS

| | PAGE |
|--|------|
| GEORGE MEREDITH'S LORD ORMONT AND HIS AMINTA, by LIONEL JOHNSON | 3 |
| WYLIE'S HISTORY OF ENGLAND UNDER HENRY IV., by C. L. KINGSFORD | 4 |
| GOLDWIN SMITH'S SPECIMENS OF GREEK TRAGEDY, by CAMPBELL DODGSON | 5 |
| LANCER'S APPERCEPTION, by POSTER WATSON | 6 |
| NEW NOVELS, by J. STANLEY LITTLE | 7 |
| SOME BOOKS OF THE COLONIES | 8 |
| NOTES AND NEWS | 9 |
| UNIVERSITY JOTTINGS | 10 |
| ORIGINAL VERSE: "FAILED," by ARTHUR L. SALMON | 10 |
| MAGAZINES AND REVIEWS | 10 |
| A TEACHING UNIVERSITY FOR LONDON | 11 |
| CIVIL LIST PENSIONS | 11 |
| THE BODLEIAN LIBRARY | 11 |
| SELECTED FOREIGN BOOKS | 12 |
| CORRESPONDENCE— | |
| Has the "Song of Solomon" been Expurgated? by T. Tyler; The Faust Legend, by the Rev. C. Merk; Dante's Reference to Alexander the Great in India, by Paget Toynbee; The Tomb of the last Gothic King, by E. S. Dodgson; What is Slang? by R. Brimley Johnson | 12 |
| APPOINTMENTS FOR NEXT WEEK | 13 |
| DRUMMOND'S LECTURES ON THE ASCENT OF MAN, by EDWARD CLODD | 13 |
| A NEW RESEARCH LABORATORY AT THE ROYAL INSTITUTION | 15 |
| PHILOLOGY NOTES | 15 |
| REPORTS OF SOCIETIES | 15 |
| PETRIE'S TELL EL AMARNA | 15 |
| THE ADRIAN HOPE PICTURE SALE | 17 |
| NOTES ON ART AND ARCHAEOLOGY | 17 |
| STAGE NOTES | 17 |
| OPERA OF THE WEEK, by J. S. SHEDLOCK | 18 |

TO INVALIDS.—A LIST OF MEDICAL MEN in all parts, willing to RECEIVE RESIDENT PATIENTS, giving full particulars and terms, sent gratis. The list includes private asylums, &c.; schools also recommended.—Address Mr. G. B. STOCKER, 8, Lambcote Place, Strand, W.C.

POPULAR WRITERS OF FICTION wishing to secure the most extensive COPYRIGHTED PUBLICATION obtainable in United States, Canada, and elsewhere, should communicate with P. F. COLLIER, 521, West Thirteenth Street, New York City.

TYPE-WRITING.

AUTHORS, PUBLISHERS, &c.—Scientific, Literary, and Medical MSS. carefully and promptly typewritten by RAYNE & Co., 40, Norfolk Street, Strand, W.C. Private room for dictation. Highest references. Translations.

THE FLEET STREET TYPEWRITERS
115, FLEET STREET, E.C.
Lowest Charges. Highest Speed.
Every kind of Typewriting Work Done.
Price List:—115, Fleet Street, London.

TYPE-WRITERS.—SECOND-HAND
MACHINES, equal to new. FOR SALE, EXCHANGE, or LENT on HIRE. Machines Sold by Instalments on Terms to suit purchasers. Use of Machine taught free to hirers or purchasers. Remingtons, Yosts, Hammonds, Caligraph, Bar-Jacks, Fitch, &c., from £8. MS. Copied with accuracy and despatch at lowest rates. Highest references. Illustrated Catalogue free.—N. TAYLOR, Manager, National Type-Writer Exchange, 74, Chancery Lane, London (Holborn end).

CATALOGUES

FOREIGN BOOKS and PERIODICALS
promptly supplied on moderate terms.
CATALOGUES on application.
DULAU & CO., 37, SOHO SQUARE.

BAEDEKER'S & BADDELEY'S
TOURISTS' GUIDE BOOKS.
New fully detailed Catalogue sent post free on application.
DULAU & CO., 37, SOHO SQUARE, LONDON, W.

FOREIGN BOOKS AT FOREIGN PRICES.
WILLIAMS & NORGATE,
Importers of Foreign Books,
11, HENRIETTA STREET, COVENT GARDEN,
AND
20, SOUTH FREDERICK STREET, EDINBURGH.
CATALOGUES post free on application.

TH. WOHLLEBEN,
FOREIGN BOOKSELLER,
45, GREAT RUSSELL STREET
(Opposite the British Museum),
Supplies all FOREIGN BOOKS and PERIODICALS at the most moderate prices.
Catalogues on application.

For Advertisements of Schools, Colleges, Fine Art Sales, &c., see page 19.

J. C. DRUMMOND & CO., Art Reproducers.

“—QUOD PETIS HIC EST.”

IT will be in the recollection of our numerous clients, and the public generally, that for a long period a widely felt want was experienced amongst Artists, Authors, Publishers, and Printers alike, in the way of obtaining easily accessible and reliable information as to the best and cheapest methods—consistent with high-class work—of Reproduction, as applied to Oil Paintings, Water-Colour Drawings, Pen and Ink Sketches, Photographs, MSS., &c., &c.

The marked success which has attended our efforts to meet this want induces us to make more widely known the lines on which our House was established.

For many years we had made a special study of the various processes adopted, both at Home and Abroad, for the Reproduction of Works of Art in Monochrome and Colours; and our House being the first to enter the field to supply so necessary a desideratum, we had the good fortune, in our interviews with the various Continental Firms, to secure valuable concessions from many of the leading houses in France, Bavaria, Germany, and Austria, and in some cases to obtain exclusive rights for Great Britain and Ireland.

These various concessions have proved to be highly advantageous, alike to manufacturer and client—to the manufacturer from a widely increased and rapidly extending business, and to client from excellence of results, combined with the lowest remunerative charges.

We are thus enabled to supply the highest possible class of work, and at the same time to advise as to the best method of reproduction according to the nature of the original. We are not committed to any one process, and are perfectly unbiassed in giving advice to our clients, who may in all cases rely upon safe guidance as to the methods best suited to their varied requirements. This is a special feature of our business.

For many years past we have been entrusted with commissions from most of the principal Fine Art Publishers, who have on every occasion expressed themselves in terms of high approval of our various processes.

The well-known house of Herr FRANZ HANFSTAENGL, of Munich, gave us the sole right for Great Britain and Ireland to supply their Photogravure, Block and Collotype processes. This house bears a world-wide reputation for artistic finish. In all their methods of Art Reproduction it is unsurpassed by any European establishment, while as regards their Photogravure Process, many of our leading artists consider that it stands without a rival.

Herr HANFSTAENGL'S Studios are of the most elaborate and extensive character, and the liberal support we have received on his behalf from our chief London Publishing Houses is a proof of their appreciation of the value and importance of his work. We have constantly on view many costly and important plates from paintings by artists of high repute, and a visit to our offices will confirm the high encomiums we have received on all hands as to the excellence and quality of the work that has already emanated from our firm in all its branches.

OFFICES: 14, HENRIETTA STREET, COVENT GARDEN, LONDON, W.C.

RICHARD BENTLEY & SON'S LIST.

NOTICE.—A New Serial Story by Mrs. ANNIE EDWARDES is commenced in the JULY Number of "TEMPLE BAR," entitled "THE ADVENTURESS."

Notice.—THE TEMPLE BAR MAGAZINE for JULY, 1894, contains, among other articles of interest:—THE ADVENTURESS. Chaps. 1-4.—SOME RECOLLECTIONS OF YESTERDAY.—WHILE JOANNA WAS AWAY.—A CHAT WITH MRS. LYNN LYNTON.—EIGHTEEN CENTURIES AGO.—THE LAST DAYS OF EDMUND YATES.—DANTE and TENNYSON.—AN INTERLOPER. Chaps. 21-24, &c.

NEW NOVELS AT ALL LIBRARIES

NOW READY.

AN INTERLOPER.

By FRANCES MARY PEARD,
Author of "The Baroness," &c.

In 2 vols., crown 8vo.

"A successful and charming work of fiction."—Scotsman.
"A very charming book, true to the highest ideals of human endeavour."—Globe.

NOW READY.

BY THE AUTHOR OF "THE CHILCOTES," &c.

A TROUBLESOME

PAIR. By LESLIE KEITH, Author of "Lisbeth," &c. In 3 vols., crown 8vo.

"The best part of the work is that which deals with the story of Mary Chalfont and her priestly husband. It is admirably done, with rare sympathy and insight, and is of absorbing interest. Mary herself is drawn with singular delicacy and strength, and might make the fortune of a novel of less importance."—Globe.

"A more wholesome and amusing book than 'A Troublesome Pair' has not reached our cognisance for many a day."—Daily Telegraph.

NOW READY.

VICTIMS of FASHION.

By A. M. ORANGE. In 2 vols., crown 8vo.

"So cleverly planned, and neatly told, a story would be worth reading even if it contained fewer good character-sketches than are scattered by the way in this novel."—Athenaeum.

NOW READY.

The POWER of the PAST

By ESME STUART, Author of "Joan Vellacott," &c. In 3 vols., crown 8vo.

"A strong and very good novel."—Scotsman.

NOW READY.

IF MEN WERE WISE.

By E. L. SHAW. In 3 vols., crown 8vo.

"A distinctly clever and promising piece of work. Well written, and with a plot of considerable strength as well as interest."—Daily Telegraph.

A NEW EDITION.

In 1 vol., crown 8vo, 6s.

DIANA TEMPEST.

By MARY CHOLMONDELEY.

Ready this Day at all Booksellers.

RICHARD BENTLEY & SON, New Burlington Street
Publishers in Ordinary to Her Majesty the Queen.

Novels for Holiday Reading.

By R. L. STEVENSON.

CATRIONA. 20th Thousand. 6s.

TREASURE ISLAND. 48th Thousand. 3s. 6d.

THE BLACK ARROW. 21st Thousand. 3s. 6d.

THE MASTER of BALLANTRAE. 22nd Thousand. 3s. 6d.

KIDNAPPED. 35th Thousand. 3s. 6d.

ISLAND NIGHTS' ENTERTAINMENTS. 8th Thousand. 6s.

THE WRECKER. By R. L. STEVENSON and LLOYD OSBOURNE. 24th Thousand. 6s.

By Q.

UNIFORM EDITION OF Q'S WORKS. 5s. each

DEAD MAN'S ROCK.

THE SPLENDID SPUR.

THE BLUE PAVILIONS.

THE ASTONISHING HISTORY of TROY TOWN.

"I SAW THREE SHIPS."

NOUGHTS and CROSSES.

THE DELECTABLE DUCHY. By Q. Second Edition. 6s.

By STANLEY J. WEYMAN.

THE MAN in BLACK. With 12 full-page Illustrations. Third Edition. 3s. 6d.

THE STORY of FRANCIS CLUDE. Second Edition. 6s.

By J. M. BARRIE.

THE LITTLE MINISTER. With 9 full-page Illustrations. 30th Thousand. 6s.

By MAX PEMBERTON.

THE IRON PIRATE. With 16 full-page Illustrations. Second Edition. 5s.

By the Author of "The Prisoner of Zenda."

FATHER STAFFORD. By ANTHONY HOPE. Cheap Edition. 2s. 6d.

By E. W. HORNUNG.

TINY LUTTRELL. Popular Edition. 6s.

By LESLIE KEITH.

'LISBETH. Popular Edition. 6s.

By STANDISH O'GRADY.

LOST on DU CORRIG; or, 'Twixt Earth and Ocean. With 8 full-page Illustrations. 5s.

By MAJOR ARTHUR GRIFFITHS.

A PRISON PRINCESS. 6s.

CASSELL & COMPANY, LIMITED,
LUDGATE HILL, LONDON.

ELLIOT STOCK'S NEW LIST.

NEW VOLUME OF THE GENTLEMAN'S MAGAZINE LIBRARY.

Edited by GEORGE LAURENCE GOMME, F.S.A.
In demy 8vo, handsomely printed on antique paper and bound in cloth, price 7s. 6d.; on hand-made paper, roxburgh, 10s. 6d. net; large paper copies, 21s. net.

ECCLESIOLOGY.

Edited by A. F. MILNE.

NEW VOLUME OF THE POPULAR COUNTY HISTORIES.

In demy 8vo size, handsomely printed on antique paper, and bound in cloth, price 7s. 6d.
On hand-made paper, roxburgh, 10s. 6d. net; large-paper copies, 21s. net.

A HISTORY OF WESTMORLAND.

By RICHARD S. FERGUSON,
M.A., LL.M., F.S.A.,

CHANCELLOR OF CARLISLE, Author of "The History of Cumberland."

In tasteful demy 8vo, cloth, price 10s. 6d.

HISTORY of HADDLESEY

Its Past and Present.

With Notices of many Neighbouring Parishes and Townships, including Birkin, Brayton, Burn, Carlton, Cowich, Drax, Gateforth, Egghborough, Kellington, Roal, Pontefract, Selby, Snaith, &c.

In tasteful crown 8vo, cloth, price 2s.

SONNETS, AND OTHER VERSES.

By EDWARD HARDING.

In handsome crown 8vo, cloth, price 5s.

THE SUCCESSFUL SOUL-WINNER.

Incidents in the Life of the Rev. Edward Armstrong Telfer, Wee'eyan Minister.

A Memorial and a Tribute by his Widow.

With an Introduction by the Rev. JOHN POTTS,
D.D., Toronto.

CHEAPER EDITION.—Now ready, 488 pages,
price One Shilling.

TOLSTOI'S BOYHOOD.

Written by Himself.

And Translated by CONSTANTINE POPOFF.

"This edition comprises in one volume what has hitherto been issued in two or three; and that in point of style it is indubitably the best English version of the Russian novelist's remarkable biographical work."—Academy.

"One of the most faithful and closely retrospective autobiographies of the opening years of life that has ever been given to the world. Mr. Popoff's translation reads easily, and, as he is a Russian, we may count upon its accuracy."

Literary World.

LONDON:

ELLIOT STOCK 62, PATERNOSTER ROW.

SATURDAY, JULY 7, 1894.

No. 1157, New Series.

THE EDITOR cannot undertake to return, or to correspond with the writers of, rejected manuscript.

It is particularly requested that all business letters regarding the supply of the paper, &c., may be addressed to the PUBLISHER, and not to the EDITOR.

LITERATURE.

Lord Ormont and his Aminta. By George Meredith. In 3 vols. (Chapman & Hall.)

THE story which bears this fascinating title, so suggestive of a certain gallantry and romance, is Mr. Meredith's twelfth novel—exclusive, that is, of Shagpat and Farina. It will not rank with The Egoist and Richard Feverel and Rhoda Fleming. It has not their airs of greatness, their splendour and enchantment, their prodigality of power. It gives us no character of supreme charm. Aminta herself is not upon the level of her elder sister, Nesta, the last of Mr. Meredith's heroines. Beside Aminta, there are three chief characters: Lord Ormont, Lady Charlotte, Matthew Weyburn. Contrary to the writer's common habit, there is no crowd of minor characters surrounding the great actors: no professed wits, or butts, or comedians of any kind, to carry off their creator's sometimes superfluous flow of the comic spirit. The very style is less characteristic than usual. The places where the reader is blinded with a "coruscation," to use Johnson's word, or breathless from the speed of his author's imagination, are in this book but few. There is no one magnificent chapter, for ever memorable: one scene or incident wrought out in words that burn with beauty. Not one of Mr. Meredith's books is more characteristic in tone, intention, spirit, theme: none less so in the execution. For strength of thought, for imaginative vision, for intensity of purpose and appeal, it has all the writer's most distinctive excellences; but there is a reticence or restraint of manner which will make the story a favourite with some readers, something of a surprise and disappointment to others. The story would be spoiled past recognition by any summary; let the following passage tell in part the conclusion of the whole matter. "Matey" Weyburn speaks to Aminta, when she is resolved no longer to endure and do the wrong of her loveless marriage with Lord Ormont: when the lovers, hitherto honourably separate, conclude that they can come together for life with no sacrifice of honour. "I shall not consider that we are malefactors. We have the world against us. It will not keep us from trying to serve it. And there are hints of humaner opinions; it's not all a huge rolling block of a Juggernaut. Our case could be pleaded before it. I don't think the just would condemn us heavily. I shall have to ask you to strengthen me, complete me. If you love me, it is your leap out of prison, and without you, I am from this time no better than one-third of a man. I trust you to weigh the position you lose, and the place we choose to take in the world. It's this—I think this describes it. You know the man who builds his house below the sea's level has a sleepless enemy always threatening. His house must be firm, and he must look to the dykes. We commit this indiscretion. With a world against us, our love and labour are constantly on trial; we must have great hearts, and if the world is hostile we are not to blame it. In the nature of things it could not be otherwise. My own soul, we have to see that we do—though not publicly, not insolently, offend good citizenship. But we believe—I with my whole faith, and I may say it of you—that we are not offending Divine law. You are the woman I can help and join with; think whether you can tell yourself that I am the man. So, then, our union gives us powers to make amends to the world, if the world should grant us a term of peace for the effort. That is our risk; consider it, Aminta, between now and tomorrow; deliberate. We don't go together into a garden of roses."

"I know I should feel shame. I wish it to look dark," said Aminta, her hand in his, and yet a fair-sailing mind on the stream of the blood."

It is possible and, for certain readers, necessary to refuse assent to this answer of a great question; but what honesty and wisdom, fruits of rational humour, are plain here to see, contrasting with the shriek of the precipitate reformer! Marriage, sex, love; these are terrible words in modern novels. Mr. Meredith has always treated them with a world of genius and of sanity.

"Quanti dolci pensieri, quanto disio Menò costoro al"

we will not say "doloroso passo" must be left untold, so elaborate are the subtleties of the story. It is a story of conflicting hero-worships. Lord Ormont, England's greatest soldier, a modern paladin, her saviour in the East, a man of active chivalry and infelicitous speech, the scorn of able journalists, the delight of patriotic enthusiasts, was cashiered and ignored by his country. To "Matey" and "Browny," otherwise Matthew and Araminta, boy and girl lovers at neighbouring schools, he was a kind of English archangel in arms, radiant and irresistible, the natural prey of pursy citizens, the true embodiment of national glory. Stung and stabbed by English ingratitude, he came home to proud and resolute retirement. Wandering the world, he met Aminta, she adoring the hero, he finding solace in her devotion. He married her, but still kept to his determined obscurity. Brought back to England by her desire, he maintained there the same attitude, to such a degree that the "world" of his family and his equals, knowing him to have many resemblances to Caesar, and resenting the notion of his marriage with a girl of unequal station, refused to believe in the marriage; so adding to his own instinct of seclusion the further bar of deliberate exclusion from society, for the wounding of Aminta's pride. Matthew Weyburn enters the scene again as Lord Ormont's secretary: she finds him, with certain pangs of disappointment and disillusion, fallen, as she thinks, from the heights upon which the early prophecies of her heart had set him. He is to be no soldier: young, brilliant, something of a paragon, his ideal is to promote the comity of nations by an international school, where the various virtues of blood and brain are to blend, in one new common spirit, the youth of many races. Lady Charlotte, the Earl's sister and his feminine counterpart, a lady of strength and insight, leads the protesting disbelievers in his marriage, despite the advocacy of her protégé, young Weyburn. Aminta's aunt, a person of delicious vulgarity, with social theories about the better pronunciation of her name, lives in Lord Ormont's household, a thorn in the flesh. Without are a few friends and acquaintance, some with no character and some with no reputation, whom Aminta or her aunt have made, Lord Ormont being half indifferent and half pleased. And in due time the leading performers discover their respective mistakes: Aminta, that she married her hero without loving him, in a mixture of sympathetic worship and ambition; Lord Ormont, that his personal pride had made him unjust to the rights and claims of his wife. Matthew, with no reproach, found himself possessed again of Aminta's heart; she recognises in him one not only to reverence but to love. And when Aminta, fully awakened, through a series of experiences, to the impossibility of her life with her husband, has left him, he discovers too late the strength and meaning of his love for her; and yet not too late, for with a foregoing of pride, very much at variance with the world's common code, he believes in the truth and justice of Aminta and of Matthew in their action. Lady Charlotte also, after long fighting against her brother, nobly comes to his side in his sorrow with a generous inconsistency. He entrusts to Matthew and Aminta, in their school, his own grand-nephew. In brief, after a prolonged conflict of pride, endurance, and misconception on all sides, we are left with a sense that the currents of these lives are following their true courses. There is infinite comedy in all this, lamentable as is the confusion of the actors, their falsity of position for so long and perplexed a time. And false as even the disentanglement may seem to some, it is at least courageous: the note of exhilarating faith is sounded.

A great charm in this book is its soldierly spirit: as in One of Our Conquerors, national patriotism prompts many a wise saying and strong warning. It is the spirit of Mr. Meredith's poems, "Aneurin's Harp," "To Colonel Charles," "England before the Storm." There is a satisfactory laughter in the sentence: "They passed an English defensive fort, and spared its walls in obedience to Matthew Shale's good counsel that they should forbear from sneezing." There is a deal of sword-play and of bugle-call flashing and pealing in the talk of Lord Ormont, Matthew, Lady Charlotte, Aminta also. And Matthew's realised dream, the international school, is a heartening conception, full of valiant energy and goodwill. The hatred of lazy folly is a staunch sentiment in all the writings of Mr. Meredith. A decorous illiberality is also the target of his arrows. Says Lady Charlotte:

"I've met men in high places, and they've risen to distinction by their own efforts, and they head the nation. Right enough, you'd say. Well, I talk with them, and I find they've left their brains on the ladder that led them up; they've only the ideas of their grandfather on general subjects. I come across a common peasant, a craftsman, and he down there has a mind more open—he's wiser in his intelligence than his lawgivers and rulers up above him. He understands what I say, and I learn from him. I don't learn much from our senators, or great lawyers, great doctors, professors, members of governing bodies—that lot. Policy seems to petrify their minds when they've got on an eminence. Now explain it, if you can."

And Weyburn does explain it: he has studied the matter among "the people we call common, men and women, old wayside men especially." He found them "at the bottom of wisdom, for they had in their heads the delicate sense of justice, upon which wisdom is founded." Whereas (and the phrase "flashed a light" into Lady Charlotte) "the men called great, who have risen to distinction, are not men of brains, but the men of aptitudes." Weyburn, as the young Englishman of an healthy brain and wits well at command, if a little too admirable, even in his self-restraint, is a very bright and blithe example of a Young England pioneer, his face set straight to the light: as Lady Charlotte, whilst essentially "of her own order," is an excellent aristocrat with a working mind. Lord Ormont is perhaps less persuasive a character: for the reticent man of deeds, whose writing is a model of indiscretion and impatience, he talks too well and too much. Yet the great soldier, the fighter of England's battles, self-sentenced to a struggle with woman-kind and their obstinacies, has no slight attractiveness and strength.

The book abounds in beauty, in those brilliant simplicities of happy phrase, which are more delightful than the best of epigrams. In certain qualities of narrative, Mr. Meredith stands alone, or with Charlotte Brontë for sole English companion. He excels in the description of movement: there are two perfect passages, one a country journey, the other a swim in the sea, which have much of his richest art. His style in such places has the brilliance of rippling and sparkling waves, laughing and dancing shoreward, with a kind of delighted waywardness, a grace upon their strength. It is joyous writing, cordial and entrancing; it clears the air to an exulting serenity. There is much of this brave humour in these pages, winning their reader to an admiration and an enjoyment, in which he cannot but feel it an ingratitude, or a misapprehension, to question the spiritual and rational truth of certain issues of the story. After all, these difficult matters of conduct must be decided by right, straight reason, ὡς αὐτὸ φρόνιμος ἰσχυρεῖν. The decision is always difficult also, but Mr. Meredith is eminent among οἱ φρόνιμοι. Mr. Meredith, who in this book once again fascinates us, from his opening pages, devoted to the humours of the English schoolboy, to the concluding letter from that mistress of admirable speech, Lady Charlotte Eglett.

LIONEL JOHNSON.

History of England under Henry IV. By James Hamilton Wylie. Vol. II., 1405-6. (Longmans.)

It is now ten years ago since Mr. Wylie published the first volume of his History of England under Henry the Fourth; and in the meantime all students of the fifteenth century have learnt to value his work, and have had occasion to regret that it had extended no farther.

The present volume will fully maintain Mr. Wylie's reputation for accurate and sober industry; but, while he has preserved the meritorious features presented by his previous volume, he has not succeeded in freeing his work from certain defects which marred its excellence. The period, it may be, is not one that lends itself to dramatic treatment; and the scale on which the work has been planned no doubt involves the insertion of a somewhat bewildering mass of detail. But, apart from the difficulties of his subject, we cannot say that Mr. Wylie has been altogether happy in his treatment of it. The abundance of his knowledge and the wealth of his material lead him into constant digressions, which, though in themselves frequently of great interest, are somewhat apt to distract attention from the general thread of the narrative. Moreover, perhaps because he is so steeped in the literature and thought of the time, Mr. Wylie has developed a peculiar fondness for archaic words and phrases. If he had confined himself to the reproduction on proper occasions of the ipsissima verba of his authorities, we should make no complaint; but, not content with this, he constantly employs obsolete expressions, which compel him, through a possibly guilty conscience, to cumber his already copious notes with otherwise needless explanations. For instance, it may not be unreasonable to speak of Hoccleve as "a cumberwold, unsicker of his scarce and slender livelihood in lick-penny London" (p. 23), and "gymews of avoirdupois" (p. 111) might past muster; but to our mind there is no such excuse for "bushment" (p. 93), "sken-eyed" (p. 298), "herber," and "tapets" (p. 308), or, least of all, "meebles" (p. 468), which represents the familiar "movables," and requires six lines of annotation to justify it. The presence of such out-of-the-way phrases, and the lack of the lucidity which might have followed from a more straightforward narrative, must, we fear, prevent this book from appealing to the general reader. But whatever the defects of Mr. Wylie's work, when regarded from this point of view, the care with which so vast a mass of details have been marshalled in the text, and the copiousness with which they are supported in the notes, render it invaluable and, indeed, indispensable to every serious student of English history in the fifteenth century.

The two years, 1405 and 1406, which are all that Mr. Wylie has found it possible to comprise in his second volume, cannot be said to form a well-marked period. But, on the other hand, it is, perhaps, not incorrect to say that they present a fair epitome of the difficulties which characterised the reign of Henry IV. The pressure of debt, the troubles on the Welsh and Scottish Marches, the divergent schemes of policy in relation to France, the interferences of a protentious but unskilled parliament, the troubles in Henry's own household, and the treasons of his trusted supporters, are all brought before our notice. Bishop Stubbs, speaking of the earlier of these two years, says:

"It was, perhaps, the critical year of Henry's fortunes, and the turning-point of his life. Although in it were accumulated all the sources of distress and disaffection, it seemed as if they were now brought to a head to be finally overcome. They were overcome, and yet out of his victory Henry emerged a broken-down unhappy man. . . . Henceforth he sat more safely on his throne; his enemies in arms were less dangerous; but his parliament became more aggressive; his council less manageable."

The war in Wales, which had been a serious danger in the earlier years of the reign, was no longer such a source of peril, and the opening months of 1405 were marked by the success of Gilbert Talbot at Grosmont. Further advantages were gained by the royal arms in the course of the year, and from this period the power of Owen Glendower steadily declined. But, on the other hand, even in that age of treasons, rumours of treachery were unusually rife: the year began with the Duke of York's plot, and the implication of Mowbray, the Earl Marshal, and possibly of Northumberland, in this conspiracy, and in the attempt to seize the two young Mortimers. In May came the great rising in the North, which led to the tragic end of Archbishop Scrope. This incident forms the centre, so to say, of the present volume, and Mr. Wylie makes it the occasion for a more than usually careful account of the Archbishop and his family. The long manifesto which is commonly considered to have been drawn up by the Archbishop Mr. Wylie suggests was more probably a subsequent compilation, "not the composition of a practical politician at all, but an elaborate outburst of academical indignation." With Scrope's fate, and the subsequent complications, Mr. Wylie deals at length. The execution of the Archbishop was doubtless an act of imprudence. Mr. Wylie goes on to censure Henry for lacking finish to his rage. "He should have removed his victim far away for death and burial, not left him just where the dead man could speak his loudest." But is there much force in this? The error was to have given Scrope the honour of a seeming martyrdom at all; the deed once done, the crop of miracles would have been abundant enough, wherever the martyr lay. Scrope's death was popularly believed to have brought its penalty to the king in the shape of the leprosy, or whatever the disease was, which now showed itself. This belief was certainly justifiable, in so far as the suppression of Scrope's rising was the last vigorous act of Henry's life; from this time forward Henry was more or less a chronic invalid, from whose hands the reality of power was gradually slipping away. The change was first manifested in the next year, when the Parliament sat from March 1 till December 22: excluding adjournments, it actually lasted 158 days, a period three times as long as the average duration of Parliaments in this reign. The principal business was an unwonted interference with the royal authority, chiefly on matters of finance. In the end Henry had to yield at all points, and pledge himself to govern by the advice of his newly-appointed councillors. The attitude of Parliament was, no doubt, in advance of the times, yet it brings out strongly the firm hold which ideas of constitutional government had taken in the beginning of the fifteenth century. In the history of the reign of Henry IV. the events of this year are really the prelude of the subsequent years, and cannot be fully considered except in connexion with them.

The ordinary history of the years does not, however, absorb the whole, or even the greater part, of Mr. Wylie's volume. Numerous little digressions illustrate the life of the time. Judge Gascoigne is made the occasion for a description of the lawyer's life in London; the mention of Lord Bardolph's widow, with the provision for herself and her children; the notice of Henry's own little girls, with "Mary Rodes who did their heads and managed for them," and "Kate Puncherdon, who bought their shoes and got them mourning from London when their grandfather died"—together with other incidents of a like character—throw light on the domestic life of the time. Again, the siege of Berwick, in 1405, serves to introduce an interesting digression on mediæval artillery. Of more importance is the lengthy notice which is given to the commercial negotiations with Flanders and the Hanse. The significance of commerce in the Middle Ages is apt to be lost sight of, but the chapters which Mr. Wylie devotes to the subject will serve to bring home some striking incidents. Thus, "in 1392 300 English vessels cleared from Danzig alone with cargoes of corn, honey, salt, potash, sweet wine, and skins of Russian beaver, rabbit, martin, weasel, and ermine." But legitimate commerce was not very clearly distinguished from piracy, and it was on this point that the difficulties with the Grand Master of the Teutonic Knights on behalf of the Hanse and with the Court of Flanders arose. Riga, Dorpat, and other places in Livonia, which were subject to the Order, claimed 50,000 nobles as indemnity for the injury wrought by English pirates. The strained relations with France made the system under which Henry Pay of Poole was empowered "to do what damage he could to our notorious enemies, and to deal destruction on them," more tolerable. But, as Mr. Wylie remarks, "once let loose, the rovers were not over nice in singling out the cargoes of notorious enemies." So cruisers from the East coast ports plundered the Danes and Flemings, while the men of Devon brought the spoils of Spaniards and Portuguese into Dartmouth and Plymouth.

Throughout his work Mr. Wylie has made it a practice to give little sketches of noticeable persons whom he comes across. Though the consequent digressions, as we have already observed, break the thread of the general narrative, they are in themselves both interesting and valuable. But it is only natural that Mr. Wylie should in some instances have missed his mark. Thus, it is very doubtful if Richard Maidstone, the Carmelite, was ever a member of Merton College (p. 361): his name does not occur in the ancient lists of fellows; and in any case he cannot have been a fellow in 1399, for he was a Carmelite long before this, and he must have vacated his fellowship on entering a religious order. Nor is it certain that Maidstone wrote the "sermons called 'Sleep Soundly'": they have also been ascribed to John of Verdena. A more authentic and important work of Maidstone's, which Mr. Wylie does not notice, is his English translation of the Seven Penitential Psalms. The distinction between Prior Malvern of Worcester and the "physician that was person of S. Dunstan's" might have been stated more positively (p. 238). Prior Malvern was probably dead before Nov. 14, 1414 (44th Report of the Deputy Keeper of the Public Records, p. 556); the physician was certainly alive in 1421. The date given for Gilbert of Louth on p. 166 is incorrect: he was abbot of Basingwerk about 1157 (see Ward's Catalogue of Romances, vol. ii.).

These observations are offered in no carping spirit. The present writer has to acknowledge gratefully more than one correction from Mr. Wylie, and only those who have had experience of such work can appreciate to the full the care and pains which must have been requisite to collect the biographical details scattered through the work. To all employed on such labour, Mr. Wylie's volumes, when furnished with the promised index, will be a veritable mine of information. We can only express a hope that the index will be as copious as possible, the more so as the list of contents is very meagre.

C. L. KINGSFORD.

Specimens of Greek Tragedy. Translated by Goldwin Smith. (Macmillans).

THESE two comely volumes are designed for English readers, to whom the three great tragedians of Athens are venerable names, not living voices. Believing that other branches of study are destined in the near future to usurp the place of Greek literature in education, Mr. Goldwin Smith, without uttering a protest against the coming doom, has done his best to rescue the Greek drama from oblivion by producing faithful versions of portions of its masterpieces. He has aimed at sobriety, proportion, and fidelity, and has not missed his mark. From every extant tragedy of Sophocles, from all save one of Aeschylus, and from the majority of the plays of Euripides, a few detached scenes are given, with a few well-chosen words of introduction, while the whole is prefaced by an outline of the history of the Attic drama, and brief criticisms on each of the three great writers. These remarks are moderate and sensible: they contain more facts than opinions, and avoid enthusiasm. But granting that the language of Aeschylus is "sometimes too swelling, and even bombastic," we cannot commend the comparison of his style to that of the Aeginetan marbles. We have not observed bombast in the latter, neither do they appear to us to swell. We must surrender Sophocles, it seems, to the gallery of plaster casts. "His drama is regarded as the literary counterpart of the Parthenon." It is "calm," certainly, but what is the use of calling it "statuesque"? Criticism does not elucidate one art by confusing another with it. There is sound common-sense in some of the short sayings about Euripides.

"There is no reason for saying that he preached moral scepticism or impiety. Probably he did not intend to preach anything, but to please his popular audience and to win the prize. . . . Perhaps he had his moods: he was religious when he wrote 'The Bacchæe.'"

The portions chosen for translation are taken chiefly from the iambic dialogue, and reproduced in blank verse of a respectable, if not distinguished, quality. The English has one merit, sometimes lacking in translation, that it can always be understood without being retranslated into Greek. The style is simple, unpretending, and even; and the proportions of the original are well preserved. The difficulties of the Stichomythia are ably surmounted. Occasionally we find scenes written almost with the vigour and spontaneity of an original work. One of the best is the narration of the battle of Salamis to Atossa by the messenger in the "Persæ." The charming monologue of Ion in the Delphic temple at dawn is prettily rendered in rhyming lines of seven syllables, though even this flexible metre sacrifices some of the freedom of the original:

ἔγ' ὦ νῆθαλις ὦ καλλίστας προδόλεια δάφνας, κ.τ.λ.

is hardly to be recognised in "Come then, my fair laurel bough,

That in flowery dale dost grow," &c.

Few of the choruses have been attempted, and the omission is deliberate. The author, in his preface, is right in his estimate of the extreme difficulty of translating them. He seems to think the originals overrated. But surely they are more than "the libretto of a chant accompanied by dancing." However much they may have owed to the melody and movement, the choruses of the "Agamemnon" or the "Oedipus Tyrannus" are masterpieces of lyric poetry; and the English reader would have a right to think himself defrauded, if no version of them were presented to him. In these two cases, indeed, and in a few more, an exception is made, though the versions are not very felicitous. The translator probably intended the following (from "The Seven against Thebes," p. 41) as a sample of Aeschylean bombast:

"Thy tidings pierce my fluttering breast, and fright
Makes all my tresses rise upright
At that fell foeman's vault; may heaven confound his spite."

On p. 40, where we read

"Marshal his mood and fierce his countenance," a palmary emendation is not far to seek.

One of the conspicuous merits of a Greek tragedy is the strict subordination of the parts to the whole, and the conscientious workmanship which prefers a high standard of style throughout to the elaboration of single passages. Such a quality necessarily disappears in a selection, and therefore no number of selected passages can give to an English reader any adequate representation of an Attic dramatist. We venture to doubt whether such a book as this, however excellent its education, can really meet the wants of the class for which it is intended.

CAMPBELL DODGSON.

Apperception: a Monograph on Psychology and Pedagogy. By Karl Lange. Edited by Charles De Garmo. Translated by Members of the Herbart Club, and presented by them to American Teachers. (Isbister.)

DR. KARL LANGE is director of the Higher Burgher-school at Plauen, in Germany. After reading his book, every one will wish he had been taught as a child by Dr. Lange. Here is an example of his method of teaching, his subject being the distance of the sun from the earth:

"The teacher asks, 'If now, up there in the sun, one should shoot a cannon ball straight at you, what would you do?' 'Jump aside,' will be the answer. 'But that is entirely unnecessary: you can be peacefully asleep in your room, and get up again, you can be confirmed, learn a business, and become as old as I am—then here comes the cannon ball. Now spring aside! Behold, so great is the distance from the sun to us.'"

Dr. Lange would be the last person to claim merit for such a lesson. In fact, he states that this is given in "the spirit of the method." Surely any theory and method which will put the teacher on such a track as this, is of the first value.

Dr. Lange's book is one of unusual importance. In noticing the English translation of Herbart's Science of Education (ACADEMY, January 7, 1893), I ventured to say that "for a parallel in magnificence of aim, and enthusiasm for the interests of humanity in education," we must go back to Milton. Dr. Lange's Apperception compels the addition that, for the exposition of the principles underlying Herbart's treatise and their relation to the work of teaching, Dr. Lange will prove, in the first instance, a simpler and more efficient guide than Herbart himself.

What Dr. Lange has to say is so natural. It is what we have all been thinking, but what he has proved himself able to put into expression for us. Dr. Lange, though a good Herbartian, is a hater of formality: when the followers of the master have adhered too slavishly to the letter of his methods, we find ready and trenchant criticism. His independence charms us. He gives us the rare pleasure of a philosopher talking common sense about ordinary things, at the same time illuminating them with organising principles, and permeating them with an intellectual interest.

Moreover—and this point I wish to emphasise—Dr. Lange's Apperception is as important a book for the parent to read as for the teacher. The wide gulf fixed between teachers and parents in educational literature is too often an artificial one. They both ought to be, as the older writers would say, "conversant" about children. If the teacher is responsible for children six hours a day, is not the parent responsible for them the remaining eighteen—and the holidays? Why, then, in the name of progress, are not the parents to make it their business to understand the mental development of those committed to their care? Dr. Lange can hardly restrain his indignation at the thought of teachers who believe that in the case of the elementary pupil

"we must not postulate anything, nor reckon on any or at least many helps to apprehension derived from his experience. They think that instruction must begin quite at the beginning, and create something entirely new."

Parents are in the satisfactory position of having had ample opportunities of discovering the general content of the child's experiences, and his way of apprehending them. But the great mass of parents take but little trouble in considering the right ways of interpreting the significance of the child's thoughts and actions.

How will the theory of Apperception help teachers and parents in this study? What is Apperception, and what is its relation to education? First, as to Apperception. Here it is necessary to distinguish perception and apperception. Take an example referred to by Dr. Lange—of an eclipse. A new-born infant, if it could see it, might have an impression of this outward phenomenon. But he would view it with utter indifference and without understanding. He will have no clear and sharp image of what has passed. It would be simply and purely a perception. The adult in an educated community not only sees the object, but recognises the cause.

"We see a dark disc enter the sun's field of light, and say to ourselves that this is the unilluminated side of the moon, which, in its passage around the earth, is now passing between us and the sun, and whose cone of shadow hides from us the star of day. To this we add the comforting certainty, that all this has to do with right things, that the eclipse is proceeding according to known and fixed laws—a thought that goes far to remove a large part of the emotion-stirring power of the unusual occurrence."

It will be noted that the savage and uneducated races of the earth have very different emotions with regard to the eclipse:

"They see the sun threatened by demons who would rob it of light, by dangerous monsters who would devour it. . . . Because the eclipse appears to them as a gigantic war of worlds, as a fatal event, threatening to destroy even themselves, it is natural that their minds should be moved by the most powerful emotions."

Thus, then, the infant's simple perception is very different from the complex thoughts and feelings which accompany the savage's perception of the same event. There is in the latter case an enormous addition. That addition is ad-perception or apperception. There is also an enormous addition to the infant's perception in the case of the educated man. That addition, too, is apperception.

From the above examples will be at once recognised the vastly differing apperceptions which may be produced, in different individuals, by the same event. A thousand people, observes Lange, may read Virgil; but every one will apperceive him differently. Jean Paul says that, while travelling with Goethe, he himself travels through "cities without seeing anything," while Goethe observes everything. "He indeed knows and perceives the particulars of life. He inquires about them, but forgets them. He is stirred only by the beauties of nature." If, then, the same events, which, in simple perceptions, are substantially, under normal conditions, the same to all, produce different apperceptions, it must be due to the difference of the minds apperceiving. It is precisely this mind-activity that is the determining factor in the acceptance to clear consciousness or otherwise of all new experiences of life.

It is to an analysis of the differences of mind-activity, especially among children, that the first hundred pages of this book are devoted. The early experiences of children are not unimportant, as so many seem to think. Nay, rather, it is difficult to overrate their importance. The individual experience to the child is his all. He has not learned to generalise widely. His previous experiences, therefore, colour his every new perception. Dr. Lange, in recalling the Scripture lessons he attended, says:

"When the temple of the Jews was mentioned, I brought to mind our village church; there the aged Simeon sang his song of praise, and at the altar, where each year the examination of candidates for confirmation was held, the twelve-year-old Jesus disputed with the learned scribes. The town hall was first the prison, then Joseph's dwelling; the royal palace (a large inn) in which he interpreted the dreams of Pharaoh stood opposite it, facing the public square; and the house of Potiphar was in the same street."

It is from considerations such as these—and the illustrations given by Lange are numerous and to the point—that the reader is drawn on unconsciously to realise how impossible is the attempt of the teacher and parent to introduce unrelated new instruction. The child's mind is rich in fancy within its limited scope. Its richness and activity may be preserved by offering mental food which can be assimilated; but if unrelated, extraneous, distant ideas be the staple mental food, there will necessarily be nausea and indigestion.

This, then, is the application of the theory of Apperception to education. Before presenting the new, a stage of preparation must precede. "Fine tact forbids one to present pell-mell weighty, unexpected communications." Here is the significance of apperception in a sentence. The methodology which is the outcome of the theory of apperception is undoubtedly valuable. The rules and methods should be studied, and there is not one which will not prove extremely useful in teaching. But it is the spirit of inquiry and interest in the child's world, the attempt to approach him from his point of view, the hints given, the principles deduced for getting a foot-hold: it is in this that the great contribution to education of Herbart, and of Lange also, consists.

From an examination of children in thirty-three schools in 1878, it was found, Lange states, that of 500 city children questioned 82 per cent. had no idea of sunrise, 77 per cent. none of sunset, 37 per cent. had never seen a grain field, 49 per cent. a pond, 80 per cent. a lark, and 80 per cent. an oak, and so on. With such a list before him, what wonder if Dr. Lange insists on Heimat Kunde as a subject to be kept always in view. Here he offers wise words. The instruction must not be like object-lessons in some schools, a two-years' course in which you go through determinedly lessons on various things, which make a sort of Baedeker of home life. Heimat Kunde must be given at the time and place needed, and at the point when it can be given with greatest effect. And since "in general things do not come to men, or to children either (because this in many cases is impossible or impracticable), therefore the school has to take the children to things." Hence, Lange soon decides in favour of school gardens and school excursions; and if the latter are improvised as a question arises which could only be settled at some distance from the school, so much the better. The right moment for the child is more important even than the school time-table.

One further illustration of Dr. Lange's deductions from the theory of Apperception. We have, in connexion with the London School Board, the questio vexata of the teaching of religion. Dr. Lange's book ought to prove instructive to Mr. Athelstan Riley and his friends. Dr. Lange is not only a Christian, but he is orthodox. No one reading his book will doubt his religious spirit, and he is so sound as to call history other than Scriptural "profane." In the interest of true religion, it is to be wished that Lange's words could reach all London [if children receive a too early introduction to Christian truths]:

"What can result but verbalism, which fastens itself like mildew on the youthful spirit? The understanding can, of course, at length reach the verbal meaning of most of the teachings of the faith. But for real appreciation, for actual conviction, there is need of a soul in whose experiences the word of Scripture finds a clear echo. And for such spiritual comprehension of the sublimest secrets of our faith we should indeed grant our little ones the right time."

Dr. Lange is to be thanked warmly for showing that education is not an artificial system of mysteries, the sole key to which is kept in the hands of the teachers. Education is a complicated and difficult subject. But its treatment is based on reason, and its principles can be clearly understood by any one willing to take as much trouble as in other subjects—e.g., politics, economics, law, which deal with human affairs.

FOSTER WATSON.

NEW NOVELS.

A Valiant Ignorance. By Mary Angela Dickens. In 3 vols. (Macmillans.)

A Soldier of Fortune. By L. T. Meade. In 3 vols. (Chatto & Windus.)

A Modern Amazon. By George Paston. In 2 vols. (Osgood, McIlvaine & Co.)

A Costly Freak. By Maxwell Gray. (Kegan Paul & Co.)

The Evil Eye ("Il Mal Occhio"). By G. S. Godkin. (Sonnenschein)

A Puritan Pagan. By Julien Gordon. (Gay & Bird.)

A Beginner. By Rhoda Broughton. (Bentley.)

A Scarborough Romance. By Florence Warden. (White.)

It is somewhat remarkable that Miss Dickens, whose book is at least a proof that attributes are passed on from ancestors to their descendants, should make the great law of heredity the keynote of her latest novel. In matters of art and literature, however, the wary man, instructed by experience and biographical research, looks askance at any work bearing upon it the inherited name of a dead giant. Creative genius is rarely transmitted, though to be born in the atmosphere of great books and pictures, to be bred out of the stuff that has produced them, is likely enough to result in the child growing up a cultured amateur or dilettante. From the very nature of things it must be so. Genius thrives on the obstacles placed in its path, by overcoming which it wins the right to express itself as a distinct voice. But, apart from the personal question as affecting Miss Dickens, she somewhat betrays herself in treating this complex question of heredity. Throughout she is as pessimistic as the most pronounced decadent could desire. We are made to feel that Julian Romaine, whose father has been unfaithful in every relationship of life, is doomed to follow in his parent's footsteps. This, of course, is nonsense; for out of a man's myriad ancestors it is quite impossible to say which he will "take after," though doubtless the matter is determined by a law, if we could only divine it, of absolute exactness. Miss Dickens's book is admirable in construction and the interest is well sustained, while Mrs. Romaine is a scientific bit of character building. There is a little too much about the "excellent Society" manner, voice or bearing of certain of the characters, and Miss Dickens has a tiresome habit, after drawing a picture of sufficient vividness, of dwelling minutely on the various tricks of gesture or phrase which distinguish her personages. There are several other matters to which just exception might be taken, but the novel is quite capable of standing on its merits. Anyone who reads it, out of mere loyalty to a great name, and fails to discover this fact, is destitute of critical judgment.

Upon leaving college a young man goes on the Continent to complete his social education. At Chatelard he meets a beautiful girl, a capricious invalid, who leads him, albeit he is a person of sound common sense, to the utmost extremities of conduct. This is of course natural enough. He is in love. But it is not natural to tell us that this young man, John Smith, was merely intelligent and ordinarily clever; that his friend, Basil Daintree, was a man of resource, not to say genius; and then, without due warning, to mix up the two characters, so as to make the plain John Smith produce a novel that transcends in brilliancy all novels ever written, while Daintree sits helplessly by in the moment of his dire emergency, and can do nothing. It is true that John Smith has been given a marvellous plot and an extraordinary theme. Now if John Smith were anything of a genius this material would be next to worthless to him, save as a stimulant; since a great novel must be actually created by its author, the plot growing with the characterisation, the characterisation with the plot, situation waiting on both. But one cannot expect a writer who plays ducks and drakes with probabilities to understand what creative fiction really means. A living, actual picture of life, it must be scientific in every part of it, else it is worthless. Much worse, much more daringly wicked women than Mrs. Vincent have lived; but for all that, no female villain in transpontine drama could be less convincing. Worldly mothers do betray themselves to their daughters, but not in the way Mrs. Vincent does. The crudity of the story, and the slipshod English into which the author too often falls, will not rob it of interest for those who are not compelled by their nature to put art before mere mechanics, and who are unable to blind their eyes when the pulleys and ropes by which the puppets dance are exposed to their view.

In A Modern Amazon we have the work of a practised writer. Whoever "George Paston" may be, she knows how to construct a novel which shall be at once scientific and interesting. Regina Haughton marries Humphrey Kenyon without loving him: indeed, since the girl has reached her twenty-sixth year, but has not experienced so much as the glimmer of a romantic feeling for any man, it is evident that one part of her nature is either dormant, atrophied, or non-existent. The fact is that civilisation has, so to speak, created such women as Regina. Men, using their superior force, have decreed that women shall be everything they are not themselves, and we are now paying the penalty of this suppression. The only proper way to deal with such was hit upon by Sir Gregory Linkwater. "Don't think of returning to Humphrey unless you feel you can love him as a wife should love her husband," says this eminent specialist to Regina. "George Paston" treats a great social problem instructively, temperately, and with a delightful freedom from parti pris. A Modern Amazon is a sound piece of work, upon which its author may be heartily congratulated.

It is almost too much to ask us to believe that a curate, though he does happen to be a man of God, should go off to visit a dying parishioner immediately after reading a letter from his rector accusing him of stealing bank notes, and enclosing others to enable him to escape from justice. The good man would at least have written a letter returning the notes; he had plenty of opportunities. He had his family and everyone he loved to consider. Moreover, the part the dog and the kitten play in abstracting and scattering the notes, ingeniously as it is told, would have come to light before; indeed, by an oversight Maxwell Gray mentions in her narrative the discovery before it has actually been made. But, apart from cavilling, this story of an old-world divine, whose faith in the efficacy of prayer led him to believe that notes found in a Bible had been placed there by God, with its admirable portrait of a latter-day rector of the Oxford type, of a "Society" girl, and "a country mouse," is distinctly entertaining, while now and again it touches high-water mark. It is infinitely better than the volume of short stories by the same author which I noticed in the ACADEMY the other day.

Despite a few angularities, the obtrusion of foreign matter, gratuitous reflections, and other old-fashioned errors, Il Mal Occhio is a charming tale, simply and directly told. Eva Parravicini has something of the spirit of Joan of Arc and the Maid of Saragossa. She becomes a Protestant by conviction, and her pluck and energy are of the utmost service to the Swiss-Italians of the Reformed Church, whose cause she espouses.

In "Julien Gordon" we recognise at once a woman who can write English, to whom we must forgive a few provincialisms, seeing that she hails from an insurgent province. She understands the art of fiction; save in one instance, there is no scamping, and there is little over-elaboration. The meeting of the currents of puritanism and paganism in the veins of one person produces varied results, but they are always interesting results; and this story of the astute and upright lawyer, who submitted himself to the intoxication of illicit love, is more than interesting—it is informing, in that it is written out of the fulness of knowledge. Paula, too, the unforgiving wife, is a notable creature. The book has grip and force, and, what is more, it has style.

There is a little too much writing now-a-days about the making of books. Novels about novel-writing, no less than pictures wherein an artist is presented in the act of painting, border on the indecorous. Miss Rhoda Broughton, however, never fails to give movement and vitality to any theme she may choose to treat. She satirises reviewers, though in what I cannot but regard as an excess of justice, a desire to hold the scales evenly, she leaves that much-abused class victorious. An author should never allow the strictures of friends, or the abuse of the professional critic, to move him from his purpose, if he, in his own person, does not come to admit the justice of the verdict. Whether his perverseness be due to vanity or to high saneness, it is better that he should continue until the issue is threshed out to the bitter or the pleasant end—as it will be, if he have pluck enough for the enterprise. Miss Rhoda Broughton's irritating use of the present tense in describing past incidents, and her proneness to make mere stage directions pass for literary description of movement, are the only conspicuous blots on a style as fluent as it is attractive.

The unholy alliance between literature and money—in other words, the temptation to which every successful author is exposed to produce for the market—receives a startling exemplification in Miss Florence Warden's Scarborough Romance. It is no good to pretend that this tale has its foothold on reality at any point of its wild career. It is uncompromisingly impossible from first to last: melodrama which does not even momentarily convince us before the inevitable process of analysis begins. It is with something like pain I find myself bound to say this about the work of a charming and clever writer, for much of whose past achievement, and for whose industry, I entertain feelings of deep respect.

JAS. STANLEY LITTLE.

SOME BOOKS ON THE COLONIES.

An Historical Geography of the British Colonies. By C. P. Lucas. Vol. III. West Africa. With Maps. (Oxford: Clarendon Press.) Mr. Lucas is proceeding with his important task of writing an account of all the British colonies, that shall be at once accurate, instructive, and readable. To this quality we attach particular importance; for, though there are many authoritative books about the different colonies, there is hardly one that can be recommended as interesting. In his introductory volume to the series—as also in his edition of Cornwall Lewis's Essay on the Government of Dependencies—Mr. Lucas showed that he possesses the true sense of historical perspective. Nowhere is his art better displayed than in the present volume, which deals with a most unattractive subject. It is impossible for an Englishman to feel much pride in his connexion with the West Africa. Known historically as the cradle of the slave trade and the white man's grave, we hear nowadays of Sierra Leone, or the Gambia, or the Gold Coast only as the field of some unintelligible military operations. How many members of Parliament—let alone school boys—could point out the relative position of these places on the map, or tell what benefit England gains from their possession? The former question Mr. Lucas helps us to answer with the help of several maps; for the solution of the latter, he appeals to history rather than to the statistics of trade. The keynote is struck in the early pages, by an eloquent eulogy on Prince Henry the Navigator, himself half an Englishman; then, after a long story of piracy and slaving, the duty of England to atone for the wrongs she has brought on the negro race is enforced by the example of Granville Sharp and Zachary Macaulay; while, finally, our claim to the Niger is based upon the adventurous journeys of Mungo Park. And yet Mr. Lucas is the slave of no illusions. Here is his summing-up of the present situation in the Gambia.

"an isolated British dependency, in the midst of what has become a great French province of Senegambia . . . wholly cut off from the other British possessions on the West Coast, dealing mainly with France, using mainly French coins, and counting rather more Frenchmen than Englishmen in its handful of white residents. . . . The picture, truth to say, is not a cheering one. Here is one of the earliest scenes of British commercial enterprise; here the English have been coming and going for the better part of three centuries: yet progress and development are far to seek, education makes little or no way, Mohammedanism grows faster than Christianity, trade consists in dealing with barbarous races and procuring primitive products, and the uses to which a fine river may possibly be put are still all in the future."

It is because Mr. Lucas can thus look facts in the face, and yet not despair, that we commend his book earnestly to such as want to know the truth about our colonial empire.

History of South Africa. From the Foundation of the European Settlement to our own Times. Vol. VI., 1834-1854. By George McCall Theal. (Sonnenschein.) We cannot think that Mr. Theal's scheme of arrangement is a good one. He has brought out a series of volumes, of which the present is the sixth. The first volume (1887) was a History of the Boers in South Africa down to 1854. The second and third volumes (1888) were the History of South Africa from 1846 to 1795, the year of the conquest of the Cape by the British. The fourth volume (1889) returned to the first and related the History of the Republics and Native Territories from 1854 to 1872. The fifth volume (1891) continued the History of South Africa, apart from that of the republics and native states, from 1795 to 1833. We have now a sixth volume, giving a further continuation up to the year 1854. It appears, therefore, that the first and last volumes of the series close with the same period. It seems to us that it would have been far better, either to have treated all South Africa as one great whole, or, if the subject was to be divided, to have completed one part before embarking on another. A very deplorable accident has now compelled Mr. Theal to change his faulty plan. In February, 1892, the whole of his completed manuscript, and all his notes and memoranda, with the exception of those relating to the period 1834 to 1848, were destroyed by fire. He mentions this in his preface without a word of complaint; but the loss must have been most trying, and his patience is as admirable as his perseverance. It would now seem that the present volume is to be the last of the series; and with it the history of Cape Colony is brought down to 1848, the history of Natal to 1846, and that of the republics and native states to 1872. It is certainly very unfortunate that the most thrilling events in South African history—namely, the Zulu War and the Boer War—should neither of them come within the scope of Mr. Theal's series: they so transcend all the other events of South African history, that a history of that country which does not reach them must seem incomplete; and readers will regret the space bestowed upon trifling and passing events when, by some exercise of concentration, the author might in the same number of volumes have carried his history down to the action of Majuba Hill. Mr. Theal is almost too persevering, and he is deficient in the sense of proportion; so that his works, valuable and laborious as they are, are more of chronicles than histories. He is accurate and careful, yet surely he is wrong in writing of "Earl Glenelg." Over and over again he dubs him Earl; but, unless we are very much mistaken, that nobleman never got beyond the degree of a baron. It is wonderful to read of men still living, with their faculties unimpaired, being secretaries of state forty-seven and forty-eight years ago. The late Prime Minister was Secretary for the Colonies in 1845, and the present Earl Grey in 1846!

THE STORY OF THE NATIONS.—South Africa. By George M. Theal. (Fisher Unwin.) It is difficult to conceive of any title more inappropriate than that of "The Story of the Nations" as applied to South Africa. Have the publishers of this series ever considered what they mean by the word Nation? And how is it possible to apply that word to any of the native tribes and European colonists in South Africa in the same sense as to the Greeks and Romans, though it would appear that the publishers do not consider the Greeks worthy of being treated as a nation, for we do not see Greece amongst the thirty-seven volumes given on the fly-leaf of the present work, the series beginning with Rome. But if South Africa is to be treated as a nation, no more capable writer could have been found than Mr. George M. Theal. He is a complete master of the complex history of South Africa from the discoveries of Bartholomew Diaz and Vasco da

Gama to the present time. Indeed, the only real fault we have to find with him is that he gives too great prominence to early events in comparison with those of the last five and twenty years; and he dwells at such length on the story of the Dutch colonists that very inadequate space is left for far more important events, such as the Zulu and Boer Wars. Mr. Theal is in truth more of an annalist or chronicler than an historian; but at least he is free from the vice of fine writing, and never sacrifices truth to a desire to be effective or picturesque. Mr. Theal carries his history down to the outbreak of hostilities between the Chartered Company and the Matabele, which is alluded to in a note. We see he persists, as in the last volume of his great History of South Africa, in making Lord Glenelg an earl, and we notice a peculiar use of the word "fountain" for "spring." He tells us that "the southern part of the region of the German Protectorate is almost rainless, and fountains are few in number." This is more Dutch than English. The book would be better without the illustrations, most of which are contemptible.

The South Sea Islanders and the Queensland Labour Trade: A Record of Voyages and Experiences in the Western Pacific from 1875 to 1891. By William T. Wawn, Master Mariner. (Sonnenschein.) No reader need go beyond the dedication to the sugar-planters of Queensland to learn Captain Wawn's views on the question of Kanaka labour. After exalting these "good men and true" to the skies, he states that they have been basely betrayed and unscrupulously sacrificed to the greed of the political place-hunter, and the howling ignorance which follows in his train. He goes on through the whole book in the same vein. Now there is such a thing as overstating a case, and we cannot think that the cause of the Queensland sugar-planters will gain by Captain Wawn's advocacy. The present volume is not the one originally written by Captain Wawn; that, composed when the Kanaka question was at its height, was lost in the Quetta in 1890. After that misfortune the author re-wrote his narrative, and we are told that much controversial matter contained in the earlier work has been omitted from the present one. This certainly was an improvement; some, however, may think the excision has not been carried far enough. Mr. W. Delisle Hay had charge of the manuscript, and made the changes alluded to. He carefully re-shaped the whole narrative, taking care, at the same time, to preserve the captain's own words, and to present his views without material change or any substitution. The author commanded various ships employed in the Kanaka traffic, and visited the various groups of islands from which labourers for the sugar plantations of Queensland were obtained. Each voyage is separately described, and with very much interesting information respecting the islands and their inhabitants. We give, in his own words, an account of an earthquake experienced by Captain Wawn at Mallicole Island, one of the group of the New Hebrides:

"It was luncheon time, and I was sitting at the cabin table, when suddenly we felt the unmistakable vibration of an earthquake. Although earthquakes are of common occurrence in these islands, this one made me jump. The ship shook and quivered as though she was galvanised. Had all her fastenings been loosened by the shock I should scarcely have been surprised. 'She's away!' shouted one of the crew. Rushing out of the cabin, I found the ship whirling round eastward, the chain cable grinding and jerking on the windlass, as the anchor turned, dragging a few fathoms, and then caught in the bottom again. On shore the sight was terrible, though magnificent. At either side, on the shallow reefs, and high over the low bushes and smaller trees that lined the shores, a huge wave was breaking with a dull, roaring sound, sweeping steadily along from the westward, until it disappeared beyond a long, low point of land. It was the swell of this wave, unbroken in the deeper water, which had caught the ship aft, and had slowed her round to her anchor.

"On the islet we could hear the yells and cries of the natives, as they fled from an adjacent village, making for higher ground. On the main island, clouds of dust could be seen rising for miles away, showing where landslips had occurred on the sides of the steep hills and mountains. For miles the whole surface of the earth had subsided, sinking eight feet or so, which had caused the great wave to push into the deepened channel. The tremors of the earthquake still continued at short intervals; then, slowly and gradually, came an upheaval. The waters poured out from the flooded forest, bearing with them portions of the huts of the savages, canoes, trees and branches, and even two or three squeaking pigs, cascading over the face of the flat shore-reefs. These now rose as high above their normal position as they had before sunk below it, forming flat terraces along the coasts, which were elevated to six feet above the surface of the sea. Masses of live coral showed along the face of the raised shore-reefs, displaying brilliant hues—blue, green, yellow, purple, and red—all shining and glistening in the sun.

"This was the first act. A pause of a minute followed. Then, gradually and majestically, the upraised coral sank again, and the bright colours disappeared. Then came another subsidence, and a second vast billow rolled in from westward, making our chain rip and tear at the bows as if it meant to pull the windlass out of the ship. Breaking into clouds of foam, the wave ran roaring along the shores, while every here and there some huge tree came toppling over, with torn roots or broken trunk. The second upheaval was not equal to the first; the reefs did not rise more than about three feet above the water. Though a third wave rolled in, it was only a 'piccauniny' when compared with those that had preceded it. When the earthquake was over, I could perceive no difference in the height of the shore from the level of the sea."

In Sugar Cane Land. By Eden Phillpotts. (Maclure.) The publishers of this little book have issued it without a date, though they can hardly imagine it to belong to all time. Its author went to Barbadoes, and thence "up and down the islands," the Windward and Leeward Antilles. He describes his travels in the facetious manner of the author of Three Men in a Boat; and he might as well have gone to the Cinque Ports for all the reader learns of Sugar Cane Land. The negroes of the one place are probably funnier than those of the other. Nautical anecdotes—some new, others aged—smart conversations with bumboat negroes, and occasional bursts of fine writing about scenery, make up the book. The description of an Ethiopian cricket match, however, is certainly amusing, and not so greatly exaggerated as might be supposed.

MESSRS. GEORGE PHILIP & SON have issued, on behalf of the colonial Government, a geological sketch map of Western Australia, on the scale of 1:3,000,000. By the use of colours, the chief geological formations are shown, and also the sites of gold fields and other metals and minerals. The considerable number of places, at great distances from another, at which gold has been discovered is very remarkable; and hardly less so is the insignificant proportion of known coal. No map can adequately portray the absence of water, which is at present the chief obstacle to the prosperity of the Coolgardie gold-fields. But we are surprised to find that the general geological character of that region seems to be still undetermined. The totally unexplored character of the larger part of the interior is also a notable fact.

MR. EDWARD STANFORD has published an excellent map of British South Africa, on just half the same scale—namely, 1:5,977,382, or 94½ English miles to an inch. The conspicuous features here are: the clear colouring by which the several colonies, states, protectorates, and territories are distinguished; the accuracy with which the railways and roads are marked; and the pains that have evidently been expended upon the comparatively unknown tracts. It was news to us to learn that there is no submarine telegraph cable between Cape Town and Natal; and apparently no telegraph station at either Beira or Quilimane. Together with this, Mr. Stanford has also sent us a map of the United States.

NOTES AND NEWS.

THE Provost of Oriel's new book on Modes of Ancient Greek Music will be published in a few weeks by the Clarendon Press. It has been delayed for some months through the recent discovery at Delphi of several pieces of musical notation, especially a Hymn to Apollo dating from the third century B.C.

THE "Edinburgh Edition" of Mr. R. L. Stevenson's works was so rapidly subscribed, that orders have been given to proceed with six volumes, the first of which will be delivered to subscribers in October.

MAX O'RELL's book on the Colonies, La Maison John Bull et Cie, will appear simultaneously in September in Paris, London, New York, and the Colonies. The English and Colonial editions, published by Messrs. Frederick Warne & Co., will be illustrated. In Paris the book will be issued by M. Calmann Lévy.

MR. PERCY RUSSELL—author of The Author's Manual, which is now in its seventh edition, and which Mr. Gladstone condescended to commend with prefatory remarks—has been for some time engaged upon a Guide to British and American Novels. The book will be in eighteen chapters, giving an account of all the principal novels in the language, from the earliest period down to the end of last year, together with copious indices of novelists and novels. It will be issued shortly by Messrs. Digby, Long & Co., who also published the former book.

MR. H. O. ARNOLD FORSTER, M.P., has nearly completed Standard V. of his "Things New and Old, or Stories from English History," which will be published shortly by Messrs. Cassell & Company. The history course which is prescribed in the Code for Standard V. covers the whole of the Tudor period, and it is this epoch which Mr. Forster has dealt with. The book will be fully illustrated.

MR. ELLIOT STOCK announces for immediate publication a Memoir of the late Mr. E. Armstrong Telfer, by his widow.

MR. WILLIAM HEINEMANN will publish immediately Joanna Traill, Spinster, by Annie E. Holdsworth, the first of a series of original novels which he intends to issue under the title of "The Pioneer Series." The second volume, George Mandeville's Husband, by C. E. Raimond, will follow very shortly.

MESSRS. G. P. PUTNAM'S SONS announce a new story by Mrs. Rolfs (Anna Katharine Green, author of "The Leavenworth Case," &c.), entitled Miss Hurd: an Enigma, which will be quite distinct from her previous books in plot and character.

MISS EDITH C. KENYON has completed a new novel, which will shortly be published under the title of The Soul of Honour. The plot is that of a crime, which turns out to be no crime after all.

MESSRS. JARROLD & SONS have acquired the exclusive rights for England and the British Possessions (outside Canada) in Miss Marshall Saunders's Beautiful Joe, which purports to be the autobiography of a dog.

It is announced that a new edition is preparing of M. Henri Lasserre's translation of the Gospels. Notwithstanding the approval of the French bishops, and the sale of many editions, the work had been placed in the Index. It has now been submitted to two Roman theologians, who have made some 7000 corrections in the text and the preface. The new edition will come out with the approval of the Congregation, and with the canonical imprimatur of the Bishop of Perigueux.

MR. GILBERT PARKER, who has recently returned from Mexico, is contributing a series of Mexican sketches to the National Observer, the first of which will appear this week.

THE forthcoming number of the North American Review will include the following articles: "Problems and Perils of British Politics," by Prof. Goldwin Smith; "France and England in Egypt," by Mme. Adam; "In Defence of Harriet Shelley," I., by Mark Twain.

A COMMITTEE has been formed at Hampstead to purchase the library of the late Prof. Henry Morley, and present it to the local free public library, to be kept as a special collection in memory of him. The total number of books is understood to be about 12,000.

THE last meeting for the session of the English Goethe Society will be held on Monday next, at 7.30 p.m., in the rooms of the Royal Society of British Artists, Suffolk-street, Pall Mall, when Dr. John G. Robertson will read a paper on "The Beginnings of the German Novel."

NEXT Wednesday, Messrs. Sotheby will begin the last of the great sales of the season. The collection to be dispersed is that of Mr. Howell Wills, of Florence, who, though (we believe) not an old man, had old-fashioned tastes. What he seems specially to have loved was the work of the late middle ages, whether illuminated MSS. or incunabula of the printing press: more particularly those service-books which were executed for famous personages, and those volumes which formerly belonged to great collectors. Here may be found the Courtenay Prayer Book, of the fourteenth century; Books of Hours written for Philip of Austria and for Isabella of Scotland, in the fifteenth century; a Theocritus containing what is believed to be an original painting by Albert Dürer; the first Aldine Petrarch, printed on vellum; books with the autograph of Ben Jonson and Archbishop Juxon; and—to come to the moderns—rare examples of Blake and Gould, Ruskin and Dickens. We would also specially mention a number of classical texts, written in Italy in the fifteenth century, some of which may possibly possess a critical value. The sale will last altogether for six days.

MR. CLAUDE DELAVAL COBHAM, Commissioner of Larnaka, has issued a third edition of his modestly entitled Attempt at a Bibliography of Cyprus (Nikosia). His first list (1886) contained only 152 titles, which has now been augmented to 497, though he does not pretend to include ephemeral articles in periodicals, and he has deliberately excluded the productions of the local press since 1887, when the new Book Law came into operation. The arrangement is, in the main, chronological, the subsequent works of each author being recorded under the date of his first. Numismatics, Epigraphy and Language, and Cartography are classified separately. Consular Reports (1856 to 1887) and Parliamentary Papers (1878 to 1893) have also a special heading for themselves. There is a list of newspapers, from which we learn that the Owl still continues to exist, and that two new journals appeared last year. Finally, we have a bibliography of the Cēsola controversy, which has recently been again fanned into flame by the visit of Dr. Ohnefalsch-Richter to America.

UNIVERSITY JOTTINGS.

FOLLOWING the example set last year by Oxford, a series of long vacation lectures addressed to the clergy will be given at Cambridge during the second fortnight of July. In addition to courses of lectures, by professors and others, on the Old and New Testaments, on dogmatic patristic theology, and on ecclesiastical history, there will be several single lectures, among which we may specially mention the following: "The Book of Enoch," by Mr. Montagu R. James; "The Sinai Palimpsest of the Old Syriac," by Mr. F. C. Burkitt; "Early Christian Inscriptions in Great Britain," by Canon Browne; "Cambridge Missionaries," by the Master of Trinity; and "How to find our Parishes interesting," by the Rev. Dr. A. Jessopp.

THE Vice-chancellor of Cambridge has been authorised by grace to use the senate house on August 27, for the reception of members of the Institute of Journalists, who will then be holding their annual conference at Norwich.

PROF. W. M. RAMSAY, of Aberdeen, has accepted an invitation to deliver a course of lectures at Auburn Theological Seminary, New York, upon "St. Paul as a Traveller."

DURING the year 1893, the total items of all kinds received by the Bodleian Library was 57,206, of which no less than 39,619 were acquired under the Copyright Act. It is curious to observe the small number that came from British possessions: in Asia, 690; in Australasia, 141; in America, 67; in Africa, 21; in Europe, 14.

WE quote the following, relating to donations, from the annual report of the Library Syndicate at Cambridge:

"Among them may be noticed a series of books from the library of the late H. D. Darbishire, presented by his father; and several books by the Rev. C. A. Briggs and the Rev. Henry Preserved Smith, presented by the late Prof. Robertson Smith. A fine copy of the Nova Statuta, printed by W. de Machlinia, is the most valuable book added to the Library during the year. For this the University is once more indebted to the liberality of Mr. Samuel Sandars, who has also given (among many others) Bishop Alcock's Mons perfectionis (W. de Worde, 1497); Liber festivalis (Rouen, 1499), probably unique; the second edition of the Philobiblon of Richard de Bury, which is at least as rare as the first; and a Horae B. V. M. on vellum (Venice, 1497). Another Horae, also on vellum, printed at Venice in 1478, was given by the Rev. H. Bothamley, together with a rare edition of the Sphaera mundi of John Hollybush (Sacroboscus), printed at Venice in 1472 in the dainty types of Florentius de Argentina."

We may add that Mr. Samuel Sandars, of Trinity College, who has during past years presented so many books to the University Library, died in London on June 15.

BISHOP WALTER DE STAPLEDON's foundation of Exeter College owes immeasurable thanks to the devotion of the Rev. C. W. Boase. For a long series of years, in his capacity of fellow and tutor, he has benefited the college by his teaching and influence, while spare moments (and they must indeed be few with him) have been spent in illustrating the records and history of the college. First came, in 1879, the Registrum Collegii Exoniensis, followed by a second part in the present year, containing the names and degrees of all its past commoners. A second edition of Part I. in last year, giving biographies of all scholars and fellows, brought the work up to date. This industry was agreeably diversified by a History of Oxford in the "Historic Towns" series. He has now presented the subscribers of the Oxford Historical Society with a Register of all those who from Stapledon's time have been on the foundation, prefaced with an exhaustive history of the college. There are full accounts also of the college plat and pictures, library and the like. The result is a volume of the utmost interest to all who are or have been connected with the great college of the West of England. His friends can only wish that Mr. Boase may be spared to find other academic worlds to conquer, even though he has felt it necessary to resign the university readership in modern history, which he has held since the foundation of that office more than ten years ago.

THE proceedings and addresses on the occasion of the opening of Manchester College, at Oxford, in October of last year, have been published in a handsome volume by Messrs. Longmans, illustrated with photographic views of the buildings. There is also a portrait, after the picture in Dr. Williams's Library, of Richard Frankland (1630-1638), who is regarded as the ultimate founder of the college, though its history under the present name dates only from 1786. It may not be generally known that the great John Dalton was teacher of mathematics and natural philosophy from 1793 to 1800.

ORIGINAL VERSE.

"FAILED."

Failed of the goal which once had been my aim,
The distant port for which I once had sailed,
I think the graven words above my name
Must be "He failed."

Failed to achieve the vision and the quest,
The self-forgetting and self-sacrifice;
Failed to attain the heritage of rest
Beyond all price:

Failed to retain the birthright, having sold
For passing pleasure and from fear of pain;
Paying the wage of God's eternal gold
For timely gain:

Failed of the purity that purges sight,
The faith that nourishes with daily bread;
Failed of the hand that reaches through the night
To guide our tread.

Failed, having laid his hand upon the plough,
So soon to falter and so soon to tire;
Failed, though the God of life may even now
Save as by fire.

However bright life's after-glow may flame,
If storms retreat that have so long assailed,
I think the graven words above my name
Must be "He failed."

ARTHUR L. SALMON.

MAGAZINES AND REVIEWS.

THE unsigned article in the Antiquary upon the recent heraldic exhibition at the Society of Antiquaries is the best account of that interesting display that we have seen. Its only fault is that it is too short. The Rev. E. Maule Cole contributes a good paper on Huggate Dikes. These curious mounds or excavations, whichever we please to call them, exist on the Wolds of Yorkshire. The older race of antiquaries had, of course, no doubt that they were Roman. Such a fancy must now be discarded. That they are military works is certain, but to what race we owe them remains a mystery. There are several other dikes of the same character not very far away. Judiciously conducted excavations on the lines pursued by General Pitt Rivers would probably solve the mystery. Mr. A. M. Bell's paper on "Children's Song in Berwickshire" is useful, as many of the verses are given. Some of them seem old, but others are adaptations of popular songs. Mr. Bell tells once more the story of the immured nun at Coldingham. Is he sure that there is proof for this such as would satisfy a modern antiquary? We have no special knowledge on the matter; but we have heard the story called in question by more than one person whose mind is not warped by religious prejudice.

A TEACHING UNIVERSITY FOR LONDON.

THE committee of graduates of the University of London, formed to obtain from members of Convocation an expression of general approval of the proposals of the Gresham University Commissioners, and to secure the election on the Annual Committee of members favourable to the Report, have been eminently successful in their endeavours.

The committee (which includes Mr. Cozens Hardy, Q.C., M.P. (chairman), Mr. Thistleton Dyer, Prof. Silvanus Thompson, Principal Cave, Dr. Allechin and Dr. Roberts) caused a circular to be addressed to members of Convocation, and as a result upwards of 850 graduates have signified their general approval of the Report of the Royal Commission. This expression of opinion was brought to the notice of the Senate at its last meeting on June 13, and doubtless materially aided them in their determination to express a general approval of the Report. A resolution to this effect was carried by an overwhelming majority.

The efforts of the committee have also resulted in an almost complete change in the constitution of the Annual Committee of Convocation, those who were unfavourably disposed towards the Gresham Report having been replaced by graduates holding opposite views. On Thursday in last week the Annual Committee passed a similar resolution, with only two dissentients; and on Friday a conference was held of the special committee of the Senate appointed to take charge of this matter, and of the Annual Committee, together with some other influential graduates.

At this conference the terms of the reference to the proposed Statutory Commission were discussed; and it is understood that the committee of the Senate were very favourably impressed by the arguments for the speedy appointment of such a Commission brought forward by Mr. Cozens Hardy, Prof. Silvanus Thompson, Mr. Thistleton Dyer, and others.

The Senate and Convocation, so far as it has been possible to ascertain its opinion, having now expressed a general acquiescence in the scheme, and the important meeting of delegates from the colleges mentioned in the Commissioners' Report (which was held at the Royal College of Physicians on Saturday last), having also passed a resolution urging the speedy appointment of a Statutory Commission to carry out the recommendations of the Royal Commissioners in their main outlines, it is hoped that the Government will take steps at an early date to carry into effect the desires of these various bodies.

CIVIL LIST PENSIONS.

THE complete list of pensions granted during the year ended June 20, 1894, and charged upon the Civil List, is as follows:

Miss Adeline Amy Leech, only surviving sister of the late John Leech, in addition to pensions of £25 and £10 already granted to her, £35; Prof. T. W. Rhys-Davids, in recognition of his merits as a student of Oriental literature, £200; Mrs. Sophia Edersheim, in recognition of the merits of her late husband, Dr. Edersheim, as a writer on theology and Biblical criticism, £75; Mrs. Elizabeth Baker Mozley, in recognition of the merits of her late husband, the Rev. Thomas Mozley, £75; the Rev. Wentworth Webster, in consideration of his researches into the language, literature, and archaeology of the Basques, £150; the Lady Alice Portal, in recognition of the distinguished services of her late husband, Sir Gerald Herbert Portal, £150; Mr. T. H. S. Escott, in consideration of his merits as an author and journalist, £100; Mr. John Beattie Crozier, in consideration of his philosophical writings and researches, £50; Dr. Thomas Gordon Hake, in recognition of his merits as a poet, £65; Mr. Samuel Alfred Varley, in consideration of his services to electrical science, £50; Mrs. Amy Cameron, in consideration of the services rendered to geographical science by her late husband, Capt. Verney Lovett Cameron, £50; Mrs. Alice Margaret Hassall, in consideration of the services of her late husband, Dr. Arthur Hill Hassall, £50; Miss Matilda Betham-Edwards, in consideration of her literary merits, £50; Mrs. Katharine S. Macquoid, in consideration of her contributions to literature, £50; Miss Rosalind Hawker and Miss Juliet Hawker, in consideration of the literary merits of their late father, the Rev. Stephen Hawker, £25 each. Total, £1200.

THE BODLEIAN LIBRARY.

WE quote from the annual report of Bodley's Librarian at Oxford the following description of the more important MSS. which have been acquired during the past year:—

"The Irish MSS. consist of volumes of 'Ossianic' poems and romantic stories.

"The Cornish MS., written in the late seventeenth century, when the language was still spoken, included transcripts of the mystery-plays of Mount Calvary and the Creation of the World.

"Of English MSS. the following may be mentioned. A late seventeenth century translation, said to be unknown, of Keating's History of Ireland. Sir Roger Twysden's tables of early English history. A British Necrology, 1625-59. An account to Parliament of the Privy Purse secret service expenditure from 1752 to 1769. Le Neve's extracts from deeds relating to Norfolk families. Collections towards a Life of Selden. Prayers and notes on the Old Testament by Clarendon, written about 1648. A pedigree of Browne Willis and his wife. A translation by Gough, in 1751, of all except one of Terence's plays. The collections of Dr. Shippen, sometime Principal of Brasenose and Vice-Chancellor, ranging from 1685 to 1734. And eleven volumes of Collectanea by Dr. Ph. Bliss.

"The most curious Latin MS. was a Brigittine Collectarius of the fifteenth century, with some Swedish rubrics, believed to be the only ancient MS. of Swedish origin which the Bodleian possesses. A volume of private prayers mainly executed in France in the early fifteenth century for a lady named Katherine, but with an English calendar, is interesting both for its contents and because it has been supposed to have been executed for the queen of Henry V.; the illumination, however, is not so fine as in that event might have been expected. But neither of these purchases compares in historical importance with that of five volumes containing a collection of about 350 charters, mostly with seals, relating to Goring Priory, and ranging from the reign of Henry II. to that of Henry VIII.

"Various fragments of Greek papyri of the Byzantine period were purchased, the most important being part of a deed of sale executed at Apollinopolis Magna (Edfu) in the reign of Tiberius II. and Anastasia (578-82). This fragment contains more or less of the last sixty-two lines of the deed, and is an excellent specimen of the notarial hand from which the minuscule of the ninth century vellum MSS. was developed.

"Of the Hebrew MSS. the following may be mentioned:—A very large and fine vellum MS., written at Rothenburg on the Tauber in 1308, of Midrash Yalkut on the Pentateuch; an Aramaic marriage-contract of the year 956, the earliest known dated specimen of cursive Hebrew writing; and a Persian deed of the year 1021 in Hebrew characters.

"A prettily ornamented Pali MS. on palm-leaves written in the Siamese Pali character was purchased, together with a MS. written in the ordinary Siamese character. It is very rarely that Siamese MSS. of any kind occur for purchase.

"A Syriac MS. of the Catholic Epistles written in India in 1731 was acquired, and two additional palimpsest leaves containing unknown fragments of the 'Jerusalem' Syriac version of the Old Testament.

"The Aethiopic MS. purchased was an abundantly illuminated life of the saint Takla Haimanot (MS. Aeth. c. 3), probably executed in the seventeenth century. The Bodleian, although well known for its collection of Aethiopic MSS., had not hitherto numbered among them any choice specimen of illumination. This MS. has also an historical interest, as containing the autographs of eight of the captives whose detention caused the Abyssinian War.

"The Chinese MS. was an account of the Maout-ze tribe, on the North West frontier of China, with abundant pictorial representations of their manners and customs.

"The Japanese MS. consisted of an old and finely executed series of 40 legendary paintings, each measuring about $1 \times 1\frac{1}{2}$ ft.

"By the kind permission of Earl Fitzwilliam, a MS. of extreme interest for the history of the earlier University library has been photographed. In 1873-9, the Early English Text Society published 'from the unique MS. in Colchester Castle' an edition of a fifteenth century English verse translation of Palladius De re rustica. In 1886 the Bodleian bought the fifteenth century MS., from which this edition was made. But in the Athenaeum of Nov. 17, 1888, attention was called by Mr. H. J. Moule to the fact that Lord Fitzwilliam possessed the translator's own dedication-copy addressed to Humfrey, Duke of Gloucester, and containing dedicatory verses which refer to the gifts made by the duke to the library of Oxford University. This MS. Lord Fitzwilliam lent in 1893 to the Bodleian, where it was photographed by the Clarendon Press. The name of the translator is nowhere found; but he was a cleric, who says that he and his had been oppressed for ten years by some one who still kept from him 'in effect' his church and all his good, and that he had been taught metro by the duke. It is clear that he had been specially commissioned to execute this work, but he had only pledged himself to the first of the thirteen books of which his poem is composed: apparently he sent to his patron each book as soon as finished. His mention in the dedication of the fact that the duke had given the university 130 books, shows that the work was not begun before November, 1439; and his omission to record the gift of February, 25, 1441, almost proves that he finished it before the latter date. He likewise seems familiar with the interior of the university library; for he describes the duke's books as stored 'In deskis xii. . . . as half a strete.' The metre is quite sound, and the use of final e carefully regulated—features which point to his being a man of at least middle age. It is barely credible that the name of the author of this poem of between six and seven thousand lines should not have been perpetuated by other poetical works; and the Librarian suggests that he was the John Waltwn, Waltoun, or Walton, who, in 1410, translated Boethius de Consolatione Philosophiae into English verse for Elisabeth Berkeley, employing in part the same stanza in which the Palladius is written. Oxford MSS. of the Boethius call him 'capellanum Johannem' and 'nuper canonicum de Oseneye,' and the style 'capellanum' suggests that he may have been the chaplain of the university, who at that time was also university librarian. A comparison of the facsimile of the Fitzwilliam MS. with the MS. previously in the Bodleian seems to show that the latter represents the author's unfinished draft of a new edition, prepared after Duke Humfrey's death. The phraseology has been much altered, the dedicatory verses omitted, and the laudatory epilogues to the different books either left out or shorn of all allusion to the duke; but the gaps made in the metre by this latter process have not yet been filled up. The text of the later copy has also been accidentally mutilated in other places. The remarkable value of this poem as a carefully written monument of the educated Oxford dialect of 1440, and as a storehouse of the agricultural vocabulary of this part of England, leads the Librarian to hope that the exceptionally inaccurate printed edition of the imperfect revision of it may soon be replaced by a parallel-text edition of both MSS., which, by Lord Fitzwilliam's kindness in allowing his own to be photographed, can now be prepared in the Bodleian."

SELECTED FOREIGN BOOKS.

GENERAL LITERATURE.

- ARNAUD, Aug. La Monnaie, le Crédit et le Change. Paris: Alcan. 7 fr.
- BELLESMANN, F. Landschafts- u. Vegetations-Bilder aus den Tropen Süd Amerika's. Berlin: Friedländer. 16 M.
- BEANABONI, L. La Littérature Scandinave. Paris: Plon. 8 fr. 50 c.
- FARRERICKS, H. Der Apoll v. Belvedere. Eine archäolog. Studie. Paderborn: Schöningh. 1 M. 80 Pf.
- GANNERS, Arthur de. Le Maroc d'aujourd'hui, d'hier et de demain. Paris: Jouve. 3 fr. 50 c.
- KOZEL, R. Geschichte der deutschen Literatur bis zum Ausgange d. Mittelalters. 1. Bd. 1. Th. Die etablierte Dichtg. u. die got. Prosa. Strassburg: Trübner. 10 M.
- SCHNEEGANS, H. Geschichte der grotesken Satire. Strassburg: Trübner. 18 M.
- SCHREIBER, J. Die Vaganten-Strophe der mittellateinischen Dichtung. Strassburg: Schleier. 5 M.
- STOLL, G. Suggestion u. Hypnotismus in der Völkerpsychologie. Leipzig: Koehler. 15 M.
- TARBOUX, Ferd. Lettres sur le socialisme. Paris: Fischbacher. 5 fr.
- TRAVAUX de la Commission de travail instituée par arrêté royal du 16 Avril 1886. Bruxelles: Soc. Belge de Librairie. 60 fr.
- WEYL, Em. La flotte de guerre et les arsenaux. Paris: Plon. 3 fr. 50 c.

THEOLOGY.

- ZIEGERT, P. 2 Abhandlungen üb. T. Flavius Clemens Alexandrinus. Psychologie u. Logochristologie. Heidelberg: Hönig. 8 M.

HISTORY, ETC.

- ALBERT, Maurice. Les Médecins grecs à Rome. Paris: Hachette. 3 fr. 50 c.
- BUSCH, C. P. Neue Forschungen zur älteren Geschichte Roms. I. Amsterdam: J. Müller. 2 M. 25 Pf.
- COMES DE PESTRADE, le Vicomte. La Sicile sous la Monarchie de Savoie. Paris: Guillaumin. 3 fr. 50 c.
- FREUND, L. Lug u. Trug nach moslemischem Recht u. nach moslemischer Polizei. 2. Hft. Hannover: Meyer. 1 M. 20 Pf.
- HEBING, R. v. Vorgeschichte der Indoeuropäer. Aus d. Nachlass hrag. Leipzig: Duncker & Humblot. 11 M. 60 Pf.
- KIEPPE, L. A. Geschichte der Gemeinde Balbrunn. Ein Beitrag zur vaterländ. Geschichte nach Urkunden. Strassburg: Nothel. 5 M.
- LINCKE, A. A. Ägypten u. Nubien in Geschichte u. Sage der Mittelmeervölker. Berlin: Felber. 1 M. 50 Pf.
- LOUIS XVII. au cimetière de Sainte-Marguerite (enquêtes médicales). Paris: Ollendorff. 2 fr.
- MONUMENTA Germaniae historica. Auctorum antiquissimorum tom. XI. par. 2. 9 M. Epistolae saeculi XIII. e regestis pontificum romanorum selectae per G. N. Periz. Editio C. Rodenberg. Tom. III. 27 M. Berlin: Weidmann.
- SAINT-AMAND, Imbert de. Marie-Amélie et la société française en 1817. Paris: Dentu. 3 fr. 50 c.
- STERN, M. Die israelitische Bevölkerung der deutschen Städte. III. Nürnberg im Mittelalter. 1. Hälfte. Quellen: Statistische Texte. Kiel: Dr. Moritz Stern. 3 M.
- WESTERMAYER, H. Die brandenburgisch-nürnbergische Kirchenvisitation u. Kirchenordnung. 1528-1533. Auf Grund der Akten dargestellt. Erlangen: Junge. 2 M. 40 Pf.

PHYSICAL SCIENCE AND PHILOSOPHY.

- BARR, H. Studien zur Kritik der Moderne. Frankfurt-a-M.: Lit. Anstalt. 7 M.
- FÜRST, H. Deutschlands nützliche u. schädliche Vögel. Berlin: Parey. 26 M.
- HONIG, Th. Bodenphysikalische u. meteorologische Beobachtungen m. besond. Berücksicht. d. Nachtfrostphänomene. Berlin: Mayer & Müller. 8 M.
- SCHREIBER, Th. Viktor Hehn. Ein Lebensbild. Stuttgart: Cotta. 5 M.

PHILOLOGY, ETC.

- FÉCAMP, Alb. Le Poème de Gudrun: ses origines, sa formation et son histoire. Paris: Bouillon. 8 fr.
- KOSCHWITZ, E. Grammaire historique de la langue des Fribres. Greifswald: Abel. 4 M.
- WOHLATIS, J. Dämonenbeschwörungen aus nachtalmudischer Zeit, inschriftlich auf Thongefässen d. k. Museums in Berlin. Berlin: Felber. 2 M.

CORRESPONDENCE.

HAS THE "SONG OF SOLOMON" BEEN EXPURGATED?

London: June 28, 1894.

Sir Henry Howorth may be interested to know, if he has not ascertained the fact in the course of his recent researches, that there is tolerably clear, if not very abundant, evidence in the Canticles that the expurgator has been at work, and that consequently the present Hebrew text differs from that used by the Septuagint translator. I refer more particularly to vi. 12 (10, 11). Here in the Greek we have: ἐκεῖ δόσω τοὺς ματτοὺς μου σοὶ οὐκ ἔργω ἢ ψυχῇ μου. ἔσθω με ἄρματα Ἀμινὰδῆ.

The meaning of the first clause (which is omitted in the Hebrew) will become apparent on comparison with Prov. v. 19, and especially Ezek. xxiii. 3, 8, 21. With this explanation there is no difficulty about the sudden rapture, described as being like "the chariots of Amminadab." This was probably seen by an old copyist or reviser of the Hebrew text, and accordingly, for the sake of decorum, he struck out or omitted the words answering to the first clause—that is, שם אהן חרדדי.

It may of course be contended that the omission was the result of accident. But the nature of the missing clause renders this suggestion less probable. The reader of the Hebrew text (which has been followed, of course, in the English version) can scarcely fail to see that something is deficient: "I went down into the garden of nuts to see the fruits of the valley, [and] to see whether the vine flourished, [and] the pomegranates budded. Or ever I was aware my soul made me [like] the chariots of Amminadib." Here there appears to be nothing which can adequately account for the rapture, whatever may be the symbolism of the "garden of nuts" and the "pomegranates." In the Septuagint, on the contrary, all is coherent.

What has just been said may derive some added probability from a consideration of vii. 12, where we have again in the Sept. ἐκεῖ δόσω, κ.τ.λ. Here, as before, the translator must have read דָּדַדַּי, but in the ordinary Hebrew text we have דָּדַי דֹּדַי: "There will I give thee my loves." The change was probably made for the sake of introducing a somewhat less gross expression; but the general sense can scarcely be regarded as affected, especially when there follows immediately a mention of the dudaim or "mandrakes," whose reputed aphrodisiacal properties are well known. Whether the change in vii. 12 is to be ascribed to the same hand as the omission in the previous chapter it is impossible to say, since there appear to be some copies with the dodai not written fully.

I do not put forward this evidence as conclusive, even with respect to the narrow limits of the Canticles; and it is quite possible that in other books of the Old Testament similar facts, previously undiscovered, might reveal themselves to a close scrutiny.

THOMAS TYLER.

THE FAUST LEGEND.

London: June 8, 1894.

Students of Goethe's play have traced the origin of the Faust legend to the history of Theophilus, an ecclesiastic of the town of Adana in Cilicia, who flourished during the sixth century.

According to the record of Eutychianus [cf. L. Eitnmüller, Theophilus der Faust des

*The present Hebrew text gives Amminadib, which may be taken as a proper name or as two words. In any case there is probably an allusion to the spontaneity or willingness implied in the nadib or nadab.

Mittelalters, Schauspiel aus dem XIV. Jahrhundert. Quedlinb. u. Leipz. 1849, who has drawn upon the learned treatise of E. Sommers, de Theophili cum diabolo foedere, Berolini 1844.] Theophilus, who had been a vicedominus (arch-deacon) of his church, was wrongfully dismissed from his office. To obtain restitution, he applied himself to magic arts; he renounced his faith, and gave "a written bond to the evil one"; he was duly restored to his place, but he repented of his sin; after forty days of penance in the Church of the Panhagia, he obtained forgiveness through the intercession of the Virgin Mary; the bond was returned to him and burned to ashes.

This legend of the Anatolian Church was twice translated into Latin [Sommers op. cit. p. 9] by Paulus, deacon of Naples, and again by Gentianus Hervetus. Of the former translation Rosvitha of Gandersheim availed herself in her poem, Lapsus et Conversio Theophili Vicedomini. The accomplished nun, who had acquired all the learning that her age possessed, has accordingly been mentioned "as the first German writer who dealt with the subject of Faust." The Bishop of Rennes, Marbod (ob. 1123), narrated the same event in a poem composed in rhymed hexameters, which appears in the Acta Sanctorum (Febr. 1.), 480-89. The legend was for the first time put into German verse by the elder Hartmann during the twelfth century. It is interesting to note the development which the story, in his treatment of it, takes in the direction of the Faust Book. Theophilus is no longer a cleric seeking restitution to his office: he is merely a man desiring riches and worldly renown who signs away his soul to the devil, and who is saved through the intercession of St. Mary, "of her maidens, and of the saints of God." Goethe's verses ("Faust," Part I., line 21 sq.):

"Auch hab' ich weder Gut noch Geld,
Noch Ehr und Herrlichkeit der Welt,
Es möchte kein Hund so länger leben," &c.

as well as the intercessory litany in the closing scene of Part II., appear to have been suggested by Hartmann.

The history of Theophilus formed part of the Legends of St. Mary composed some time after 1250 (cf. Leg. 23 and 24). In the poem of Brun von Schönebecke, written about 1276, the first mention is made in the German tradition of a bond signed with blood.

There is no doubt that we have here one of the historical roots from which there sprang in later centuries the legend of Faust. It is strange, however, that commentators of Goethe, in searching for further traces, should have gone so far as to mention Cyprian of Antioch (Cyprian von Antiochien und die deutsche Faustsage von Th. Zahn, Erlangen, 1882), whose life possesses hardly any likeness to that of Goethe's hero beyond the bare circumstance of supernatural agency, and should have overlooked a poem which contains the groundwork of the later tragedy, "De Proterii Filia" (ed. Zeitschr. f. deutsches Alterth., 1869, p. 449 sq. by Ph. Jaffé). In this instance it is a slave who, enamoured of his master's daughter, destined to take the veil, invokes the assistance of the evil one. He renounces his baptism, and gives a written document to that effect. The bargain is faithfully kept on both sides; for immediately the maiden is made to exclaim: "Misere miserere pater filie; moriar, mi pater; modo sine jungar tali puero." The father yields to her entreaties, the marriage takes place, the bride learns her husband's secret, and "a beato Basilio penitentiam persuasit pro errore percipere gravissimo." The conclusion of the story agrees with that of Theophilus, except that St. Basil appears as intercessor. Through penance the enemy is vanquished, the bond restored, and the repentant slave received again into the Church. There is no need to compare Faust's love and the aid he obtains from Mephistopheles (in Goethe's play) with this fable, or Gretchen's questions and remonstrances to Faust (line 3064 sq.):

"Nun sag', wie hast du's mit der Religion?
Du ehrst auch nicht die heil'gen Sacra-mente
Denn du hast kein Christenthum" with the inquiries of the early Christian bride ("a marito tandem explorata cuncte sue causa perfidie") and her sorrow ("viri comperta infidelitate").

In the first Faust Book of 1587 (cf. edition by W. Scherer, Berlin, 1884), the love of woman obtained by magic agency plays a considerable part; and thus the slave of Proterius, in his original shape, is far nearer a prototype of Faust than Theophilus. R. Kögel, in Grundriss der German Philol. (Bd. II., Abteilung 1., p. 226), mentions "De Proterii Filia" as the earliest account of a "compact with the devil, which afterwards passed over into the Faust legend, and was there further developed." While referring to Jaffé's edition, he does not question the date which the latter assigns to the poem—namely, some time between 1028-35 (p. 464 sq.). Rosvitha, however, has treated the same legend, under the title, Conversio cujusdam juvenis desperati per S. Basilium episcopum (in Barack's ed., p. 98, it follows immediately upon Theophilus); and as she died before the close of the tenth century (in 967 according to Max Müller, German Classics, new ed., vol. i., p. 44), her poem appears to be the earlier of the two. The account given in both works agrees exactly; but the wording is entirely different. They are no doubt translations and enlargements of the same Greek original. If Rosvitha, the fourth abbess of Gandersheim, was a Greek princess (cf. Barack, p. xxvii.), she may have furnished the poetess, her namesake, with the materials of this poem. "De Proterii Filia" is included neither in Grimm and Schmeller (Lat. Gedichte des X. und XI. Jahrh.) nor in the Denkmäler edited by Müllenhoff and Scherer.

CHARLES MERK.

DANTE'S REFERENCE TO ALEXANDER THE GREAT IN INDIA.

Stanhoe Grange, Norfolk.

It has never yet been explained whence Dante got the details of his version of the incident (alluded to in the Inferno, xiv. 28ff.) which is said to have occurred to Alexander the Great and his army in India. It has already been pointed out, in the ACADEMY (January 26, 1889; February 2, 1889) and elsewhere, that the ultimate source of his account was doubtless the spurious Epistola Alexandri Regis ad Aristotilem preceptorem suum de Mirabilibus Indie. There is, however, an important discrepancy between Dante's account and that given in the Epistola; for while the latter says it was the snow that Alexander's soldiers trampled down on the occasion referred to, Dante says that Alexander bade his soldiers stamp out the flames. A comparison of the two passages will make this clear:

"Cadere mox in modum uellerum immense niues cepere quarum aggregationes metuens cum in castra cumularentur niues calcari feci ut quam cito pedum iniuria tabescerent. . . . Atra nubes subsecuta est uisique sunt tanquam faces ardentes descendere ita ut incendio earum quasi totus campus ardere uideretur. . . . Insuper tunc milites scissas (var. sacras) uestes ignibus opponere."—(M.S. Brit. Mus., Sloane 1785.)

"Quali Alessandro in quelle parti calde
D'India vide sopra lo suo stuolo
Fiamme cadere infino a terra salde;
Perch'ei provide a scaltipar lo stuolo
Con le sue schiere, acciocchè il vapore
Me' si stingeua mentre ch'era solo."—
(Inf. xiv. 31-6.)

It has been suggested by Dr. Moore and others that Dante's version was probably due to his having quoted from memory, which caused him to confuse the details of the description in the Epistola. I have myself suggested (ACADEMY, February 20, 1892) that Dante may have derived his account indirectly from the Epistola through the medium of the Old French Romans d'Alexandre, the authors of which undoubtedly made use of the Epistola.

I think, however, I have now at length satisfactorily cleared up this point. In the De Meteoris of Albertus Magnus, after a discussion as to the nature and origin of igneous vapours, occurs the following passage:

"Admirabilem autem impressionem scribit Alexander ad Aristotilem in epistola de mirabilibus indie dicens quemadmodum nivis nubes ignite de aere cadebant quas ipse militibus calcare praecepit."—(De Meteor., Lib. I., tract. iv., cap. 8.)

Here, it will be noted, is the express statement that Alexander bade his soldiers trample the ignited vapours, which is in exact agreement with the description given by Dante in the Inferno. I have very little doubt that it was from this passage that Dante derived his account; for not only was he certainly familiar with the De Meteoris of Albertus Magnus, which he twice refers to by name in the Convito (ii. 14; iv. 23), but I can prove that he made use of the identical section of the work in which the above passage occurs. I hope to deal with this matter at greater length on a future occasion, in some notes on Dante which are to appear in Romania. It will suffice for the present to state that in the Convito (ii. 14) Dante quotes (without acknowledgment) from the very next chapter of the De Meteoris (Lib. I., tract. iv., cap. 9) a statement about Albumassar, which the commentators have hitherto supposed to be a quotation at first-hand from the Arabian astronomer, though they have not been able to identify the passage in his works.

It appears, therefore, as was supposed, that the ultimate source of Dante's description of the incident which occurred to Alexander in India was the spurious Letter to Aristotle; but that the confusion of the details was due, not to Dante himself, but to Albertus Magnus, whose account he copied.

PAGET TOYNBEE.

THE TOMB OF THE LAST GOTHIC KING.

San Pedro do Sal, Beira Alta, Portugal:
June 23, 1894.

As some of the guide-books, all very imperfect, used by travellers in Portugal have misdescribed the tomb of King Roderic at Vizeu, it may be of interest to historical students to know its actual condition.

The small church of St. Michael appears to have been built about a hundred and fifty years ago on the site of a medieval one. In a recess on the south side of it, between the nave and the chancel, there is a large granite sarcophagus raised above the pavement upon trestles of the same material. It appears to be of the same date as the present building, and bears the following inscription:—HIC IACET AVT IACUIT POSTREMVS IN ORDINE REGVM GOTTORVM VT NOBIS NVNTIA FAMA REFERT.
E. S. DODGSON.

WHAT IS SLANG?

Cambridge: July 3, 1894.

Surely the question whether any given word is "slang" must be a matter of taste, and cannot be decided in the arbitrary fashion suggested by Mr. F. E. Garrett. The word "slang" does not occur in Dr. Johnson's Dictionary, so that he is scarcely an authority on this point, though I may point out that he calls "budge" "a low word," just as several modern dictionaries (e.g., Webster's and the Imperial) call it "vulgar." Quotations from Shakspeare and other English classics seem to me irrelevant, because (as Mr. Garrett is of course aware) some words and phrases which were then good English have since deteriorated.

Again, Mr. Garrett says that he only used "budge" twice within 6000 lines; but my expression, "the reiteration of such slang terms as 'slack' and 'budge'" meant that words like these occurred frequently, and not that each of them was often repeated. I know that the extremely colloquial language of the original is the explanation of Mr. Garrett's style; whether it is also his excuse must remain a matter of opinion. I was comparing his work with that of a translator who has, by means that may or may not be legitimate, avoided what is something of a stumbling-block to English readers.

R. BRIMLEY JOHNSON.

APPOINTMENTS FOR NEXT WEEK.

MONDAY, July 9, 8 p.m. Goethe Society: "The Beginnings of the German Novel" By Dr. John G. Robertson.
SATURDAY, July 14, 3.45 p.m. Botanic: General Fortnightly Meeting.

SCIENCE.

The Lowell Lectures on the Ascent of Man.
By Henry Drummond. (Hodder & Stoughton.)

PROF. HENRY DRUMMOND starts with an indictment against the exponents of the theory of Evolution. Theologians have accepted the inclusion of Man as a part of Nature, but biologists have ignored the "whole man," by which is meant body and mind, plus "the higher human soul." Thereby Nature has been misread, and "a whole philosophy corrupted." The Professor undertakes to repair the omission, by broadening the foundation and enlarging the structure; but whether or not in widening his base he has left bedrock and come upon sand will be examined presently. Be it to his credit that with no uncertain tone he endorses the theory which, in his own words, "is revolutionising the world of nature and of thought." Wisely burying in oblivion the past attitude of the clerical mind towards the Origin of Species, he would have only scorn for the man who withdrew his balance from Martin's Bank because one of the partners signed the memorial in support of Darwin's burial in Westminster Abbey! Prof. Drummond's summary of Evolution as applied to man's origin and structure; to the explanation of his vestigial characters—gill-slits, tail, hairiness, and other abortive features; to the dawn of mind and the beginnings of language; are models of accurate information delightfully conveyed. The teleology which dominates the larger part of the book is rarely obtrusive in this section; once it peeps out in the remark that "the introduction of speech into the world was delayed, not because the possibilities of it were not in Nature, but because the instrument was not quite ready. Then the instrument came and man spoke." Which remark shows that the Professor has overlooked an elemental canon of morphology—namely, that the function creates the organ.

But, remembering that anything from the skilful pen of the author of Natural Law in the Spiritual World will reach an audience deaf to the charms of the "suspect" author of Man's Place in Nature (the re-issue of which is most welcome), it is gratifying to note that a large class of readers will gather from this book a clear idea of the theory of the continuity of life from moneron to man, and of the lateral descent of man and apes from a common ancestry. Only once does Prof. Drummond turn aside to refer to legends which, for many of the audience to whom his writings specially appeal, have authority as a part of revelation. What is "flat" blasphemy in the biologist is only a "choleric word" in the preacher; and there will rise no protest in the religious newspapers because, in treating of the Hebrew legends of man's creation by direct divine fiat, the Professor adopts the modern theological strategies of retreat from the old defence of Bible literalness under cover of the mists of poetic meaning.

It is in the section on the "Missing Factor in Current Theories" that Prof. Drummond comes to close quarters with the biologists from Darwin downwards. Following their great leader, they have, one and all, "offered as the sole and final clue to the course of living Nature the principle of the Struggle for Life." Upon the action of this "the drama of Evolution has been made entirely to hinge." That it can never wholly cease as "life's dynamic" is conceded; moreover, the changes in its direction are noted in the partial supersession of militarism by industrialism, with its foundation in selfishness.

"But that it is the sole or even the main agent in the process of Evolution must be denied. Creation is a drama, and no drama was ever put upon the stage with only one actor. The Struggle for Life is the Villain of the Piece, no more; and like the Villain in the play, its chief function is to react upon the other players for higher ends. There is a second factor which one might venture to call the Struggle for the Life of Others, which plays an equally prominent part. . . . Both are cosmical; both are ethical."

The first is Nutrition, the basis of the Struggle for Life; the second is Reproduction, the basis of the Struggle for the Life of Others. And these two, like Ormuzd and Ahriman, or like the Love and Strife of Empedocles, have been in conflict since life's dawn. For "even in protoplasm is Self-ism and Other-ism." But admitting the inter-relation of the two functions, Prof. Drummond further admits that both are "at the outset parts of the Struggle for Life," and that "ethical implications begin to arise only at a certain height" in organic development: at what point is not indicated. In his lucid explanation of the physiology of the moneron, its division is shown to be a mechanical necessity: a selfish act, if the ethical element be allowed. Yet after thus giving his case away, the Professor insists on the potential altruism of the protozoa, on the outward sign of ethical grace in maternal labours far down in the life-scale, and sees its crowning development in human motherhood, when the birth of the child calls forth that sympathy, tenderness, and selfishness which are the components of "Other-ism." Only in the creature Man, who is but "a rudimentary structure of Body and Mind" till he is tenanted by the "higher human Soul" (whatever that may mean), does Love, the "supreme dynamic, whose roots began with the first cell of life," have its consummation. At this point the author of The Greatest Thing in the World becomes well-nigh intoxicated with the erotic spirit, and sings canticles on the love-tints and love-music of Nature, which seem echoes of Erasmus Darwin's Botanic Garden and of the Song of Solomon. "The first chapter or two of the Story of Evolution may be headed the Struggle for Life; the book, taken as a whole, is not a tale of battle. It is a Love-story." Then follows the "application" of a rhapsodical homily.

"Is Nature henceforth to become the ethical teacher of the world? Shall its aims become the guide, its spirit the inspiration of Man's life? Is there no ground here where all the faiths and all the creeds may meet—nay, no ground for a final faith and a final creed? For could but all men see the inner meaning and aspiration of the natural order, should we not find at last the universal religion—a religion congruous with the whole past of Man, at one with Nature, and with a working creed which Science could accept? The answer is a simple one: We have it already. There exists a religion which has anticipated all these requirements—a religion which has been before the world these eighteen hundred years, whose congruity with Nature and with Man stands the tests at every point. Up to this time no word has been spoken to reconcile Christianity with Evolution, or Evolution with Christianity. And why? Because the two are one. . . . Through what does Evolution work? Through Love. Through what does Christianity work? Through Love. Evolution and Christianity have the same Author, the same end, the same spirit. Christianity struck into the Evolutionary process with no noise or shock; it took all the natural foundations precisely as it found them; it adopted Man's body, mind, and soul at the exact level where Organic Evolution was at work upon them; it carried on the building by slow and gradual modifications; and through processes governed by rational laws, it put the finishing touches to the Ascent of Man."

Thus has Prof. Drummond, after adopting the tone of the scientific expositor through his book, reserved the disclosure of its raison d'être till the last half-dozen pages. Evolution and Christianity are convertible terms. The author of Natural Law in the Spiritual World has been at no small pains to tell us what he means by "Evolution," but he is silent as to what he means by "Christianity." What is to be understood as the "facts and processes which have received the name of Christian and which are the continuation of the scientific order"? Is the Incarnation one of them, and, if so, does it involve no break in the "scientific order"? Is the doctrine of the Fall one of the "facts and processes"; and, if so, what is its bearing on the continuity of ethical development, no hint of any break in which is given by Prof. Drummond? In fine, does he connote any set of doctrines or dogmas with the term "Christianity"; does he not rather, emptying the term of whatever makes it distinctive, use it as a merely conventional expression for a vague and invertebrate sentiment, while arrogantly claiming it as representing the source and impetus of all moral and intellectual progress? So, though the substance be insidiously surrendered, there is retained comfort in the "blessed word Mesopotamia"; and the uninformed readers of the Ascent of Man will gather from its travesty of fact and its suppression of history the lesson that Evolution proves the divine origin of Christianity. If Evolution proves anything, it proves that Christianity is neither more nor less divine or human in origin than Buddhism or Islam; that its history and varying fortunes are wholly the outcome of natural causes; and that it has survived as an influence only in the degree that it has shed everything special to it, and accepted the results of all modern inquiry and discovery. And Prof. Drummond, in equating Christianity, as understood by the majority of his readers, with Evolution, is throwing dust in their eyes.

The preface intimates that, "apart from teleology," the theologian will find nothing of service to him in the book. But there is enough and to spare in a book which is, practically, a restatement of the doctrine of final causes, with the addition of illustrations brought up to date: a blend of Pope's Essay on Man with Paley's Natural Theology. For the keynote struck in the Introduction resounds throughout. Nature has "a plan, a moral purpose in the end to be achieved by Evolution, which suggests to the reason the work of an Intelligent Mind." To the obvious objection that the same end might have been secured by "Creation tout d'un coup," Prof. Drummond replies that this "infinitely nobler scheme" has "filled the imagination and kindled to enthusiasm the soberest scientific minds from Darwin downwards"! Should not that result compensate a groaning and travailing creation struggling for the "Life of Others"?

The argument that design implies limitation—the adaptation of means to ends, the cutting of the garment of the universe according to the cloth—is fatal to all teleological theories. And these, in so far as they assume a moral element in cosmic processes, are two-edged. For if there be a moral element, there is also an immoral element; the sinner is as much a natural product as the saint. There is, in truth, no escape from the difficulties with which Nature, "red in tooth and claw," confronts us, except by detaching all ethical significance from phenomena till certain stages are reached. Nature is non-moral, and moral implications arise only under social conditions. Where there is no society, there is no sin, because there is no possibility of actions affecting others. Where two or three are gathered together, duty, with its limitation of the individual, arises; codes of ethics, which are but rules of conduct, are framed and based, for their effective action, on supposed supernatural authority, until the community reaches a stage when conception of the obligation of the one to the whole is sufficing motive. But disguise it as we may under the drawing-room optimism of Prof. Drummond's glib assumptions, Strife has the upper hand in the struggle with Love; and while there is life on the globe, "there is no discharge in that war."

EDWARD CLODD.

A NEW RESEARCH LABORATORY AT THE ROYAL INSTITUTION.

THE following is the text of Mr. Ludwig Mond's letter, offering to found a new research laboratory at the Royal Institution:

"In the year 1843 a proposal was made to establish at the Royal Institution a school of practical chemistry, which was not only to give practical and systematic instruction to students, but was also to provide a place where original researches could be conducted by individuals skilled in manipulation, and where the professors could work out their problems by the aid of many qualified hands.

"This proposal was submitted by the managers of the Royal Institution to Profs. Faraday and Brande, who expressed their strong approval of the end proposed, and their desire that it might be carried out at the Royal Institution, 'if it could be done well.' But, on a closer examination of the limited space within the walls of the Institution, it appeared impracticable to afford accommodation for carrying out the proposed scheme.

"In 1846 the Royal College of Chemistry was founded, and since that time numerous schools for the teaching of practical chemistry have been established all over the country. These, however, only cope with the first part of the scheme recommended in 1843, while as to the second part, viz., founding a laboratory for the carrying out of independent researches, no adequate provision exists in England up to this date, although the need for it was so strongly felt so many years ago, and its importance for the advancement of science so forcibly dwelt upon by the promoters of the scheme and by such men as Faraday and Brande.

"I have felt that the need for such a laboratory has become greater and greater since the work of the scientific investigator has become more and more subtle and exact, and, in consequence, requires instruments of precision and a variety of facilities which a private laboratory can only very rarely command. And surely this need exists nowhere to a greater extent than in England, and nowhere can such a laboratory be expected to bear more abundant fruit than in this country, which possesses such an unrivalled record of great scientific researches, which have emanated from private laboratories not connected with teaching institutions, and among which the laboratory of the Royal Institution stands foremost, and has kept up its reputation for nearly a hundred years.

"It has been my desire for many years to found a public laboratory which should give to the devotees of pure science, anxious and willing to follow in the footsteps of the illustrious men who have built up the proud edifice of modern science, the facilities necessary for research in chemistry, and more particularly in that branch of the science called physical chemistry.

"I have come to the same conclusion as the promoters of the scheme of 1843, viz., that such a laboratory would still have the greatest prospect of success under the aegis of the Royal Institution: that in fact it would be the consummation of the work which this great institution has been fostering in its own laboratory, with such remarkable results, by the aid of the eminent men whose services it has always been fortunate enough to procure.

"As only want of space prevented the Royal Institution undertaking this task fifty years ago, I took the opportunity which offered itself last year of acquiring the premises, No. 20, Albemarle-street, adjoining the Institution. This property I found very suitable for the purposes of such a laboratory, and large enough to afford, besides, facilities to the Royal Institution for a much needed enlargement of its present laboratory and its libraries and reception rooms, which I should with great pleasure put at the disposal of the Institution.

"Being convinced that the managers of the Royal Institution will give all the encouragement and aid in their power in the foundation and working of such a research laboratory, I hereby offer to convey to the Royal Institution the freehold of No. 20, Albemarle-street, and also the lease I hold from the Institution of premises contiguous thereto, to be held by them for the purpose of a laboratory, to be named 'The Davy-Faraday

Research Laboratory of the Royal Institution,' and also for the purpose of providing increased accommodation for the general purposes of the Royal Institution, as far as the available space will allow, after providing for the requirements of the research laboratory.

"I also offer to make, at my own expense, all structural alterations necessary to fit the premises for these purposes, and to equip the Davy-Faraday Research Laboratory with the necessary apparatus, appliances, &c., and to make such further adequate provision as will hold the Royal Institution free from all expense in connection with the premises and the working of the said laboratory.

"I am aware that my offer will not provide for the third object of the scheme of 1843, viz., to enable the professors to work out their problems by the aid of many qualified hands; but I trust that if the laboratory which I offer to found proves successful, others will come forward who will supply the means for attaining this end, by the foundation of scholarships and bursaries to qualified persons willing to devote themselves to scientific work, and not in a position to do so with out assistance."

PHILOLOGY NOTES.

THE "twenty-five years' jubilee," as it is called, of Prof. Vilhelm Thomsen's doctorate in the University of Copenhagen has been celebrated by the publication of a Festskrift of 368 large octavo pages, containing twenty articles contributed by as many former pupils of that distinguished scholar. With the exception of a paper in German on the existence of the guttural nasal in prehistoric Finnish, by Prof. Setälä, all the articles are written in Danish. Four of them deal with principles affecting the development of language in general. Of these the most valuable is perhaps that by Prof. Jespersen on the formation of words by "subtraction," i.e., by the removal of a portion of a word that has been erroneously apprehended as a formative suffix or prefix, or as a member of a supposed compound. The writer gives a large number of examples from Danish, German, and English. We rather doubt the correctness of the statement quoted from Pegge, that the cockneys of his time spoke of cooked potatoes as "pot-taters," and the uncooked vegetables as "taters." Dr. Kr. Nyrop contributes a popularly-written article on the process by which words come to be used in senses quite inconsistent with their etymological signification. V. Andersen writes on the tendency of words of similar meaning and sound to coalesce or to influence each other's sense development, and P. K. Thorsen on the respective share which sudden and gradual change have in the progress of language. Dr. R. Benthorn shows that the classification of the parts of speech used by the Arabic grammarians is directly traceable to Aristotle. Classical philology is represented by five articles: "On Nemesis in Aeschylus," by Dr. A. B. Drachmann; an extract from a forthcoming work on Thucydides, by Dr. K. Hude; "The Use of the Present in Latin," by Dr. C. Jørgensen; "Hellenic Colonies in the Macedonian Peninsula," by Dr. K. F. Kinch; and "Topographical Remarks on Xenophon's Anabasis" (the fruit of observations made during a journey from Alexandretta to Ilgün) by Dr. J. Østrup. The only one of the writers who treats of comparative grammar is Dr. Dines Andersen, whose essay on the reduplication-vowel of the Indo-European perfect gives a careful summary of the history of opinion on the subject. The author regards the question as still awaiting solution, but inclines to the view that in the undivided language the repetition of the radical vowel was the rule. Dr. E. Gigas gives an account of a MS. in the Copenhagen Royal Library containing a first sketch of Bayle's famous dictionary, and Prof. Heiberg publishes from a Vatican MS. a biography of Georgius Valla, written in rather grotesque dog-Latin, but of considerable interest. In Scandinavian philology there is a paper by Dr. Finnur Jónsson on the treatment of foreign words in Old Norse poetry, and another by Dr. Axel Olrik on "Some Personal Names in the Starkad Poem," which contains rather adventurous speculation. Under the same head may be placed the article by Gerson Trier, on the origin of the modern Danish word laban, "an ill-mannered person," which the author, ingeniously, though with doubtful success, endeavours to trace to the personal name Laban, a variant of Balan in the Fierabras story. The remaining contents of the volume are a translation of a Coptic will of the seventh century, by H. O. Lange, an essay on some features of the Albanian language by H. Pedersen, and a discussion of the place of the Ādityas in Vedic mythology by Dr. S. Sørensen.

REPORTS OF SOCIETIES.

ANGLO-RUSSIAN LITERARY SOCIETY.—(Imperial Institute, Tuesday, July 3)

E. A. CAZALET, Esq., president, in the chair.—Mr. F. Marchant read a paper on "Pushkin." A. S. Pushkin was born in 1799, educated at the Lycée at Tsarskoe Selo, and subsequently served in the Ministry of Foreign Affairs. Circumstances led to a sojourn in the South, but in 1825 Pushkin was appointed by the Tsar Nicholas Imperial Historiographer of Peter the Great. He married, in 1831, Mlle. N. N. Goncharov, and was killed in a duel in January, 1837. Our author is an example of versatility and precocity of genius. He was well acquainted with foreign literature, and it is to Shakespeare and Byron that he is especially indebted. Among the Lyrics by Pushkin are odes, elegies, satires, translations, &c., of various length, and it is doubtful whether any similar collection presents such variety. Among his longer poems must be mentioned "Ruslan and Ludmila" (a blend of Oriental romance and early chivalry), "The Prisoner of the Caucasus," "The Fountain of Bakhchisarai," and "Polta." The leading character in this last is Mazeppa, the hero of Byron's poem. Besides tales, ballads, and romances in rhyme (of which "Eugene Onegin" is the best known) Pushkin wrote some important dramatic works, in which he took Shakespeare for his model, e.g., "Boris Godunov," "The Ruses of All," and "The Stone Guest." The most celebrated of Pushkin's prose works are the novels "Dubrovski," "The Captain's Daughter," and "The Queen of Spades." His style is sparkling and pleasant, rather than profound or erudite, and differs considerably from that of Turgenev. His historical work is "The History of Pugatchev's Rebellion." There is a large number of articles on various topics by our author, as well as criticisms, essays, &c. In 1829 Pushkin accompanied the expedition of General Paskievitch against the Turks in Asia Minor, and the outcome was the "Journey to Erzurum." The published letters of Pushkin to members of his family and friends show him to have been of a kindly and genial nature, one who could face reverses with a stout heart. Pushkin's claims on Englishmen are many, as a student of our institutions, manners and customs, literature and language.

FINE ART.

Tell el Amarna. By W. M. Flinders Petrie. With Chapters by Prof. A. H. Sayce, F. Ll. Griffith, and F. C. J. Spurrell. (Methuen.)

ON opening this volume anyone ignorant of Egyptian history except in its general outlines, but capable of recognising the characteristics of the world's great national schools of art—past and present—could not fail to experience some bewilderment at sight of the plates which form half the bulk of the book. Nowhere can he remember having seen the gorgeous cloisonné decoration of the ancient Egyptian palm-leaf capital shown on pl. vi. Five of the coloured plates seem to represent fragments of Aegean pottery. What mediæval sculptor of Northern Italy carved the climbing plants as drawn on pl. viii.? Why is the conventional Egyptian lotus painted among the bounding calves, the waving and growing grasses, reeds and flowers of pls. iii. and iv.? The frontispiece displays the portrait of "Akhenaten, from his death-mask." Nothing but an ideal of truthfulness and accuracy in portraiture, not generally ascribed to artists of the New Empire, could have constrained the funerary sculptors for Akhenaten to the unprecedented proceeding of taking a plaster cast of the face of the dead king. The frontispiece is repeated, on a greatly reduced scale, as one of the sixteen illustrations contained on pl. i., that it may be compared with other profile portraits of Akhenaten, and of his father (Amenhotep III.), his mother (Thyi), his wife (Nefertythi), and one of his little daughters. The face of Amenhotep III. is of the usual type of his forefathers. That of his young son, Amenhotep IV., afterwards known as Khuenaten, or rather Akhenaten, resembles it closely; but in the latter, although masked by the soft contours of childhood, is discernible the long maternal chin which was so markedly developed in later life, owing perhaps in part to the constant forward and upward poise of head often associated with an eager nature. There is a look of eagerness on all faces represented on pl. i.; and the mobile and sensitive nose, lips, and chin of Akhenaten, as sculptured on the fragment reproduced by photography 5, are instinct with it. It may even be seen in the spirited horse's head of a sculptor's trial-piece (8). This general impression, to be derived from these plates alone, of the presence, influence, and stimulus of foreign and also new and individual ideals on ancient Egyptian art and life at Tell el Amarna is fully borne out by a perusal of the letterpress, giving an account of Mr. Petrie's excavations on the site of "the dream-city of Khuenaten."

Whether Thyi is the princess of Mitanni named as a wife of Amenhotep III. in the cuneiform tablets or not, her face, as represented on sculptors' trial-pieces found at Tell el Amarna, is of the Mitannian type, as is that of her son and her son's wife. Not unnaturally, the influences of his foreign mother and wife seem to have pervaded the whole character and court of Akhenaten, impatient and independent as he was of the national and masculine prejudices and traditions of his line and race; and we see from the monuments that the Mitannian face in profile became the court-face profile of the period.

It has been said that all great—that is, natural and lasting, revolutions, have their roots in changed conceptions of religion and morality; but the artificial, and therefore temporary, revolution made by Akhenaten was the outcome of a king's ideals only, and it scarcely survived his death. Akhenaten transferred his allegiance from the national anthropomorphic conception of a Sun-God to the objective reality of the sun-disk, or Aten, and its life-giving rays. Ankh em maat, "living in the truth," was the king's motto: to "see things as they are," and so to represent there his ideal in art. It was within a strictly limited area—carefully surveyed together with the valleys and roads leading to it in what Mr. Petrie is pleased to call his vacant days—that Akhenaten carried out his ideals and built himself a lordly pleasure house. This district covers the whole valley of the Nile north and south of Tell el Amarna for about fourteen miles. Its limits were denoted by stelæ on the faces of the Arabian and Libyan cliffs, and thirteen of these stelæ are marked upon Mr. Petrie's map. Their standard text records that a district named Akhutaten, with its villages and inhabitants, was dedicated to the Aten, in the sixth year of Akhenaten, who had sworn never to pass outside these boundaries, and also gives the length of the district between the terminal stelæ from north to south.

The royal city itself stood between the sites of the present villages of Haji Qandee and Et Till. The foundations and remaining débris of the palace, of some twenty houses, of three or four glass factories, and of two large glazing works, have been cleaned and sifted by Mr. Petrie, Mr. Howard Carter having taken charge of the excavation of the temple site for Lord Amherst of Hackney. Important chronological conclusions have been deduced from the examination of objects found in the domestic rubbish heaps, and the refuse and ruins of factories in the city. A large number of inscribed fragments of wine jars collected from many different parts of the town, whose inscriptions are translated by Mr. Griffith, give an uninterrupted sequence of vintage dates of the regnal years of Akhenaten from his fourth to his seventeenth year. He founded the city in his sixth year, but apparently carried wine of his fourth year to his new home. Inscribed porcelain rings of the co-regency of Akhenaten and his son-in-law and successor, Ra-smenkh-ka, were those of latest date found in the waste heaps from the palace. Moreover, the great hall was apparently deserted and used for broken jars in the second or third year of the sole reign of Ra-smenkh-ka. But as fragments of rings of Ra-smenkh-ka were found in the débris of the ring factories, it is clear that the manufacturers of the place continued after the court had left the palace. Throughout the whole site no ring fragments were found of later date than the reign of Ra-smenkh-ka's successor, Tut-ankh-amen, whose wife, Ankhsen-pa-aten, third daughter of Akhenaten, apparently changed her name to Ankh-s-en-amen when her husband returned to the worship of Amen, and his rings ostentatiously proclaimed his allegiance to the god of his fathers. Mr. Petrie concludes that the town ceased to be a royal residence about a couple of years after Akhen-aten's death; that it ceased to be a religious centre under Tut-ankh-amen, and that on his death the factories were abandoned and the whole town rapidly deserted. As for the traditional chronology of this period, it would seem as though the twelve years which Josephus gives to the daughter of Akhenaten as his successor really belong to her husband, Ra-smenkh-ka; that the nine years' reign which he next ascribes to her brother represent the reign of her brother-in-law, Tutankh-amen, who forsook the Aten worship about the sixth year of his reign; and that thus the thirty-seven years which Manetho and Josephus attribute to Akhenaten really refer to the duration of the Aten worship throughout the whole reigns of Akhenaten and Ra-smenkh-ka, and part of the reign of Tut-ankh-amen.

From the block of chambers where the celebrated Tell el Amarna tablets are now conclusively proved to have been found, Mr. Petrie secured certain fragments of cuneiform inscriptions which are drawn and described by Prof. Sayce. Two of these fragments are from a Babylonian and Sumerian dictionary compiled "by order of the King of Egypt"; and since the Sumerian pronunciation is carefully given, this would lead to the conclusion that, although Babylonian was the language of official correspondence, Sumerian was still a spoken language in the times of the XVIIIth Dynasty. The far-reaching interest of these fragments constrains one to deplore with Mr. Petrie that the great discovery of the tablets "was so lamentably spoilt by the present conditions attaching to such discoveries in Egypt."

The manufacture of glazed ware for surface decoration by tiles and inlays was carried to a high degree of beauty and perfection in the capital of Akhenaten. Fragments excavated on the site of the palace show that the royal abode had been adorned with whole statues of glaze, and that "its walls had blazed with glazed tiles and hieroglyphs." Mr. Petrie elucidates almost every stage and detail in the processes of Tell-el-Amarna glass manufacture, from the storing and preparing of white quartz pebbles for the required silica, to the completion of the beautiful variegated glass vases whose fragments were found in the palace rubbish heap. In this connexion he has the satisfaction of firmly dating the finest kinds of waved "Phœnician" glass vases found in Egypt to 1400 B.C.

It is from the illustrations rather than from the letterpress that we form our most vivid idea of the true realism and the beauty of the fresco-painting, and of the incised and relief carving which decorated the many pillared halls of Akhenaten's palace. The great painted pavements were not only copied by Mr. Petrie with colours made from frits found in the factories, but 300 square yards of their original surface were carefully waterproofed with thick tapioca water laid on with the finger, as any brush might have rubbed up the colour. These pavements have been roofed in by the Egyptian Government, the work having been done under Mr. Petrie's direction, and at the expense of the English Society for the Preservation of Egyptian Monuments.

Fragments of imported Aegean pottery were found in the palace, and many more in the palace rubbish-heaps. This mound of waste had an average depth of 1 ft. over an area of 600 ft. × 400 ft. On this subject Mr. Petrie says:

"The total quantity of pieces found was 1329 in the waste heaps, 9 in the palace, and only 3 fragments of one vase elsewhere, in house 11. Selecting vases which are of distinctly individual patterns, and cannot be confounded with any other pieces, there are 45 fragments representing 28 vases, so that on the average there are not even two pieces from a vase. This indicates that the 1341 pieces would have been derived from the destruction of over 800 vases. . . . Half the Aegean ware is of piriform* vases, which are most commonly found in Rhodes, and nearly the other half is of globular vases, which are peculiarly Cypriote; the balance, only 8 per cent. of the whole, is not distinctive of any other locality, and there is no type specially Mykenaeen. Hence it seems that the trade was with the South of Asia Minor, rather than with the Greek peninsula. Further, there is very little that is characteristic of the Phoenicians; the black-brown Phoenician ware is but 6 per cent. of the quantity of Aegean, and the Cypriote bowls—hemispherical white with brown stitch pattern—are scarcely known. Hence the trade does not seem so likely to have been carried on by land, or through Semitic or Phoenician connexions, as through the race or races who made and used the Aegean pottery. . . . The absence of certain types from the large quantity of many hundreds of vases which have furnished this mass of fragments is worth notice. There are none of the small false-necked vases of flat, low form, which are the commonest at Gurob; there are no hydriae and no animal figures, both of which are found at Gurob. In short, the impression is that this pottery belongs to an entirely different trade route to that of Gurob: that this came down with the Syrian coasting vessels from Cyprus and Rhodes, while the Gurob Aegean ware belongs rather to Greece and came along the African coast to the Fayum.

"It is almost needless to observe that this discovery and dating of Aegean pottery stands on an entirely different footing to those which have been previously made in Egypt and Greece. All previous correlations have depended on single vases, or on single scarabs found associated with things from other sources; and hence (to anyone without a practical knowledge of how completely things are of one period, in almost all cases when they are associated), it may seem as if the dating all depended on isolated objects, any one of which might have been buried centuries after it was made. Here we have not to consider isolated objects, about which any such questions can arise, nor a small deposit which might be casually disturbed, nor a locality which has ever been reoccupied; but we have to deal with thousands of tons of waste heaps, with pieces of hundreds of vases, and about a hundred absolutely dated objects with cartouches. And when we see that in all this mass, which is on a scale that is beyond any possibility of accidental or casual mixture throughout, there is not a single object which can be dated later than about 1380 B.C., we may henceforward remember that there are few facts in all archaeology determined with a more overwhelming amount of evidence than the dating of this earlier style of Aegean pottery to the beginning of the fourteenth century B.C."

The sons-in-law of Akhenaten were succeeded on the Egyptian throne by Ay, who married the nurse of Nefertythi; and he was followed by Horemheb, the successful general who had married Nezem-mut, Nefertythi's sister. Horemheb rapidly, thoroughly, and systematically cleared away the building material of Tell el Amarna for his own use in Thebes, Heliopolis, Memphis, and elsewhere. The city of Akhenaten had been built on clean sand, inhabited, deserted, and destroyed—all in the space of fifty years. Hence everything buried under its ruins is broadly dated to within half a century, whatever further refinements of chronological accuracy may have been attained in dealing with inscribed fragments found during the course of the excavations.

From his examination of the flint implements found at Tell el Amarna, and due consideration of the positions in which they were discovered, Mr. Spurrell concludes that they were made by hasty or unskilled workmen, and destined merely for symbolic or ceremonial use.

THE ADRIAN HOPE PICTURE SALE.

LAST Saturday's sale at Christie's—that of the Adrian Hope collection—was by far the most important that has occurred during the present season. Scarcely any other has, indeed, been worthy of chronicle in these columns, and it may be presumed that there is a general unwillingness to expose pictures to the risks of the hammer during these depressing times. Of the Adrian Hope sale, one of the chief characteristics was the high prices fetched in several instances by some of those Dutch masters not usually considered to stand in the first rank. Thus a flower-piece by Van Brussel, "in the style of Van Huisman"—tulips, roses, carnations, poppies—reached 340 guineas. Again, an engaging Berkheyden, "View in Haarlem," with the church and numerous figures, reached 450 guineas, at which sum it was purchased by Mr. Agnew, its destination being understood to be the National Gallery. We can scarcely have too many Dutch pictures of the floor quality; and though Berkheyden's prices do not, perhaps, usually range with those obtained by Van der Heyden's, the "View in Haarlem" is doubtless a desirable and, considering its quality, not a dear acquisition. By Van der Heyden himself a "View in a Dutch Town" fell to the bid of Mr. Davis, at 600 guineas. But another instance of important prices paid for Dutch or Flemish work of masters not habitually reckoned as in quite "the first flight," was the important bird-piece by Hondecoeter, dated 1682, which includes the portrayal of magpie, teal, peacock, peahen, green parrot, woodcock, swallow, king-fisher. This "concert of birds"—is it, by-the-by, one that is engraved by Earlow?—is conducted by an owl. The picture passed into the hands of M. Sedelmeyer for 1500 guineas. By Jan Weenix there was the "Garden of a Chateau"—in reality, a study of birds and fruit—a Weenix at all events of important dimensions: it realised 670 guineas.

Among the works of men who may be accounted the greater masters—not to speak of a great Fleming like Rubens, and a great Frenchman like Greuze—we may mention an early Rembrandt, "Portrait of Nicholas Ruts," in black gown and cap. This was acquired by Mr. Agnew for 4700 guineas. The same buyer became possessed of "A Waterfall," by Jacob Ruysdael, for 1600 guineas. A singularly dainty Metsu, "A Lady," fell to Mr. Martin Colnaghi's bid of 1200 guineas. An "Interior of a Chamber," with open door giving upon a garden, by Pieter de Hooch, realised 2150 guineas, Mr. Wertheimer being the purchaser; while there passed into the hands of Mr. Nathali, for 2860 guineas, an admirable Nicholas Maes, of a young woman in a kitchen-like interior. Whatever may be the case with modern work—of which the value has been wont to be inflated—the Old Masters, as represented by the School of Holland, well hold their own.

NOTES ON ART AND ARCHAEOLOGY.

SIR HENRY H. HOWORTH has accepted the presidency of the Royal Archaeological Institute, which will hold its annual meeting this autumn at Shrewsbury.

A JOINT meeting of the Cambrian Archaeological Association and the Royal Society of Antiquaries of Ireland will be held at Carnarvon during the third week of July. Papers will be read on Monday, and the five following days will be devoted to excursions. This is in the nature of a return for the visit which the Welsh antiquaries paid to the South of Ireland two or three years ago.

AN exhibition of paintings and drawings by Mr. Theodore Roussel will be opened next week at the Dowdeswell Galleries, in New Bondstreet.

ANOTHER exhibition to open next week is that representative of "Old Glasgow," in the Glasgow Institute of the Fine Arts.

WE may also mention that there is now on view, in the St. George's Gallery, Grafton-street, a collection of pictures by French masters.

THE three following pictures have been bought for the National Gallery from the Earl of Northbrook: "The Agony in the Garden," by Andrea Mantegna; "St. Jerome in his Study," by Antonello da Messina; "The Legend of St. Giles and the Hind," by an unknown master of the Flemish school.

THE STAGE.

THE personal popularity of Mr. Malcolm Salaman, his qualities as critic and connoisseur, the remembrance of the shrewd but genial observation evidenced in those sketches of character which he published about two years ago—all these things counted for much in the filling of the Haymarket Theatre on Monday afternoon: an afternoon, too, distinguished in another place by the holding of one of the biggest and most brilliant parties of this London season. Interest was felt likewise—and not unnaturally—in seeing the assumption of new parts by Mr. and Mrs. Tree; and indeed the cast of the new play was good as a whole, Mr. Fred Terry and Miss Lottie Venne being included in it. "A Modern Eve"—the name of Mr. Salaman's choice—is occupied with the unhappy, not to say disastrous, love affairs of a Mr. and Mrs. Eardley Hereford; and, whether or not it may claim to be a serious study in l'hérédité, it has touches suggested apparently by Ibsen and by a greater than Ibsen, Emile Zola. But that, as one or two critics have somehow supposed, the tone of the play should have been dictated by an Ibsenite influence,

* The term piriform is here used for those vases, most commonly found at Ialysos, in Rhodes, which have a wide shoulder, and thence taper in a long slope to a narrow base. The top is either a wide neck, large enough for the hand, or else a false neck; and hence the false necks when found alone have no clear indication whether they belong to piriform vases or to the flatter types common at Mykenae, which are even as low as half a diameter in height. Here I have classed all the false necks as piriform vases, because other portions of piriform vases are abundant, while there has not been a single piece found clearly belonging to the flatter, lower, type of false-necked vases" (p. 16).

will appear scarcely less than absurd by those who are best acquainted with the mind of Mr. Salaman. Mr. Salaman does not lie at the mercy of every new wind of doctrine. His views are his own, and they are, we may be sure, tolerably conservative. Ibsen is, as likely as not, satirised rather than sympathised with, when it is urged by the mother of the heroine, in extenuation of the heroine's lâches, that her dislike of her husband is but the inevitable repetition and echo of a dislike conceived by her parent for her own lord, while as yet the heroine was unborn. Even on the family tree of the Rougons-Macquart, in Docteur Pascal, there is no room for an incident such as this; and M. Zola's conception of l'hérédité is much more varied and much more philosophic than Ibsen's. When the play begins, Mr. and Mrs. Eardley Hereford are separated; for the lady has had a lover. Then they come together again, and then, some time after the appearance of a new lover, they are again separated. Mr. Hereford did not always behave with good taste; and however forgiving he may have been, he wanted wisdom and firmness. But it is not to be concluded that, because we are permitted to feel this, we are invited to absolve the wife, or to accept her conduct as that of a "neurotic" based on l'hérédité. Mr. Salaman is much wiser than this, and in his method much more delicate. He makes allowances, but he has no uncertain or obfuscated vision of right and wrong. And the piece, instead of ending like the "Doll's House" in the apparent approval of a woman's quest after her own "individuality," he it even at the cost of her children, ends rather with the suggestion that maternity is all—and to Mrs. Hereford maternity was lacking. A wise lawyer, played by Mr. Charles Allen, says several sensible things, which might have put critics on the right track; and so does Mrs. Meryon—a bright woman of the world—played convincingly by Miss Lottie Venne. Mr. Fred Terry is the husband; Mrs. Tree, the self-indulgent wife with no sense of responsibility; and Mr. Tree, the later of the two lovers, and perhaps the less worthy. These and the other players, and the piece itself, unquestionably were received on Monday with a very hearty welcome. And if, to some, the work of Mr. Salaman seemed a little enigmatic, that is because the author has, instead of the usual dramatist's scene-painter's brush, the touch of the literary artist.

MUSIC.

OPERA OF THE WEEK.

MANY were the promises made by Sir Augustus Harris, at the commencement of the season; but all seem likely to be fulfilled. "Manon," "Falstaff," "Werther," and "La Navarraise" came, though they did not all conquer; last Saturday "Signa" was produced, and on Wednesday "L'Attaque du Moulin." Mr. Cowen's "Signa" was brought out last year at Milan; but the composer has since materially altered his opera by reducing it from four acts to two. Messrs. G. A. Beckett, H. Rudall and F. E. Weatherly prepared the book, but they have not proved a successful triumvirate. The same story is not redeemed by the violent deaths at the close; the lovers are, as Dussek once wrote of his English publishers, "curious folks," while the Duke, for whom Gemma afterwards abandons Signa, is almost as silent as Banquo's ghost. If composers will accept books which offer musical opportunities rather than dramatic interest, they can scarcely hope for great success. It is the natural ambition of every composer to write an opera, and it is, perhaps, the highest aim which he can set before himself; but yet, in spite of the earnest efforts of Wagner to establish the true relationship between the arts of poetry and music, if composers still venture to disregard the lessons of the past, they must take the consequences. In Mr. Cowen's case this is to be regretted, for he possesses considerable talent, and is a well-trained, accomplished musician; there are, likewise, signs in his "Signa" of true dramatic feeling. In the "Gemma" and the "Sartorio" music there are some clever attempts at characterisation, while in the "Bruno" music of both acts are moments which seem to tell of checked, or latent power. A weak libretto produces indecision on the part of a composer. If he were inspired by his subject, the matter of itself would determine the form. But Mr. Cowen appears to have gone deliberately and cautiously to work. He apparently wished to retain something of Old Italian opera, and yet to show himself in sympathy with modern tendencies. But he has not written simply enough for the admirers of the old, nor in a sufficiently advanced manner for the so-called new school.

The "Song of Life and Liberty," sung by Signa in the first act, is melodious and inspiring; the opening phrase saves, indeed, as a representative theme throughout the work. Some of the love music is pleasing, and the choruses are bright and tuneful. The light-hearted, singing students offer an effective contrast to the heavy-hearted, pensive Signa; but somehow or other the composer, in spite of good intentions, is not at his best here. Mr. Ben Davies was the Signa; he sang well, though the part did not quite suit his voice. Mme. de Nuovina as Gemma showed herself intelligent, but her high notes were not over pleasant. MM. Ancona and Castelmarty as Bruno and Sartorio deserve high commendation. Mr. Cowen conducted, and he was twice called before the curtain.

M. Alfred Bruneau's "Le Rêve" attracted considerable notice at the time of its production here three seasons ago. The adoption of the system of representative themes, and their development on strict Wagnerian lines, naturally aroused the ire of those who would persuade us that the Bayreuth master worked on a wrong principle, while the bold harmonic experiments alarmed even musicians who represent the party of progress. There were, undoubtedly, startling things in "Le Rêve." Was the composer defying rules out of bravado? Or was he merely struggling with strong thoughts and strong feelings, and, for the nonce, more occupied with the matter than with the manner? Wait and see what his next opera will be like, said those who shirked a direct answer; for it is so convenient to procrastinate. Now that the second opera has come, M. Bruneau is still found working on the same lines, but with greater command, greater self-restraint. There surely can be no question now that in "Le Rêve" the man had something to say. But while fully acknowledging the more temperate mode of expression, more finished workmanship, and more delicate orchestration of the later work, we still admire the earlier one, and feel that its merits have not been properly recognised. It ought to be heard again, when many places might possibly appear less rough, less alarming. The introduction of Mozart's Quartet in C, the opening of Beethoven's First Symphony, the bold writing in Schumann's early works, roused the wrath of pedants, and no doubt mystified many steady-going musicians. But now such things are thought nothing of, and students at our academies may laugh with impunity at the critics to whose ears they gave offence.

M. Bruneau has again had recourse to Zola, and though the fascinating story of "L'Attaque du Moulin" does not lend itself so well to musical treatment as "Le Rêve," it is a powerful tale, and the librettist, M. Louis Gallet, has skilfully adapted it for dramatic purposes. There is no need here to tell the story of Françoise and Dominique and of the noble, self-sacrificing miller, Merlier. M. Bruneau, as we have said, makes use of representative themes, and his treatment of them is satisfactory. In the first place, they possess great individuality—as, for instance, the "Mill," the "Knife," or the "War Theme"; and then they are subjected to various modifications, especially of rhythm: they are not lugged in as labels, but are the very marrow of the piece. The French character of the music is, at times, most marked, as in the love duet of the second act, and the final scene between Merlier and his daughter. The "Betrothal" choruses of the first act are very graceful and charming. Throughout the work, the composer displays dramatic instinct of a high order. Much could be written about the music, which everywhere shows inspiration, thought, and criticism. The work will well repay study, and, if we mistake not, it will gradually increase in favour. For a sudden popularity it is, perhaps, too recondite, though not in the least heavy.

The performance, conducted in an able manner by M. Flon, was most praiseworthy. Mme. Delna, who created the rôle of Marcelline at the Paris Opéra Comique, gave a powerful reading of the part; her declamation is very fine. Mme. de Nuovina acted with marked intelligence, and sang well; as Françoise she is seen to the best advantage. M. Bouvet gave a vivid representation of Merlier, and M. Cossira was a good Dominique. M. Bonnard was effective as the sentinel. The piece was picturesquely mounted, and received with considerable enthusiasm.

The performance of "Signa" at Covent Garden on Saturday evening clashed with that of "Tristan" at Drury Lane; and, considering the few opportunities of hearing the latter work, this was a matter for regret. But Mr. Cowen's opera was over in time for us to hear the third act of "Tristan." Frau Klafsky was an admirable Isolde, and Herr Alvary, though his voice showed signs of fatigue—a thing by no means to be wondered at considering the work he has gone through—gave a fine impersonation of Tristan. Mr. Bispham played Kurwenal with intelligence and feeling. Herr Lohse conducted ably, and the orchestra showed a marked improvement. J. S. SHEDLOCK.

Now ready, demy 8vo, cloth, 2s.

MOUNTAIN, MOOR, and LOCH. Illustrated by PEN and PENCIL, among the Highlands of Scotland on the Route of the WEST HIGHLAND RAILWAY. With 239 Illustrations from Drawings made on the spot.

London: Sir JOSEPH CAUSTON & Sons, 9, Eastcheap.

Now ready, No. 5, price 1s.

THE SCIENTIFIC ROLL. Climate and Baric Condition. To be completed in 16 Nos. Conducted by ALEXANDER RAMSAY. A few of Nos. 1 to 4 still in print, price 1s. each.

London: O'DRISCOLL, LENOX & Co., Printers and Publishers, 12, Elephant Road, Elephant and Castle, S.E.

AGENCY FOR AMERICAN BOOKS.

G. P. PUTNAM'S SONS, PUBLISHERS and BOOKSELLERS, of 27 and 29 West 23rd Street, New York, and 24 BEDFORD STREET, LONDON, W.C., desire to call the attention of the READING PUBLIC to the excellent facilities presented by their Branch House in London for filling, on the most favourable terms, orders for their own STANDARD PUBLICATIONS, and for ALL AMERICAN BOOKS and PERIODICALS.—CATALOGUES sent on application.

IMPORTANT.—PRINTING AND PUBLISHING

NEWSPAPERS, MAGAZINES, BOOKS, &c.—KING, SELL & RAITON, Limited, high-class Printers and Publishers, 12, Gresham Square, 4, Bolt Court, Fleet Street, E.C., have specially-built Rotary and other fast Machines for printing illustrated or other Journals, and specially-built Machines for fast folding and covering 16 or 32 page Journals at one operation.

Facilities upon the premises for Editorial Offices, free. Advertising and Publishing Departments conducted.

Telephone 2799. Telegraph, "Africanism, London."

CITY of BIRMINGHAM MUNICIPAL TECHNICAL SCHOOL.

The Corporation of Birmingham require the services of a PRINCIPAL, to undertake the General Control of the Day and Evening Teaching in the New School (now in course of erection). The salary has been fixed at £500 per annum, and the Principal will be required to enter upon his duties on the 1st January next, and to devote his whole time to the appointment, under the direction of the Technical School Committee.

Applications, accompanied by copies of testimonials, must be sent on or before the 1st September next, to the undersigned, from whom further particulars can be obtained on application being made by letter.

GEORGE MELLOR, Secretary Municipal Technical School.
Paradise Street, Birmingham.

ROYAL STATISTICAL SOCIETY.

HOWARD MEDAL (Bronze) AND £20.

The following is the SUBJECT of the ESSAYS for the HOWARD MEDAL of 1894:—"REFORMATORIES and INDUSTRIAL SCHOOLS of that CLASS, in their Relation to the Antecedents, Crimes, Punishments, Education after Conviction, and Training of Juvenile Offenders, together with the Nature and Extent of their Influence on the Diminution or Increase of Crime generally."

Essays should be sent in on or before the 30th June, 1894. The Medal will be awarded in November, 1895. Further particulars or explanations may be obtained at the Office of the Society, 9, Adelphi Terrace, Strand, London, W.C.

BRITISH MUSEUM.—ASSYRIAN

SCULPTURES.—Statuettes of Sennacherib, Assurbanipal, and his Queen. Also reduced Facsimiles of the unique and beautiful "Garden Scene," Winged Human-headed Lion and Bull, &c. Modelled from the famous Niniveh Sculptures, and made in Porcelain (parian).
"Interesting and faithful reproductions."—Athenaeum, Oct. 7, 1893.
Descriptive Prospectus on application to ALFRED JARVIS (Sole Publisher), 43, Willes Road, London, N.W.

UNIVERSITY COLLEGE, DUNDEE.

ST. ANDREW'S UNIVERSITY.

CHAIR OF CHEMISTRY.

The Council of the College will shortly proceed to APPOINT a PROFESSOR to occupy the above Chair, recently rendered vacant. The successful Candidate will be required to enter upon his duties on October 1st.

Applications, accompanied by thirty copies of Testimonials, with references, should be sent to the undersigned, not later than 7th July. For further information apply to R. N. KERR, Secretary.

UNIVERSITY COLLEGE, DUNDEE.

ST. ANDREW'S UNIVERSITY.

CHAIR OF ANATOMY.

The Council of the College will shortly proceed to APPOINT a PROFESSOR to occupy the above Chair, recently rendered vacant. The successful Candidate will be required to enter upon his duties on October 1st.

The salary is £350, with two-thirds of the Fees.
Applications, accompanied by thirty copies of Testimonials, should be sent to the undersigned, not later than 14th July. For further information apply to R. N. KERR, Secretary.

THE UNIVERSITY OF ST. ANDREWS

GRANTS THE

DIPLOMA and TITLE of L.L.A. to WOMEN.

The Subjects of Examination may be selected from any seven out of thirty different subjects, the standard being the same as that for the M.A. Degree. The centres of examination are St. Andrews, Aberdeen, Bedford, Belfast, Birmingham, Bristol, Cardiff, Cheltenham, Cork, Dublin, Dumfries, Edinburgh, Inverness, Leeds, Leicester, Liverpool, London, Loughborough, Manchester, Newcastle-on-Tyne, Paisley, Truro, &c.

For Prospectus, &c., apply to the SECRETARY, L.L.A. Scheme, the University, St. Andrews, N.B.

DR. KLEIN has now added to the CIVIL SERVICE INSTITUTE, at 110, Cannon-street, E.C., a REGISTRATION BUREAU for the Clerical and Scholastic Professions. Principals of Schools at Home and Abroad, Rectors, Vicars, and Assistant Rectors, may confidently rely upon the Doctor's long and varied experience in professional matters being placed promptly at their disposal.

EDUCATION.—Particulars as to the best

University or Army Tutors, and Schools for Boys or Girls, at home or abroad, may be obtained (free of charge) by sending a statement of requirements to R. J. BEZOR, M.A., 8, Lancaster Place, Strand.

ESTABLISHED 1851.

BIRKBECK BANK,

Southampton Buildings, Chancery Lane, London.

TWO-AND-A-HALF PER CENT. INTEREST allowed on DEPOSITS repayable on demand.

TWO PER CENT. ON CURRENT ACCOUNTS, on the minimum monthly balances, when not drawn below £100.

STOCKS, SHARES, and ANNUITIES purchased and sold.

SAVINGS DEPARTMENT.
For the encouragement of Thrift the Bank receives small sums on deposit, and allows Interest monthly on each completed £1

BIRKBECK BUILDING SOCIETY.

HOW TO PURCHASE A HOUSE
FOR TWO GUINEAS PER MONTH.

BIRKBECK FREEHOLD LAND SOCIETY.

HOW TO PURCHASE A PLOT OF LAND
FOR FIVE SHILLINGS PER MONTH.

The BIRKBECK ALMANACK, with full particulars, post free.
FRANCIS RAVENSCROFT, Manager.

VINOLIA CREAM

IS RECOMMENDED BY

MEDICAL MEN

For any slight SKIN IRRITATION, such as SUNBURN, INSECT BITES, PRICKLY HEAT, &c.

1s. 1½d. and 1s. 9d. per Box.

The valuable and extensive Library of HOWEL WILLS, Esq.

MESSRS. SOTHEBY, WILKINSON &

HOUSE will SELL by AUCTION, at their HOUSE, No. 13, WELLINGTON STREET, STRAND, W.C., on WEDNESDAY, July 11, and Five Following Days, at 1 o'clock precisely, the valuable, extensive, and varied LIBRARY of ANCIENT MSS. and PRINTED BOOKS formed by HOWEL WILLS, Esq., of Florence, comprising a Number of MANUSCRIPT BREVIAIRES, MISSALS, OFFICES, HOURS, Antiphonarii, Bibles, Psalters, and other Ancient Service Books, of Vellum, many finely illuminated, some executed for famous Personages, including a Roman Breviary executed for Philippe d'Artois, Fifteenth Century—Latin Bible written for Giovanni Pontificio, Fourteenth Century—The Courtenay Prayer Book, Fourteenth Century—Chroniques de Jean de Courcy, written A.D. 1416—Hours executed for Philip of Austria and Joan of Aragon, Fifteenth Century—Hours executed for Isabella of Scotland, Duchess of Burgundy, Fifteenth Century—MS. Texts of the Classics, &c., of the Fifteenth Century.

PRINTED BOOKS and OTHER BOOKS upon VELLUM, including the Unique Quinilian of 1470—The First Alpine Petrarch, 1501, printed on Vellum—and the Valtimbrosian Missal, printed by Junta in 1503, Henry II.'s Copy—Editiones Principes and other Productions of the Fifteenth Century-Printers.

Many little-known Italian Tracts of the Early Part of the Sixteenth Century—a fine Series of Works on Palmography and Astrology—Rare Works on Music—Books illustrated by William Blake—Early Books illustrated with Woodcuts—An Edition of Theophrastus, with an Original Painting on First Leaf by Albert Dürer, done for Billiard Pirckheimer.

Large Books of Engravings and Galleries—Gould's Birds of Great Britain and Humming Birds—A Set of Ruskin's Works—Tuer's Bartolozzi, the Maekuzis extra illustrated Copy.

RARE BOOKS in SLENDID OLD BINDINGS, with ARMS of FAMOUS COLLECTORS—Bibb's Bibliographical Works—Latta Famiglia Italiana—Monumenta Historica Germanica, &c.

May be viewed two days prior. Catalogues may be had; if by post, on receipt of six stamps.

PALL MALL.—On View.—Old Japanese Curios of the highest class, being a Collection made in Japan by a native Connoisseur.

MESSRS. FOSTER respectfully announce for SALE by AUCTION, at the GALLERY, 54, PALL MALL, on TUESDAY next, the 10th JULY, at 1 o'clock precisely, a Collection of JAPANESE CURIOS of rare quality, including lacquer by Koriu, Kitsu, Shiomu, Kajikawa, and other masters, metal work by the Mochino, enamel by Ikkada, fine old temple curtains, brocades and embroideries, netsukes, &c.; also some selected masterpieces by the great modern potters, Seifu and Kosau, and a choice series of hand block colour prints, books, and kakemonos, old Japanese silver, and other objects. May be viewed. Catalogues, when ready, will be forwarded on application.—54, Pall Mall.

By Order of the Council of the Royal United Service Institution.—Tuesday, July 17.—Valuable Collection of Minerals and Fossils.

MR. J. C. STEVENS has received instructions to SELL by AUCTION, at his GREAT ROOMS, 38, KING STREET, COVENT GARDEN, on TUESDAY, JULY 17th, at half-past 12 precisely, the Collection of MINERALS and FOSSILS, comprising some choice specimens from Cornwall, Gold and Silver specimens, Chalcedony, Turquoise, Uranium, a few polished specimens fine peruvian and other Fossil Fishes, and a large variety of other Fossils.

On view the day prior, 10 till 4, and Morning of Sale, and Catalogues had.

MIND.—JULY, 1894.

MEDIATE ASSOCIATION. W. G. SMITH.

MR. BRADLEY'S VIEW of the SELF. J. S. MACKENZIE.

MR. BRADLEY and the SCEPTICS. ALFRED SIDGWICK.

DEFINITION and PROBLEMS of CONSCIOUSNESS. A. BAIN.

DISCONTINUITY in EVOLUTION. FRANCIS GALTON.

DISCUSSIONS.—

ON THE FAILURE of MOVEMENT in DREAM. F. H. BRADLEY

A CRITICISM of a REPLY. JAMES WARD.

CRITICAL NOTICES.

NEW BOOKS.

PHILOSOPHICAL PERIODICALS.

NOTES.

WILLIAMS & NORRIS, London and Edinburgh.

OLD SHIRTS

RE-FITTED, Fine Irish Linen, 2s.; or very best Irish Linen, returned free, ready to wear, 2s. 6d. Sample Shirt, for Dress and ordinary wear, any size, post free, 2s. 9d., 3s. 9d., 4s. 9d., 5s. 9d., or 6s. 9d. Twilled Night Shirts, 2s. 11d., 3s. 9d., 4s. 9d., or 5s. 9d. LINEN COLLARS and CUFFS. Best 4-fold Collars, 1s. 6d. and 5s. 6d. doz.; made exact to pattern, 2s. 9d. half-doz., post free. Napkins, 2s. 6d. per doz.; Dinner Napkins, 4s. 6d. per dozen; Table

Cloths, 2 yards square, 2s. 9d. each.

2½ yards by 3 yards, 5s. 6d.; Kitchen Table Cloths, 10½d. each; real Irish Linen Sheetings, fully bleached, 2 yards wide, 1s. 11d. per yard; and Linen Diaper, 8½d. per yard; Nursery Diaper, 4½d. per yard; Surplice Linen, 7d. per yrd; Glass Cloths; Damask Towels, 6s. 6d.

HUCKABACK TOWELS, 3s. 9d. per dozen; Twilled Linen Pillow Cases, from 1s. 1d. each. IRISH CAMBRIC HANDKERCHIEFS.—Children's, 1s. 2d.; Ladies', 2s. 3d.; Gent's, 3s. 6d. Hemstitched—Ladies', 2s. 3d.; Gent's, 4s. 11d. per dozen. Better qualities equally cheap. Price Lists and Patterns of all kinds of Linen Goods and Hosiery sent to any part of the world, post free. Monograms, Crests, Coats of Arms, Initials, &c., woven and embroidered. Samples and Illustrated Price Lists post free to any part of the world.

B. & E. M'HUGH & CO., Limited, BELFAST

Invested Funds ... £4,700,000

Paid in Claims ... £9,000,000

NATIONAL PROVIDENT

For Mutual Life Assurance.

ESTABLISHED 1835.

PROFITS.—The whole are divided amongst the Assured. Already divided, £1,600,000.

At the division in 1892 there were nearly eight hundred Policies in respect of which not only were the Premiums entirely extinguished, but also Annuities were granted or Cash Bonuses paid, whilst in the case of many Policies the original sums assured are now more than doubled by the Bonus Additions.

48, Gracechurch Street, London, E.C.

ARTHUR SMITH, Actuary and Secretary.

THE

AUTOTYPE COMPANY

Has the honour to announce the Publication of

NINETY-THREE DRAWINGS

BY

ALBERT DURER,

Reproduced in Facsimile from Originals in the British Museum, and accompanied by Descriptive Text by

SIDNEY COLVIN, M.A.,

Keeper of Prints and Drawings, British Museum.

"The British Museum collection, reproduced in this volume, is," says Professor Colvin, "a fairly complete and representative survey of the several phases of Durer's activity as a draughtsman and sketcher during all periods of his career."

The Volume is Imperial folio, half-morocco, Plates Linen-Guarded and Interleaved. Edition 100 Copies.

Price Six Guineas.

THE AUTOTYPE FINE-ART CATALOGUE

(New Edition), of 181 pages, with Illustrated Supplement, containing 63 Miniature Photographs of notable Autotypes, post free, ONE SHILLING.

"AUTOTYPE: a Decorative and Educational Art."

NEW PAMPHLET, FREE ON APPLICATION.

THE AUTOTYPE COMPANY,

71, New Oxford Street, London,

GOOD BOOKS.—NEW CATALOGUE

Just ready, post free. Good and scarce items in Ruskin, Meredith, Hardy, Lamb, First Editions, &c., all cheaply priced.—JONES & EVANS, 71, Queen Street, London, E.C.

MESSRS. J. C. DRUMMOND & CO.,

ART REPRODUCERS,

14, HENRIETTA STREET, COVENT GARDEN, W.C.

Are the sole representatives in Great Britain of

HERR HANFSTAENGL, of Munich,

the well-known Artist in PHOTOGRAPHURE, now patronised by the leading London Art Publishing Firms. A large Collection of Important Plates always on view.

Process Blocks for the purpose of Ordinary Book Illustrations.

MESSRS. DRUMMOND & CO. supply the cheapest and best Processes in the market, which are specially adapted to meet the wants of Antiquarians, Archaeologists, and those engaged in the investigation and publication of Parochial and Diocesan Records.

J. C. DRUMMOND & CO. invite attention to their

Improved Rapid Photo-Mechanical Process

For the Reproduction of Works of Art, Original MSS., Designs, Lace Manufactures, Photographs, Views, Book Illustrations, Artistic Advertisements, Catalogues, &c., &c., at a moderate cost.

Specimens and price list on application.

Offices 14, HENRIETTA STREET COVENT GARDEN, LONDON

To H.R.H. the PRINCE OF WALES.

BRAND & CO.'S A1 SAUCE,

SOUPS, PRESERVED PROVISIONS

and

POTTED MEATS, and YORK and GAME

PIES. Also,

ESSENCE of BEEF, BEEF TEA,

TURTLE SOUP, and JELLY, and other

SPECIALITIES for INVALIDS.

CAUTION—BEWARE of IMITATIONS.

SOLE ADDRESS—

11, LITTLE STANHOPE STREET,

MAYFAIR, W.

CLARENDON PRESS LIST

In Six Volumes, demy 8vo, with Portraits and Facsimiles.

THE COMPLETE WORKS OF GEOFFREY CHAUCER

Edited from numerous Manuscripts by Prof. W. W. SKEAT.

Vol. III. just published, price 16s.

Demy 8vo, with Facsimile from the Harleian MSS., and several Plates.

The complete set of Six Volumes is offered to Subscribers at THREE GUINEAS net, payable in advance.

The names of the Original Subscribers will be given at the end of Vol. VI., which is to be published early in December next.

BY THE SAME EDITOR.

In Two Volumes, demy 8vo.

Uniform with the OXFORD CHAUCER.

PIERS THE PLOWMAN

Edited from numerous MSS., with Preface, Notes, and Glossary.

At the desire of Prof. W. W. SKEAT subscribers to the OXFORD CHAUCER have now the opportunity of obtaining "PIERS THE PLOWMAN" (published at 31s. 6d.) at the Subscription Price of One Guinea net, payable in advance.

The Subscription List for both the above Works will be closed on October 31.

"RULERS OF INDIA."

New Volume, nearly ready, crown 8vo, with Map and Portrait, cloth, 2s. 6d.

EARL AMHERST: and the British Advance Eastwards to Burma. By ANNE THACKERAY RITCHIE and RICHARDSON EVANS. "This series will inform the mind, touch the imagination, and enlighten the conscience of all English people."—Speaker.

LONDON: HENRY FROWDE,

CLARENDON PRESS WAREHOUSE, AMEN CORNER, E.C.

EDWARD STANFORD'S LIST.

Just ready, SIXTH and CHEAPER EDITION, Revised.

THE PHYSICAL GEOLOGY and GEOGRAPHY of GREAT BRITAIN: a Manual of British Geology. By the late Sir ANDREW C. RAMSAY, LL.D., F.R.S. Edited by HORACE B. WOODWARD, F.G.S., of the Geological Survey. With a Geological Map printed in colours, and numerous Illustrations. Post 8vo, cloth, price 10s. 6d.

Now ready, SIXTH EDITION, Revised to date.

TOURIST'S GUIDE to the WEST

RIDING OF YORKSHIRE. Containing full particulars concerning all its principal Places of Resort and Interest. By the late G. PHILLIPS BEVAN, F.R.S. Revised and Edited by R. N. WORTH, F.G.S. With a Map and a Plan of Ripon Cathedral. Feap. 8vo, cloth, 2s. (Stanford's Two-Shilling Series of Tourist Guides.)

The Series embraces, in addition to the above—

Bedfordshire.
Berkshire.
Cambridgeshire.
Channel Islands.
Cornwall.
Derbyshire.
Devon, North.
Devon, South.
Dorsetshire.
English Lakes.
Gloucestershire.
Hampshire.
Hertfordshire.

Kent.
London (Round).
Norfolk.
Somersetshire.
Suffolk.
Surrey.
Sussex.
Warwickshire.
Wiltshire.
Worcestershire.
Wye (The).
Yorkshire (E. and N.).

ENGLISH CATHEDRALS. By the Rev. W. J. LOFTIE, B.A. With 29 Plans, limp cloth, 6s.

NORWAY. Willson's Handy Guide.

Third Edition, with Corrections for 1894, 7 Maps, limp cloth, 6s.

LONDON: EDWARD STANFORD,

Geographer to the Queen,

26 AND 27, COCKSPUR STREET, CHARING CROSS, S.W.

BLACKIE & SON'S NEW BOOKS.

Just published, Part III., to be completed in 16 Monthly Parts, imperial 8vo, price 2s. 6d. each net.

THE NATURAL HISTORY OF PLANTS: Their Forms, Growth, Reproduction, and Distribution

From the German of ANTON KERNER VON MARILANN, Professor of Botany in the University of Vienna.

By P. W. OLIVER, M.A., D.Sc., Quain Professor of Botany in University College, London.

With the assistance of MARIAN BUSE, B.Sc., and MARY EWART, B.Sc.

With about 1,000 Original Woodcut Illustrations, and 16 Plates in Colours.

"One of the most ambitious works in botany ever written... has the great merit that while specialists and scholars can go to it and learn much about the life of plants, the many will find in its pages a mass of most interesting facts conveyed in a singularly attractive manner."—Westminster Gazette.

Just published, New Volumes, crown 8vo, cloth, 1s. 4d. each.

BLACKIE'S SCHOOL AND HOME LIBRARY.

A selection of the best and most interesting books, carefully edited to render them suitable for young readers.

MARRYAT'S CHILDREN OF THE NEW FOREST. MISS MITFORD'S OUR VILLAGE.

2 vols. of this library will be issued on the 1st of each month.

"The new series promises to be one which all who have to select books for young readers will do well to keep in mind."—Scotman.

Just published, the Thirteenth Edition, Revised throughout, Recast and Enlarged, in 1 vol., medium 8vo, cloth, 18s.

DESCHANEL'S NATURAL PHILOSOPHY.

Edited by Professor J. D. EVERETT, D.C.L., F.R.S., Queen's College, Belfast.

Illustrated by nearly 800 Engravings on Wood, and 3 Coloured Plates.

Published also in 4 Parts, limp cloth, 4s. 6d. each. Part I. Mechanics, &c. Part II. Heat. Part III. Electricity, &c. Part IV. Sound and Light.

"Probably the best book on experimental physics we possess."—Academy.
"We have no work in our scientific literature to be compared with it."—Quarterly Journal of Science.

LONDON: BLACKIE & SON, LIMITED, OLD BAILEY.

ELKIN MATHEWS & JOHN LANE beg to announce for publication early next week the Second Volume of their New Quarterly

THE YELLOW BOOK.

Pott 4to, 364 pages, 23 Illustrations, with a new cover design, price 5s. net.

The Literary Contributions by FREDERICK GREENWOOD, ELLA D'ARCY, CHARLES WILLEBY, JOHN DAVIDSON, HENRY HARLAND, DOLLIE RADFORD, CHARLOTTE M. MEW, AUSTIN DOBSON, V. O., C. S., KATHARINE DE MATTOS, PHILIP GILBERT HAMERTON, RONALD CAMPBELL MACFIE, DAUPHIN MEUNIER, KENNETH GRAHAME, NORMAN GALE, NETTA SYRETT, HUBERT CRACKANTHORPE, ALFRED HAYES, MAX BEERBOHM, WILLIAM WATSON, and HENRY JAMES.

The Art Contributions by WALTER CRANE, A. S. HARTRICK, AUBREY BEARD-LEY, ALFRED THORNTON, P. WILSON STEER, JOHN S. SARGENT, A.R.A., SYDNEY ADAMSON, WALTER SICKERT, W. BROWN MACDOUGAL, E. J. SULLIVAN, FRANCIS FORSTER, BERNHARD SICKERT, and AYMER VALLANCE.

A special feature of Volume Two is a frank criticism of the Literature and Art of Volume One by PHILIP GILBERT HAMERTON.

Prospectus Post Free on Application.

THE BODLEY HEAD, VIGO STREET, LONDON, W.

MUDIE'S SELECT LIBRARY.

For the CIRCULATION and SALE of all the BEST ENGLISH, FRENCH, GERMAN, ITALIAN, and SPANISH BOOKS.

TOWN SUBSCRIPTIONS from One Guinea per annum. LONDON BOOK SOCIETY (for Weekly Exchange of Books at the Houses of Subscribers) from Two Guineas per annum.

COUNTRY SUBSCRIPTIONS from Two Guineas per annum. N.B.—Two or three friends may unite in One Subscription and thus lessen the cost of carriage.

LIBRARY BOXES GRATIS.

Town and Village Clubs supplied on Liberal Terms.

Prospectuses and Monthly Lists of Books gratis and post free.

SALE DEPARTMENT.

All the leading Books of the Past Seasons are on Sale, second-hand, at greatly Reduced Prices.

LISTS GRATIS AND POST FREE.

MUDIE'S MANCHESTER LIBRARY, 10 to 12, BARTON ARCADE, MANCHESTER, Is in daily communication with this Library.

MUDIE'S SELECT LIBRARY, Limited,

30 to 34, NEW OXFORD STREET, LONDON;

241, Brompton Road, S.W.; and 48, Queen Victoria St., E.C.

Now Ready, price 2s. 6d. net.

A JUNE ROMANCE.

By NORMAN GALE.

NEW EDITION, with specially designed Title-Page.

LONDON: WHITTAKER & CO.

Rugby: GEORGE E. OVER; and all Booksellers.

THE ACADEMY.

A WEEKLY REVIEW OF LITERATURE, SCIENCE, AND ART.

No. 1158.
[New Issue.]

SATURDAY, JULY 14, 1894.

PRICE 3d.
[Registered as a Newspaper.]

TABLE OF CONTENTS

| | PAGE |
|--|------|
| SIR W. W. HUNTER'S CALENDAR OF BENGAL RECORDS, by H. MORSE STEPHENS | 23 |
| STOPFORD BROOKER'S TENNYSON, by ARTHUR WAUGH | 24 |
| COUNT CAVOUR AND MAOAME DE CIRCOUBET, by REYNOLD BUGHES | 25 |
| NEW NOVELS, by E. K. CHAMBERS | 26 |
| CLASSICAL SCHOOL BOOKS | 28 |
| NOTES AND NEWS | 29 |
| UNIVERSITY JOTTINGS | 29 |
| MAGAZINES AND REVIEWS | 30 |
| THE FOUNTAINE SALE | 30 |
| SELECTED FOREIGN BOOKS | 30 |
| CORRESPONDENCE— Namus; Ramillies; Menin: Original Letters, by C. E. Doble | 30 |
| APPOINTMENTS FOR NEXT WEEK | 31 |
| RECENT PHILOSOPHICAL TRANSLATIONS, by A. W. BENN | 32 |
| OBITUARY: PROF. DILLMANN, by T. K. C. | 33 |
| THE COINS OF THE MOGUL EMPERORS OF INDIA, by W. THEOBALD | 33 |
| OBITUARY: SIR A. HENRY LAYARD | 34 |
| NOTES ON ART AND ARCHAEOLOGY | 34 |
| OPERA AT DRURY LANE, by J. S. SHEDDOE | 34 |
| RECENT CONCERTS | 35 |

TO INVALIDS.—A LIST OF MEDICAL
MEN in all parts, willing to RECEIVE RESIDENT PATIENTS, giving full particulars and terms, sent gratis. The list includes private asylums, &c.; schools also recommended.—Address Mr. O. B. STUCKER, 8, Lancaster Place, Strand, W.C.

POPULAR WRITERS OF FICTION
wishing to secure the most extensive COPYRIGHTED PUBLICATION obtainable in United States, Canada, and elsewhere, should communicate with P. F. COLLIER, 521, West Thirteenth Street, New York City.

TYPE-WRITING.

AUTHORS, PUBLISHERS, &c.—Scientific, Literary, and Medical MSS. carefully and promptly typewritten by RAYNE & CO., 40, Norfolk Street, Strand, W.C. Private room for dictation. Highest references. Translations.

THE FLEET STREET TYPEWRITERS
115, FLEET STREET, E.C.

Lowest Charges. Highest Speed.
Every kind of Typewriting Work Done.
Price List—115, Fleet Street, London.

TYPE-WRITERS.—SECOND-HAND
MACHINES, equal to new, FOR SALE, EXCHANGE, or LENT on HIRE. Machines Sold by Instalments on Terms to suit purchasers. Use of Machine taught free to hirers or purchasers. Remingtons, Yosts, Hammonds, Calligraphs, Barlocks, Pitches, &c., from 25s. 3s. Copied with accuracy and despatch at lowest rates. Highest references. Illustrated Catalogue free.—N. TAYLOR, Manager, National Type-Writer Exchange, 74, Chancery Lane, London (Holborn end).

CATALOGUES

FOREIGN BOOKS AND PERIODICALS
promptly supplied on moderate terms.
CATALOGUES on application.
DULAU & CO., 37, SOHO SQUARE.

BAEDEKER'S & BADDELEY'S
TOURISTS' GUIDE BOOKS.
New fully detailed Catalogue sent post free on application
DULAU & CO., 37, SOHO SQUARE, LONDON, W.

FOREIGN BOOKS AT FOREIGN PRICES.

WILLIAMS & NORGATE,
Importers of Foreign Books,
14, HENRIETTA STREET, COVENT GARDEN,
AND
20, SOUTH FREDERICK STREET, EDINBURGH.
CATALOGUES sent free on application.

GOOD BOOKS.—NEW CATALOGUE
just ready, post free. Good and scarce items in Ruskin, Meredith, Hardy, Lang, First Editions, &c., all cheaply priced.—JONES & EVANS, 77, Queen Street, London, E.C.

AGENCY FOR AMERICAN BOOKS.

G. P. PUTNAM'S SONS, PUBLISHERS
and BOOKSELLERS, of 27 and 29 West 23rd Street, New York, and 24, BEDFORD STREET, LONDON, W.C., desire to call the attention of the READING PUBLIC to the excellent facilities presented by their Branch House in London for filling, on the most favourable terms, orders for their own STANDARD PUBLICATIONS, and for ALL AMERICAN BOOKS and PERIODICALS.—CATALOGUES sent on application.

For Advertisements of Schools, Colleges, Fine Art Sales, &c., see page 35.

CAMBRIDGE UNIVERSITY PRESS.

Now ready, crown 8vo, 3s.

THE APOSTLES' CREED: its Relation to Primitive Christianity.
By Rev. H. B. SWETE, D.D., Regius Professor of Divinity in the University of Cambridge.

STUDIA SINAITICA.

1. A CATALOGUE of the SYRIAC MSS. in the CONVENT of ST. KATHERINE on MOUNT SINAI. Compiled by AGNES SMITH LEWIS. Price 10s. 6d. net.
2. AN ARABIC VERSION of ST. PAUL'S EPISTLES to the ROMANS CORINTHIANS, GALATIANS, and Part of EPHESIANS. Edited from a Ninth Century MS. in the Convent of St. Katherine on Mount Sinai, by MARGARET DUNLOP GIBSON. Price 5s. net.
3. A CATALOGUE of the ARABIC MSS. in the CONVENT of ST. KATHERINE on MOUNT SINAI. Compiled by MARGARET DUNLOP GIBSON. Price 6s. net. [Nearly ready.]
4. A TRACT of PLUTARCH on the Advantage to be derived from a Man's Enemies. By Dr. EBERHARD NESTLE. Price 2s. net.

Other Numbers of the Series are in course of preparation.

THE CAMBRIDGE HISTORICAL SERIES.

General Editor—G. W. PROTHERO, M.A., Fellow of King's College, Cambridge, and Professor of History in the University of Edinburgh.

The Volumes of this New Series will be of moderate size, and will be adapted to the requirements of University Extension Students as well as of more advanced readers.

THE REVOLUTIONARY and NAPOLEONIC ERA, 1789-1815.
By J. H. ROSE, M.A., Christ's College. [In the press.]

THE EUROPEANS in INDIA. By H. MORSE STEPHENS, M.A., Balliol College, Oxford, and Lecturer on Indian History at Cambridge. [In preparation.]

THE FOUNDATION of the GERMAN EMPIRE, 1815-1871. By J. W. HEADLAM, M.A., Fellow of King's College. [In preparation.]

* * * Other Volumes will be announced shortly.

SOPHOCLES.—ELECTRA. Part VI. of the Plays and Fragments. With Critical Notes, Commentary, and Translation in English Prose. By R. C. JEBB, Litt.D., M.P., Regius Professor of Greek in the University of Cambridge. Demy 8vo, 12s. 6d.

THE CAMBRIDGE HOMER.—HOMER'S ILIAD. The Text Edited in accordance with Modern Criticism by ARTHUR PLATT, M.A., late Fellow of Trinity College, Cambridge. Crown 8vo.

EXAMINATION PAPERS for Entrance and Minor Scholarships and Exhibitions in the Colleges of the University of Cambridge, October, 1893-April, 1894.

Part X.—MATHEMATICS, 1s. 6d.
Part XI.—NATURAL SCIENCES, 1s. 6d.
Part XII.—CLASSICS, HEBREW, MODERN LANGUAGES, POLITICAL ECONOMY, and HISTORY, 2s.

NEW VOLUMES OF THE PITT PRESS SERIES.

GUIZOT.—DISCOURS sur l'HISTOIRE de la REVOLUTION D'ANGLETERRE. Edited by H. W. EVE, M.A. 2s. 6d.

ARISTOPHANES.—THE WASPS. By C. E. GRAVES, M.A., Fellow and Lecturer of St. John's College, Cambridge. 3s. 6d.

EURIPIDES.—HECUBA. With Introduction and Notes by W. S. HADLEY, M.A., Fellow of Pembroke College, Cambridge. 2s. 6d.

TACITUS.—AGRICOLA and GERMANIA. Edited by the Rev. H. M. STEPHENSON, M.A., late Fellow of Christ's College. 3s.

PLAUTUS.—ASINARIA. Edited by the Rev. J. H. GRAY, M.A., Fellow and Classical Lecturer of Queens' College. 3s. 6d.

LONDON: C. J. CLAY & SONS, CAMBRIDGE UNIVERSITY PRESS WAREHOUSE, AVE MARIA LANE.

READY JULY 16th, at all BOOKSELLERS. Price 5s. net.

A Charming Volume of POEMS, including one by J. A. SYMONDS to the Author, entitled

A D R I A T I C A.

By PERCY PINKERTON.

LONDON: GAY & BIRD, 5, CHANDOS STREET, STRAND.

RICHARD BENTLEY & SON'S LIST.

NOTICE.—A New Serial Story by Mrs. ANNIE EDWARDES, entitled "THE ADVENTURESS," is commenced in the JULY Number of "TEMPLE BAR."

NOW READY.

MORE ABOUT GORDON.

By ONE WHO KNEW HIM WELL.

In 1 vol., fcap. 8vo, 2s. 6d.

NEW NOVELS AT ALL LIBRARIES

NOW READY.

VICTIMS of FASHION.

By A. M. ORANGE. In 2 vols., crown 8vo.

"So cleverly planned, and neatly told, a story would be worth reading even if it contained fewer good character-sketches than are scattered by the way in this novel."

Athenæum.

NOW READY.

AN INTERLOPER. By

FRANCES MARY PEARL, Author of "The Baroness," &c. In 2 vols., crown 8vo.

"A very charming book. This tale of French aristocratic life is nobly conceived and singularly sympathetic and natural. It is the history of a weak but generous man, redeemed by the strong faithfulness of love.... Miss Pearl, who writes an excellent style, has set down nothing one would wish blotted, and her novel is true to the highest ideals of human endeavour."—Globe.

A NEW EDITION.

In 1 vol., crown 8vo, 6s.

DIANA TEMPEST. By

MARY CHOLMONDELEY, Author of "Sir Charles Danvers," &c.

"Miss Cholmondeley writes with a brightness which is in itself delightful.... Let everyone who can enjoy an excellent novel, full of humour, touched with real pathos, and written with finished taste and skill, read 'Diana Tempest'."

Athenæum.

NOW READY.

BY THE AUTHOR OF "THE CHILCOTES," &c.

A TROUBLESOME

PAIR. By LESLIE KEITH, Author of "Lisbeth," &c. In 3 vols., crown 8vo.

"Mr. Leslie Keith, who has for some time past been favourably known to the public as a clever and entertaining writer of fiction, has just given publicity to a story of such conspicuous ability that its authorship can scarcely fail to place him high in the ranks of contemporary English novelists.... A more wholesome or amusing book has not reached our cognisance for many a day."—Daily Telegraph.

NOW READY.

A NEW NOVEL BY THE AUTHOR OF "UNCLE MAX."

MRS. ROMNEY.

By ROSA N. CAREY.

Author of "Not Like Other Girls," &c.

In 1 vol., small crown 8vo, 2s.

NOW READY.

The POWER of the PAST

By ESME STUART, Author of "Joan Vellacott," &c. In 3 vols., crown 8vo.

"Mrs. Wood has certainly an art of novel-writing which no rival possesses in the same degree or kind. It is not, we fancy, a common experience for any one to leave one of these novels unfinished."—Spectator.

BETWEEN ONE AND TWO MILLION COPIES OF

MRS. HENRY WOOD'S NOVELS

have been sold since publication.

Each Novel of this favourite Author can be had separately, well printed on good paper, and neatly bound, price 3s. 6d.

RICHARD BENTLEY & SON, New Burlington Street
Publishers in Ordinary to Her Majesty the Queen.

DAVID NUTT,

270-271, Strand, London.

THE JEWISH QUARTERLY REVIEW.

EDITED BY

I. ABRAHAMS and C. G. MONTEFIORE.

Vol. VI., JULY, 1894, No. 24, 3s. net.

CONTENTS.

NOTES on the MS. SOURCES of the HISTORY of the JEWS in SPAIN. By JOSEPH JACOBS.

SOME ASPECTS of RABBINIC THEOLOGY.—II. By S. SCHRECHTER.

THE PLOT of the SONG of SONGS. By Dr. M. FRIEDLÄNDER.

FRAGMENTS of the SIFRE ZUTA. By S. SCHRECHTER.

BELIEFS, RITES, and CUSTOMS of the JEWS, connected with DEATH, BURIAL, and MOURNING.—III. By A. P. BENDER.

AGADATH SHIR HASHIRIM. By S. SCHRECHTER.

MISCELLANEA LITURGICA.—II. Azharoth on the 613 Precepts. By Dr. A. NEUBAUER.

A NEW TRANSLATION of the BOOK of JUBILEES. Part II. By the Rev. E. H. CHARLES.

CRITICAL NOTICES.—REV. MORRIS JOSEPH'S "THE IDEAL in JUDAISM, and other Sermons." By the Rev. HAROLD ANSON.—PH. LEDERER'S "HEBRAISCH-CHALDAISCHE ABBREVIATUREN. GESAMMELT ALPHABETISCH GEORDNET, INS DEUTSCHE UEBERSETZT UND ERLAUTERT." By Dr. H. HIRSCHFELD.—DR. W. FEILCHENFELD'S "DAS HOEBELIED INHALTLICH UND SPRACHLICH ERLAUTERT." By Dr. H. HIRSCHFELD.

NOTES and DISCUSSIONS.—WAS the CUSTOM of FASTING on SABBATH AFTERNOON part of the EARLY ANGLO-JEWISH RITUAL? By Prof. DAVID KAUFMANN.

"* The present number concludes Vol. VI., handsomely bound cloth copies of which may be had at 12s. 6d. net. Vol. VII., No. 1, will be published in October. Subscription price 10s., payable in advance."

CLASSICAL REVIEW.

Vol. VIII., No. 7, JULY, 1s. 6d. net.

Yearly Subscriptions (Ten Numbers) 13s. 6d. post free.

CONTENTS.

J. B. MAYOR.—CRITICAL NOTES on the STROMATEIS of CLEMENT of ALEXANDRIA. (Continued.)

ROBINSON ELLIS.—COLLATION of the MADRID MS. of MANILIUS. Book V.

H. RICHARDS.—CRITICAL NOTES on the REPUBLIC of PLATO. (Continued.)

R. Y. TYRRELL.—ON STEPHENS' VETUSTISSIMA EXEMPLARIA and on EUR. BACCH. 506.

SHORTER NOTICES and NOTES.

REVIEWS:—

POSTGATE'S CORPUS POETARUM LATINORUM. ROBINSON ELLIS.

ARCHAEOLOGY:—

E. CAPPS.—ON the SIDE ENTRANCES to the GREEK THEATRE.

PETRIE'S TELL EL AMARNA. CECIL TORE.

GUHL and KONER'S LEBEN DER GRIECHEN UND ROMER. W. C. F. ANDERSON.

MAPS of ROMAN BRITAIN. F. HAVERFIELD.

H. B. WALTERS.—ILLUSTRATIONS of the PHOENISSAE of EURIPIDES.

MONTHLY RECORD.—SUMMARIES of PERIODICALS.—BIBLIOGRAPHY.

JUST ISSUED.

The DIDACHE; or, the Teaching of the TWELVE APOSTLES, Restored to its Original State from Various Sources. With an Introduction, Translation, and Notes, by CH. H. HOOLE, Student of Christ Church, Oxford. Demy 8vo, 90 pp., 2s. 6d. net; 2s. 9d. post free.

SERVICE BOOKS of the GREEK

CHURCH, TRANSLATED into ENGLISH. The Divine Liturgies of our Fathers among the Saints, John Chrysostom and Basil the Great, with that of the Presanctified preceded by the Hesperinos and the Orthros, Edited with the Greek Text by J. W. B. ROBERTSON. 16mo, 519 pp., cloth, red edges, 12s. net.

"* Beautifully printed in Red and Black. Greek Text and English Translation facing each other.

Commended by the Patriarchs of Constantinople, Alexandria, and Jerusalem.

EUCHOLOGY. A Manual of

Prayers of the Holy Orthodox Church, done into English by G. V. SHANN. 16mo, xxxiii., 524 pp., cloth, red edges, 7s. 6d. net.

BOOK of NEEDS of the HOLY

ORTHODOX CHURCH. With an Appendix containing Offices for the Laying-on of Hands. Done into English by G. V. SHANN. 16mo, 350 pp., cloth, red edges, 7s. 6d. net.

MACMILLAN & CO.'S NEW BOOKS.

THE UNEMPLOYED. By

GEOFFREY DBAGE, Secretary to the Labour Commission. Crown 8vo, 3s. 6d. net.

SOCIAL EVOLUTION. By

BENJAMIN KIDD. Fourth Thousand. 8vo, 10s. net.

NATIONAL LIFE and CHAR-ACTER: a Forecast. By CHARLES H. PEARSON, Hon. LL.D. St. Andrews, late Fellow of Oriel College, Oxford, and sometime Minister of Education, Victoria. Second Edition. Crown 8vo, 5s. net.

ACADEMY (Sir MOUNTSTUART GRANT DUFF).—"A book with which many will disagree, but which will set a very large number of able persons thinking."

TIMES.—"A very remarkable and striking book. Mr. Pearson's speculations on the future of national life and character are certainly a notable sign of the times."

SATURDAY REVIEW.—"It is some considerable time since we have read a book on politics with anything like the interest which has accompanied our reading of Mr. Pearson's 'Forecast.'"

THE JUNGLE BOOK. By

RUDYARD KIPLING. With Illustrations by J. L. Kipling, W. H. Drake, and P. Frenzeny. Ninth Thousand. Crown 8vo, 6s.

PALL MALL GAZETTE.—"Consists of half a dozen stories, of which the first and longest is an Indian version of the wolf-child. But that ancient myth was surely never before presented as such a delightful medley of moral fable and natural history..... The remaining stories in the book are as lively and lifelike as the first."

ST. JAMES'S GAZETTE.—"Fresh, vigorous, and brilliant, and thoroughly worthy of the reputation of its author."

THE PHAEDO of PLATO.

Edited, with Introduction, Notes, and Appendices, by E. D. ARCHER-HIND, M.A., Fellow of Trinity College, Cambridge. Printed in "Macmillan Greek." Second Edition. 8vo, 8s. 6d. net.

GEOMETRICAL CONICS.

Part II. The CENTRAL CONIC. By the Rev. JOHN MILNE, M.A., late Scholar of St. John's College, Cambridge, Author of "Weekly Problem Papers"; and B. F. DAVIS, M.A., late Scholar of Queens' College, Cambridge. Crown 8vo, 8s. Part I. The PARABOLA. Crown 8vo, 2s. COMPLETE. Crown 8vo, 4s. 6d.

PRACTICAL LESSONS in PHY-

SICAL MEASUREMENT. By ALFRED EARL, M.A., Senior Science Master at Tonbridge School. Illustrated. Crown 8vo, 5s. [Science Manuals].

LESSONS in ORGANIC CHEM-

ISTRY. Part I. ELEMENTARY. By G. S. TURPIN, M.A., D.Sc., Principal of the Technical School, Huddersfield. Globe 8vo, 2s. 6d.

MACMILLAN'S THREE-AND-SIXPENNY SERIES.

NEW VOLUMES.

GRISLY GRISELL; or, the Laidly Lady of Whitburn. A Tale of the Wars of the Roses. By CHARLOTTE M. YONGE. Crown 8vo, 3s. 6d.

YOUNG MUSGRAVE. By Mrs.

OLIPHANT. Crown 8vo, 3s. 6d.

LADY WILLIAM. By Mrs.

OLIPHANT. Crown 8vo, 3s. 6d.

THE CURATE in CHARGE.

By Mrs. OLIPHANT. Crown 8vo, 3s. 6d.

MACMILLAN & CO., LONDON.

SATURDAY, JULY 14, 1894.

No. 1158, New Series.

THE EDITOR cannot undertake to return, or to correspond with the writers of, rejected manuscript.

It is particularly requested that all business letters regarding the supply of the paper, &c., may be addressed to the PUBLISHER, and not to the EDITOR.

LITERATURE.

Bengal MS. Records: a Selected List of 14,136 Letters in the Board of Revenue, Calcutta, 1782-1807, with an Historical Dissertation and Analytical Index. In 4 vols. By Sir William Wilson Hunter. (W. H. Allen.)

THE modern school of historians has established the principle that the study of history consists in the careful examination and appreciation of documents, and not in the putting of old material into a new shape or in the application of new ideas to the received version of historical events. The present age is distinguished by the publication of vast quantities of historical material, either in extenso or in the form of calendars of special collections or special periods. Hitherto the history of the English in India has fared even worse than the rest of English history. A small quantity—a very small quantity—of printed matter, chiefly Blue Books and State Papers, has been worked up over and over again into a fantastical account of the history of the English conquest and administration. Even accredited writers have felt no shame in thus confessing either their ignorance of unpublished sources or their incapacity for original research. Quite recently, however, an attempt has been made by men like Sir George Birdwood, Mr. Forrest, and Mr. Noel Sainsbury to reveal the wealth of unexplored material which lies hidden in the India Office, in the Record Office, and in India itself. Mr. W. H. Hutton, in the preface to his volume on Lord Wellesley in the "Rulers of India" series, has shown what stores of unknown information exist for the period of the government of a man whose administration is believed to have been exhaustively studied. Before any substantial work can be done on Indian history, it is of primary importance that some attempt should be made to draw up a scientific account of the sources historiques on the history of the English in India. In the India Office itself some small progress has been made in arranging the records; but as Mr. Forrest's various volumes have shown, documents of the highest value still remain in India unknown and inaccessible to English students. Any attempt to bring to light the nature and extent of this hoarded wealth of documents does service to the cause of Indian history and of history in general. In that way alone can the conventional school, which simply hashes up old ideas in new words, be shamed, and the old errors be decisively refuted. It has been said that each generation must be forced to re-write the history of the past in the light of its own views of the relative importance of events; but future historians will, if the new scientific school flourishes, at least have the advantage of building on a stable basis of ascertained fact, instead of on the unsound and theoretical conceptions bequeathed by the race of rhetoricians who cultivated elegance of style rather than historic truth.

It is with real pleasure, then, that all students will welcome Sir W. W. Hunter's enlistment under the banner of scientific history, and will greet his re-appearance after a lapse of years as an original worker in this field of research. In the early days of his service Sir W. W. Hunter was permitted to examine the records preserved in the various district offices in the Lower Provinces, and the result of his researches appeared in his first two books—The Annals of Rural Bengal and Orissa; and in his Statistical Account of Bengal. He had therefore acquired a certain facility in dealing with documents, and in knowing what to look for in them, when he undertook the task of going through, with the aid of assistants, the mass of papers accumulated by the Bengal Board of Revenue during the first half century of its existence, from 1782 to 1832. These records comprise 21,509 folio volumes and bundles of manuscripts. Careful note was taken of some 17,000 letters illustrative of the British district administration between 1782 and 1812, and a kind of calendar drawn up summarising their contents. The first 14,136 letters, running from 1782 to 1807, as thus calendared and summarised, are now published, with a preliminary dissertation and an analytical index. It is idle here to point out the exceptional value which such a work must have, as giving material for an authentic account of the condition of Bengal during the most critical period of its administrative history. Hitherto the only evidence extant on this point has been contained in the descriptions of English travellers, in supplements to State Papers, and in quotations from semi-legal works written in support of or in opposition to the Permanent Settlement. In this calendar the evidence given is not only larger in quantity and more systematically arranged, but is also unbiased by partisan considerations and perfectly impartial as to locality and subject. It is impossible to review adequately a calendar of documents of this nature: a series of quotations might indeed illustrate the vast variety of topics embraced, but could not cover a tenth part of their range. It will be more suitable, then, to turn at once to Sir W. W. Hunter's preliminary dissertation, and see to what conclusions his examination of the documents leads him. And this is the more necessary, since the summary of documents printed must have taught the author far more than a casual student would learn; for each letter has been selected by himself as specially typical of others, and its general connotation must be familiar to him.

Naturally enough Sir W. W. Hunter makes the Permanent Settlement of Bengal the central theme of his dissertation. It is the one distinguishing feature of the administration of Bengal to the present day, and has been and is the subject of perpetual and bitter controversy. It is one of the most far-reaching acts of the British Government in the East; and both its causes and its results demand the most careful and temperate examination, alike from historical students and from Anglo-Indian officials. The Permanent Settlement was promulgated by Lord Cornwallis in 1793, almost midway between the dates over which Sir W. W. Hunter's selection of records extends; and the main subjects of his dissertation are its immediate causes and its immediate results. The motives which led the Court of Directors to order, and Lord Cornwallis to draw up, the Permanent Settlement are exhaustively treated. An accurate account is given of the various administrative experiments made by the East India Company's servants in Bengal between the grant of the Diwani, or revenue management of the province, to the Company in 1765, and the arrival of Lord Cornwallis in 1786. Those who condemn the Governor-General and his masters, the Honourable Court, must be unaware of the numerous expedients tried in Bengal before the Permanent Settlement to extract an adequate revenue without oppressing the cultivators. Administration by native agency under native control, by native agency under European control, by European local officers with the title of Supervisors, by native agency under six provincial councils of European civil servants, and by native agency under European local officers, known as Collectors, controlled by the Board of Revenue at Calcutta, was tried and failed; settlements of the land revenue for five years and for single years and on leases, made with the former Zamindars and with the highest bidders at auction, were tried and failed. It was with reluctance, rather than with undue haste, that the Court of Directors adopted the idea of making a permanent arrangement for the collection of the land revenue of Bengal; and they only acted under a belief justified by the failure of all previous experiments, and forced upon them by the economic condition of the province. Much obloquy has been cast upon Lord Cornwallis and the Court of Directors for their action in this matter. They made their resolution, as Sir W. W. Hunter proves up to the hilt, not in imitation of the English system of holding landed property, not with the idea of creating an aristocratic class of landlords, not with their eyes shut to the fact that they were sacrificing any future increase of revenue, not with undue haste or in violation of native customs, but after mature deliberation and careful examination of the condition of the province. It is no small gain to the student of Indian history to get rid of the false allegations of Mill, and stand at last on firm ground as to the origin and causes of the Permanent Settlement. Yet the Permanent Settlement did not prove at once, and has not proved since, a blessing to the people of Bengal. This was not the fault of Lord Cornwallis or of the Court of Directors. They acted on the evidence before them, and with the views of history and political economy which obtained at the time; and their well-intentioned measure brought about utterly unexpected results. It is to this feature of the Permanent Settlement that Sir W. W. Hunter devotes the greater part of his dissertation. He carefully describes the varied character and diverse rights of the different classes of the Zamindars who, by the declaration of the Permanent Settlement, were placed between the cultivator and the State. It has long been known that the Zamindars of Bengal owe their position to different circumstances. Some were the descendants of ancient ruling houses, others were mere tax-gatherers and farmers of the revenue; and between the two extremes ranged the many varieties partaking of both characters. Their status was equally diverse, and to European ideas terribly complicated, since it was made up in varying degrees of two distinct elements. Sir W. W. Hunter points out the confusion with admirable lucidity:

"It is this double title, by sanad and by custom, which explains the anomalies so puzzling to British legislators in the last century, and which lies at the root of much debate in the law-courts of Bengal during the present one" (vol. i., p. 42).

After analysing the status of the landholders previous to the Permanent Settlement, Sir W. W. Hunter examines the status of the cultivators; and he shows how thoroughly the English administrators in Bengal understood the proprietary rights of the tillers of the soil, and how they endeavoured to safeguard them.

After noticing the reasons which induced Lord Cornwallis to declare the Settlement permanent, with the approbation of the Court of Directors, Sir W. W. Hunter goes on to show how the Settlement ruined hundreds of the landholders and failed to protect the cultivators. Never has the sudden substitution of a basis of contract for a basis of custom in the tenure of land been more strikingly illustrated. The effect of the sweeping away of feudal rights in France by the Revolution, and in Prussia by the legislation of Stein and Hardenberg, did not produce a tithe of the confusion which showed itself in Bengal. Lord Cornwallis and the Court of Directors intended to act generously towards the Zamindars, most of whom, as Sir W. W. Hunter shows, were speedily ruined by the very measures designed to benefit them, while the cultivators who refused, in their belief in the sanctity of their customary rights, to accept leases embodying them became mere rack-rented tenants at will. The recovery of the province from the devastation wrought by the great famine of 1770 was so rapid and complete that the economic conditions prevailing in 1793 were speedily altered. Land was at a premium instead of cultivators, with strange results to the State, the Zamindars, and the villagers themselves. Only by a right understanding of the causes and immediate effect of the Permanent Settlement can the land legislation and the Bengal Tenancy Acts, which commenced in 1859, be really understood.

The summary of Sir W. W. Hunter's conclusions, and the description of the contents of his calendar of documents which has just been given, indicate the value of this last work of the author of the Annals of Rural Bengal to the historical student, the political economist, the politician, and the administrator. But there is one impression forced upon the mind of the thoughtful reader which can hardly be transmuted into words—a sense of the hopelessness of any effort to apply our Western ideas and conceptions to Eastern conditions, a feeling of the utter futility of dealing, even with the calmest deliberation, on European lines with Asiatic populations, and a despairing consciousness that the best-intentioned Englishman may unwittingly impoverish the people of India.

H. MORSE STEPHENS.

Tennyson: his Art and Relation to Modern Life. By the Rev. Stopford A. Brooke. (Isbister.)

FEW things are more indicative of the passage of time than the fact that critics are, at last, beginning to speak calmly and dispassionately of Tennyson's work. In our first appreciation of the loss which literature had sustained in the death of the late Laureate, it was impossible for judgment to be absolutely sane and balanced. It would have done but little honour to the heart of a critic that his head should have been cool, his outlook unclouded, at the moment when contemporary poetry was suddenly deprived of its central figure. And so the first eulogies which followed Tennyson's death were, perhaps, a little too enthusiastic, something too loyal, and wanting in discrimination. With the passage of time, however, the temperament of the critic changes: the loss is no longer so close to us, the personal sentiment is fading, the opportunities for judgment increase. There is a certain class of genius whose personal charm to its admirers is so insistent that it requires the lapse of many years before criticism can be brought to bear calmly upon its production. It took long to assign to Byron his proper place upon the roll of literature; the radiant personality of Shelley blinds us still to some of the shortcomings of his greatness. But the individual influence of a life so secluded, so little shared with his contemporaries, as that of Tennyson passes with no long delay. It is but little more than eighteen months since he died; and already we have, in Mr. Stopford Brooke's intimate and scholarly study of his work, a more judicial and acute estimate of his powers than could, in the nature of things, have been produced within many years of the death of a poet who had mixed more fully with the world.

There have been many books about Tennyson during the last year and a half, presenting him to the public from many points of view; but it can scarcely be questioned that, so far as a critical commentary upon his work is concerned, none of these volumes approaches Mr. Brooke's in lucidity and acumen. It is not, I think, going too far to say that this book comes within measurable distance of being the perfect study of Tennyson's work. It is probable that, in the case of a talent so various as Tennyson's, it would be an impossibility to find a critic who should be in sympathy with every side of the work, or able to do full justice to every mood of the poet. If Mr. Brooke has failed to understand the Tennyson of "Maud," and has treated with disproportionate seriousness the light-hearted medley of "The Princess," the failure, one feels, is only due to the natural limitations of a taste which has given us as wise and sympathetic an analysis of "In Memoriam" as ever was printed, and a chapter on the "Idylls of the King" which every student of Tennyson will read with admiration. If, then, anything said in these brief remarks may seem to depreciate Mr. Brooke's well-deserved success, it is only that the book is so near to being the perfectly satisfying study of its subject, that one finds oneself obliged to confess regretfully that there are points in which the author seems scarcely to have caught the spirit of his original. But it should be understood at once that such instances are very few, and that the book in its entirety will greatly enhance Mr. Brooke's already high reputation as a thinker and a critic.

To be exact, then, it seems to me that Mr. Brooke's volume has certain failings, and these the failings of his qualities. The excellences are sufficiently marked; a clear, scholarly vision, a tincture of philosophy, an ear for rhythm, a tendency to contemplation. The failings correspond. They consist, I think, in a somewhat dogmatic, academic method, an inclination to inquire too curiously into the meaning of things, a want of appreciation for dramatic movement, and an undue affection for the calmer aspects of Tennyson's muse. It may be well to run over the ground lightly with these considerations in view.

Mr. Brooke, I have said, is too dogmatic. The fault is one of oratory, and Mr. Brooke, we all know, is gifted with unusual eloquence. The ready speaker acquires a knack of forcing his point home with too little consideration for the arguments which may be brought to bear against him. For the rough and ready methods of platform or pulpit oratory this habit is well enough; but it is altogether at variance with the temperament of the critic. He must give reasons for his judgment; he must face the contrary opinion: the statement of the unsupported view is insufficient. But, after two very careful studies of Mr. Brooke's volume from start to finish, I can find but one place in which he admits the chances of his own fallibility. "Moreover, the criticism may be all wrong," he says, of his reflections upon "Maud." "When we approach a great poet's work our proper position is humility." This is well said; but it is not the keynote of the book. Throughout the greater part of the criticism, there is a tendency to draw the conclusion first, and then to force the premises to illustrate that conclusion—a tendency which occasionally leads Mr. Brooke considerably astray. But let me take an instance or two. He observes that Tennyson has not succeeded conspicuously in his attempts at portraying sensuous passion. So keen a student as Mr. Brooke is presumably aware that Tennyson's friends—FitzGerald among the number—and his publishers in particular were continually apprehensive of the insertion of anything of an erotic character among his work. Mr. Brooke must know of cancelled passages in "Tristram and Iseult" and elsewhere, which prove that Tennyson had more of Vivien's fire in his muse than he deemed it prudent to manifest. But, setting corrected passages apart, it is surely an error in judgment—a petitio principii—to assert that "Fatima," one of the most passionate poems in the language, is "a great failure." And what of the farewell of Launcelot and Guinevere? Surely art needs no more fire than this. But Mr. Brooke has made his generalisation, and so the instances have to conform to it. Again, Mr. Brooke observes that Tennyson, as an artist, is always best in describing English scenery. This criticism no one will question; but to enforce it, to make the point at all hazards, Mr. Brooke speaks slightly of the description of Enoch's tropic island, and of the varied and brilliant pictures of "The Daisy." To establish one's argument in this fashion is, I submit, to be dogmatic, and to lose touch for the moment with the truly critical attitude.

Mr. Brooke again, I think, is too careful to see the exact meaning and hidden import of every poem. A case in point is his treatment of "The Princess." Throughout his criticism of that poem, as it seems to me, he takes far too serious a view of what is confessedly a medley. And a single instance will suffice to show how this habit of attributing hidden meanings to Tennyson leads him into error.

"The Princess's favourite study," he says, "is the natural sciences. . . . The holiday-makers of the prologue are taught by facts; electricity, steam, hydraulics go hand in hand with the rustico sports."

Mr. Brooke, in other words, wants to establish a parallel between the village fête of the prologue and the college-course of the story. But as a matter of fact, Tennyson was simply describing, in that opening scene, a festival at which he was present at Maidstone Park in the summer of 1844. And in all probability no one would have been more surprised than himself at the implication which his account of the festivities was made to bear. This kind of criticism is too ingenious: it overleaps itself, and falls upon the other side.

And now to bring these remarks to a close. It seems to me that Mr. Brooke, in his admiration for the calm and speculative aspect of Tennyson's muse, overlooks the dramatic power and the dramatic significance of other poems, and those by no means the least remarkable of the late Laureate's contributions to literature. The dramas proper Mr. Brooke altogether neglects: or, to speak by the book, he dismisses them with a shrug of the shoulders. In this, I believe, he makes a mistake. It may be a question how far Mr. Brooke would have found the dramas of use in tracing Tennyson's "relation to modern life"; though even here I think he might have found a study of them valuable. But it is surely indisputable that no study of the poet's "Art" can afford to pass by with disdain a form of work to which he devoted himself continually and strenuously throughout the greater part of the last fifteen years of his life. The dramas, in the mere matter of literary labour, bulk so largely in the collected edition of Tennyson, that it is something perilously like affectation to set them on one side in what claims to be a complete study of the work. But, be this as it may, Mr. Brooke has directed his attention towards the dramatic poems; and it is in his attitude towards them that one may find a reason for his neglect of the stage-plays. Mr. Brooke's cast of thought is less akin to dramatic poetry, I think, than to any other. Once more we find the old heresy about "Maud." Mr. Brooke, in common with so many of his predecessors, cannot leave the war-passages to their context, cannot regard them as the hysterical utterances of a weakly and overwrought brain, dramatically analysed: he must be finding some trace of Tennyson's own personality and individual view in the cry for bloodshed; and so he feels bound, even against his inclination, to raise the voice of deprecation. But it was to avoid this very kind of criticism that Tennyson, in the later editions of "Maud," labelled it "A Monodrama": the sub-title was designed to indicate that the whole attitude of the hero of "Maud" was a piece of objective art, altogether alien to any view or doctrine of the author himself. This Mr. Brooke appreciates when he comes to deal with "Locksley Hall Sixty Years After"; but even here he drops a word of regret. "Many, like myself," he says, "will dislike its view about man and the future of man." As if a criticism of art had anything to do with a personal prejudice against the views of a character dramatically represented.

"Was it worth a poet's while," he adds, "to flood the world with all this wailing music, to depress mankind who is depressed enough, to picture so much ill and so little good, to fall into commonplace realism, to seem to make the querulous hopelessness of the character he draws the measure of the future of mankind? It was not worth a poet's while; and I wish, in spite of the excellence of the work, that he had not taken the subject at all."

On the whole, I think these words from Mr. Brooke's own volume exemplify, better than anything I could say by way of argument, the limitations of his criticism when he comes to apply it to dramatic poetry. To him ethics are so nearly related to art that he cannot separate the two sufficiently to discriminate between the vitally inartistic and the legitimately tragic in poetry. Gross realism, coarse photography, ignorant of a moral idea, is not only ethically but artistically insupportable: the delicate, reticent, yet faithful analysis of Tennyson never transgresses the limits of discretion and taste. To confuse these issues is to do the poet an unintentional wrong; and this slight lack of the dramatic instinct is, to my mind, the one serious shortcoming in Mr. Brooke's equipment. Lacking it, he has produced a conscientious and very valuable study of his poet; but, had he possessed it to the full, his book would have been still worthier. It might even have been final.

ARTHUR WAUGH.

Count Cavour and Madame de Circourt. Some Unpublished Correspondence. Edited by Count Nigra. (Cassells.)

THE only fault to be found with these letters is that there are so few of them. They are admirable in themselves, and admirably translated by Mr. A. J. Butler; while Count Nigra's enthusiastic introduction, with its pathetic reminiscence of his adored friend and master, is especially delightful reading now that enthusiasm is out of fashion. The volume consists partly of letters from Cavour to Madame de Circourt and her husband, and partly of letters from them to Count Nigra. Slight as they are, they add more than one vivifying touch to the portrait of the statesman who, more than Victor Emmanuel, more than Mazzini, more than Garibaldi, deserves to be remembered as the creator of Italy. Every reader of Nassau Senior's Conversations will remember the Salon in the Rue des Saussaies, and the charming hostess to whose chair there was "a little lane known to the initiated," who, on the eve of the Crimean war, correctly forecast the result of Louis Napoleon's impertinent letter to the Czar. The Countess was a Russian, née Anastasie Klustine, and she enjoyed the friendship of Cavour from 1836 down to his death. The privilege was also shared by her husband, Count Adolphe de Circourt, a member of one of the six noble families of Lorraine which alone survived the bloody deluge of the Revolution. He also is a principal interlocutor in the Conversations, a man of real knowledge, though lacking his wife's brilliant intuition. But Legitimist and aristocrat as he was, he had a heart open to every generous impulse, he "sophisticated no truth, allowed no fear." As for his wife, Sainte Beuve's judgment may be taken as final:

"The special characteristic of Mme. de Circourt's Salon was that intellect gave, as one may say, rights of citizenship there. No preconceived opinion, no prejudice stood in the way of this lady, pious as she was and firm in her beliefs, so soon as she perceived that she had to do with a sterling intellect and a man of talent. From whatever political shore one might come, on whatever philosophical dogma one might take one's stand, one met with friendship and sympathy beside that sofa on which she had for years been imprisoned by cruel sufferings dissembled under a kindly and gracious charm with a social art that nothing could alter."

Such were the people with whom, in 1836, young Cavour of the Sardinian Engineers, struck up a warm friendship which lasted down to the fatal Thursday in June, 1861, when he died, leaving "two things yet to do, Venice and Rome." Madame de Circourt survived her famous friend barely two years, and at her death bequeathed the precious legacy, as she called the letters, to Count Nigra. They have no great political importance, there is no startling revelation of character, no untying of historical knots. But one gets from them a better notion of Cavour's frank affectionate nature, of his companionableness, of his easy sociability. In 1836, after a visit to England, he wrote:

"I knew that you were unwell and not strong, and if I had thought that I could cheer or distract you I would have written you volumes. But how can one be lively or amusing when one is living in the middle of fogs and smoke, crushed under the weight of a heavy and ponderous intellectual atmosphere? In England one may discuss, but never chat; how could I have gone into discussions and dissertations with an invalid? I preferred to deprive myself of the pleasure of any intercourse with you rather than run the chance of boring you. People who are in pain are more sensitive to boredom, and I was afraid of adding to your suffering.

"I do not mean to say that England is not a country of immense intellectual resources. You can find there quite as many specialists and men of deep thought as anywhere else—perhaps more. Nowhere are certain branches of the moral sciences better cultivated, but there is one thing which you will seek there in vain; I mean that admirable union of science and wit, of depth and of kindness, of solidity and polish, which forms the charm of certain Parisian salons, a charm which one regrets all one's life when one has once made trials of them."

Sometimes, too, the letters are funny, as that in which, in a spirit of unusual Philistinism, he reproaches Lamartine for his intimacy with Georges Sand! Then, the expulsion of the Jesuits was a burning question in Piedmont, and Cavour strenuously endeavoured to convert Madame de Circourt to his view. She probably did not need much converting; for her husband (whose ideas she generally shared) regarded their educational influence as unfitting their pupils for public life, and heaped ridicule on his own aristocratic friends, "who do not believe in a God, but think it looks well to send their sons to a Jesuit":

"I wish," writes Cavour to the Countess, "I could take you for a moment into one of the colleges managed by the Jesuits in this country. They are less mischievous in France and Switzerland than with us. But why? Because in those countries which are not under their yoke they have to take precautions, to employ care in handling government and people. Being with us all-powerful, they can give free scope to their tendency and let the spirit of the Order develop itself. Woe to the country, woe to the class which shall entrust them with the education of its youth. The opinion that I express here is shared by the most distinguished among our clergy, and by the immense majority of sincere Catholics."

This was written in 1844, when Carlo Alberto was still saying that he lived between the daggers of the Carbonari and the chocolate of the Jesuits. It is natural, though regrettable, that in the most interesting years of all we have no letters—nothing in 1848 or 1849, or in 1851, either before or after the coup d'état. Yet in the whirl of the absorbing struggle, amid danger and distrust and difficulties innumerable, Cavour never forgets the delightful intimacy of the Rue des Saussaies:

"Political tempests," he writes in 1857, "make one feel more than ever the charm of intimacy with you, by the fireside, where one can forget one's most weighty preoccupations and surrender oneself to the delights of friendly and intelligent conversation."

The same letter is important as containing an unequivocal declaration that Piedmont had nailed the flag of Italian unity to the mast.

"Since Providence has ordained that Piedmont alone in Italy should be free and independent, Piedmont must use her freedom and independence to plead before Europe the cause of the unhappy peninsula. We shall not shrink back from this perilous task. The king and the country are determined to carry it out to the end. If I go down, you, I feel sure, will not cast me out, but will grant me an asylum amid the defeated men of distinction who cluster round you. Do not interpret this outburst as a sign that war is imminent. Nothing is further from my thoughts. Take it solely as a declaration that all my strength, all my life, are consecrated to one task only—the emancipation of my country."

The Salons were dead against Cavour in 1860; but those who win can afford to smile, and he felt that, though the upper classes were against Italy the French people were for her. "I resign myself," he says with grim humour, "to seeing Italy saved in spite of the Parisian drawing-rooms." Perhaps the most important political piece in the volume is Cavour's last letter to de Circourt, written in April, 1861, nine weeks before the writer's death:

"The Temporal Power," he writes, "is dead, no one can revive it. The Pope needs other guarantees than foreign bayonets. Liberty alone can give him these; and that liberty we are ready to grant him. Sincere Catholics must recognise that he will be the gainer by the change. Please make the disciples of Father Lacordaire and M. de Montalembert read my speeches; adding that in Italy we wish for nothing better than to throw all Concordats into the fire, to repeal Leopoldine, Tannuccion, and all similar laws, to condemn the Tabbronian doctrines: in one word, to put in practice the separation of Church and State."

"This plan will raise immense difficulties for us; but we accept them beforehand, convinced as we are that, once the antagonism which has existed for centuries between the Temporal Power and the national spirit is at an end, the Pope and the Cardinals will gradually come under the influence of the liberal principles which prevail in Italy."

Alas! events have not worked to the end hoped for by Cavour. Nowadays it is no longer true as it was thirty, perhaps, twenty years ago, that the nation draws inspiration from his thought, and, whenever its resolution falters, has recourse, as to an oracle, to "that lofty and steadfast mind which made itself obeyed by all kinds of selfishness because disinterested, and by all prejudice because it was enlightened."

REGINALD HUGHES.

NEW NOVELS.

In Varying Moods. By Beatrice Harraden. (Blackwoods.)

"INDEPENDENT NOVEL SERIES."—Time and the Player. By Lewis Hainault. (Fisher Unwin.)

Winifred Mount. By Richard Pryce. In 2 vols. (Methuen.)

Tom Sawyer Abroad. By Mark Twain. (Chatto & Windus.)

"AUTONYM LIBRARY."—The Upper Berth. By F. Marion Crawford. (Fisher Unwin.)

Thorough. By Mary A. M. Marks. In 3 vols. (Bentley.)

The Mystery of Clement Dunraven. By Jean Middlemass. In 3 vols. (Digby, Long & Co.)

"TAVISTOCK LIBRARY."—Sir Joseph's Heir. By Claude Bray. (Frederick Warne.)

Our Alma. By Henry Goldsmith. (Sonnenstein.)

A Dish of Matrimony. By Mme. Armand Caumont. (Elliot Stock.)

MISS HARRADEN'S new volume of stories shows a remarkable advance in her art since the publication of Ships that Pass in the Night. That earlier book was a little disappointing. The conception of it was full of promise, but it proved inadequate and inconclusive in the working out. The writer had not quite learned to measure her resources, or to produce the effect she was aiming at with a sure and practised hand. But she has profited by experience. I do not know when I have received more pleasure from a new story than that afforded me by "At the Green Dragon," which makes up a third of In Varying Moods. It is singularly complete, within the limits assigned by art to the short tale. The character of Hieronymus, the historian, his relations with Joan, the farmer's daughter, and her lover, the exciseman, are treated with a freshness and a precision which makes all three very living figures in the memory. Hieronymus, in particular, is one of the most gracious and sympathetic people in modern fiction. His simplicity, his kindness, his deep humanity, all are admirably and tenderly indicated, without a superfluous page or line. Miss Harraden has her eye on the problems of personality; and her main theme is the influences of this elderly scholar, a little tired and full of the wisdom of life, upon a young and ardent girl with whom he is accidentally brought into contact. The story abounds with both pathos and humour. Indeed, the possession of humour sets Miss Harraden apart from the band of clever women, to whose bow and spear the English novel has of late become a captive. The Revolving Daughter has plenty of wit; but she is generally too much in a hurry, and too self-conscious and self-confident besides, to have much humour. To get that, you must suffer and fail and renounce a good deal, and learn to be tolerant and to take life leisurely and to expect very little of it, and a thousand other things which most people never attain to. But Miss Harraden has attained to them, and it is the better for her art. There are other good stories in the book, but there is nothing in them quite so good as Hieronymus. And one or two are rather thinner and less original than the rest.

The name of Mr. Lewis Hainault, which appears on the title-page of Time and the Player, is new to us; but if this is his first novel, he is distinctly to be congratulated on it. It is a study in the ironies of life, intensely analytical, psychological: perhaps one should say pathological. Paul Lefroy is a strong, self-reliant man, gifted with keen senses, and an ardour for the joys of life. He is in haste to make money, in the City, and finds himself confronted with a possibility of bankruptcy. He braces himself for an effort, knowing fully that any undue exertion will probably mean a collapse of brain. Always the dread of insanity, traumatic primarily but complicated by hereditary tendencies, has hung like a shadow over his life. He pulls through, in spite of mental agonies, and is struck down in the moment of his triumph. That is all the story; but the interest lies in the vigour, the picturesqueness, the relentlessness introspection, with which the details and phases of his purgatory are worked out. It is cruel, but only because it evidently represents a conviction in the writer's mind that life is essentially cruel. Paul Lefroy has a pretty and childish wife, and the two are notable figures in Society. The tragedy is outlined against a background of the inanities and indecencies which make up modern London. Mr. Hainault's style is in harmony with his somewhat morbid theme. It is fantastic, overwrought, and yet in its way powerful. It is full of the highly-developed colour-sense that is so characteristic of a deliquescent art. It is insistent upon draperies and costumes, upon the tints of glass and flowers and complexions. Sometimes Mr. Hainault treats his colour-effects as leit-motifs, a device which in one form or another he often uses, not however without awkwardness: Lefroy's trick of twisting his neck in moments of emotion becomes annoying. There is a weakness in the dialogue; the characters talk irrelevantly in enigmatic phrases, to which you have to divine, or fail to divine, the key. It is like listening to a conversation in an actual drawing-room, and art is not an actual drawing-room. There are defects of taste, too; Rhoda Mushbrook should have been Paul's cousin, not his aunt. But when all is said, Time and the Player is a striking and interesting novelty in fiction. It is not much use prophesying a new writer's career until you see his second book, but I shall be glad to see Mr. Hainault's.

Mr. Richard Pryce's new novel is quite readable froth. Agatha Twine, Elsie Luttrell, and Winifred Mount, three school-companions at Proseville, are all drawn into the great world of London, and all fall more or less in love with Agatha's cousin, Percy Twine, of White Acton. In the end, Agatha is cured by a fever, Elsie is consoled by an alternative, and the choice falls upon Winifred. The situation makes one hate Percy, and think him an unmitigated prig; but perhaps that was inevitable. The somewhat thin idea is eked out by a mystery concerning Winifred's birth and childhood. She is brought up at school, and does not see her father until she is seventeen. Her mother is dead, and her father dies also before he has revealed the secret. It is solved by a sudden flash of reminiscence in the ultimate chapter. All this part is rather ingeniously worked out. Moreover, Mr. Pryce has a gift of brisk, neat dialogue, and a light touch on the superficialities of character. The prim Agatha and the vivacious up-to-date Elsie are a good contrast. Agatha's match-making mamma, with her incapacity to understand the nature of a "Limerick," and her iterated "my daughter, Percy, if you know what I mean," is also good. The end of the book is hardly up to the level of the beginning. The crispness of the style flags, and the story becomes somewhat wearisome. Mr. Pryce is capable, here and there, of laying himself open to a charge of vulgarity.

It is more decent to parody Jules Verne than Sir Thomas Malory, and Mark Twain may therefore be deemed to have returned in his latest flight of humour to the limits of legitimate burlesque. We are introduced once more to Tom Sawyer, Huck Finn, and the invaluable nigger, Tim. These heroes obtain possession of a balloon, with a patent steering apparatus and a minimum pace of one hundred miles an hour. In this they cross the Atlantic, are driven by contrary winds to the middle of the Sahara, traverse Egypt, and finally come to anchor on "Mount Sinai, where the Ark was." On their way they fall in with oases, dust-storms, mirages, caravans, and other familiar marvels of African travel, and have a narrow escape from a somewhat improbable congregation of lions and tigers. The point of the jest appears to lie: firstly, in the shifts and expedients of the ingenious Tom Sawyer, who is certainly never at a loss for any emergency, and is able to point out to his companions the ruins of Joseph's granary, and the treasure hill of the Dervish and the Camel-driver in the Arabian Nights; and, secondly, in the attempt to express elementary scientific and geographical facts in terms of Yankee slang and Yankee logic. There are perpetual discussions, in which Tom Sawyer's fragments of book-learning are pitted against the ignorance and dialectic smartness of Huck Finn and the nigger, and, of course, invariably get the worst of it. The chief fault of the book is that it does not strike one as particularly funny, which is perhaps a considerable defect in what is professedly a work of humour. It is a good thing, as someone once said, for a comic paper to have some jokes in it.

The Autonym Library, one gathers, is to be more popular and less experimental than its forerunner, the Pseudonym. It is to draw upon established reputations, rather than fish for undeveloped talent. The volumes are of the same convenient size, shape, and price, but the cover is of a more comely tint. The print is clean, and you do not have to cut the pages in all sorts of unexpected places. In fact, you do not have to cut them at all, which is perhaps best for a railway journey. The first number consists, appropriately enough, of a contribution from the facile and distinguished pen of Mr. Marion Crawford. It takes the shape of two ghost stories. They are slight enough, but well told and with a proper feeling for the supernatural in atmosphere. The ghost of fiction is apt to be a little thin, intellectually as well as materially, but the nautical one in "The Upper Berth" is at least comparatively convincing. That in "By the Waters of Paradise" is more conventional, and it has the additional disadvantage of being explained. Explicable ghosts should perhaps be left to the Society for the Promotion of Psychical Research.

They have passed from the sphere of imagination into that of science; and science is welcome to them. Both stories are told with Mr. Crawford's accustomed ease of style.

A brother reviewer is advertised as being of opinion that Thorough is "a remarkable book"; we regret that to us it appears only remarkably dull. With immense and pathetic industry the writer has told, once again, the sufferings of Ireland from the days of Strafford to those of Cromwell. Nominally, the narrative centres around the affairs of a group of Galway friends and relatives: in effect, the thin thread of story is buried beneath a bewildering mountain of names and allusions, which only an intimate acquaintance with the annals of the period could render intelligible. Mrs. Marks has evidently got up these annals with the utmost care, and has been at the pains to overload her already thick volumes with a paraphernalia of pièces justificatives, in the form of elaborate quotations from Irish letters and Irish pamphlets. Unfortunately we are not all specialists in Irish history, and I imagine that those who are would prefer to take it neat, and not disguised as a long-winded and inconsequent romance. There are really only two ways of writing an historical novel: one is to conceive your characters in the usual way by the aid of imagination, and to put in your history in the background, for the sake of local colouring; the other is to take boldly a hero of the past, a Sidney or a Hampden, and, with the aid of the same imagination, attempt to reconstruct the living man from all available sources, to breathe life into the dry bones of biography. But in either case you are not absolved from the necessity of having some leading figure or group of figures in the forefront of your canvas, to whom the reader's interest may attach itself. This is a somewhat elementary rule of composition, but Mrs. Marks does not appear to have grasped it. She would have done better to have cast the result of her considerable researches into the form of a deliberate historical treatise. No one would have read it, of course; but then we do not think that anybody is likely to read this novel—at least, not all of it.

The Mystery of Clement Dunraven is of a familiar—one may hope, obsolescent—type. The plot revels in crimes which are commonplace in fiction and impossible out of it. The hero commits bigamy to win an inheritance, murders the black-visaged cousin and rival who shows him the documentary evidence of his guilt, and winds up by letting suspicion fall on an innocent man, who is in this case his first father-in-law. A series of extraordinary circumstances, which includes both apoplexy and paralysis, intervenes to protect him from the consequences of such a career, and he is left to the quite inadequate punishment of remorse. The authoress is careful to explain that Sir Clement Dunraven—he is a baronet, of course—had not a naturally bad heart; he sinned from weakness and recklessness merely. It is an excuse which may serve for murder, but certainly cannot be held to extenuate the writing of this novel. There is no graciousness of style, no play of effective dialogue, no insight into character, absolutely nothing to counterbalance the feebleness of the plot. It is not even, so far as we can see, ethically sound. It is simply a weary wilderness in three volumes.

It appears from Mr. Claude Bray's title-page that he has already published several novels, which I have not had the good fortune to meet with. Presumably, therefore, there is a public to whom the ineptitudes of Sir Joseph's Heir will be welcome. It is the story of a girl who consented, under pecuniary pressure, to marry a man a few hours after she had first met him. This she did, by the way, at a quarter to five in the afternoon. In the hands of Mr. Stevenson or of Mr. John Davidson, the whimsical theme might have had its possibilities; in the hands of Mr. Claude Bray, it has only its impossibilities. The heroine vibrates between sentimentality and sordidness; her virtues are rewarded at the end of the book with wedded happiness. The following extract will adequately illustrate Mr. Claude Bray's style and Mr. Claude Bray's power of philosophical reflection: "Woman's mission in life before and after marriage (when some of them forget it) is to look her best. If she does not, depend upon it her actions are upon a par."

Since the days of Henry Kingsley the output of novels with a scene laid in Australia has been sufficient to furnish a small library by itself. It is a considerable continent, but the local colouring does not appear to vary to any appreciable extent. The gold-digger, with his pick-axe and "billy," the laughing jackass, the gum tree, and the wattle bush: they are all familiar and monotonous features in the landscape. Nor is the colonist with a queered past and an ultimate baronetcy quite a fresh element among the dramatis personae. These old friends are trotted out once again in Our Alma, which, in other respects, is a well-meant, unexciting story enough.

A Dish of Matrimony is a tawdry and vulgar plat. The writing, the taste, and the ideas are on the level of the novelettes in a shop-girl's newspaper. One of the characters pays a morning call, wearing on her head "a nondescript arrangement, something between a hat, a bonnet, and a sortie-de-bal. On her feet she wore white satin boots with pink rosettes." Another is described as "a provoking combination of female loveliness." There is "a restless light flitting like an ignis fatuus about her mischievous little mouth, and underneath her long raven eyelashes." She has a large circle of unpleasant young men, who call her Ollie. The plot is the old story of the idle and industrious apprentice, varied by unromantic elopements and silly adulteries. Some of the personages are merely insipid, others are disgusting. Their manners and conversation are such as could never have existed, whether among clerks in a London suburb or anywhere else. This is the kind of trash which fills the libraries where Esther Waters is taboo.

E. K. CHAMBERS.

SOME CLASSICAL BOOKS.

Latin Prose Versions. Contributed by various scholars. Edited by Prof. G. G. Ramsay. (Oxford: Clarendon Press.) If Prof. Ramsay has caused some searchings of the heart to schoolboys by his two volumes on Latin Prose Composition, those of them who may be fortunate enough to receive this book as a prize will assuredly grant that he now makes ample atonement. Such is the first thought that must occur to the reviewer, when he dreams that thirty years of his life are rolled back, and he stands once more, on speech day, in the presence of the Doctor. Here we have university professors and public schoolmasters combining to set forth a standard of that most difficult art, which still remains the crown and test of classical education as understood in this country. Latin verse may perhaps yield a keener pleasure, from the feeling of obstacles overcome and memories recalled; but no one entitled to an opinion on the matter will doubt that Latin prose represents the higher accomplishment. The one, after all, is a tour de force; the other implies a mastery over the genius of two very different languages. Would that all our so-called translators from French or German had been put through the mill! As we certainly do not intend to lay hands on our father Parmenides, we must be content with a few comments on the list of contributors. Of a former generation, we notice the honoured names of Shilleto and Conington and—scarcely less eminent than they in this genre—Evans, of Rugby and Durham. Among professors, it is interesting to find the Scotch universities so well represented. The English Church can show an archbishop and a dean—both once headmasters of the same institution, which the general public would not readily associate with the teaching of Latin. Winchester seems still to hold its own among the great schools. After so much translation from English, it was a happy thought of the editor to add some of the original Latin epistles addressed to Trinity College, Dublin, on the occasion of the tercentenary two years ago. Finally, the Clarendon Press has lavished upon the book such luxury of paper, print, and binding, that our faded schoolprizes will not disdain to admit this new arrival to their company.

Advanced Manual of Latin Prose Composition. By B. D. Turner. (Rivington, Percival & Co.) The theory that, in classical education, whatever may be useless, Latin prose is supremely valuable, dies hard, or, rather, may be said to be in rude health. There is no doubt that "to know thoroughly" the logical dependence of one member of a sentence upon the rest" (p. i.) does imply a good deal. Our doubt has always been, not as to the value of this knowledge, but as to the necessity of acquiring it thorough Latin prose. However, Mr. Turner, as befits an author, is a believer in his subject; and he considers his treatment of it to be original in arrangement only—that is to say, he has combined with "the principal rules of the compound sentence and a summary of the characteristics of Latin style, a larger number than is usual in such compilations of extracts for translation." (Faults of order or of punctuation, we may remark, make the above a very bad model of an English prose sentence.) We agree that there is a good deal to be said for having your necessary syntax (pp. i-47) and notes on style (pp. 48-124) in the same volume as your selections (pp. 125-394); in that way a good deal of cross-reference is facilitated. In the "Notes on Style," those (pp. 94-100) on similes and metaphors seem very useful; also those on pronouns (pp. 114-20). In the exercises, Mr. Turner has wisely endeavoured to avoid the stock pieces of other collections. It is impossible to do this wholly; certainly, the passage from Pops on p. 387, or the greater part of it, is found in Foliorum Centuriarum; so is that from Berkeley on pp. 381-2.

Parallel Verse Extracts for Translation into English and Latin. By J. E. Nixon and E. H. C. Smith. (Macmillans.) In this book two distinguished Cambridge scholars make one more attempt to rationalise the practices of Latin verse in the higher education. To them poeta nascitur non fit is "about as fallacious as most proverbs"; the art of verse writing needs only "a fair amount of sympathetic taste and ability, with a great deal of hard work, patience, and concentration of thought." Precisely—and because it requires "only" this, it altogether transcends the abilities and opportunities of many of those who used to be put through it as an essential drill. "A fair amount of sympathetic taste" is the last thing which can be taken for granted. On the other hand, we do not doubt in the least that the view of Latin verse as merely an elegant but useless accomplishment is absurd. By it can be acquired "an accurate discrimination of thoughts, and a sound appreciation of English as well as of Latin poetry"; and this is much, provided we can clear our minds of superstition in this matter, and avoid confusing the tool with the result. The "general remarks," extending over more than seventy pages, somewhat closely printed, are, we think, rather discouragingly full: it will be hard to get the beginner to tackle them, but they are extremely suggestive to more advanced scholars. The pages (lxi-lxvi) on Elision are very helpful, and much needed in days when learning by heart is less in fashion than of old. The parallel verse extracts divided into sections for (i) Elegiacs, (ii) Lyrics, (iii) Hexameters, are both full in number and ingeniously adjusted: such a parallel, e.g., as that on pp. 26 and 27 between Ovid and Shakspeare shows great judgment; that on pp. 80-1, between Horace and Dryden, really represents a loose translation, by the latter, of the former. We doubt the wisdom of insertions like this, though (see p. vi.) they appear to be intentional.

Classic Moods: Latin, Greek, and English. by Gavin Hamilton. Second Edition. (Edinburgh: Oliver & Boyd). "Like all great discoveries, Mr. Hamilton's is a simple one." What is his discovery? That the subjunctive is "the messenger and minister of necessity"; it is definite, absolute, direct, and makes other moods vassals; it is the dictator mood; it is used to express scientific and moral truths, and to emphasise important and novel information; and it plays the part of an extra imperative, extra indicative, and extra infinitive. But, in order to prove that the subjunctive has a "stately, imperial style," our author is reduced to such shifts as the distinction between iubeo and impero (p. 29), the explanation of quod inventum corrumperet (p. 40), the nonsense about rich gourmands (p. 44), and about ut dicam (p. 47), and—worst of all—the analysis of exceptions on p. 55. Where the subjunctive marks "constituting peculiarity" on p. 58, the distinction between the one clause and the other is purely arbitrary so far as "constituting peculiarity"; and in all the cases the indicative might just as well be quoted as the important and emphatic part. Perhaps the height of absurdity is reached on p. 70, where we are told that the subjunctive is the mood of physicians and (p. 72) of madmen. Since we began with the "imperial style," to fall to madmen is rather a disgrace, especially when (on p. 74) it "marks divine power." As for the appendix on p. 93, it may be valuable against Kühner: the analysis of ὁ μή (on p. 93) is a vague statement of what is more clearly explained by Prof. Goodwin. On the whole, it is an excellent thing to stir in the stagnant waters of the subjunctive. No doubt grammarians have laid down many rules which are exploded. This book is an honest attempt to give a consistent theory of the subjunctive, though we confess to some surprise that so many distinguished scholars have treated it with so much verbal deference. This, however, gives no excuse for such attacks on those who have disagreed with the author, as that in the note to p. xvi.—a piece of ill temper and imputation which should never have been penned. The book may have done some good if it encourages people to search into the dark places of the subjunctive, even though they do not agree with Mr. Hamilton's conclusions.

The First Four Books of Xenophon's Anabasis. Edited by W. W. Goodwin and J. W. White. Revised edition. (Boston: Ginn.) Goodwin's Greek Grammar and Lewis's Latin Dictionary have already been welcomed in this country as standard educational works. We venture to predict an equally wide acceptance for this edition of the Anabasis, which, in its present revised form, represents the joint learning and experience of the two professors of Greek at Harvard. The plan of the book, equally with its execution, seems to us admirably adapted to the needs and tastes of the beginner. First, we have an introduction, dealing in considerable detail with military matters, such as all boys will feel an interest in. Then follows the text, printed in bold type, which reminds us of an old-fashioned fount, used sometimes by the Clarendon Press. This is followed by the notes, which are comparatively brief, being confined mainly to grammatical matters, and even these being condensed by references. Next comes what we regard as the most important part of the work—an "illustrated dictionary," abounding in details, and extending to nearly 250 pages. Finally, in a sort of etymological appendix, we have "groups of related words," classified under roots in alphabetical order. Whether we regard the quantity of information, or the attractive form in which it is represented, we are not aware of any Greek Reader that possesses so many merits as this. In England, elementary texts are too often produced by the junior masters, who have to learn how to teach as they go along.

NOTES AND NEWS.

MESSRS. SMITH, ELDER & Co. will publish immediately a History of the Tower Bridge, by Mr. Charles Welch, Librarian to the Corporation. The work will also contain an account of other bridges over the Thames, based upon the records of the Bridge House Estates Committee; a description of the Tower Bridge, by Mr. J. Wolfe Barry, C.B.; and an introduction by Canon Benham. It will be abundantly illustrated.

MESSRS. SWAN SONNENSCHN & Co. will issue in the course of the next few weeks a new Anglo-Saxon Dictionary for the use of students, by Dr. Clark Hall. The work is mainly based on the glossaries accompanying Anglo-Saxon Texts, Readers, &c., which have appeared in England, America, and Germany, during the last ten or fifteen years; and it has been in the press for a considerable time. It will form a small quarto, with three columns to the page.

THE Lutetian Society will issue this month the first of their English translations of the Rougon-Macquart series. These works are being produced under the direct auspices of M. Emile Zola; and the first will be L'Assommoir, which has been translated into English by Mr. Arthur Symons. The set will comprise twelve volumes in all, in an edition de luxe limited to three hundred copies on hand-made paper, and will be issued to subscribers only. Information can be obtained from M. John de Mattos, 99, Avenue de Villiers, Paris.

An announcement that Mr. Frederick Wedmore has prepared for publication another little book of short stories, or "imaginative pieces," as he is wont to call them, is, we understand, at least premature, though doubtless Pastorals of France and the more recent Renunciations will sooner or later be followed by a third volume.

THE latest of Utopias is described by Mr. Henry Lazarus in a volume entitled The Revolution of the Twentieth Century, shortly to be published by Mr. T. Fisher Unwin. The book contains the details of a brand new constitution, as well as an indictment of the old. The evolution of the Salvationists into a grande armée forms a prominent feature in the scheme.

THE series of dialogues by A[nthony] H[ope], which have been appearing on Saturdays in the Westminster Gazette, will be republished immediately in book form by Messrs. Simpkin, Marshall & Co., under the title of "The Dolly Dialogues," with illustrations by Mr. Arthur Rackham, who has also designed a special cover for the volume.

MR. DAVID CUTHBERTSON, of the Edinburgh University Library, has in the press a volume entitled, The Auld Kirk Minister, a series of stories illustrating the relations which existed between pastor and people in a rural district in Scotland. Messrs. J. & R. Parlane, of Paisley, are the publishers.

Two works dealing with Foreign Missions will be issued shortly by Mr. H. R. Allenson: Dr. Robert Kerr's Pioneering in Morocco, which contains much information about the influence of the Medical Mission in opening the way for the introduction of the Gospel into Morocco; and a life of the late Bishop Hill, of the C. M. S. West African Mission, whose death and that of his wife occurred recently at Lagos, just as they had entered on their work.

THE Punjab Text-book Committee have obtained permission to translate into Urdu The Story of the Life of the Prince Consort, by the Rev. Dr. W. W. Tulloch. The book is published in this country by Messrs. James Nisbet & Co.

MR. ELLIOT STOCK announces the re-issue in a cheap form of Notes for Boys (and their Fathers) on Minds, Morals, and Manners, a book which has had considerable popularity at a higher price.

MESSRS. DIGBY, LONG & Co. will issue shortly a cheap edition (being the seventh) of The Author's Manual, by Mr. Percy Russell, with a new preface.

MR. RICHARD LE GALLIENNE's recent volume of Prose Fancies has already reached a second edition.

THE first number of the New Science Review, the Anglo-American Quarterly, will be published in this country on Monday next, at 26, Henrietta-street, Covent Garden.

A MARBLE bust of Keats, executed by Miss Anne Whitney, of Boston, and presented by about one hundred American admirers of the poet, will be unveiled in Hampstead Church on Monday next, at 4 p.m. It is hoped that Mr. Bret Harte will represent the American donors on the occasion; while the memorial will be received on behalf of English men of letters by Mr. Edmund Gosse.

DURING the first three days of next week, Messrs. Sotheby will be engaged in selling literary and historical documents from different collections. First comes the collection of the late Lewis Wingfield, which includes a number of letters addressed to Castlereagh, among them one from the Duke of Portland relating to the Union. Another interesting collection is that of Mrs. Jameson, which includes two pages of Part II. of "Faust" (presented to her by Ottilie von Goethe), and several autograph poems of Charles Lamb. Among the miscellaneous lots, we may specially mention: a holograph letter from Oliver Cromwell to his son Richard, which seems to have continued in the possession of the family down to the present time; a long letter from Marlborough to the Duke of Somerset, which appears to be better written than usual; four folio volumes of correspondence relating to the affairs of the Nabob of Arcot, which should certainly be acquired by the India Office; a series of letters of Browning and his wife, in one of which he refers to the liberal terms offered to her by American publishers; and a number of documents relating to Bonaparte and Nelson.

UNIVERSITY JOTTINGS.

THE University Court of Glasgow has appointed Prof. Henry Jones, of St. Andrews, to the chair of moral philosophy, vacant through Dr. Edward Caird's removal to Oxford; and Mr. Richard Lodge, of Brasenose College, to the newly founded chair of history.

AMONG the printed books purchased for the Bodleian during the past year were the following curiosities. Two horn-books of the time of Charles II., with a thistle stamped on the back of each, and therefore evidently printed in Scotland; together with a thick "battledore" of the horn-book shape, temp. George III. And a collection of 469 Icelandic grafschriftir (funeral broadsheets, generally containing brief particulars relating to the deceased, with appropriate poetry), ranging from 1823 to 1892. This collection was sent from Iceland, with a consignment of ponies, to a Glasgow merchant, who offered it to the Bodleian: it may be doubted whether any equally extensive collection is to be found out of Iceland. We may also mention The Day of the Purple Falcon (1847), a metrical romance privately printed from the original MS. in the possession of the Hon. Robert Curzon: it was really written by Bishop Heber and Mr. Curzon. In the annual report of the curators of the Bodleian Library, in connexion with the death of Prof. Jowett (who had been a curator for thirty-eight years), it is recorded that the gift of the Shelley collection had been offered through him; and that his last visit to the library was made on June 13, 1893, when Lady Shelley, accompanied by him, presented the collection.

THE following were the chief purchases made last year for the University Library at Cambridge out of the Rustat Fund, which now yields an income of only £163:—

Manuscripts:—Terentius, xv cent., on vellum (Northern); Beda, Homiliae super Lucam, xii cent.; Vitae Godwili, &c., xiii cent.; Statuta, Forma brevium, &c., early xiv cent.; Visio lamentabilis, xv cent., on vellum; Poems in Irish, xv and xvi cent., on vellum; Keating's History of Ireland (in Irish), xviii cent.; Entries of Coroner's Inquests, Fines, &c., in Ireland, xvi cent.; Bokenham (Joseph), Dictionary of Arms; Valuations, Incumbents, &c., of Norfolk Benefices, xvii cent.; Fitch (W. S.), Collections towards a History of Copdock, 1845; Cotton (Iz.), Grounds, Rules, &c., of Starr Chamber; [Hudson, Will.], Treatise of the Court of Star Chamber.

Printed Books:—J. de Theramo. Belial zu deutsch. Woodcuts. F°. (Types of H. Eggstein, Strasburg, ab. 1477)—This edition seems not to have been described: the cuts are those that occur afterwards in H.

Knobloch's editions; G. de Monte Rocherii, Manipulus Curatorum (Hain *8157), F., and Bollanus de conceptione B. V. Mariæ, Hain *3436, F. (R printer, Strasburg)—in one volume, from the library of Dr. Kloss; Aristoteles Oeconomica, &c. (Hain *1776), 4°, A. ther Hoernen, Cologne; three books printed by Ulr. Zell, Cologne, ab. 1470, 4°, in one volume; Albertus de adherendo deo, F. (J. Zainer, Ulm, about 1472); Vocabularius utriusque juris (C. A. *1750), F. (J. de Westphalia, ab. 1480); Quattuor Novissima, 4°, R. Paffroed, Deventer, 1494; Papias, F., Venice, 1486; Speculum aureum animæ peccatricis, 4°, A. Cayllant, Paris; Bartholomæus de proprietatibus rerum, F., Lugd., 1482; Lydgate's Temple of Glas, 4°, (W. de Worde, ab. 1495—1500); Proclamation of Pardons on the Accession of Henry VIII., Broadsheet; The Byrth and Lyfe of Antechryst, 4°, W. de Worde (ab. 1520)—this book does not seem to be known to bibliographers.

MAGAZINES AND REVIEWS.

THE Expositor for July opens with a valuable critico-exegetical article by Dr. Gifford on the points in dispute between Prof. Ramsay and Mr. Chase in connexion with the use of the term Galatia. We can only mention that Dr. Gifford has no doubt that τὴν Φρυγίαν καὶ Γαλατικὴν χώραν (Acts xvi. 6) could, in other contexts, be applied either to Northern or to Southern Galatia, but that in its present context it can only mean the borderland of Phrygia and Galatia, north of Antioch, through which the travellers passed, after "having been forbidden to preach the Word in Asia." Mr. Kidd, author of "Social Evolution," gives a critique of Prof. Drummond's "Ascent of Man," which confirms us in the belief that even thinkers who differ so widely as Prof. Drummond and Mr. Kidd may criticise each other with friendliness and the strongest endeavour to be fair. The other articles by Prof. Dods and Prof. A. B. Bruce (both in continuation of previous articles), Mr. J. Watson, and Mr. T. H. Darlow. Prof. Dods also contributes a generally written survey of new literature on the Bible.

THE FOUNTAINE SALE.

THE Fountaine Sale, at Christie's, on July 6, was one of the most noteworthy of recent years. Apart from the articles of virtu, which were numerous and of great value, there were nine books of remarkable character, each one of which excited the cupidity of the crowd of collectors assembled in the sale-room.

Eight of them were MSS. of singular interest. The one printed volume (No. 137) was a Prayer-book (Psalms or Prayers taken out of Holy Scripture, with a Litanie, Thomas Berthelet, 1544), impressed upon vellum, which had belonged to Henry VIII., his daughter Mary, and the Dowager Queen Catherine Parr, in succession. The royal arms were emblazoned on the reverse of the title-page; and the book contained inscriptions by the King, one of them being addressed to "Myne own good daughter" on the occasion of his presenting it to the Lady Mary. The princess bestowed it on Catherine Parr, in an inscription which is signed "Your moste humble Doughter and seruant Marye." There are a couple of inscriptions in Latin by "Catherine Regina K.," and one by "T. Seymour," the admiral whom she married after the king's death. Another inscription, "I will yf you will," appears to be in Edward VI.'s handwriting, and was probably an answer to his sister's suggestion that the book should be presented to the Queen. The little volume realised £610 10s. (Quaritch).

Of the eight MSS., one was a beautiful Latin Gospel, written and illuminated in Carolingian style about the end of the ninth century. It was described (No. 138) as having been written late in the tenth century for Otto III. by an Italian monk at St. Gall; but the book is probably a hundred years older, and Burgundian in its origin: it brought £570 (Quaritch). A charming Italian MS. (No. 139, Officium B.V.M.), written for the Duchess of Urbino about 1510, was described as from the hand of Giulio Clovio—a traditional attribution which had been accepted by Waagen, but for which there was really no ground: it realised £450 (Yates Thompson). A third MS. (No. 140), in which the interest of historical ownership was combined with a flawless beauty of execution, was a little Latin Bible of the early part of the fourteenth century. Although it was only the first volume out of two, the second being preserved in the Bibliothèque Nationale, its description as the Bible of Philip the Fair, and the marks of ownership by the Duc de Berry about 1390, rendered it an object of strong competition: it fetched £610 (Quaritch), and will probably rejoin its other half in the Bibliothèque Nationale. Another MS. (No. 143) of great artistic value was a Book of Hours (incomplete) of English execution, written about the beginning of the fourteenth century for some lady of the Clifford family who had married a Grandison; the illuminations were peculiarly interesting as examples of English art of a very fine style: the book brought £410 (Quaritch). It was instantly purchased by Mr. William Morris, who carried it away under his arm from the sale-room. Another MS. (No. 144), less interesting as a work of miniature art than as a book of historical ownership, was a Book of Hours in Latin, of French execution, which had belonged to Margaret Countess of Richmond, the mother of Henry VII., and bore an inscription by her of presentation to Lady Shyrlay, signed "Margaret Modyr to the Kynge": it fetched £350 (Alsted). A Book of Hours (No. 145), written probably at Bourges at the beginning of the fifteenth century, was also an illuminated work of great beauty; it bore marks of having belonged to Vittoria Farnese, Duchess of Urbino (about 1550): it realised £300 (Quaritch). No. 141 was a French Horæ, not very fine, but prettily illuminated (£150). No. 142 was a similar book, very splendid in decoration (£180).

SELECTED FOREIGN BOOKS.

GENERAL LITERATURE.

- CONTI, Angelo. Giorgione: studio. Milan: Hoepli. 15 fr.
DORFFELD, W. Troja 1893. Leipzig: Brockhaus. 5 M.
FORSTMANN, A. Zur Geschichte des Aeneasmythus. Magdeburg: Creutz. 2 M. 80 Pf.
HEEREN, H. Die Arbeiterfrage. Berlin: Guttentag. 4 M.
HOELPER, F. Die englische Schriftsprache in Tottel's Miscellany (1557) u. a. w. Leipzig: Fock. 1 M. 50 Pf.
MAUSS, C. L'Eglise de Saint-Jérôme à Abou-Gosch. 2e Partie. Paris: Leroux. 7 fr. 50 c.
SHAKESPEARE, W., Gedichte, in's Deutsche übertragen durch A. v. Mauntz. Berlin: Felber. 5 M.
VOGEL, W. Die Anfänge d. monumentalen Stiles im Mittelalter. Eine Untersucht. üb. die erste Blütezeit französisch. Plastik. Strassburg: Heitz. 14 M.

THEOLOGY, ETC.

- MAIMONIDES' Commentar zum Tractat Peah. Zum 1. Male im Arab. Urtext hreg. u. s. w. v. D. Herzog. Berlin: Calvary. 2 M. 20 Pf.
RÉMOUF, F. Science des religions du passé et de l'avenir. Paris: Pedone-Lauriel. 7 fr. 50 c.

HISTORY, LAW, ETC.

- BAAROUX, H. Discours et plaidoyers. T. II. Paris: Bouquieu. 10 fr.
CATALOGUE des monuments et inscriptions de l'Egypte antique. 1re Série. Haute Egypte. T. 1. De la frontière de Nubie à Kern-Ombou. Paris: Leroux. 52 fr.
CONYQUE, L. A. Etude sur le Homestead. Paris: Pedone-Lauriel. 7 fr.
DUMMLER, F. Ueb. Leben u. Schriften des Mönches Theoderich (v. Amorbach). Berlin: Reimer. 2 M.
FOVILLE, A. de. Enquête sur les conditions de l'habitation en France: les Maisons-types. Paris: Leroux. 7 fr. 50 c.

KHALIL ED-DAHRY. Zoubdat Kadif el-Mamalik. Tableau politique et administratif de l'Egypte, de la Syrie et du Hidjazar sous la domination des Sultans Mamlouks du XIIIe au XVe siècle. Texts arabs p. p. Paul Ravaisse. Paris: Leroux. 12 fr.

PIETTER, Ch. Les manuscrits allemands de la Bibliothèque Nationale, relatifs à l'histoire d'Alsace. Paris: Fischbacher. 6 fr.

PHYSICAL SCIENCE AND PHILOSOPHY.

- BOESE, E. Monographie d. Genus Rhynchonellina Gemm. Stuttgart: Schweizerbart. 6 M.
DRUDE, F. Physik des Aethers auf elektromagnetischer Grundlage. Stuttgart: Enke. 14 M.
HEINZE, M. Vorlesungen Kants üb. Metaphysik aus drei Semestern. Leipzig: Hirzel. 8 M.
MARTIN, René, et RAYMOND ROLLINAT. Vertébrés sauvages du département de l'Indre. Paris: Soc. d'éditions scientifiques. 10 fr.
MEERIAM, J. C. Ueb. die Pythonomorphen der Kansas-Kreide. Stuttgart: Schweizerbart. 12 M.
SCHUMANN, K. Lehrbuch der systematischen Botanik, Phytodidaktologie u. Phytogeographie. Stuttgart: Enke. 18 M.

PHILOLOGY, ETC.

- PALLIOFF, Z. ed E. Dizionario dels idioms Romaneschs d'Engiadina bassa. 8. fasc. Basel: Geering. 5 M.
SAROLOWSKI, P. De anthologia palatina quaestiones. Leipzig: Gröfe. 1 M. 60 Pf.

CORRESPONDENCE.

NAMUR; RAMILLIES; MENIN: ORIGINAL LETTERS.

Oxford: June 25, 1894.

The following letters have been transcribed, without punctilious accuracy, from the originals in the Rawlinson collection in the Bodleian Library. They are all of some interest, as containing the accounts of persons actually present at the battle and the sieges to which they relate. The narrative of the battle of Ramillies and the events which followed seems to contain some new details; and it may be compared with that in the Compendious Journal of John Millner.

C. E. DOBLE.

I. (MS. RAWL. C. 421, fol. 200).

"DEAR SIR,—

"This comes to you from our Camp at Namur, where wee came about some twelve dayes agoe, with some other regiments, that were detach'd from our army in Flanders, to reinforce this that invests the town: the great curiosity I had to see a seige, made me impatient till our trenches were opened, which was not done till the eleventh of this instant: the ground all hereabouts is very rocky, that our works went on but slowly, notwithstanding wee made a shift to carry them on, till wee came within threescore or fourscore paces of a strong fort of the enemy's that lyes on the Maese side, opposite to the town and castle, and then having battered it severall dayes together with our Canon, on Monday last about 7 in the evening wee began to attack it, and after a very smart dispute, which lasted about an hour, wee became masters of it, the attack was made by Dutch and English, and with that vigour and bravery, that wee never left pursuing, as long as wee had any light to see them; so night being come wee endeavoured to secure the ground, wee had gained, by intrenching ourselves, which wee have done so effectually that they have not ventured to disturb us: I cannot yet tell you certainly what men were lost on either side in this action, only I am sure (for I view'd the dead bodys as they lay) that they were not so many as I feared there would have been, from such great firing as there was: the English Guards behaved themselves remarkably well in this action and have had severall of their officers either killed or wounded; since this our Canon and bombs are continually playing upon another fort of the enemy's, that lyes by the walls of the town on the Maes side, and wee hope to be masters both of the one and of the other in a very short time, of which this last action may be a good presage: my humble service to Mr. Cooling and to all our freinds at the Golden Lyon or the Short Dog, I am,

"Your Affectionate humble servant,

"BENJAMIN CONWAY.

"July: 21: 1695.

"if you'll pardon my past silence, I'll endeavour to make you amends by a more frequent correspondence. I would desire you to let me hear from you and direct it to be left with Mr. Cardonnell.

"For Mr. Griffith

"to be left at the Secretary's "office in
"Whitehall."

II. (Ib. fol. 202).

"DEAR SIR,—

"I thank you for your letter and am very glad to hear that all our friends are well; since I wrote my last to you we have made two or three very successful attacks upon the enemy, and by that we made on Tuesday night last, being the 2^d of August, we became masters of a detach'd bastion adjoining to the Maes, and lodg'd ourselves that night in the counter-carp, our batteries have now made two large breaches, one by St. Nicholas's port, and the other not very far off, but nearer the Maes, so that now we are ready for a storm: but the French have prevented us, for yesterday about two a clock in the afternoon they beat a parly, and after some conference between the Governour and our Major Generall that then commanded the trenches, there came to us a Colonell and a Leivtenant Colonell to treat with us about surrendering, on our side were sent into the town Colonell Seymour and another L. Colonell with him: I cannot yet tell you what the event of it is, for it is not yet come to a conclusion, but I suppose it will ere many hours be over, else I fancy it would not have lasted so long as it has done. As soon as I hear of it you may expect to hear further from me. And now thus far all is well, but from Flanders we hear that the French have fallen upon Dixmude and Deynse and made both the Garrisons which consisted of eleven regiments prisoners of war: my service to Mr. Cooling and all our freinds. I hope to drink your healths to-morrow in Namur in good Champaigne. I am,

"Your faithful freind and servant,

"BENJAMIN CONWAY.

"Aug: 4: 1695

"from our Camp
"before Namur.

"For Mr. William Griffith to be "left with Mr. James Robinson

"at Mr. Secretary Trumballs office

"in

"Whitehall."

III. (MSS. RAWL. D. 862, fol. 105 sq.).

"MY LORD,*—

"We marcht out of garreson April 30, and after we had marcht every day save on, We joynd the grand army near Tongres May the 9. The 10th we halted—The 11th we marcht to Waerem whence we saw the Enemies tents at a great distance—The 12th (Whit Sunday) we marcht againe and after a very little way coming into an open countrey we divided into 8 columes, not dreaming but that the Enemy would retire as fast towards the Dyle as we could after them, but to our surprize about 11. we persev'd them marching towards us, however to make an [?] attack upon them as difficult as it could be, they possessed themselves of 3 villages with the hedges and hollow wayes about them. It took some time to make the dispositione, so that the Cannon did not fire till near 2 and the Small Shott till near 3, which last began by an attack upon the Village in our left called Ramillies, from which the Battell is also call'd,—because the cheife and almost all that could be called Action was there and thereabouts. The Dutch horse led on by the Duke himself 3 tymes were broken all to peices twice on tyme of which the Duke was in very great danger being forced to runn too, he came to a ditch which his horse took, however by some accident he was thrown out of his Sadle and runn over by en that followed him and could not stop his horse, the Duke took to his heels and Major Generall Murray, seeing this commanded 2 Swise Battalions to give a seasonable Volly on the pursuers and stopt them, ane Adacame furnishing the Duke with a fresh horse—as Colonell Bring-felde held his stirrups a cannon ball dasht his brains out. The 3^d time the Dutch horse quite broke the Enemy who never rallied againe, this was a little to the left of the Village, and the foot in it seeing their horse that were to cover them, routed, retired also. The fire was very hott while it lasted, but all was over about 5. None of the Queens subjects wer engaged except 6 Battalions in Dutch pay, Churchills and Mordants; all the rest of English horse and foot wer on the Right and can't be said to have bene engaged, tho they lost some men by cannon and even by musquet shot. But the English horse and dragoons did their part in the pursuit, the latter took 4 Battalions of the Regiment du Roy intire, and between one and t'other a vast number of wagons each drawn by 4 or more brav horses, most ston'd, some belonging to Generall Officers with plate and other rich booty in them, Some to Sutlers, many for Ammunition & Bread, besydes which, by close pursuit they forced them to drop ther Cannone, here and ther in the villages as they pass'd; in all 56. We of the foot march'd at a great rate till 9, But could overtake no body; and then we laid down our arms. All the way that we passed wer strewd with knapsacks, kettles, hatchets, Tent poles and abundance of other things; however tho we were glade to see all this, we did not think any great matter of it. We had the Dyle still to pass without which all that we had done signefied nothing, and that we expected worse bloody noses than at the battell; however t'was to be attempted while the thing was hott. Accordingly the next morning (May the 13th) we marcht to Meldert Camp and at night the Duke ordered 24 Battalions and a good number of Squadrons to march under General Churchill about midnight to lay the bridges, early in the morning when we gott within a league of Loveine the scene open'd, the news mett us that the Dyle was open and Loveine wer bringing their keyes, and then we found that of 60,000 hardly 15,000 got back to Loveine and many of those with broken arms or none, without Amunition, Baggage, provisions or indeed almost any necessaries. They had in a manner disbanded all their foot after the battell, for least they should be taken or cutt in peices they bid them disperse and mak the best of their way to Loveine thro the woods and bye lanes, by which means abundance which were forced into the Service took occasione to returne to their own homes, abundance deserted to us, abundance taken prisoners, Its we have in the whole 5000, and such as would return to their collors can't, because we hav continued our march so close to the heels of the army they hav. As soon as we gott this news our order of march was changed, we turned our faces directly to Loveine, the army march'd over bridges as laid just to the left of the towne, and the Artillery thro the towne and we encamped just on tother side, I had forgott to tell you amongst the prisoners taken in the fight was Count Tallards son whom the king took out of the Abby upon the death of his brother of his wounds after Hochstat and put into the grand Musqueteirs to qualefie him for an officer, and Luxemburgh's nephew and on or two Major Generalls. May the 15 we marcht to Beaulie near Bristls, upon this march we had news that Bristls, Mechelen had sent their keys; My Lord Clare a Liutenant Generall of the French dyed of his wounds, May the 16th we marcht to Greenburgh, passing the Canal, the front Line and Wheele baggage thro Valword and the rier line over bridges to the right of it, Generall Churchill is sent to Bristls to reside there as commander in chief of all the places taken or that shall be taken, his own, Evens, 5 & 2 Forreign Battalions being sent with him to keep guard there. This afternoon upon the march the Duk's order against maroading was read to every Regiment, declaring all the Countrey that submitted to King Charles the 3^d under his protection, and that who-ever was caught taken a Hen from a Boor's House should be hang'd immediately. The French as they march'd of plunder'd all beaating the Boors and killing such Cattle that they could not tak with them, and Its said when they left Mechelen would hav spoiled the Magazine, but the Burghers got to arms and hindred them—May the 17th we halted and also the 18, this day Leire begged the Duks protection—May the 19 was intended as a day of thanksgiving but marching that day to Alost twas put of. This morn, we heard that a great party out of Namure had come and drawn of a good number of those cannon they had dropt in the Villages after the fight—we being busy in marching after the enimie as a thing of greater consequence that they might not hav time to breath, and not being able to fiade horses timely enough to fetch them away—May the 20 we marcht with a designe to paes the Scheild at Gaurie, the best place we could supposing the enemy should oppose us, without which we could not hav Ghent, but when we came to the river side, the coast was clear, by which we knew that Ghent was our own. So the Duke took his quarters on this side, at Marlebk within a league of the town and we incamp't. In the even Ghent sent their Keys—May the 21st we halted and the thanksgiving was strictly observed. At ten this morn the Castle of Ghent gav up and 4 foreigne battalions march'd thither to keep guard. Antwerp, Bridges, and Oudenard, demanding protection, Brigadeir Cadingham with a great party was sent to the first, Major Generall Ross to the 2d. . . . with another to the 3d. This rapidness of conquest must be surprising, if we consider that they had 74 Battalions and 128 Squadrons, a brave army with which the Duke of Bav: at his leaving Lovaine promised to chase us under the Walls of Mastright, they wer so satisfied with the goodness of their Troops that they scorn'd to stay within the Dyle, and the French king had given them positive orders to fight us wherever they mett us, as appears by an intercepted letter, and indeed I never saw better bodied men than the prisoners in my life. We had not 20 battalions and not many Squadrons engaged in the fight, our loss was inconsiderable and theirs (I mean the Slain) not exceeding great, and yet this brave army blown up into the aire, as I may say, their is totally ruined, I dont know how, this I say must be surprising, but then the rest follows on course. They had draind all their garresons, not left a man in those parts, even the garreson of Namure was ther but returned, but the others quit hav not men to spare, for had they men they would not hav suffred us to hav pass'd the canal of Bristls or the Scheild unmolested, besides the Boors tell us that they are frightned out of their witts, beyond what can be imagined, and yet they will keep an army, a show of on at least in the feild, or all is lost and they hav not numbers sufficient for both garresons and feild. They doe indeed keep Dendermond, because a few men will doe it, they hav left 2 Battalions in it and can drown the countrey round it. It can be taken but must be starved, as Guelder was, and we suppose they will keep Damm because it is such another place and they must keep Oastend, Newport, because very strong and of vast Importance, so that our buseness will be to seige or followe them over the Lins, so terrible to us the last war. But they cant stop us now, and how farr we will extend our conquest God only knows. God be thankd, we hav the whole summer befor us, and we expect 40 Battalions with the army Barron Sparr used to command out of Holland, and the Hessians, Hannavors Prussians Zelges [sic] to joyn us, the Princ of Hess sole commander. I pray God bless the Queen and your Lordship and the whole corporation and may England florish for ever. The great men of this countrey into [sic] the Duke of Bav. he is undoone unless the Queen of England and Stats Generall and the Duke of Marlsburgh doe interpose in hes behalf, but they are glad to be freed from the French Tyranny.

"Your Lordships most humble

"and most obedient servant

"to command,

JOHN GORDON.

"P.S. my humble service to your son

"and two sheriffs.

"Meldert Camp near Ghent

"May 21st 1706."

IV. (RAWL. MSS., D. 862, fol. 107).

"Campe befor Menhein

"August the 11.

"[1706.]

"MY LORD,

"I cant omitte letting you know that the stronge toune of Minheim this morning beate a

* These two letters are no doubt addressed to Sir Thomas Rawlinson, Lord Mayor of London.

Shammaide and planted there white collers one the Breach and demanded to capitulate; there demmands was thato the tounce and forte should be Rassed and to march out with all marks of Honner, but my Lord Duke denied the first and they sined the Capitulation to march out in threc dayes and to surrender a gate of the tounce to merow they are to carry out two pcees of Cannon and as many Morters and are to have four Wagons keever'd. My Lord, this place was surrendr'd in fourteen dayes after wee fier'd Cannon, Wee [had] aboute two thousen men killed and wounded, some of them are officers that recruited last Winter with your Lordshipe, poore Capt. Brace and Capt. Lookland and one Sherfe and Tanner wounded, the first three are dead. Never tounce was attacked with more vigor and better defended for the time.

"My Lord, I cant be sartaine wheare wee goe next, but Turnay or Lille are talked of, but the charge is too considerable that I doe belcive wee shall not besige above one tounce more this yeare. This tounce has been forty yeares in the French hands. I bege your Lordships forgiveness and am with all respect,

"Your Lordships
"Humble Sarvant,
"W. HOOBINSON."

APPOINTMENTS FOR NEXT WEEK.

MONDAY, July 16, 4.30 p.m. Victoria Institute: Annual Meeting; Address by the President, Sir G. G. Stokes.

SCIENCE.

RECENT PHILOSOPHICAL TRANSLATIONS.

A History of Philosophy. By Dr. W. Windelband. Authorised translation by James H. Tufts, Ph.D. (Macmillans.)

The Ethic of Benedict de Spinoza. Translated by W. Hale White; translation revised by Amelia Hutchinson Stirling. Second edition, revised, with new Preface. (Fisher Unwin.)

Lectures on the History of Philosophy. By G. W. F. Hegel. Translated by E. S. Haldane and Frances H. Simson. Vol. II. (Kegan Paul & Co.)

Hegel's Philosophy of Mind. Translated, with Five Introductory Essays, by William Wallace. (Oxford: Clarendon Press.)

PROF. WINDELBAND claims that his History of Philosophy is distinguished from the common run of works on the same subject by the special attention which it gives to the development of important ideas: he treats it as a history of problems and conceptions rather than of individual systems. Such an enterprise, if successfully carried out, would no doubt be a most valuable contribution to thought. But Prof. Windelband's performance is hardly equal to his promise. His learning is immense; but he lacks the speculative power, the original genius, necessary for so vast an undertaking. He has succeeded in breaking up the plastic unity of the great systems: his pages are littered with the disiecta membra philosophorum, but he has not built them up into another and higher organisation. Even as a critic, his judgments are by no means to be relied on. In dealing with Sophisticism, for instance, he merely repeats the worn-out traditions of German academical teaching.

"The Sophists," he tells us, "with their self-complacent pettifogging advocacy, made themselves the mouthpiece of all the unbridled tendencies which were undermining the order of public life. . . . Protagoras was the only one who was the author of any conceptions philosophically fruitful and significant. . . . Hippias and Prodicus are only to be mentioned, the one as the type of a popularising polybistor, the other as an example of superficial moralising" (p. 69).

"The Sophists demanded a free and uncramped development of the passions" (p. 78). They "maintained the originality of the Will, and on that account its warrant from Nature" (p. 80). "All courses of Sophistic thought issued in giving up truth as unattainable" (p. 94). Yet, strangely enough, "Democritus, with the help of the Sophistic psychology, developed Atomism to a comprehensive system" (p. 108). Plato's communism is "limited to the thought that he who is to live for the ends of the whole . . . must not be bound to the individual by any personal interest" (p. 127), as if Plato had not declared in the Laws that his ideal was absolute communism for the whole population! According to Epicurus, as here interpreted, "there is nothing in itself right or wrong," and an examination of the laws shows that they are the result of a compact in which the wise, who naturally looked to their own interest, got the best of the bargain (p. 175). What Epicurus really said was something quite different: namely, that "laws are established for the sake of the wise, not that they may wrong others, but that they may not be wronged themselves."

Apart from the chapter on Kant, which is the best in the book and altogether admirable, Prof. Windelband will be found most useful as the historian of patristic, mediæval, and renaissance philosophy. For English-speaking students, the value of the work is seriously impaired by its very inadequate recognition of the English philosophers from Locke to Hume, who are lumped together under the head of the "Philosophy of Rationalism" (why does Prof. Tufts translate Aufklärung by the unmeaning literalism "Enlightenment"?).

I have not had an opportunity of comparing Prof. Tufts' version with the original; but it seems to be substantially accurate, and it is occasionally spirited. A few slips may, however, be detected. To say that the works of Plotinus were written in "late old age" is an evident misunderstanding of the German for "late in life" (p. 218). Lambert, the logician, did not exactly stand "on the summit of the natural science of his time" (p. 461), but "auf der Höhe der Naturwissenschaft," which means that he was quite up to date in that department. Schlegel's Lucinde does not exactly "run into refined commonplace" (p. 603), but rather into "Gemeinheit," of which a rather strong English equivalent is blackguardism; but this I only offer as a very conjectural emendation. And should not Oken be called Schelling's, not Schiller's, disciple (p. 608)? We come across such inelegant literalisms as that Spinoza's theory of the emotions "is always looking squintingly towards the other attribute [i.e., extension]" (p. 413), that Kant "pours out scorn on metaphysical endeavour with a gallows-humour which touches his own inclination in a most sensitive point" (p. 478), and that Comte's principle of the three stages "has not merely Hegel and Cousin for its prototypes" (p. 639). Misprints, especially in Greek words, are also too frequent, and sometimes extend to the dates, as when the year of Schopenhauer's birth is given as 1778 (p. 572).

Judged by the standards of modern scientific thought, there is no bygone system offering so large a proportion of what is true and valuable, in comparison with what is erroneous, unmeaning, or futile, as the philosophy of Spinoza; nor is there any conveyed in a style of such lapidary and monumental simplicity, such commanding austerity and strength. Fortunately, it is also a style that loses little of its classical beauty in a translation. Such, at least, is the impression produced by the almost ideally perfect rendering of the Ethic named at the head of this article, a version whose merits have been rewarded by the honour, rare in philosophic literature, of a second edition. A still more searching revision than Miss Stirling's might perhaps show that some slight blemishes have been allowed to stand. In the very difficult demonstration of Prop. xxi., Part 1, the words, "therefore it must be determined by thought so far as it does not constitute the idea of God, but which (sic) nevertheless necessarily exists," are more obscure than the original Latin, with the additional disadvantage of not being good English. In Prop. xxxiii., Part 1, the objectionable solecism "different to" has, contrary to the usual custom of the translators, been allowed to slip in. In Prop. v., Part 4, I think "definitur" would be better translated by "measured" than by "limited," which as here employed (p. 185) conveys a misleading impression of opposition and restraint, whereas Spinoza means the very reverse—i.e., that passion acts as an external power arrayed against our own real self; and the same remark applies to Prop. xv. In the scholium to Prop. xlv., Part 4, "quia molesti solent esse" does not mean anything so strong as "inasmuch as they do harm" but only "because they make themselves nuisances" or "burdensome to others"; and the same is true of "molesti" as used in sect. xiii. of the Appendix to Part 4. In the scholium to Prop. lviii. of the same part, for "pity, like shame," we should read "shame, like pity." Finally, I do not understand why "modestia," which in the definitions appended to Part 3 was quite correctly translated as "courtesy or moderation," should in sect. xxv. of the Appendix to Part 4 be rendered by the misleading term "affability."

In the excellent Preface to this new edition of the Translation, which is practically an introductory essay on the philosophy of Spinoza, Mr. Hale White modestly admits that he "does not pretend to understand the whole of Spinoza," and adds a suspicion, which is probably correct, that "nobody has fully understood him" (p. lxii.). For most of this obscurity two motives are, I think, pre-eminently responsible. One is the effort to force a series of essentially indemonstrable theses into the forms of geometrical demonstration; the other is the effort, equally futile, to present the stern morality of reason under the garb of a rather sickly religious sentimentality. German romanticism, feeling the need of a similar synthesis, brought this side of Spinoza's teaching into more prominence than it deserved. The great Jewish thinker was not what Schleiermacher called him "a God-intoxicated man," nor yet what Hegel called him, an "acosmist," but eminently a cosmist, not in any sense a theist at all.

Whether owing to the co-operation of Miss Simson or to increased diligence on the part of the other translator, the English version of the second volume of Hegel's History of Philosophy is an immense improvement on its predecessor. The style, indeed, is still painfully inelegant, but mistakes are of rare occurrence. Two only, relating to matters of fact, need be mentioned. The Epicurean Metrodorus whom Hegel mentions—without any apparent reason—as having developed his master's doctrines, was not, as is here stated (p. 280), the Metrodorus who went over to the school of Carneades, and who lived 150 years later. Epicurus never said, nor does Hegel make him say, that "it is better to be unhappy and reasonable than to be happy and unreasonable" (p. 308), but to be unlucky, &c., than to be lucky, &c. The German for "happy" is not glücklich, but glückselig.

If Hegel needs translating into English at all, then it is to be wished that Prof. Wallace could be permanently retained for that duty. His version of the Philosophy of Mind is a perfect marvel of lucid elegance, only to be appreciated by those who compare it, paragraph by paragraph, with the crabbed original. It may be safely said that this division of the Encyclopaedia now presents no obscurities, except what are inseparable from the dialectic method itself. Only in two unimportant passages have I noted difficulties for which the original did not seem responsible. In discussing the normal process of individual consciousness and its relation to the world of which the thinking, feeling, acting subject is the centre, Prof. Wallace makes Hegel say that "error and that sort of thing is a proposition consistently admitted to a place in the objective interconnection of things" (p. 38). Here "proposition" quite fails to give the force of the German word Inhalt, which simply implies that errors may enter into the tissue of consciousness without setting it fatally at variance with the objective order of things. The other instance is a sentence occurring in section 541, which reads as follows: "Individuality is the first and supreme principle which makes itself fall through the State's organisation" (p. 139). To me at least this is unintelligible. The German is clear enough: "Die Individualität ist die erste und die höchste durchdringende Bestimmung in der Organisation des Staates." Perhaps "fall" is a misprint for "felt"; but why is "which" italicised? On pp. 99 and 105 an "of" and an "under" have been dropped out, to the great injury of the sense.

Prof. Wallace has already translated the

First Part of Hegel's Encyclopaedia—the so-called Logic; but he has "not ventured upon" the Philosophy of Nature, which forms the Second Part, giving as his reason that "to penetrate into that province would require an equipment of learning he makes no claim to." Perhaps, also, he was deterred by a lively apprehension of the fact that nowhere else has Hegel so completely given himself away. It may be a mere accident that the dialectic method failed most signally on the one field where it was most open to speedy and complete refutation; but the circumstance remains suspicious. To some the Philosophy of Mind may seem as unscientific, if not as false, as the Philosophy of Nature. In both there is the same thoroughgoing hostility to analysis, the same attempt to substitute an artificial and superficial systematisation of the phenomena for an examination of their underlying causes. And just as in the Philosophy of Nature, "subjectivity" was made to play a great part in the material world, so in the Philosophy of Mind "objectivity" is with more apparent reason credited with a large share in the evolution of consciousness. Prof. Wallace's five introductory essays—learned, lucid, and suggestive—are an attempt to mediate between Hegel and contemporary thought; but whatever their other merits may be, they do not go far to fill up the gulf. May I be allowed, in conclusion, to enter a gentle protest against that incessant use of the word "mere," which mars an otherwise admirable style? It occurs over fifty times in the Essays; while in the Translation it appears as the equivalent of three different German words, besides being introduced where the original offers no equivalent. This supercilious little word is becoming a perfect pest in contemporary literature of the more thoughtful sort; in sense as well as in sound it reminds one painfully of a sneer—and is just as impossible to answer.

ALFRED W. BENN.

OBITUARY.

PROF. DILLMANN.

THE death of August Dillmann, after a short but severe illness, deprives Hebrew philology and Biblical studies in general of one of their greatest representatives. He died at Berlin, on July 4, in his seventy-second year.

Dillmann and Schrader were both pupils of Ewald, and carried on that tradition of a philological treatment of theological documents which Ewald himself joined with Gesenius to initiate. But if it was at Göttingen that Dillmann caught his enthusiasm for the study of languages and of the Bible, to Tübingen and Berlin he owed a full scope for learned labour. Like Schrader, he was induced by Ewald to take up Ethiopic; his Ethiopic Grammar and Dictionary, and his edition of part of the Ethiopic Old Testament, and of the Book of Enoch, have won for him the abiding gratitude of students of that interesting language. Quite lately Dillmann expressed his hope of revising his text and translation of Enoch; and there can be no doubt that Mr. Charles's new translation of this composite apocryphal work, based as it is on a special revision of the text, would have spurred him on to a rapid accomplishment of the task, had his life been spared. Dillmann's Old Testament commentaries are well known. His restless energy in bringing out new editions of them, in some respects thoroughly up to date, was a perpetual surprise to younger scholars. The study of Hexateuch-criticism owes much to him; and if it was provoking to some of his opponents that one so clear-sighted could not join them in their revolutionary theories, it surprised and touched them when they saw him, from sheer love of truth, making concessions which seemed to them next door to complete surrender. As a theologian, he held the cautiously progressive views which might be expected from a disciple of Ewald. His dissertation on prophecy may still be read with instruction. But it is as an historical scholar and a philologist that he will be remembered. Some of his best work was contributed to the Transactions of the Berlin Academy; and this, we can hardly doubt, will be brought together by the piety of friends. As a professor he never ceased to gather large classes. His Seminar gave many a good scholar the training to which he owes a successful career.

T. K. C.

FINE ART.

THE COINS OF THE MOGUL EMPERORS OF INDIA.*

THE work before us is the first instalment of a Catalogue of the coins collected by Mr. C. J. Rodgers (formerly principal of the Christian Vernacular Education College at Amritsar), and purchased by the Panjab Government for the Lahor Museum. The present portion of the work deals with the coins of the Suri and Mogul kings, between the years 1525 and 1857, when the last puppet emperor passed from a throne to a life-long exile, amid the throes of a convulsion which swept over the fairest parts of Hindostan. The work contains 272 pages, besides a preface of 18 pages filled with matter of the greatest interest, wherein the experience of over a quarter of a century is concisely recorded. It finishes with an alphabetical list of mints of the kings treated of, an index to the gold, silver, and copper coins of thirty-three kings, and a plate of mint marks on Mogul coins.

Although the work is not comparable, as regards costly illustration, with the Catalogues of the British Museum, yet, so far as the coins whereof it treats are concerned, it will be found to supplement and extend very largely our knowledge of that series. In gold coins (as is natural) the accumulated treasures of the British Museum far exceed the acquisitions of our author; but in silver and copper coins there are many rarities now made known for the first time. Take, for example, the first four Mogul emperors. Of Baber, the British Museum possesses 7 silver coins; of Humayun, 2 gold and 12 silver; of Akbar, 62 gold, 179 silver, and 39 copper; of Jehangir, 76 gold, 168 silver, and 2 copper. Total: gold, 140; silver, 366; and copper, 41. In the collection of Mr. Rodgers we find, of Baber, 32 silver and 6 copper coins; of Humayun, 2 gold, 22 silver, and 62 copper; of Akbar, gold, 13; 296 silver; and 284 copper; of Jehangir, 20 gold, 191 silver, 22 copper. Total: gold, 33; silver, 541; copper, 374. While, therefore, the British Museum possesses but 547 coins of the four above-named emperors, the collection recently acquired for the capital of the Panjab numbers 948 coins, and those collected by the energy of one man, fettered as he was by limited means and but scanty time to devote to his voluntary labours. In mint towns the richness of the Lahore collection is remarkable, some fifty mints of the above four Emperors being represented, while the British Museum can display only about thirty (Catalogue of 1892). Two conclusions are therefore forced on us, by the comparison of this Catalogue of the Lahore collection with that of the British Museum. Firstly, that the national collection is very deficient in coins which it should possess of our great dependency; and, secondly, in view of the active melting down of old coins now going on, that no time should be lost in taking steps to secure some of the fast vanishing numismatic records for the public collections of England, and certainly for those of India, to whose people we stand in a fiduciary position.

* Calcutta: printed by order of the Panjab Government.

There are scientific surveys in plenty doing good work; but a Government numismatist, for bringing together the scattered threads of the dynastic history of India as recorded in its coins for 3000 years, has yet to be appointed. It is an appointment which is urgently called for, if the story of the Sibylline Books is not to be repeated before our eyes, and the appointment should be held by a gentleman unfettered with other pursuits.

In view of the financial poverty of the Indian Government, it might not be desirable to fix the salary of the above official at more than 500 or 600 rupees a month, with the usual travelling allowance, to enable him to visit all parts of the country; and a monthly allowance (which should be cumulative) to cover the purchase of valuable coins which may be found in the Bazars. Were this at once done, and Mr. Rodgers offered the appointment (which he has so long gratuitously to some extent supplied the want of), the reproach of indifference to the claims of a branch of investigation, which the Government alone can adequately deal with, would be wiped away, and some safeguard provided that the irreparable losses through past neglect should not continue in the future. With coins, as with the Fleece of Gold, it may equally be said

οὐ δέ τι κῶας
αὐτόματον δῶσει τις ἑλάν θεός εὐχαιρόμεναι.
(Apoll. Rhod. Argonautica, I. 870).
W. THEOBALD.

OBITUARY.

SIR A. HENRY LAYARD.

SIR HENRY LAYARD, the discoverer of Nineveh, died in London, on July 5, in the seventy-eighth year of his age.

His father was a member of the Ceylon civil service (in which his brother also rose to distinction), and his grandfather was Dean of Bristol. The family, however, was of Huguenot origin, and Sir Henry was proud to be the first president of the Huguenot Society. He was born in Paris, and educated in Italy, which country he always regarded as a second home. When little more than twenty years of age, he set off on his travels to the East, the account of which is contained in his latest book—Early Adventures in Persia, Susiana, and Babylonia: including a residence among the Bakhtiyari and other wild tribes before the discovery of Nineveh (1887). It was from Lord Stratford de Redcliffe that he received both encouragement and pecuniary means to excavate the site of Birs Nimrud, near Mosul, in 1845. His discovery of the famous Winged Bulls arrested public attention to an extent that has been granted to no subsequent archaeologist. A second expedition, under the auspices of the Trustees of the British Museum, revealed the library of Sardanapalus. The results were published in two portfolios of 171 plates (1848-53), under the title of Monuments of Nineveh; and also in a succession of popular volumes. Oxford was the first to recognise his services to learning by conferring upon him the degree of D.C.L. at the Commemoration of 1848; and seven years later he was elected Lord Rector of the University of Aberdeen.

Layard now entered upon a fresh career as Radical politician and Turcophile diplomatist, which it is not necessary to follow here. But we must not pass over his devotion to Italian art, which occupied the later years of his life. Since 1868 he has been one of the most active trustees of the National Gallery; and he had formed, in his palazzo at Venice, a choice collection of pictures of the schools of Northern Italy, under the guidance of his friend, the late Signor Morelli. In 1868, he wrote, for the Arundel Society, an account of the Brancacci Chapel at Florence, and of the painters Masolino, Masaccio, and Filippino Lippi. In 1887, when he was already seventy years of age, he undertook single-handed a revision of Kugler's Handbook of Painting, in the light of the most recent discoveries; and yet more recently he wrote a preface to the English translation of Morelli's Italian Painters. All the books we have mentioned were published by the house of John Murray; and it is interesting to know that the very last literary work on which he was engaged was to describe the picture galleries for a new edition of Murray's Handbook to Rome.

NOTES ON ART AND ARCHAEOLOGY.

WE hear from Egypt that M. de Morgan's latest excavations at Saqqarah have been attended with the most unexpected success. He has discovered a buried fleet of the old Empire, with masts, sails, and rigging complete. One of the ships measures thirty-five metres in length.

M. NAVILLE, the president of the Oriental Congress to be held at Geneva during September, has arrived in England for a short visit. One of his objects is to see through the press a volume that he is preparing for the Egypt Exploration Fund.

WE are glad to learn that Lord Rosebery has made a grant of £200, from the Royal Bounty Fund, to the British School at Athens.

THERE is now open, at the Hanover Gallery, New Bond-street, an exhibition of the original pictures that have been reproduced in the pages of the Pall Mall Magazine.

THE two following pictures were bought for the National Gallery at the Adrian Hope sale:—Gerrit Berkheyden, "A View in Haarlem"; Jan Steen, "A Scene on a Terrace, with Figures."

THE Cambrian Archaeological Association have published (Charles J. Clark) a very well-written and well-illustrated pamphlet, describing the chief places of interest that will be visited next week in the course of their joint meeting with the Royal Society of Antiquaries of Ireland. Lord Penrhyn is to deliver his inaugural address as president, at Penrhyn Castle, on the afternoon of Tuesday.

MR. DAVID NUTT is the publisher in this country of a book on Scarabs, by Mr. Isaac Myer, of New York. It deals with the history, manufacture, and religious symbolism of the scarabeus in Ancient Egypt, Phoenicia, Sardinia, Etruria, &c.

A MEDAL has been struck by order of the Corporation in commemoration of the visit to Guildhall of the King and Queen of Denmark. On the obverse are busts of the King and Queen. On the reverse is displayed a figure representing the City of London, holding in her right hand the City's arms and in her left hand a standard, from the head of which flies a streamer bearing the word, "Welcome Christian IX. to London." The arms of the King with the Danish royal crown, an impression of the casket in which the address was presented, and the date of his Majesty's visit (July 8, 1893) are also displayed in bold relief.

SIGNOR ULRICO HOEPLI, of Milan, has now ready for issue to subscribers the first part of the monumental facsimile edition of the Codex Atlanticus of Leonardo da Vinci, which he is publishing on behalf of the Accademia dei Lincei. The whole work will consist of about thirty-five parts, each containing forty heliotype plates, reproducing the drawings and text of this celebrated MS., together with a transcription of the text in the original orthography, and also a modernised form of it, made by Dr. Giovanni Piumati. Ultimately, there will be added a vocabulary, giving the meaning of obsolete words. The issue is limited to 280 copies, at the subscription price of £48; and it is not expected that the entire work will be completed before the end of the century. It is unnecessary to dwell upon the supreme importance of this MS., not only as an autobiographical document, but also for the history of science and art during the Renaissance. But it is a pleasure to draw attention to the admirable manner in which the facsimile has been executed, and to the superb character of the print and paper.

MUSIC.

OPERA AT DRURY LANE.

"FIDELIO" and "Der Freischütz" have been produced during the past week: the former on Saturday, the latter on Tuesday evening. Beethoven's work is now seldom heard; and with exception of a Royal College performance, it is ten years since Weber's masterpiece has been given. A few modern operas, such as "Faust," "Carmen," "Cavalleria," attract the public, but in German opera Wagner now rules the stage. It is pretty safe to say that, without Weber and Beethoven, we should have had no "Meistersinger," no "Tristan," no "Ring"; but the public does not think about this: the latest development alone interests it. Drury Lane, it is true, was well filled on both evenings; but many had taken seats for the series of operas, and the audience certainly represented a special, not the general public. True admirers of Wagner hold in high respect and even affection the two works which stirred Wagner to still mightier deeds. And Wagner, by his art theories and his music-dramas, has actually revealed to us the greatness of "Fidelio" and "Freischütz." He has shown us how Beethoven and Weber tried reformation, when only revolution was of any real use. We can now see how they fought against the fetters of opera, and we marvel at the results they achieved. There are many passages in their operas which fill us with astonishment; and if their composers could have profited by their struggles and experience, and recommenced their life's labours, Wagner would have had two very powerful rivals. But the public does not reason, does not read between the lines: the old-fashioned forms spoil for them, to some extent, the very excellences of these early operas. And then, again, there is another reason why these works do not attract the public. The stories are not sensational enough for the present day: everything now must be highly spiced.

The performance of "Fidelio" on Saturday was on the whole satisfactory. Frau Klafsky was extremely fine as "Leonore," and Herr Alvary acted well, but his voice again showed signs of fatigue: besides, the part is not well suited to him. Fr. Gelber was a good Marcelline, and Herr Wiegand a good Rocco. The "Leonore" Overture was played before the Finale of the second act; usually it is given between the first and second acts. From a dramatic point of view, the only proper place for it is at the beginning of the opera, as Beethoven originally intended. It was played with much spirit under the direction of Herr Lohse.

On Tuesday Frau Klafsky was most successful in the rôle of Agathe. Frä. Elise Kutscherra sang well as Annchen, but was somewhat fussy in her acting. Herr Alvary, as Max, was again out of order; but for that he deserves sympathy, and after his grand impersonations in "Walküre" and "Siegfried" much must be forgiven him. The parts of Kaspar, Kilian, and the Hermit were well rendered by Herr Wiegand, Mr. Bispham, and Herr Rodemund. Herr Lohse had his orchestra under good control.

J. S. SHEDLOCK.

RECENT CONCERTS.

MR. ANDREW BLACK gave a highly successful concert at St. James's Hall last Thursday week. He sang Henschel's fine Ballad "Jung Dieterich" with much vigour and intelligence: he has a fine voice, and knows how to use it. His second song was "Gia la Luna." Miss Ella Russell, Miss Esther Palliser, Mlle. Antoinette Trebelli, Miss Hilda Wilson, MM. Ben Davies, Norman Salmond, Barton McGuckin, and many other well-known singers and instrumentalists added, by their performances, to the enjoyment of the afternoon. A special feature of the programme was the new, clever, and amusing dialogue by Leon Gozlan, in which Mme. Sarah Bernhardt and M. Guity took part.

Another attractive concert was the one given by Mrs. Henschel on Friday afternoon in the same hall. The whole programme was devoted to the compositions of her husband, who himself sang and accompanied. Both artists were in excellent voice, and gave all possible satisfaction.

Mr. Henschel's music is justly admired: as a song composer he ranks high. He displays skill, feeling, and individuality, though, from time to time, he reveals his musical idols.

Mme. Adelina Patti sang at Messrs. Harrison's concert at the Albert Hall on Saturday afternoon. Of late it has been difficult to say anything new about this distinguished vocalist. But now she has taken to Wagner; and her pure and unaffected rendering of "Elizabeth's Prayer" from "Tannhäuser" achieved a wonderful and well-deserved success. Better late than never; and it is to be hoped that she will select other excerpts from Wagner's operas, and, possibly, one day impersonate one of the master's heroines. On the stage she would be sure to do full justice to herself, and would thus make amende honorable to the master whom—at any rate in public—she has so long neglected.

A matinée was given at Queen's Hall, on Monday, in aid of the Sun fund for the relief of the Achill Islanders. The actors, singers, and players who volunteered their services were legion; and at the head of the list was Mme. Sarah Bernhardt, who, in the course of the past week, has already appeared twice at concerts given for charitable purposes. The hall was packed, the prodigious entertainment was a brilliant success, and the fund must have been considerably increased thereby.

M. Eduard Zeldenrust gave a pianoforte recital in the large Queen's Hall on Monday evening. His rendering of the Bach-Liszt Fantasia and Fugue in G minor showed that his technique was excellent. His reading of Schubert's Impromptu in B flat, Op. 142, No. 3, was neat, though peculiar in the matter of tempi. Of Beethoven's Sonata in D minor the first movement was the best; the Largo lacked true pathos, and the Allegretto was played in a spasmodic manner. Judging from the pianist's performance of his "Humoresque," he is more satisfactory as a virtuoso than as an exponent of the classical masters.

The third and last of the Wolff Musical Union concerts, after two unavoidable postponements, took place at St. James's Hall on Wednesday afternoon. The programme opened with Rubinstein's Quintet for piano, flute, clarinet, horn, and bassoon (Op. 55), a work of unequal merit. The slow movement has a dignified theme, and it is, indeed, the best section of the work. The composer obtains from his instruments fine effects of colour. The performance, by MM. Diémer, Taffanel, Turban, Reine, and Letellier, was admirable. This was followed by a bright, clever suite for piano and flute (Op. 34) by M. Widor, which received full justice at the hands of MM. Diémer and Taffanel. The programme included Mozart's beautiful clarinet Trio, and Beethoven's seldom heard Serenade (Op. 25). M. Wolff may congratulate himself on the success of his first season. His programmes might be made more interesting; but in the matter of performances he has scored a success, and the artists who have appeared will receive a hearty welcome when they next pay us a visit.

Messrs. S. & P. Erard opened their new premises on Wednesday afternoon. There was a very large gathering of notabilities; and the comfortable concert hall was crammed to hear M. Paderewski, who played Beethoven's Sonata in C (Op. 53), some Chopin solos, and other pieces. He was, naturally, received with tremendous enthusiasm. This new hall—we should judge—seats about 500 persons, and for recital purposes will be found most convenient.

SOUTH-WEST LONDON POLYTECHNIC.

PRINCIPAL REQUIRED, to undertake direction of whole Educational Work, the Higher Teaching in at least one Department of Science, and Undermasterings of Day Schools.

Salary, from 1st April, 1894, to be £200 per annum. Meanwhile will be expected to advise Governing Body as to equipment, &c., and occasionally visit building in course of erection, from time of appointment, for an honorarium of £100.

Applications to be sent in not later than 28th inst. Forms of application and further details as to duties to be obtained from

P. P. MURRAY,

Secretary to the Governing Body.

47, Duke Street, St. James's, S.W.

THE WELSH INTERMEDIATE EDUCATION ACT.

CARDIFF SCHEME.

The Governors are prepared to receive APPLICATIONS for the post of HEAD MISTRESS of the GIRLS' INTERMEDIATE SCHOOL under the above Scheme.

The Scheme provides for a fixed yearly stipend of £150, and a Capitation Grant. When the total remuneration exceeds £200 per annum, it may be subject to revision.

Intending applicants may obtain particulars of the appointment from the Clerk to the Governors, who will also supply copies of the Scheme.

Applications, accompanied by not less than three Testimonials, and marked on cover "Head Mistress," must be in the hands of the undersigned not later than 12 noon on Monday, the 30th instant.

By order of the Governors,

DAVID SHEPHERD, Clerk.

1, Frederick Street, Cardiff, July 10th, 1894.

VICTORIA INSTITUTE.—ANNUAL MEETING AND ADDRESS, at half-past 4 o'clock, on MONDAY, JULY 16th.

Sir GEORGE STOKES, Bart., and many leading Members will speak. Admission, by Member's cards, apply to the SECRETARY, 8, Adelphi Terrace, W.C.

BRITISH MUSEUM.—ASSYRIAN SCULPTURES.

Statuettes of Sennacherib, Assurbanipal, and his Queen. Also reduced facsimiles of the unique and beautiful "Garden Scene," Winged Human-headed Lion and Bull, &c. Modelled from the famous Nineveh Sculptures, and made in Porcelain (parian).

"Interesting and faithful reproductions."—Athenæum, Oct. 7, 1893.

Descriptive Prospectus on application to ALFRED JARVIS (Sole Publisher), 43, Willes Road, London, N.W.

DR. KLEIN has now added to the CIVIL SERVICE INSTITUTE, at 110, Cannon-street, E.C., a REGISTRATION BUREAU for the Clerical and Scholastic Professions.

Principals of Schools at Home and Abroad, Rectors, Vicars, and Assistant Teachers, may confidently rely upon the Doctor's long and varied experience in professional matters being placed promptly at their disposal.

EDUCATION.—Particulars as to the best

University or Army Tutors, and Schools for Boys or Girls, at home or abroad, may be obtained (free of charge) by sending a statement of requirements to R. J. BEYRON, M.A., 8, Lancaster Place, Strand.

CHAPMAN & HALL'S NEW BOOKS.

MR. MEREDITH'S NEW NOVEL.

LORD ORMONT AND HIS AMINTA.

By GEORGE MEREDITH. 3 vols. crown 8vo.

ROBERT C. LESLIE.

A WATERBIOGRAPHY.

By ROBERT C. LESLIE.

Author of "A Sea Painter's Log," "Old Sea Wings, Ways, and Words," &c.

With Illustrations by the Author. Demy 8vo, 7s. 6d.

[This Day.]

W. S. LILLY.

THE CLAIMS OF CHRISTIANITY. By W. S. Lilly. Demy 8vo, 12s.

DR. J. RITZEMA BOS.

AGRICULTURAL ZOOLOGY. By Dr. J. Ritzema Bos. Translated by Professor J. R. AINSWORTH DAVIS, B.A., F.C.P.

With a Preface by Miss ORMERON. Containing 149 Illustrations, crown 8vo, 6s.

[Ready.]

CHAPMAN & HALL, Limited, London.

PALL MALL.—Seven Works by the late Dante Gabriel Rossetti, by direction of the executor of Mrs. W. M. Rossetti.

MESSRS. FOSTER respectfully announce for SALE by AUCTION, at the GALLERY, 54, PALL MALL, on WEDNESDAY, the 25th JULY, finished studies or replicas of the following celebrated WORKS:—The Lady of Pity, 45 by 24; Sibylla Palmifera, 39 by 30; Portrait of Mrs. Morris, 35 by 30; Lady Lilith, 37 by 32; Found, 38 by 31, and a large original work in crayons, Matrona Romana. May be viewed two days prior to the Auction, when Catalogues may be had.—54, Pall Mall.

PALL MALL.—Four Statuary Marble Figures and Five Busts by the late Marshall Wood.

MESSRS. FOSTER respectfully announce

they will include in the above AUCTION the following important WORKS by the late MARSHALL WOOD:—The Song of the Shirt, life size, Musidora (in two sizes), Aphrodite, and bust of H.M. the Queen, and H.R.H. the Prince of Wales, the late Sir John Macdonald, Psyche and Prosperpine. May be viewed two days prior to the Auction.—54, Pall Mall.

Save your Complexion and Save your Money.

A PENNY A WEEK

IS THE COST OF USING

PREMIER VINOLIA SOAP.

4d, a Tablet.

To H.R.H. the PRINCE of WALES.

BRAND & CO.'S A1 SAUCE,
SOUPS, PRESERVED PROVISIONS
and
POTTED MEATS, and YORK and GAME
PIES. Also,
ESSENCE of BEEF, BEEF TEA,
TURTLE SOUP, and JELLY, and other
SPECIALITIES for INVALIDS.

CAUTION—BEWARE of IMITATIONS.

SOLE ADDRESS—
11, LITTLE STANHOPE STREET,
MAYFAIR, W.

NEW WORK BY DR. MACLAREN.

Crown 8vo, cloth boards, price 5s., post free.

THE WEARIED CHRIST, and other
Sermons. By Rev. ALEXANDER MACLAREN, D.D.

London: ALEXANDER & SHEPHERD, Fumival Street, E.C.

WALTER SCOTT'S NEW BOOKS.

Third Edition, Twentieth Thousand, crown 8vo, 6s.

ESTHER WATERS: a Novel.

By GEORGE MOORE.

OTHER NOVELS BY GEORGE MOORE.

Crown 8vo, cloth, 3s. 6d. each.

A DRAMA in MUSLIN. Seventh Edition.

A MODERN LOVER. New Edition.

A MUMMER'S WIFE. Twentieth Edition.

VAIN FORTUNE. 6s. With Illustrations by Maurice Greiffenhagen. A few Large-Paper Copies at One Guinea

Second Edition, crown 8vo, cloth, 6s.

MODERN PAINTING. By GEO. MOORE.

"Of the very few books on art that painters and critics should on no account leave unread this is surely one."—Studio."His book is one of the best books about pictures that have come into our hands for some years."—St. James's Gazette."A more original, better informed, more suggestive, and, let us add, a more amusing work of art of to-day, we have never read than this volume."—Glasgow Herald.

THE CANTERBURY POETS.

Square 8vo, uncut edges, 1s.; cloth, red edges, 1s.; Special Edition, with Photogravure Frontispiece, 2s.

POEMS and LYRICS of NATURE.

Edited by Mrs. E. WINGATE RINDER.

This volume contains Contributions by

ARTHUR CHRISTOPHER BENSON, STOFFORD BROOKE, ROBT. BUCHANAN, S. R. CROCKETT, JOHN DAVIDSON, LORD DE TABLEY, NORMAN GALE, MANMOHAN GHOSH, JOHN GRAY, LIONEL JOHNSON, ANDREW LANG, RICHARD LE GALLIENNE, GEORGE MAC DONALD, ALICE MEYNELL, WILLIAM MORRIS, CONVENTRY PATMORE, BENNET RILEY, A. MARY F. ROBINSON, CHRISTINA ROSSETTI, ALGERNON CHAS. SWINBURNE, ARTHUR SYMONS, FRANCIS THOMPSON, KATHERINE TYNAN, WILLIAM WATSON, THEODORE WATTS, OSCAR WILDE, W. B. YEATS, &c.

CONTEMPORARY SCIENCE SERIES.

RECENT VOLUMES.

Crown 8vo, cloth, 6s.

MAN and WOMAN: a Study of Human

Secondary Sexual Characters. By HAVELOCK ELLIS, Author of "The Criminal," "The Nationalisation of Health," &c. With numerous Illustrations.

"This striking and important volume... should place Mr. Havelock Ellis in the front rank of scientific thinkers of the time."—Westminster Review.

Crown 8vo, cloth, 3s. 6d., with numerous Diagrams.

THE EVOLUTION of MODERN

CAPITALISM: a Study of Machine Production. By JOHN A. HOBSON, M.A.

Crown 8vo, half-antique, paper boards, 2s. 6d.

THE THEATRICAL "WORLD" for 1893. By WILLIAM ARCHER.

"That the literary drama dealing with social problems made great advance during 1893 is universally admitted, but if proof were wanted, nothing could be more conclusive than Mr. Archer's series of thoughtful and pointed articles."—Daily Chronicle.

Ready, crown 8vo, cloth, 3s. 6d.

DRAMATIC ESSAYS by LEIGH

HUNT. Selected and Edited with Notes and Introduction, by WILLIAM ARCHER and ROBERT W. LOWE. With an Engraved Portrait of Leigh Hunt as Frontispiece.

"All students of drama and lovers of 'the play' will welcome the admirably produced volume of 'Dramatic Essays of Leigh Hunt,' selected and edited by Mr. Archer and Mr. Lowe, with notes and an extremely interesting introduction written by Mr. Archer."—World.

COUNT TOLSTOI'S LATEST WORK.

(AUTHORISED TRANSLATION.)

Cheaper Edition, 2s. 6d.

THE KINGDOM of GOD is WITHIN

YOU; or, Christianity not as a Mystical Doctrine, but as a New Life-Conception. By Count LEO TOLSTOI. Translated from the original Russian MS. by A. DELANO.

Now ready, crown 8vo, paper cover, 1s.; cloth, 2s.

FROM BONDAGE to BROTHER-

HOOD: a Message to the Workers. By J. C. KENWORTHY, Author of "The Anatomy of Misery," &c.

"The concurrent doctrine of a brotherhood in a sense of industrial co-operation has in it, as here set forth, much that will recommend it to the attention of thinking men; and Mr. Kenworthy's essays will be welcome to many as a contribution to the diffusion of a sound principle."—Scotsman.

A NEW ISSUE of the WORKS of NATHANIEL HAWTHORNE

In 12 vols., crown 8vo, antique paper, with Frontispieces in Photogravure, the Cover designed by Walter Crane, 2s. 6d. per vol.

LATEST VOLUME.

MOSSER from an OLD MANSE.

With Frontispiece by T. Eyre Macklin.

GUIDE AND HAND BOOKS.

Fourth and Revised Edition, Illustrated, 3s. 6d., cloth.

THE LAND of the VIKINGS: a Popular Guide to Norway. By C. JURGENSEN. Containing Maps, Skeleton Routes, Tables, and all information useful to Tourist.

COMPACT and PRACTICAL. In limp cloth, for the pocket, 1s. each.

THE EUROPEAN CONVERSATION

BOOKS.

FRENCH. [SPANISH.] [ITALIAN.] [GERMAN.] [NORWEGIAN.]

Contents arranged in direct and immediate reference. Hints given which will be found valuable to those unaccustomed to foreign travel.

With 4 Maps, crown 8vo, 574 pages, strongly bound in limp cloth, 5s.

NEW COMPREHENSIVE GUIDE to

the COUNTY of NORTHUMBERLAND. By W. W. TOMLINSON

With Maps, crown 8vo, strongly bound in limp cloth, 7s. 6d.

NEW COMPREHENSIVE GUIDE to the COUNTY of DURHAM. By J. K. BOYLE, F.S.A.

LONDON: WALTER SCOTT, LIMITED,

24, WARWICK LANE, PATERNOSTER ROW.

NOW READY.

The JULY NUMBER of

THE STRAND MAGAZINE

(EDITED BY GEORGE NEWNES),

Commencing the Eighth Volume, contains the following Articles and Stories:—

THE LORD of CHÂTEAU NOIR. By A. CONAN DOYLE.

MARKSMANSHIP. By GILBERT GUERDON.

THE DUKE of SAXE-COBURG'S PALACES. By MARY SPENCER-WARREN.

ANNETTE'S MIDNIGHT RUN. Written and Illustrated by BECKLES WILLSON.

THE HANDWRITING of MR. GLADSTONE. By J. HOLT SCHOOLING. With Facsimiles.

THE KHEDIVE of EGYPT. By STUART CUMBERLAND.

THE WHITE MOUSE. A Story for Children. From the French of Hégésippe Moreau.

MARTIN BEWITT, INVESTIGATOR.—V. The Quinton Jewel Affair. By ARTHUR MORRISON.

PORTRAITS of CELEBRITIES at DIFFERENT TIMES of THEIR LIVES. Sir Isaac Pitman, Fridtjof Nansen, P. D. Miss Annie Albu, The Rt. Hon. Henry H. Fowler, M.P., P.C., The Duke of Saxe-Coburg-Gotha.

FROM BEHIND THE SPEAKER'S CHAIR.—XVI. By HENRY W. LUCY.

ZIG-ZAGS at the ZOO.—XXV. Zig-Zag Bovine. By ARTHUR MORRISON.

BEAUTIES: Children.

THE QUEER SIDE of THINGS. 1. The Man with a Malady. By J. F. SULLIVAN. 2. Women Volunteers. By C. R. HOLLAND.

112 pages, with 183 Illustrations. Price 6d., post free, 9d.

ALSO READY.

THE PICTURE MAGAZINE

For JULY,

Beginning a NEW VOLUME, contains

PORTRAITS of 39 POPULAR PREACHERS

And Reproductions of 6 Fine Art Photographs,

By Mr. SHAPUR N. BHEHDWAR.

With numerous other Illustrations. Price 6d., post free 8d.

GEORGE NEWNES, LTD., LONDON, W.O.

THE EDINBURGH REVIEW.

No. 369, will be published on JULY 17.

CONTENTS.

I. LIVES of DR. PUSEY and DEAN STANLEY.

II. OLD DORSET.

III. MEMOIRS of an INTERNUCIO.

IV. THE VERDICT of the MONUMENTS.

V. MARCELLA.

VI. DEATH in CLASSICAL ANTIQUITY.

VII. SECRET NEGOTIATIONS of MARLBOROUGH and BERWICK.

VIII. BONNEY'S STORY of OUR PLANET.

IX. THE ARABIAN HORSE.

X. THE LETTERS of HARRIET, COUNTESS GRANVILLE

XI. THE MINISTRY of the MASSES.

London: LONGMANS, GREEN & Co.

NOW READY, price 2s. 6d. net.

A JUNE ROMANCE.

By NORMAN GALE.

NEW EDITION, with specially designed Title-Page.

London: WHITTAKER & Co.

Rugby: GEORGE E. OVER; and all Booksellers.

IMPORTANT.—PRINTING AND PUBLISHING

NEWSPAPERS, MAGAZINES, BOOKS,

&c.—KING, SELL & RAITON, Limited, high-class Printers and Publishers, 12, Gough Square, 4, Bolt Court, Fleet Street, E.C., have specially-built Rotary and other fast Machines for printing illustrated or other Journals, and specially-built Machines for fast folding, and covering 16 or 32 page Journals at one operation.

Facilities upon the premises for Editorial Offices, free. Advertising and Publishing Departments conducted.

Telephone 5759. Telegraph, "Africanism, London."

ESTABLISHED 1851.

BIRKBECK BANK,

Southampton Buildings, Chancery Lane, London.

TWO-AND-A-HALF PER CENT. INTEREST allowed on DEPOSITS repayable on demand.

TWO per CENT. on CURRENT ACCOUNTS, on the minimum monthly balances, when not drawn below £100.

STOCKS, SHARES, and ANNUITIES purchased and sold.

SAVINGS DEPARTMENT.

For the encouragement of Thrift the Bank receives small sums on deposit, and allows interest monthly on each completed £1.

BIRKBECK BUILDING SOCIETY.

HOW TO PURCHASE A HOUSE

FOR TWO GUINEAS PER MONTH.

BIRKBECK FREEHOLD LAND SOCIETY.

HOW TO PURCHASE A PLOT OF LAND

FOR FIVE SHILLINGS PER MONTH.

The BIRKBECK ALMANACK, with full particulars, post free.

FRANCIS RAVENSCROFT, Manager.

MUDIE'S

SELECT

LIBRARY.

For the CIRCULATION and SALE of all the BEST ENGLISH, FRENCH, GERMAN, ITALIAN, and SPANISH BOOKS.

TOWN SUBSCRIPTIONS from One Guinea per annum.

LONDON BOOK SOCIETY (for Weekly Exchange of Books at the Houses of Subscribers) from Two Guineas per annum.

COUNTRY SUBSCRIPTIONS from Two Guineas per annum.

N.B.—Two or three friends may unite in One Subscription and thus lessen the cost of carriage.

LIBRARY BOXES GRATIS.

Town and Village Clubs supplied on Liberal Terms.

Prospectuses and Monthly Lists of Books gratis and post free.

SALE DEPARTMENT.

All the leading Books of the Past Seasons are on Sale, second-hand at greatly Reduced Prices.

LISTS GRATIS AND POST FREE.

MUDIE'S MANCHESTER LIBRARY,

10 to 12, BARTON ARCADE, MANCHESTER,

Is in daily communication with this Library.

MUDIE'S SELECT LIBRARY, Limited,

30 to 34, NEW OXFORD STREET, LONDON;

241, Brompton Road, S.W.; and 48, Queen Victoria St., E.C.

THE

AUTOTYPE COMPANY

Has the honour to announce the Publication of

NINETY-THREE DRAWINGS

BY

ALBERT DURER,

Reproduced in Facsimile from Originals in the British Museum, and accompanied by Descriptive Text by

SIDNEY COLVIN, M.A.,

Keeper of Prints and Drawings, British Museum.

"The British Museum collection, reproduced in this volume, is," says Professor Colvin, "a fairly complete and representative survey of the several phases of Durer's activity as a draughtsman and sketcher during all periods of his career."

The Volume is Imperial folio, half-morocco, Plates Linen-Guarded and Interleaved. Edition 100 Copies.

Price Six Guineas.

THE AUTOTYPE FINE-ART CATALOGUE

(New Edition), of 184 pages, with Illustrated Supplement, containing 68 Miniature Photographs of notable Autotypes, post free, ONE SHILLING.

"AUTOTYPE: a Decorative and Educational Art."

NEW PAMPHLET, FREE ON APPLICATION.

THE AUTOTYPE COMPANY,

74, New Oxford Street, London,

MESSRS. J. C. DRUMMOND & CO.,

ART REPRODUCERS,

14, HENRIETTA STREET, COVENT GARDEN, W.C.

Are the sole representatives in Great Britain of

HERR HANFSTAENGL, of Munich,

the well-known Artist in PHOTOGRAPHY, now patronised by the leading London Art Publishing Firms. A large Collection of important Plates always on view.

Process Blocks for the purpose of Ordinary Book Illustrations.

Messrs. DRUMMOND & CO. supply the cheapest and best Processes in the market, which are specially adapted to meet the wants of Antiquarians, Archaeologists, and those engaged in the investigation and publication of Parochial and Diocesan Records.

J. C. DRUMMOND & CO. invite attention to their

Improved Rapid Photo-Mechanical Process

For the Reproduction of Works of Art, Original MSS., Designs, Lace Manufactures, Photographs, Views, Book Illustrations, Artistic Advertisements, Catalogues, &c., &c., at a moderate cost.

Specimens and price list on application.

Offices: 14, HENRIETTA STREET COVENT GARDEN, LONDON.

THE ACADEMY.

A WEEKLY REVIEW OF LITERATURE, SCIENCE, AND ART.

No. 1159.
[New Issue.]

SATURDAY, JULY 21, 1894.

PRICE 3d.
[Registered as a Newspaper.]

TABLE OF CONTENTS

| | PAGE |
|--|------|
| SPENSER WILKINSON'S PLEA FOR A NATIONAL POLICY, by Judge O'CONNOR MORRIS | 41 |
| CANTON'S THE INVISIBLE PLAYMATE, by J. A. NOBLE | 42 |
| JESTIN WINSOR'S HISTORY OF GEOGRAPHICAL DISCOVERY IN NORTH AMERICA, by E. J. PAYNE | 43 |
| SOME GERMAN WORKS ON SHAKSPEARE, by Prof. HERFORD | 44 |
| NEW NOVELS, by GEORGE COTTERELL | 45 |
| TWO TRANSLATIONS FROM THE GREEK | 47 |
| SOME ECONOMICAL BOOKS | 47 |
| NOTES AND NEWS | 48 |
| UNIVERSITY JOTTINGS | 49 |
| ORIGINAL VERSE: "AT THE MOROUE," by ARTHUR SYMONS | 49 |
| MAGAZINES AND REVIEWS | 49 |
| SELECTED FOREIGN BOOKS | 49 |
| CORRESPONDENCE— | |
| Old-Irish Glosses on the First Georgic, by Whitley Stokes; "Dinner," by Dr. F. Chance | 50 |
| RECENT BOOKS ON GEOMETRY, by J. S. MACKAY | 52 |
| LITERARY WORK IN EGYPT | 52 |
| SCIENCE NOTES | 52 |
| PHILOLOGY NOTES | 53 |
| REPORTS OF SOCIETIES | 53 |
| BERNARD'S VENETIAN PAINTERS OF THE RENAISSANCE, by Vernon Lee | 53 |
| THE WORKS OF MR. ROUSSEL, by F. W. | 54 |
| CORRESPONDENCE— | |
| Earthworks on the Yorkshire Wolds, by Canon Isaac Taylor; Assyrian Discoveries, by H. Rassam | 54 |
| NOTES ON ART AND ARCHAEOLOGY | 55 |
| RECENT CONCERTS, by J. S. SHEDDOCK | 55 |

TO INVALIDS.—A LIST OF MEDICAL MEN in all parts, willing to RECEIVE RESIDENT PATIENTS, giving full particulars and terms, sent gratis. The list includes private asylums, &c.; schools also recommended.—Address Mr. O. B. STOCKER, 8, Lancaster Place, Strand, W.C.

POPULAR WRITERS OF FICTION wishing to secure the most extensive COPYRIGHTED PUBLICATION obtainable in United States, Canada, and elsewhere, should communicate with P. P. COLLIER, 321, West Thirteenth Street, New York City.

TYPE-WRITING.

AUTHORS, PUBLISHERS, &c.—Scientific, Literary, and Medical MSS. carefully and promptly typewritten by RAYNE & CO., 40, Norfolk Street, Strand, W.C. Private room for dictation. Highest references. Translations.

THE FLEET STREET TYPEWRITERS
115, FLEET STREET, E.C.
Lowest Charges. Highest Speed.
Every kind of Typewriting Work Done.
Price List—115, Fleet Street, London.

TYPE-WRITERS.—SECOND-HAND MACHINES, equal to new. FOR SALE, EXCHANGE, or LENT on HIRE. Machines sold by instalments on Terms to suit purchasers. Use of Machine taught free to hirers or purchasers. Remingtons, Yosts, Hammonds, Caligraphs, Barlocks, Etc., &c., from £8. MS. Copied with accuracy and despatch at lowest rates. Highest references. Illustrated Catalogue free.—N. TAYLOR, Manager, National Type-Writer Exchange, 74, Chancery Lane, London (Holborn end).

CATALOGUES

FOREIGN BOOKS and PERIODICALS promptly supplied on moderate terms. CATALOGUES on application. DULAU & CO., 37, SOHO SQUARE.

BAEDEKER'S & BADDELEY'S TOURISTS' GUIDE BOOKS. New fully detailed Catalogue sent post free on application. DULAU & CO., 37, SOHO SQUARE, LONDON, W.

FOREIGN BOOKS AT FOREIGN PRICES.

WILLIAMS & NORGATE, Importers of Foreign Books,
-14, HENRIETTA STREET, COVENT GARDEN,
AND
20, SOUTH FREDERICK STREET, EDINBURGH.
CATALOGUES post free on application.

GOOD BOOKS.—NEW CATALOGUE just ready, post free. Good and scarce items in Ruskin, Meredith, Hardy, Lang, First Editions, &c., all cheaply priced.—JONES & EVANS, 77, Queen Street, London, E.C.

AGENCY FOR AMERICAN BOOKS.

G. P. PUTNAM'S SONS, PUBLISHERS and BOOKSELLERS, of 27 and 29 West 23rd Street, New York, and 24, BEDFORD STREET, LONDON, W.C., desire to call the attention of the READING PUBLIC to the excellent facilities presented by their Branch House in London for filling, on the most favourable terms, orders for their own STANDARD PUBLICATIONS, and for ALL AMERICAN BOOKS and PERIODICALS.—CATALOGUES sent on application.

Now ready, No. 3, Vol. IV. (July), price 1s. 6d.
THE CRITICAL REVIEW OF THEOLOGICAL AND PHILOSOPHICAL LITERATURE. Edited by Professor S. D. F. SALMOND, D.D. Containing Signed Reviews of all the Important Theological and Philosophical Books published during the past Quarter. ANNUAL SUBSCRIPTION, SIX SHILLINGS.
"The student of theology will find it a most trustworthy guide."
Spectator.
EDINBURGH: T. & T. CLARK 38, GEORGE STREET.

CITY of BIRMINGHAM MUNICIPAL TECHNICAL SCHOOL.

The Corporation of Birmingham require the services of a PRINCIPAL, to undertake the General Control of the Day and Evening Teaching in the New School (now in course of erection). The salary has been fixed at £500 per annum, and the Principal will be required to enter upon his duties on the 1st January next, and to devote his whole time to the appointment, under the direction of the Technical School Committee.
Applications, accompanied by copies of testimonials, must be sent on or before the 1st September next, to the undersigned, from whom further particulars can be obtained on application being made by letter.

GEORGE MELLON, Secretary Municipal Technical School.
Paradise Street, Birmingham.

UNIVERSITY COLLEGE, BRISTOL.

The SESSION 1894-95 will begin on 4th OCTOBER. The College supplies for persons of either sex, above the ordinary school age, the means of continuing their studies in Science, Languages, History, Literature, and Theory of Music. Laboratories are open for practical instruction in—

CHEMISTRY, PHYSICS,
ENGINEERING.

GEOLOGY, ZOOLOGY,
BOTANY.

The Engineering Department includes Civil, Mechanical, Electrical, and Mining Engineering, Surveying, and Architectural Work; and special arrangements for Practical Work have been made with various Engineers in and near Bristol. Facilities are offered in the way of College Scholarships, Engineering Works Scholarships, and special arrangements for entrance into professional life. There will be about Twenty Vacancies in October. Applications, with references, should be made as early as possible to the Secretary, from whom prospectus and particulars of residence in Clifton may be obtained.
Medical Education is provided by the Faculty of Medicine of the College.

CALENDAR, containing full information, price 1s. (by post 1s. 3d.).
JAMES RAFTER, Secretary.

SOUTH-WEST LONDON POLYTECHNIC.

PRINCIPAL REQUIRED, to undertake direction of whole Educational Work, the Higher Teaching in at least one Department of Science, and Headmastership of Day Schools.
Salary, from 1st April, 1895, to be £800 per annum. Meanwhile will be expected to advise Governing Body as to equipment, &c., and occasionally visit building in course of erection, from time of appointment, for an honorarium of £100.
Applications to be sent in not later than 28th inst.
Forms of application and further details as to duties to be obtained from F. P. MURRAY, Secretary to the Governing Body.
47, Duke Street, St. James's, S.W.

THE WELSH INTERMEDIATE EDUCATION ACT. CARDIFF SCHEME.

The Governors are prepared to receive APPLICATIONS for the post of HEAD MISTRESS of the GIRLS' INTERMEDIATE SCHOOL under the above Scheme.
The Scheme provides for a fixed yearly stipend of £150, and a Capital Grant. When the total remuneration exceeds £600 per annum, it may be subject to revision.
Intending applicants may obtain particulars of the appointment from the Clerk to the Governors, who will also supply copies of the Scheme.
Applications, accompanied by not less than three Testimonials, and marked on cover "Head Mistress," must be in the hands of the undersigned not later than 12 noon on Monday, the 29th instant.

By order of the Governors, DAVID SHEPHERD, Clerk.
1, Frederick Street, Cardiff, July 10th, 1894.

THE UNIVERSITY of ST. ANDREWS

GRANTS THE DIPLOMA and TITLE of L.L.A. to WOMEN.

The Subjects of Examination may be selected from any seven out of thirty different subjects, the standard being the same as that for the M.A. Degree. The centres of examination are St. Andrews, Aberdeen, Bedford, Belfast, Birmingham, Bristol, Cardiff, Cheltenham, Cork, Dublin, Dumfries, Edinburgh, Liverpool, Leeds, Leicester, Limerick, London, Loughborough, Manchester, Newcastle-on-Tyne, Paisley, Truro, &c.
For Prospectus, &c., apply to the SECRETARY, L.L.A. Scheme, the University, St. Andrews, N.B.

BRITISH MUSEUM.—ASSYRIAN

SCULPTURES.—Statuettes of Sennacherib, Assurbanipal, and his Queen. Also reduced Facsimiles of the unique and beautiful "Garden Scene," Winged Human-headed Lion and Bull, &c. Modelled from the famous Nineveh Sculptures, and made in Porcelain (parian).
"Interesting and faithful reproductions."—Athenaeum, Oct. 7, 1893.
Descriptive Prospectus on application to ALFRED JARVIS (Sole Publisher), 43, Willes Road, London, N.W.

DR. KLEIN has now added to the CIVIL SERVICE INSTITUTE, at 110, Cannon-street, E.C., a REGISTRATION BUREAU for the Clerical and Scholastic Professions. Principals of Schools at Home and Abroad, Rectors, Vicars, and Assistant Teachers, may confidently rely upon the Doctor's long and varied experience in professional matters being placed promptly at their disposal.

EDUCATION.—Particulars as to the best

University or Army Tutors, and Schools for Boys or Girls, at home or abroad, may be obtained (free of charge) by sending a statement of requirements to R. J. BRYON, M.A., 8, Lancaster Place, Strand.

SCOTLAND.—One or Two PUPILS for Education and CURE of STAMMERING, or other Voice Defects, may be received during August and September, at Kinross, by Rev. C. R. TAYLOR, M.A., LL.B., Lecturer in Public Reading and Speaking in King's College, London.—12, Cambridge Terrace, W.

PALL MALL.—Seven Works by the late Dante Gabriel Rossetti, by direction of the Executor of Mrs. W. M. Rossetti.

MESSRS. FOSTER respectfully announce for SALE BY AUCTION, at the GALLERY, 54, PALL MALL, on WEDNESDAY NEXT, the 25th JULY, finished studies or replicas of the following celebrated WORKS:—The Lady of Pity, 45 by 34; Sibylla Palmifera, 30 by 30; Portrait of Mrs. Morris, 36 by 30; Lady Letha, 37 by 32; Found, 38 by 31, and a large original work in crayons, Matrona Romana.
May be viewed Monday and Tuesday next, when Catalogues may be had.—54, Pall Mall.

PALL MALL.—Four Statuary Marble Figures and Five Busts by the late Marshall Wood.

MESSRS. FOSTER respectfully announce they will include in the above SALE the following important WORKS by the late MARSHALL WOOD:—The Song of the Shirt, life size; Musidora (in two sizes); Aphrodite and busts of H.M. the Queen, H.R.H. the Prince of Wales, the late Sir John Macdonald; Psyche and Proserpine. May be viewed as above.—54, Pall Mall.

BRITISH ASSOCIATION for the ADVANCEMENT of SCIENCE.

Burlington House, London, W.
The NEXT ANNUAL MEETING of the Association will be held at OXFORD, commencing on WEDNESDAY, AUGUST 5th.

PRESIDENT-ELECT—The Most Hon. The MARQUIS of SALISBURY, K.G., D.C.L., F.R.S., Chancellor of the University of Oxford.
Information about Local Arrangements may be obtained from the Local Secretaries, The Museum, Oxford.
O. GAFFITH, Assistant General Secretary.

ROYAL SOCIETY of PAINTERS in WATER-COLOURS.—The SUMMER EXHIBITION will CLOSE on SATURDAY, AUGUST 4th, 5, PALL MALL EAST, from 10 till 6. Admission, 1s. Catalogue, 1s.
ALFRED D. FRIPP, R.W.S., Secretary.

NURSERY KNEE-SONGS, LULLABIES, PROLOGUE RHYMES, and other Pastime Verse, from the Old Welsh. The English by JENNET HUMPHREYS, Author of "Some Little Britons in Brittany" &c. Published by Arthur, Cricklewood, N.W. Paper covers, 6d. Post free.

IMPORTANT.—PRINTING AND PUBLISHING
NEWSPAPERS, MAGAZINES, BOOKS, &c.—KING, SELL & RAILTON, Limited, high-class Printers and Publishers, 12, Gough Square, 4, Bolt Court, Fleet Street, E.C., have specially-built Rotary and other fast Machines for printing illustrated or other Journals, and specially-built Machines for fast folding and covering 16 or 32 page Journals at one operation.
Facilities upon the premises for Editorial Offices, free. Advertising and Publishing Departments conducted.
Telephone 2730. Telegraph, "Africanism, London."

IMPORTANT WORK ON THE HISTORY OF THE NOVEL. A GUIDE TO BRITISH & AMERICAN NOVELS.

BEING A COMPREHENSIVE MANUAL TO BRITISH AND AMERICAN FICTION FROM THE EARLIEST PERIOD TO THE END OF 1893.

BY PERCY RUSSELL, Author of "The Author's Manual," &c.
Crown 8vo, cloth, 300 pp., price 3s. 6d. net; by post, 3s. 10d.
THE GUIDE CONTAINS A COMPLETE HISTORY OF THE NOVEL, LIVING NOVELISTS, AND NOVELISTS OF THE PAST.

BY THE SAME AUTHOR.
THE AUTHOR'S MANUAL. WITH PRELIMINARY REMARKS BY MR. GLADSTONE.

Seventh and Cheap Edition. With New Preface, 304 pp., crown 8vo, cloth, price 3s. 6d. net; by post, 3s. 10d. With Portrait ".... Mr. Russell's book is a very complete manual and guide for journalist and author. It is not a merely practical work—it is literary and appreciative of literature in its best sense. We have little else but praise for the volume."—Westminster Review.
LONDON: DIGBY, LONG & CO., PUBLISHERS, 18, ROVERIE STREET, FLEET STREET, E.C.

JUST PUBLISHED.
Medium 8vo, cloth, with Portrait, price 9s. net.
PHILOSOPHICAL REMAINS

OF
GEORGE CROOM ROBERTSON, Grote Professor of Philosophy of Mind and Logic, University College, London.

WITH A MEMOIR.
Edited by ALEXANDER BAIN, LL.D., Emeritus Professor of Logic, University of Aberdeen; and T. WHITTAKER, B.A. Oxon.

WILLIAMS & NORGATE, London and Edinburgh.

THE WEEKLY REPORTER.

The WEEKLY REPORTER is the only series of reports which publishes an Annual Digest of all cases reported in ANY of the following series of Reports, viz.: THE LAW REPORTS, THE LAW JOURNAL REPORTS, THE LAW TIMES REPORTS, and the WEEKLY REPORTER, from the 24th of October to the 12th of August in each year; together with a table of cases giving the reference to ALL the above-mentioned reports. This Digest has for many years been a distinctive feature of the WEEKLY REPORTER.

ANNUAL SUBSCRIPTION, WHICH MUST BE PAID IN ADVANCE:
WEEKLY REPORTER, in wrapper, £1 6s.
Country, £1 8s.; Foreign, £1 10s. 4d.; Single Number, 6d.

OFFICE: 27, CHANCERY LANE, W.C.

Save your Complexion and Save your Money.

A PENNY A WEEK
IS THE PROBABLE COST OF USING

PREMIER VINOLIA SOAP.
4d. a Tablet.

OLD SHIRTS RE-FITTED, Fine Irish Linen, 2s.; or very best Irish Linen, returned free, ready to wear, 2s. 6d. Sample Shirt, for Dress and ordinary wear, any size, post free, 2s. 9d., 3s. 9d., 4s. 9d., 5s. 9d., or 6s. 9d. Twilled Night Shirts, 2s. 11d., 3s. 9d., 4s. 9d., or 5s. 9d. LINEN COLLARS and CUFFS. Best 4-fold Collars, 4s. 6d. and 5s. 6d. doz.; made exact to pattern, 2s. 9d. half-doz., post free. Napkins, 2s. 6d. per doz.; Dinner Napkins, 4s. 6d. per dozen; Table Cloths, 2 yards square, 2s. 9d. each. IRISH LINEN 2½ yards by 3 yards, 5s. 6d.; Kitchen Table Cloths, 10½d. each; real Irish Linen Sheet, fully bleached, 2 yards wide, 1s. 11d. per yard; and Linen Diaper, 8½d. per yard; Nursery Diaper, 4½d. per yard; Surplice Linen, 7d. per yard; Glass Cloths, 3s. 6d. dozen. LINEN HUCKABACK TOWELS, 3s. 6d. per dozen; Damask Towels, 6s. 6d. per dozen; Turkish Bath Towels, 1s. each; Twilled Linen Pillow Cases, from 1s. 11d. each. IRISH CAMBRIC HANDKERCHIEFS. Children's, 1s. 2d.; Ladies', 2s. 3d.; Gent's, 3s. 6d. Hemstitched—Ladies', 2s. 3d.; Gent's, 4s. 11d. per dozen. Better qualities equally cheap. Price Lists and Patterns of all kinds of Linen Goods and Hosiery sent to any part of the world, post free. Monograms, Crests, Coats of Arms, Initials, &c., woven and embroidered. Samples and Illustrated Price Lists post free to any part of the world.

B. & E. M'HUGH & CO., Limited, BELFAST

ESTABLISHED 1851.

BIRKBECK BANK,
Southampton Buildings, Chancery Lane, London.
TWO-AND-A-HALF PER CENT. INTEREST allowed on DEPOSITS repayable on demand.
TWO per CENT. on CURRENT ACCOUNTS, on the minimum monthly balances, when not drawn below £100.
STOCKS, SHARES, and ANNUITIES purchased and sold.

SAVINGS DEPARTMENT.

For the encouragement of Thrift the Bank receives small sums on deposit, and allows interest monthly on each completed £1

BIRKBECK BUILDING SOCIETY.

HOW TO PURCHASE A HOUSE
FOR TWO GUINEAS PER MONTH.

BIRKBECK FREEHOLD LAND SOCIETY.
HOW TO PURCHASE A PLOT OF LAND
FOR FIVE SHILLINGS PER MONTH.

The BIRKBECK ALMANACK, with full particulars, post free.
FRANCIS RAVENSCROFT, Manager.

To H.R.H. the PRINCE of WALES.

BRAND & CO.'S AI SAUCE,
SOUPS, PRESERVED PROVISIONS
and

POTTED MEATS, and YORK and GAME
PIES Also.

ESSENCE of BEEF, BEEF TEA,

TURTLE SOUP, and JELLY, and other

SPECIALITIES for INVALIDS.

CAUTION—BEWARE of IMITATIONS.

SOLE ADDRESS—
11, LITTLE STANHOPE STREET,
MAYFAIR, W.

NOW READY, large crown 8vo, nearly 800 pages, cloth, 6s., post free.

HISTORY OF THE FREE CHURCHES OF ENGLAND FROM THE REFORMATION TO 1851.

By HERBERT S. SKEATS.

WITH A CONTINUATION TO 1891,

By CHARLES S. MIALL.

THE GUARDIAN.—"It is certainly a convenience to have the history of Dissent in England presented in a connected form, and from a Dissenter's point of view. And for these purposes we can recommend this, which gives the history in a handy and convenient form."

TIMES.—"As a complete exposition of the history of Dissent, from the Nonconformist point of view, it is no doubt certain to retain its reputation."

PALL MALL GAZETTE.—"Readers will find here in a clear and attractive form much information which cannot readily be found anywhere else."

THE LONDON QUARTERLY REVIEW.—"It is essential that Dissenters and Methodist Churchmen should know why they stand apart from the National Establishment, and this knowledge can only come through the study of the ecclesiastical history of the last 300 years. . . . We ought to be specially grateful to Mr. Skeats and Mr. Miall for the light which they have shed upon the experiences of the Nonconformists of England."

NEW WORK BY DR. MACLAREN.

Crown 8vo, cloth boards, price 5s., post free.

THE WEARIED CHRIST, and other Sermons. By Rev. ALEXANDER MACLAREN, D.D.

"Very frank in tone, and modern in application."—The Bookman.

"They show the same wonderful fertility of apt and beautiful illustrations, the same exquisite use of language, and the same direct heart-searching power which we are accustomed to find in all Dr. Maclaren's works."—Christian World Pulpit.

"They are fully up to his old level, and are still unrivalled in their own manner."—British Weekly.

Uniform with the above, price 5s., post free.

PAUL'S PRAYERS. And other Sermons.

"As striking and suggestive as any Dr. Maclaren has published. . . . The book is full of helpful thoughts."

—Christian World.

Uniform with the above, price 5s., post free.

THE GOD OF THE AMEN. And other Sermons.

"Replete with a keen spiritual insight, combined with an aptness of illustration and beauty of diction which cannot fail to both impress and charm the reader."—Methodist Times.

Uniform with the above, price 5s., post free.

THE HOLY OF HOLIES. A Series of Sermons on the 14th, 15th, and 16th Chapters of the Gospel by John.

"Every sermon glows with unction, and shows intense power."—Methodist Recorder.

Uniform with the above, price 5s., post free.

THE UNCHANGING CHRIST. And other Sermons.

"Few preachers combine so many elements of effective pulpit address."—Independent.

LONDON: ALEXANDER & SHEPHEARD, PUBLISHERS, 21 AND 22, FURNIVAL STREET, E.C.
AND ALL BOOKSELLERS.

A STORY OF THE DISRUPTION AND THE FORMATION OF THE FREE CHURCH OF SCOTLAND IN 1843.

Crown 8vo, cloth boards, 3s. 6d., post free.

CRAIGROWAN:

By W. KENNEDY MOORE, D.D.

THE DUNDEE ADVERTISER.—"The story should help to raise the enthusiasm of the present generation of Free Churchmen at this interesting period of their Church's history, and general readers may peruse it with interest for its faithful pictures of Scottish life and character in 1843."

THE BRITISH WEEKLY.—"The characters are so well drawn, and the Disruption incidents so cleverly and naturally interwoven, that the interest never flags. Dr. Kennedy Moore is thoroughly at home in his subject, and has not only the necessary knowledge for treating it well, but also the requisite sympathy. He has a vein of quiet but genuine humour, and a competent acquaintance with Scottish customs."

THE FREEMAN.—"Dr. Moore not only writes with the pen of a ready writer, but his heart is in closest sympathy with his inspiring theme. His book is full of pathetic incident, and is profusely illustrated with striking portraiture."

LONDON: ALEXANDER & SHEPHEARD, 21 and 22, Furnival Street, E.C.

THE SOLICITORS' JOURNAL.

THE ORGAN OF BOTH BRANCHES OF THE LEGAL PROFESSION.

ESTABLISHED 1857.

Published every Friday. Price 6d.

Of the general contents of the JOURNAL the following statement will afford some idea:—

CURRENT TOPICS.—LEADING ARTICLES.—RECENT DECISIONS—CASES OF THE WEEK—CASES BEFORE THE BANKRUPTCY REGISTRARS—SOLICITORS' CASES—REVIEWS—NEW ORDERS—GENERAL CORRESPONDENCE—COURTS—PARLIAMENT AND LEGISLATION—APPOINTMENTS AND OBITUARY—SOCIETIES AND INSTITUTIONS.

ANNUAL SUBSCRIPTIONS.

SOLICITORS' JOURNAL ONLY, 26s.; by post, 28s., when paid in advance. Single Number, 6d.

SOLICITORS' JOURNAL and WEEKLY REPORTER £2 12s., post-free, when paid in advance.

WEEKLY REPORTER, in Wrapper, £2 12s., post-free Single Number, 1s.

The Solicitors' Journal and Reporter can be ordered from any date.

Cheques and Post Office Orders payable to H. VILLERS.

OFFICE: 27, CHANCERY LANE, W.C

THEATRES.ADELPHI THEATRE.

A. and S. Gatti, Sole Proprietors and Managers.

THIS EVENING, at 8.0. SHALL WE FORGIVE HER? Messrs. Fred Terry, Macklin, Chas. Dalton, Julian Cross, H. Fleming, H. Eversfield, Herbert Bodd; Mesdames H. Leigh, Ada Neilson, M. Hardinge, and Julia Neilson.

CRITERION THEATRE.

THIS EVENING, at 9. THE CANDIDATE. Mr. Charles Wyndham, Messrs. Wm. Blakeley, Geo. Giddens, C. W. Somerset, F. Worthing, F. Atherley; Miss F. Coleman, Miss Pattie Browne, Miss Miriam Clements, and Miss Mary Moore. Preceded, at 8.30, by MRS. HILARY REGRETS.

GARRICK THEATRE.

Mr. John Hare, Lessee and Manager.

THIS EVENING, at 8. MONEY. Mr. John Hare, Messrs. Forbes Robertson, Arthur Cecil, H. Kemble, C. Brookfield, G. Hare, A. Bouchier, Aynsworth, Rock, Du Maurier, Sims; Miss Kate Borke, Miss Maude Millett, and Mrs. Bancroft.

GLOBE THEATRE.

Lessee, W. S. Penley.

THIS EVENING, at 9. CHARLEY'S AUNT. Mr. W. S. Penley, Messrs. Walter Everard, Sidney Paxton, R. Farner, Cecil Thornbury, and H. Reeves Smith; Misses Ada Branson, Emmie Meyrick, Kate Graves. At 8, IN THE EYES OF THE WORLD.

PRINCE OF WALES' THEATRE.

MR. GEORGE EDWARDES' COMPANY.—EVERY EVENING, at 8.15. A GAIEITY GIRL. Most powerful cast in London. MATINEE EVERY SATURDAY at 2.30.

SAVOY THEATRE.

R. D'Oyly Carte, Proprietor and Manager.

EVERY EVENING, at 8.30, and EVERY SATURDAY AFTERNOON, at 2.30. MIRETTE. Book by Michel Carré, English Lyrics by F. E. Weatherley. English Dialogue by H. Greenbank. Music by Andre Messager.

ST. JAMES'S THEATRE.

THIS EVENING, at 8.15. THE MASQUERADERS. Mr. George Alexander, Messrs. Herbert Waring, Elliot, H. V. Esmond, Ian Robertson, A. Vane-Tempest, Ben Webster, William H. Day, &c.; Miss Granville, Miss Irene Vanbrugh, Miss Beryl Faber, Mrs. Edward Saker, and Mrs. Patrick Campbell.

TRAFALGAR THEATRE.

THIS EVENING, at 8.30. GO-BANG. Mesdames Jessie Bond, Agnes Hewitt, Adelaide Astor, Maggie Roberts, Maud Lockett, Lydia Flopp, and Letty Lind; Messrs. H. Grattan, George Grossmith, jun., Arthur Playfair, George Crawford, Edgar Stevens, Fred Storey, and John L. Shine. At 7.40, THE SILVER HONEYMOON.

VAUDEVILLE THEATRE.

Lessee, Mr. Weedon Grossmith.

THIS EVENING, at 9. THE NEW BOY. Mr. Weedon Grossmith, Messrs. J. D. Beveridge, J. Beauchamp, S. Warden, K. Douglas, T. Palmer, E. Volpe, J. Hatfield; Mesdames Gladys Homfrey, May Palfrey, Esmaé Beringer, Helena Dacre. Preceded, at 8.20, by THE GENTLEMAN WHIP.

MESSRS. LONGMANS & CO.'S LIST.

COCK LANE and COMMON SENSE: a Series of PAPERS by ANDREW LANG. Crown 8vo, 6s. 6d. net.

"If we are to have books about ghosts, wraiths, and apparitions, it is well that they should be written with that width of knowledge, that ingenuity of reasoning, and that light literary touch which we find in Mr. Andrew Lang's new book." Times.

SECOND EDITION.

BAN and ARRIÈRE BAN: a Rally of Fugitive Rhymes. By ANDREW LANG. Crown 8vo, 5s. net.

"A volume of the lightest, most frivolous verse is this, but it leaves a pleasant ring in your ears, and what more solemn books often fail to do—a respect for the skilful maker." Bookman.

CLIMBING in the BRITISH ISLES. Vol. I. ENGLAND. By W. P. HASKETT SMITH, M.A., Member of the Alpine Club With 23 Illustrations by Ellis Carr, Member of the Alpine Club, and 5 Plans. Fcap. 8vo, 3s. 6d.

* Vol. II, "WALES," and Vol. III, "SCOTLAND," are in preparation.

"The illustrations are exceedingly clear, and should be very useful to climbers. Altogether this is a capital little book, and we shall look forward with pleasure to the appearance of the promised companion volume on Scottish climbing." Glasgow Herald.

THE ANNUAL REGISTER: a Review of Public Events at Home and Abroad for the year 1893. 8vo, 18s.

* Volumes of the "Annual Register" for the Years 1863-1892 can still be had. Price 18s. each.

DAVID'S LOOM: a Story of Rochdale Life in the Early Years of the Nineteenth Century. By JOHN TRAFFORD CLEGG (Th'owd Weighver), Author of "Heart Strings," "Pieces in the Rochdals Dialect," &c. Crown 8vo, 6s.

"The story is a tragic one, and powerful as such, while its humorous passages in the Lancashire dialect are by far its best parts.....It is a deeply interesting story, and has real literary merit." Scotsman.

NEW BOOK BY MAY KENDALL.

SONGS from DREAMLAND. By MAY KENDALL, Author of "Dreams to Sell," &c. Fcap. 8vo, 5s. net.

"A dainty little volume.....There is a certain distinction of style, as well as an unmistakable freshness of fancy, in these verses which ought to make them welcome. Occasionally Miss Kendall handles the deep problems of life, and seldom without insight or skill." Leeds Mercury.

NEW AND CHEAPER EDITION.

VOCES POPULI. Reprinted from "Punch." By F. ANSTEY, Author of "Vies Vraie," &c. First Series. With 20 Illustrations by J. Bernard Partridge. Crown 8vo, 3s. 6d.

NEW BOOK BY JULIAN STURGIS.

A BOOK of SONG. By JULIAN STURGIS. Crown 8vo, 5s.

SELECT METHODS in CHEMICAL ANALYSIS, chiefly Inorganic.

By WILLIAM CROOKES, F.R.S., &c., Editor of "The Chemical News." Third Edition, Rewritten and Enlarged. With 67 Woodcuts. 8vo, 21s. net.

A JOURNEY in OTHER WORLDS: a Romance of the Future.

By JOHN JACOB ASTOR. With Illustrations. New Edition. Crown 8vo, 6s.

[Next week.]

THE SILVER LIBRARY—New Volumes.

THE WORLD'S DESIRE. By H. RIDER HAGGARD and ANDREW LANG. Fifteenth Thousand. With 27 Illustrations by M. Greiffenhagen. Crown 8vo, 3s. 6d.

MR. MEESON'S WILL. By H. RIDER HAGGARD. With 18 Illustrations. Fifteenth Thousand. Crown 8vo, 3s. 6d.

A SHADOW of DANTE; being an Essay towards studying Himself, his World, and his Pilgrimage. By MARIA FRANCESCA ROSSETTI. With Illustrations by Dante Gabriel Rossetti. Crown 8vo, 3s. 6d.

THE EDINBURGH REVIEW, No. 369.

JULY. Price 6s.

1. LIVES of DR. PUSEY and DEAN STANLEY.
2. OLD DORSET.
3. MEMOIRS of an INTERNUNCIO.
4. THE VERDICT of the MONUMENTS.
5. MARCELLA.
6. DEATH in CLASSICAL ANTIQUITY.
7. SECRET NEGOTIATIONS of MARLBOROUGH and BERWICK.
8. BONNEY'S STORY of OUR PLANET.
9. THE ARABIAN HORSE.
10. THE LETTERS of HARRIET, COUNTESS GRANVILLE.
11. THE MINISTRY of the MASSES.

THE ENGLISH HISTORICAL REVIEW.

Edited by S. R. GARDINER, M.A., LL.D., Fellow of Merton College, Oxford.

No. 35, JULY. Royal 8vo. Price 5s.

THE HISTORY of a CAMBRIDGESHIRE MANOR. By CATINAT. By Lieutenant-Colonel E. M. LLOYD, R.E. Professor MAITLAND, LL.D.

THE CONSPIRACY of DR. LOPEZ. By the Rev. ARTHUR DIMOCK.

THE ROYAL NAVY under CHARLES I. Part III. THE ADMINISTRATION. By M. OPPENHEIM.

NOTES and DOCUMENTS.

REVIEWS of BOOKS.

CORRESPONDENCE.

LIST of HISTORICAL BOOKS RECENTLY PUBLISHED
CONTENTS of PERIODICAL PUBLICATIONS.

LONDON: LONGMANS, GREEN & CO.

NEW YORK: 15, East 16th Street.

RICHARD BENTLEY & SON'S LIST.

"The author of 'MORE ABOUT GORDON'* is right in supposing that this book does not come too late. England will never tire of hearing of its hero, who appealed to her on so many sides of the national character. There is the more reason for this book, because it is, as it professes to be, by 'ONE WHO KNEW HIM WELL.' The writer is a lady, and we learn her acquaintance with Gordon began in 1867."—Daily News.

* In 1 vol., fcap 8vo, 2s. 6d.

NEW NOVELS NOW READY

"From the author of 'The Rose Garden' we expect certain qualities of style, among them just proportion and quiet elegance, to use a word as old-fashioned as the attribute itself. In 'AN INTERLOPER'* both of these are manifest, and the book will have its charm for those whose taste is not too far perverted to recognise their excellence. Miss PRARD's story of a man's weakness and a woman's devotion is admirably written, and exhibits with effect the writer's skill in the drawing of character."—World.

* 2 vols., crown 8vo.

"'IN A CINQUE PORT'* strikes us as a book which has been written with much deliberation. The author seems to have been under the influence of the ancient sea-forsaken Sussex city which he has chosen for the setting of his scenes. He describes lovingly and well, and those who know Winchelsea will take pleasure from the description apart altogether from the plot and action of the story."—Daily Chronicle.

* 3 vols., crown 8vo.

"So cleverly planned and neatly told a story would be worth reading even if it contained fewer good character-sketches than are scattered by the way in 'VICTIMS OF FASHION.'* The author's standpoint is outside the ordinary groove, and there is a freshness about the story which gives it a certain picturesqueness."

Athenæum.

* 2 vols., crown 8vo.

"Mr. LESLIE KEITH, who has for some time past been favourably known to the public as a clever and entertaining writer of fiction, has just given publicity, under the title of 'A TROUBLE-SOME PAIR,'* to a story of such conspicuous ability that its authorship can scarcely fail to place him high in the ranks of contemporary English novelists. . . . A more wholesome or amusing book has not reached our cognisance for many a day."—Daily Telegraph.

* 3 vols., crown 8vo.

"Miss CAREY has the gift of writing naturally and simply, her pathos is true and unforced, and her conversations are sprightly and sharp."

Standard.

MRS. ROMNEY. By ROSA N. CAREY
Now ready, in 1 vol., small crown 8vo, 2s.

"'DIANA TEMPEST'* is a book to be read. It is more—it is a book to be kept and read again, for its characters will not pass into limbo with this year's fashions. It will stand in the front ranks of fiction for some time to come."

St. James's Gazette.

* A New Edition, in 1 vol., crown 8vo, 2s.

RICHARD BENTLEY & SON, New Burlington Street
Publishers in Ordinary to Her Majesty the Queen.

L. REEVE & CO'S NEW WORKS.

Now ready, Part I., to be completed in Ten Parts, royal 4to, each with 6 beautifully Coloured Plates, price to Subscribers for the complete work only 10s. 6d. net, or £4 14s. 6d. for the complete work if paid in advance.

FOREIGN FINCHES IN CAPTIVITY.

ARTHUR G. BUTLER, Ph.D., F.L.S., F.Z.S., F.E.S.

A Part will be issued about every six weeks, commencing July 1st. The whole will form a large and handsome volume of between 300 and 400 pages, with 60 Plates, by F. W. Frowhawk, beautifully coloured by hand.

Only 300 copies will be printed; early application is therefore necessary to prevent disappointment. Should any copies remain unsold after the completion of the work the price will be raised to Six Guineas net, or more. Prospectus on application.

LEPIDOPTERA INDICA. By F. Moore, F.Z.S., F.E.S. Vol. I., with 24 Coloured Plates, £9 5s., cloth; £9 15s. half-morocco. Parts XIII-XVIII, 15s. each. Prospectus on application.

THE HYMENOPTERA ACULEATA of the BRITISH ISLANDS. By EDWARD SAUNDERS, F.L.S. Parts I. to V., with 4 Coloured Plates, 5s. each.

THE HEMIPTERA HETEROPTERA of the BRITISH ISLANDS. By EDWARD SAUNDERS, F.L.S. Complete in 1 volume. Small Edition, with a Structural Plate, 14s. Large Edition, with 31 Coloured Plates, 48s.

THE LEPIDOPTERA of the BRITISH ISLANDS. By CHARLES G. BARRETT, F.E.S. Vol. I. (RHODOPIDÆ), with 40 Coloured Plates, 53s. Parts XI. to XVII., each with 4 Coloured Plates, 5s.

THE COLEOPTERA of the BRITISH ISLANDS. By the Rev. Canon FOWLER, M.A., F.L.S. Complete in 5 vols. Large Edition, with 180 Coloured Plates, £14. Small Edition, with 2 Structural Plates, £4.

CATALOGUE of BRITISH COLEOPTERA. By D. SHARP, M.A., F.R.S., and Rev. Canon FOWLER, M.A., F.L.S. Price 1s. 6d.; or printed on one side only, for labels, 2s. 6d.

THE BUTTERFLIES of EUROPE. Described and Figured by H. C. LANG, M.D., F.L.S. With 83 Coloured Plates, containing upwards of 900 Figures. 2 vols., £9 18s.

Now ready, Part XX., 7s. 6d.; also Vol. VI., 35s.

FLORA of BRITISH INDIA. By Sir J. D. HOOKER, K.C.S.I., C.B., F.R.S., &c., assisted by various Botanists. Parts I. to XVII., 10s. 6d. each; XIV. to XIX., 9s. each. Vols. I. to IV., cloth, 32s. each; Vol. V., 35s.

THE PHYSIOLOGY of the INVERTEBRATA. By A. B. GRIFFITHS, Ph.D., F.R.S. (Edin.), F.E.S. Demy 8vo, with 81 Illustrations, 15s. net.

BRITISH FUNGUS. By the Rev. M. J. BERKELEY, M.A., F.L.S. Reissue. With a Supplement of nearly 400 pages by WORTHINGTON G. SMITH, F.L.S. 2 vols., 24 Coloured Plates, 36s.

BRITISH FUNGI, PHYCOMYCETES and USTILAGINEÆ. By GEORGE MASSEE. 6 Plates, 7s. 6d.

HANDBOOK of the BRITISH FLORA. By G. BENTHAM, F.R.S. Sixth Edition. Revised by Sir J. D. HOOKER, C.B., K.C.S.I., F.R.S. 10s. 6d.

ILLUSTRATIONS of the BRITISH FLORA. Drawn by W. H. Fitch, F.L.S., and W. G. Smith, F.L.S. 1,315 Wood Engravings. Third Edition. 10s. 6d.

British Insects. By E. F. STAVELEY. 16 Coloured Plates, 14s.

British Beetles. By E. C. RYE. New Edition. Revised and in Part Rewritten by the Rev. Canon FOWLER, M.A., F.L.S. 16 Coloured Plates, 10s. 6d.

British Butterflies and Moths. By H. T. STANTON. 16 Coloured Plates, 10s. 6d.

British Bees. By W. E. SHUCKARD. 16 Coloured Plates, 10s. 6d.

British Spiders. By E. F. STAVELEY. 16 Coloured Plates, 10s. 6d.

British Zoophytes. By A. S. PENNINGTON, F.L.S. 24 Plates, 10s. 6d.

British Grasses. By M. PLUES. 16 Coloured Plates, 10s. 6d.

British Ferns. By M. PLUES. 16 Coloured Plates, 10s. 6d.

British Seaweeds. By S. O. GRAY. 16 Coloured Plates, 10s. 6d.

Synopsis of British Mosses. By C. P. JOHNSON, F.L.S. Revised Edition, 7s. 6d.

No. 505, JULY, 3s. 6d.

THE BOTANICAL MAGAZINE: Figures and Descriptions of New and Rare Plants. By Sir J. D. HOOKER, F.R.S., &c. Third Series, Vols. I. to XLIX., each 42s. Published Monthly, with 6 Plates, 3s. 6d., Coloured. Annual Subscription, 42s.

A SET OF

CURTIS'S BOTANICAL MAGAZINE, Complete from the commencement to the end of 1892. 118 vols. and Index to the first 52 vols. in 93 vols. The first 39 vols. and Index in 56 vols., half green morocco, the remaining 79 vols., new, in cloth, price £125 net each.

L. REEVE & CO.,
Publishers to the Home, Colonial, and Indian Governments,
6, HENRIETTA STREET, COVENT GARDEN, W.C.

POPULAR COUNTY HISTORIES.

NEW VOLUME NOW READY.

In demy 8vo, handsomely printed on antique paper and bound in cloth, price 7s. 6d. Also Limited Editions, on hand-made paper, roxburgh, 10s. 6d. net; large paper copies, 21s. net.

A HISTORY OF WESTMORLAND.

By RICHARD S. FERGUSON,
M.A., LL.M., F.S.A., Chancellor of Carlisle, Author of 'The History of Cumberland.'

VOLUMES ALREADY PUBLISHED IN THE SERIES. HISTORY OF HAMPSHIRE.

By THOS. W. SHORE, F.G.S.

"A very valuable volume. It presents to the reader, for the first time in a condensed form, a general view of the entire history of Hampshire."—Hampshire Advertiser.

HISTORY OF CUMBERLAND.

By RICHARD S. FERGUSON, M.A., LL.M., F.S.A.

"If Mr. Stock can find a Mr. Ferguson to write the history of each of the other counties of England and Wales, the success of his series of 'Popular County Histories' may be considered as assured."—Speaker.

HISTORY of WARWICKSHIRE.

By SAM. TIMMINS, F.S.A.

"Mr. Timmins has made many useful discoveries in the history of his county, which are here set forth. But the book appeals quite as much to the general reader as to the Warwickshire man."—St. James's Gazette.

HISTORY OF BERKSHIRE.

By Lieut.-Col. COOPER KING.

"Col. King has done his work well, and his sketch of the 'History of Berkshire' is both useful and entertaining."—Morning Post.

HISTORY OF DERBYSHIRE.

By JOHN PENDLETON,

"Author of 'Old and New Chesterfield.'"

"An entertaining and very instructive guide to all that is most interesting in the county."—Times.

HISTORY OF DEVONSHIRE.

By R. N. WORTH, F.G.S.,

Author of 'The West Country Garland,' &c.

"Ought to be greatly popular with the residents, and will have general interest for all who have the talent for locality."—Contemporary Review.

HISTORY OF NORFOLK.

By WALTER RYE,

Author of 'The Norfolk Antiquarian Miscellany,' &c.

"At once the most learned and entertaining county guide that has ever been compiled. It is difficult to describe Mr. Rye's delightful book."—Athenæum.

NOTE.—Some of the Large-Paper Editions of the above are out of print.

CHEAPER EDITION.

Now ready, 488 pages, price One Shilling.

TOLSTOIS BOYHOOD.

WRITTEN BY HIMSELF.

And Translated by CONSTANTINE POPOFF.

"This edition comprises in one volume what has hitherto been issued in two or three; and in point of style it is undoubtedly the best English version of the Russian novelist's remarkable biographical work."—Academy.

"One of the most faithful and closely retrospective autobiographies of the opening years of life that has ever been given to the world. Mr. Popoff's translation reads easily, and, as he is a Russian, we may count upon its accuracy."—Literary World.

LONDON:

ELLIOT STOCK 62, PATERNOSTER ROW.

SATURDAY, JULY 21, 1894.

No. 1159, New Series.

THE EDITOR cannot undertake to return, or to correspond with the writers of, rejected manuscript.

It is particularly requested that all business letters regarding the supply of the paper, &c., may be addressed to the PUBLISHER, and not to the EDITOR.

LITERATURE.

The Great Alternative. A Plea for a National Policy. By Spenser Wilkinson. (Son-nenschein.)

THIS volume may be described as the opposite of the work of Mr. Goldwin Smith on The Empire. That distinguished man did not, indeed, preach the whole cant of the bad Manchester School: he did not believe in the reign of calico, or in the transformation of the world by a tariff. But he was undoubtedly a philosopher of the "Little England" creed; and he seriously insisted, thirty years ago, that this imperial nation should shrink behind the narrow seas, should confine itself within its ancient borders, and should abandon the world-wide heritage gained by its fathers. The force of events has exploded doctrines arising out of the exhaustion of the great war, and of a dream of a millennium of peace; and Mr. Spenser Wilkinson's book is an earnest argument that, if England is to remain a great power, she must defend and preserve her empire, and perform the duties attached to her destiny, or sink into decline, and perhaps perish.

I have read the volume with unflagging interest. The political ethics of the author, no doubt, savour of Hobbes and Carlyle, and are instinct with Bismarck's notions of blood and iron. His theory of the mission of England is stamped with the pride, and perhaps with the stolidity, of the Anglo-Saxon race, and lays him open to angry retorts: her manifest destiny, other nations think, is not part of the designs of Providence, and may be overborne by their own destinies. His history, too, is in parts questionable, especially in his chapter on German Unity, and on the means which brought it, such as it is, about; and his animus against Russia and France, as our "natural enemies," is palpable and, in places, unjust. He assumes, moreover, rather too plainly the attitude of a superior person lecturing ignorant people on what is above their ken; and this is the more amusing because much that he has written on war is mere commonplace—niaiserie a French critic would call it—and because he has completely left out one consideration of supreme importance in his survey of the present state of the empire. The central idea of his work is, nevertheless, excellent, and what he has grouped around it is well worth studying. I entirely agree in what he has written on the national duty of keeping England in the exalted place she has gained in the world, in maintaining her high imperial estate, and on the weakness, the fluctuation, and the want of aim that, in this matter, has reigned in the national councils; and his comments on the mawkish nonsense of Radical foreign politics, on the silliness, in the face of Europe armed to the teeth, of imagining that we are to sit behind "our silver streak" and to uphold our power by "ideas" and "moral force," are sound, manly, and have a sterling ring. The style of the book is, on the whole, very good; but some of the words used would have been thought barbarous in the Oxford of the day of Newman and Church.

Mr. Wilkinson detests, as much as Canning did, the cosmopolitan view of national politics. He does not think, with Jean Jacques, that human nature is perfect and that nations can lie down like the lion and the kid in an Eden of impossible peace; he eschews the "ideology" which, Napoleon said, "would destroy an empire, though made of granite." He knows that men have passions and selfish aims; that states have conflicting views and policies; that they must be prepared to protect their interests, and that national defence is a paramount duty; and he rather inclines, in his survey of history, to exclaim "the devil take the hindmost in the race," and to contend that the "fittest ought to survive." We may call this faith, which has grown up naturally from the troubles of Europe in this age, Jingoism, Chauvinism, and bad names of the kind; but it is more true, and infinitely more safe, than the sentimental twaddle of universal brotherhood; and what is it, after all, but the phrase of Cromwell, "Put your trust in God, but keep your powder dry"? These being the facts, England has a right to maintain the position she has gained in the world, to vindicate it against all possible enemies, to accept empire and the responsibilities attaching to it, whatever may be the risks or the dangers. It is not only that, in the course of ages, England has spread her arms over vast regions of the earth; that she holds Canada and most of the West Indies; that she governs the subject races of India; that she has settlements in almost every sea; that she has become the mother of great youthful nations. Looking at her mainly as an island power, she has become dominant on the ocean, a kind of ascendancy, the immense importance of which has been proved by grand examples, and which, in some respects, has placed her at the head of all states. Concurrently, too, with this command of the sea, and in a great measure because of it, she has in her history contrived to hold the balance in the chief conflicts of the powers of Europe; and she has thrown her influence, on the whole, into the scale of justice, for she has usually resisted the efforts of overgrown power—of Philip of Spain, of Louis XIV., of Napoleon—in order to protect her own and the world's interests. Power at sea, and a kind of moderating force in European politics, have thus been her characteristics as a State: her destinies lie in this direction; and she must secure these if she is to remain great, especially as maritime supremacy, as affairs now stand, is a necessity on which her very existence depends.

This view of what England has been in the past, if optimistic, is in the main just, though it will hardly be accepted by foreign nations. Mr. Wilkinson, however, appears to think, with the self-complacency of the Anglo-Saxon mind, that our position is in the nature of things—a preordained political harmony—and he does not clearly perceive how far this may lead him. If the "manifest destiny" of England is this or that, Russia may assert that her "manifest destiny" is to sit on the throne of the Eastern Caesars; France that she has a right to be supreme in Europe; Germany that she is bound to swallow up Austria; the United States that they may annex Canada. This doctrine all but annihilates international law and the permanent friendly relations of states. Mr. Wilkinson scornfully rejects the idea that, even in theory, powers are equals, the fundamental axiom of Grotius and Vattel; and he makes force the supreme, almost the only, arbiter in the arrangement of the affairs of mankind. It is not edifying, at the close of the nineteenth century, to see notions boldly revived which, if veiled in philosophic language, are really the creed of vae victis; we dare say Brennus had no doubt that his gods had decreed his conquest of Rome. England, however, is what she has become; and it is more to the purpose to examine by what means, and under what conditions, she has reached the height of her existing fortunes. Her supremacy at sea has been her own achievement; from the day of Sluys to that of Trafalgar it has been secured by her essential strength; and, though it was challenged by the Dutch Republic, and by France and Spain at a later period, it has been vindicated with complete success. But, apart from the question whether it has been rightly used; the authority she exercised for a long period—say from the reign of Elizabeth to that of George IV.—in regulating and controlling the affairs of Europe, and balancing them in accord with her policy, seems to me to have been largely due to accidents of a temporary nature which, perhaps, have vanished. England possessed a commanding continental influence, and employed it against too aggressive States, because she was able to make allies of weak, divided, and backward nations, and because, though her armies were never large, they were formidable as affairs then stood, and her wealth made amends for the short reach of her sword. All this has now been completely changed: the Continent is organised into gigantic Powers, progressive, opulent, for the most part, and directing armies compared with which ours is a mere handful of men; and England, therefore, can hardly hope to wield again the influence she formerly had, and to be really an arbiter in European quarrels. She could hardly be, what she was in Napoleon's day, the head of a coalition against France; she could hardly be what she was at Blenheim and Waterloo.

These considerations are of obvious moment in inquiring how we are to maintain the empire. I incline to think that the revolution in naval construction of the last thirty years, not to refer to other facts of importance, have increased the inherent power of England at sea, and that, with a rational naval policy, she can rule the waves as decisively as she has done for centuries. But I am convinced she cannot play the part on the Continent she played at one time, and that, consistently with her true interests, she ought not to seek to be its arbiter. Mr. Wilkinson takes a contrary view, and contends that England ought to have the kind of foreign policy she had under William III. and Chatham: that she should aim at largely directing the affairs of Europe. He thinks Russia and France our "natural enemies," opposed to us in aims and interests; and he hints, though he does not openly say so, that we must identify ourselves with the Triple Alliance, and heartily become the fourth partner. I shall not inquire, whether, if Russia and France are hostile to us at this juncture, this has not been largely our own fault, nor yet whether their present relations did not grow out of the unwise Peace of Frankfort, which Mr. Wilkinson, and others of his school, justify. Let us assume, as I fear is the case, that Russia and France are unfriendly to us; that their policy is at odds with ours; that they have objects we cannot approve; does it follow that we should join the League of Germany, Austria, and Italy, in our own interests, and to uphold our place in the world? I pass the considerations by, that the foreign policy of Germany has been double dealing to us, in the whole range of colonial relations; that probably it would throw Austria and Italy over, if it could gain the support of Russia; that Italy is half bankrupt, and Austria weak, at least wholly unable to fight Russia and France. Nor shall I discuss the question, whether the true alliance of England ought not to be with France, in the existing circumstances of the European world; this would take me beyond my narrow limits. It is a sufficient answer to the contention that England should join the Triple Alliance, that she would, having regard to the immense development of two at least of her supposed allies, and of the huge armaments of the whole Continent, inevitably play such a subordinate part, that certainly she could not control events, and that, in all probability, she would waste her blood and treasure without being able to secure one of her real interests. This has been a result of that Italian and German unity, and of the events of the war of 1870-1, which Mr. Wilkinson, and writers of his type, admire.

It seems to me, therefore, that the true policy of England, in order to preserve the empire, is to develop her power at sea to the furthest limits, to intervene as little as possible in the affairs of Europe, and only when she is plainly manacled; and, in that event, mainly to intervene at sea. I differ from Mr. Wilkinson on this important point; but I thoroughly agree with him in his wise remarks on the instability and feebleness of British statesmanship, in our foreign relations, during many years, and especially since the Gladstonian era. Russia has leaped from the Caspian and Central Asia, and stands on the verge of the mountain gates of India: yet we have not settled what is to be our frontier; we do not know if the Afghan is a friend or a foe.

We have no fixed policy on the Eastern Question; we have supported and abandoned the Turk; we have not conciliated the Christian races between the Carpathians and the Aegean; we are entangled in Egypt by thoughtless pledges which may lead to a fierce rupture with France. Our attitude, too, towards the colonising powers has been pusillanimous and shifty in the extreme: we have been duped and flouted by Germany; we have been thwarted by France, and have yielded to her; the surrender to the Boers was like that of the Romans in their decay. Nay, coming to our vital maritime interests, we have allowed our power at sea to be less than it should be: our navy at this moment is hardly a match for those of Russia and France combined; in the event of a great European war we might find the Mediterranean a beleaguered lake, in which we could not safely keep our fleets; it is far from certain that we could defend our commerce at sea, on which all depends, against a second League of Cambray. This is true, and pity 'tis it is true; but Mr. Wilkinson dwells too much, perhaps, on the incapacity and faults of our rulers, and does not sufficiently lay the blame on the nation. England has become a democratic state; she is no longer swayed by the aristocratic order which carried her through the great war with France; and it is to be feared—"absit omen"—every true man will exclaim—that her governments have only too well reflected the fickleness, the shortsightedness, the want of a fixed purpose, which have been the curse of democratic nations.

In his survey of the dangers that surround England, and of the necessities of the present time, Mr. Wilkinson has omitted one topic which seems to me of supreme importance. He has assumed that the concession of Home Rule to Ireland would have little or no effect on the state of the empire, and would not make its defence more difficult. This is not the place to argue the Home Rule question; but history refutes on this subject what Mr. Wilkinson lightly takes for granted, and naval and military opinion is against him. A self-governing and half-independent Ireland means a base of operations for our foes at our doors; the prospect of invasion made easy; a pistol pointed at our head and heart more threatening than a fortified Antwerp. This disregard of facts, only too significant of English ignorance of Irish affairs, is, I think, a well-marked blot on this work. Home Rule ought not to be pooh-poohed in an inquiry into the means to preserve the empire. For the rest, Mr. Wilkinson might have enlarged on our present resources at sea and on land, and on the state of the national armaments, in an examination of the question before him; but this was, perhaps, beyond the scope of his purpose. There is much in the philosophy of this book I cannot admire: it breathes the spirit of brute force in politics. The attitude, too, of Mr. Wilkinson towards Russia and France is hardly becoming; his view of what should be our continental policy and alliances is, I believe, mistaken. But the main and essential conception of this work—that England has inherited empire and must uphold it; that she has received a great trust and should be true to it; that if she neglects her national duties she must suffer in her national interests; and that weakness, timidity, and want of definite aim may be fatal in this all-important matter—is perfectly correct, and has been well worked out. Mr. Wilkinson, too, has ably and eloquently appealed to Englishmen to be up and stirring to keep England in her true place in the world; to disregard the seductions of false sentiment, of cowardice, of faction in this momentous question, and to make the sacrifices necessary to maintain the empire. He is entitled to high praise for his patriotic pleading.

WILLIAM O'CONNOR MORRIS.

The Invisible Playmate: a Story of the Unseen, with Appendices. By William Canton. (Isbister.)

This is a delightful little book, to which freshness and distinction are given by something other than its great literary beauty or even its intimate human touch. In the auriferous domain of the primitive relationships and emotions Mr. Canton has had the peculiar good fortune—a good fortune which is of necessity becoming constantly rarer—of hitting upon a lode of metal which, though not altogether unworked, has by the majority of "prospectors" been curiously neglected. From the palmy days of Greek and Hebrew literature down to the present hour motherhood and the mother instinct have occupied a prominent place in literature, and in the Christian centuries reverence for the mother of a divine Son has provided for them a still more prominent place in representative art. Nor has the winning grace associated with the dependent helplessness of childhood ever been ignored, though it is only of late years that the little child has come to the front, and claimed something approaching equality with the man and the woman as a subject for the art of literature. But the father and the instinct of fatherhood, which have surely played a not less interesting or important part in the great drama of human home-life, have been curiously neglected; by which I do not of course mean that they have been altogether set aside, but that such treatment as they have received has been for the most part indirect, allusive, occasional, fortuitous. There are, in obvious facts of physiology—to seek no further—sufficing reasons for the subordination of fatherhood to motherhood: a father-poem of equal intensity to such a mother-poem as Lord Tennyson's "Rizpah" would not perhaps be possible; but there is no sufficing reason why the instinct and emotions of paternity should have been passed by as things wholly or largely devoid of imaginative suggestion. Fatherhood is a great as well as a greatly neglected theme.

If, therefore, Mr. Canton had deliberately chosen it with a conscious apprehension of its unutilised potentialities of interest and effectiveness, he would have chosen wisely; but the true charm of "The Invisible Playmate" and its companion studies lies, I think, in the fact that there has been no deliberate choice at all—that the author has simply written what he was impelled to write, has said what was given him to say, has been led to a theme not by considering carefulness of thought, but by tyrannous prompting of incalculable instinct. Just as we say of one man that he is born a soldier, of a second that he is born a statesman, of a third that he is born a poet; so, on the evidence provided by this tiny book alone, we may say of Mr. Canton that he is born a father, and the book itself is less a product than a growth.

Criticism is compelled by tradition to give itself airs of adjudication, to set itself above its subject and say that it is defective here or there, so—mainly in order that I may be perfectly modish—I will hint a doubt whether Mr. Canton's title is quite inevitable, or indeed, in any true sense, really descriptive. What it refers to is merely an episode, and hardly a dominating episode. The story is simply this. The little child, the story of whose opening life is told in the father's letters, sees or fancies that she sees a child-companion, who is, of course, invisible to all the world besides. She plays with this "icicle baby" and talks of it, and is very anxious that it should not be hurt by careless hand or foot. Then the poor little woman falls ill; and when death is pressing hard on to the victory which is nearly won, the child declares that she has the "icicle baby" with her, and as the wasted little hand lifts a fold of the bed-clothes, the father's eyes are opened to the child's vision. The little bed holds not one, but two—the small creature who is just passing into the unknown, and an elder baby sister who has passed there years before, and whose passage has left with the father a horrible vacancy and a haunting fear. But for a moment he sees her; he knows that she lives, and that his other darling will live also, as he himself will live until he joins them.

"One glimpse of the Unseen (as he called it), and the embittered recollections of bereavement, the resentment, the distrust, the spirit of revolt were all swept into oblivion. Even the new bereavement had no sting. There were no anguish; there were no words of desolation. The man simply stood at gaze, stunned with amazement."

The story is very eerie, but very beautiful; and there are readers to whom it will appeal as strongly as I confess that—in Mr. Canton's telling of it—it appeals to me. But it must be admitted that it belongs to the mysterious world of the exceptional, whereas nine-tenths of the little book takes us into a pleasantly familiar world of observation and thought. The fatherhood in the book—at any rate in this earlier part of it—is rendered not directly but mediately: the father does not write about his own emotions, but we know them by a fine inference, drawn from observations too wistful and delicate not to be born of an overmastering love. The "little woman's" passion for having her hands held, her dawning feeling for form, and her still more developed feeling for rhythm, her struggles after a vocabulary, and her experiments in inflexion, which, as the observant father remarks, make her "more A. S. than the Anglo-Saxons themselves"—these and a dozen other buddings of the little soul are celebrated with a certain gusto of quiet rapture in which the very heart of fatherhood finds utterance.

And just as the lighter and graver sanities of paternity have their place in this first section, so do its fine irresponsible wise madneses make themselves heard in the second section, devoted to "Rhymes about a Little Woman." As I lack space for both comment and quotation, I choose the latter, and transcribe the following delicious bit of baby extravaganza:

"She was a treasure, she was a sweet;
She was the darling of the Army and the Fleet!

"When—she—smiled—
The crews of the line-of-battle ships went wild!

"When—she—cried—
Whole regiments reversed their arms and sighed!

"When she was sick, for her sake
The Queen took off her crown and sobbed as if her heart would break."

If any simple-minded person thinks that he or the man in the street could produce this gay nonsense at will, let him become wiser and sadder by making the attempt. True, it is either easy or impossible; but to most of us it would be the latter.

In a somewhat soberer fashion of fantasy is written the chapter "An Unknown Child-Poem," in which, with a fine imaginative Richterian handling, Mr. Canton follows the example set by Carlyle in Sartor Resartus, by boldly inventing the poet Altegans and his poem "Erster Schulgang" and commenting upon his vision of the world's crowd of little school-goers. It is a charming idea, embodied with a sweet naïveté of execution; but I must content myself to leave it for the seekers of good things, as I must also leave, with little more than a mention, the subtle and delightful study "At a Wayside Station," in which Mr. Canton grapples with what may be called the problem of perpetual childhood—the father's vision of the little boy or girl in the grown man or woman. It brings to a pleasant close a book which every reader, and especially every reader who has the good fortune of fatherhood, will find peculiarly lovable.

JAMES ASHCROFT NOBLE.

Geographical Discovery in the Interior of North America in its Historical Relations, 1534-1700. By Justin Winsor. (Sampson Low.)

SUBSTANTIALLY the present work is an abridgment, from Mr. Winsor's own pen, of the matter contained in the fourth volume of his well-known Narrative and Critical History of America.

Its general scope is indicated by two diagrams on the title-page. One of these reproduces in outline part of a map from the Ptolemy of 1511, showing nothing in the New World, to the north of Cuba and Hispaniola, but the island of Newfoundland, labelled "Terra Laboratorum," and separated by the Gulf of St. Lawrence from a fragment of continent labelled "Regalis-Domus" (Cortereal's Land). Neither Mexico nor Florida having as yet been discovered, the fragment in question represents all of the continent of North America at that time known to geographers. This map marks an important step in cosmography; for the Ptolemy of 1508 shows Newfoundland (Terra Nova) as a peninsula of Asia. The other diagram represents a map of 1684, in which the Atlantic seaboard of the United States and British America, together with the St. Lawrence, leading to the interior region of the great lakes, and the valleys of the Mississippi and its principal tributaries, including the Red and Arkansas Rivers, the Missouri, and the Ohio and Wabash, all appear very much as they are known at the present day. Mr. Winsor traces the gradual progress of geographical knowledge between these two dates, and illustrates it by an ample series of extracts from contemporary maps, many of which are already familiar to readers of the Narrative and Critical History.

We cannot but condole with Mr. Winsor on the fate which has befallen many of his favourite illustrations. For, as the pages of the present volume are of smaller size than the original work, it has been necessary to cut down the larger engravings; and the abhorred shears have sometimes been applied with Procrustean ruthlessness. Michael Lok's map, interesting to Englishmen as showing Meta Incognita and Fro-bisher's Inlet, besides the imaginary islands of "Brasil" and St. Brandan's on the route between Ireland and Newfoundland, loses its graceful scroll, containing the dedication to Sir Philip Sidney, save a few fragments of the fringe, which might be mistaken for imaginary islands in the Pacific; and there are others which have fared even worse. In compensation, the present volume contains a number of fresh illustrations, including some which replace with advantage the corresponding ones in the larger work. Thus, the section of the Cabot Mappemonde of 1544 (p. 53) at once contains more of the original, and follows it more closely, than its predecessor, though its effect is marred by a general darkening of the surface which might well have been dispensed with. Instead of the painter Hamel's foppish travesty of the Moncarnet portrait of Champlain, we have a vigorous woodcut from the original, which seems to bring the founder of Canada before us in his habit as he lived; while the grim head of Cartier, rudely sketched from the St. Malo picture, is replaced by a three-quarter portrait which fairly represents the original canvas, though its interest for the reader will probably be diminished by the admission now made that the latter is at best of "doubtful authenticity." Mr. Winsor is here over-cautious. Even were it an old picture at all, there would be about as much reason for supposing it to be a portrait of Cartier as for supposing that which hangs in the Municipio of Genoa to be a portrait of Columbus.

When Cartier, in 1534—following, as we think with Mr. Harris, whose ingenious argument to that effect Mr. Winsor cites without accepting it, the track of a Portuguese navigator—was exploring the bay of St. Lawrence, some hundreds of miles from any Iroquois settlement, and peopled, so far as its shores were inhabited at all, by wandering Algonquins, he came upon a party of Huron-Iroquois from Quebec engaged in mackerel fishing. Two youths of the party, taken back by Cartier to France, served in the expedition of the following year as guides and interpreters; and the common Iroquois noun by which they described the "village" to which they belonged, mistaken by the French for the proper name of the district, now designates the British dominions in North America. In 1535 they conducted the French explorer to their home, on the site where, seventy years later, Champlain founded the first French colony. From the canada, or "village," at Quebec the explorers ascended the stream to Montreal, then occupied by another flourishing settlement of Huron-Iroquois. As to this there can surely be no doubt, though Mr. Winsor appears to regard the matter as open to debate.

"Who the people were that Cartier met is a question upon which there has been some difference of opinion. The decision rests mainly upon the ethnic relations of the scant vocabulary which Cartier picked up and recorded. Dawson has held that the words in Cartier's list have Algonquin roots. The Abbé Faillon holds them to be Huron, and the weight of opinion seems to sustain the abbé" (p. 31).

With all due respect to these eminent authorities, we must remark that Charlevoix, writing a century and a-half ago, puts the matter more correctly than either. Cartier's vocabularies—for there are two, appended to the narratives of the first and of the second voyage respectively—contain both Algonquin and Huron-Iroquois words. One or two words in each list are Algonquin, and some of those which cannot be positively identified resemble Algonquin rather than Iroquois. But a very large proportion of the words, including the numerals, are indisputably Iroquois, and could not possibly be mistaken for Algonquin by any one acquainted with these languages; while the majority of the uncertain words have a cast which is Iroquois rather than Algonquin, and might well have belonged to the Huron-Iroquois dialect, though now no longer recognisable. Probably the misconception arose from Cartier, or his editor, having described his vocabularies as simply representing "the language of New France." Are we, then, to suppose that Cartier and his companions did not know the difference between Algonquin and Iroquois? This can hardly be, for in some instances the narratives furnish us with an Algonquin and an Iroquois word for the same thing. Nor can it be supposed that explorers who distinguished the two nations by differences of physique, of dress, of mode of life, and of local distribution, were incapable of recognising the scarcely less obvious distinction of speech: we have, in fact, Cartier's word for it that this distinction was perfectly familiar to them. Even had the Hurons not been in contact with Algonquin tribes on their northern border, it would have been natural for them to pick up a few Algonquin words in their annual fishing expeditions to the mouth of the St. Lawrence; and the presence of such words in Cartier's vocabularies surely cannot throw the slightest doubt on the ethnical relations of the people of "Canada" and Hochelaga. We should have thought, moreover, that the character of the elaborately fortified village of Hochelaga had something to do with the decision of the question, if it were a debatable one at all. Can any instance be adduced in which large villages, similarly fortified, were erected by an Algonquin tribe north of the Iroquois area? Lastly, while Cartier's vocabularies are not the best of evidence as to the language spoken at Hochelaga—whether his two interpreters refused to accompany him, and where, consequently, he had great difficulty in understanding and making himself understood—the few words which he picked up there and introduced into his narrative not only show no traces of Algonquin, but are recognisably Iroquois, as is the name of the place itself, which should apparently be written Otstenrakta—"By-the-Side-of-the-Mountain".

Seventy years passed before any important advance was made beyond the point reached by Cartier in his second voyage. The rapid extension of geographical knowledge which followed upon the establishment of permanent stations for the fur trade at Tadoussac, Trois Rivières, and Montreal is probably due rather to the development of this profitable commerce and of mission work founded upon it, than to the psychological cause which Mr. Winsor describes as "the yearnings of the geographical sense in its uneasy moods." Before the thirty years of Champlain's fruitful labours were ended, explorers had reached not only the farthest shores of the great lakes, but the headwaters of the streams by which these were fed; and tidings were heard of a Mississippi or Big-Water at no great distance westwards, to be reached by way of its tributary the Wisconsin, out of which Joliet and Marquette, forty years later, floated their canoes into the mighty river itself. Marquette rightly judged it to have its outlet in the Gulf of Mexico, though the long-cherished hope that it would be found to discharge into the Pacific by way of the Gulf of California was not finally abandoned until La Salle navigated it to its mouth in 1682.

Mr. Winsor's volume is replete with information, carefully compiled and methodically arranged. It is admirably printed and bound; the illustrations are most attractive, and there is an excellent index. It should be in the hands of every student of American history, and will be especially interesting to Canadian readers.

E. J. PAYNE.

SOME GERMAN WORKS ON SHAKSPEARE.

Shakspeare. Fünf Vorlesungen aus dem Nachlass von Bernhard ten Brink. (Strassburg: Trübner.)

"FÜHRENDE GEISTER."—VI. Band: Shakspeare. Von Alois Brandl. (Dresden: Ehlermann.)

Die Hamlet - Tragödie Shakespeares. Von Richard Loening. (Stuttgart: Cotta.)

THE three books named above have little in common but the subject they deal with and the language in which they are written. All are the work of distinguished men, and each is admirable in its kind; but the kinds are extremely diverse. The third—a piece of massive specialism, exhaustive in matter and subtle in style—alone corresponds to the familiar English preconceptions about German work. The first is rather in the French manner—a rapid sketch, devoid of learned display, but full of stimulating suggestion and of luminous coups d'œil; and the second resembles the best English work—a comprehensive, yet concise, survey of a wide field, full of facts, and conveying them in a style habitually fresh and bright.

The first-named book would scarcely have been published had not the death of its brilliant author forbidden us to look for that more serious discussion of Shakspeare which his university lectures had already made a part of the intellectual capital of a host of enthusiastic students, and which the next volume of his Litteraturgeschichte would have presented to the world. What we have here is merely five lectures delivered before a popular audience at Frankfort in 1888. They are well characterised by the editor, Prof. E. Schröder, an old student of ten Brink, in his very judicious preface:

"Whoever cares more to be told the newest thing in specialist discussion than to listen to a Shakspeare scholar who united to the richest philological and historical culture a unique gift of poetic appreciation had better lay these lectures down. They are not an introduction to Shakspeare literature, but an introduction to the poet himself."

The five lectures handle the subject with imposing breadth. The first deals with "the Poet and the Man," dismissing the "Bacon-Shakspeare theory" after a rather too deferential hearing, with the apt remark that

"Of all the fatuities of which the Baconians have been guilty, none perhaps equals their view that the greatness and profundity of Shakspeare's work is incompatible with his position as an actor and member of a stage company. As if the greatest dramatist of all time were even conceivable without that exact knowledge of the boards which only long practice brings."

The second, on the succession of the plays, travels lightly over familiar ground. The most remarkable are the last three—Shakspeare as a dramatist, as a comic, and as a tragic poet, where that glowing delight in great art, that vivid apprehension of the working of genius which makes even a grammatical treatise alluring and alive in ten Brink's hands, have full scope. We may note especially the comparison between "Romeo and Juliet" and Arthur Brooke's poems (p. 83f), that between the comedy of Shakspeare and Molière (p. 103f.), and the review of the great tragedies (p. 138f). And everywhere we feel the touch of one who was no mere Shakspeare specialist, but ranged as a master over the whole domain of English literature—of one, too, whose scholarship was only the instrument by which he expressed the large aspirations and enthusiasms of a great humorist.

Like ten Brink's book, that of his successor, Prof. Brandl, is intended for the cultivated, rather than for the learned public; for that section of them, however, which prefers a compact, well-written summary of facts to an eloquent causerie. In a little volume, of about the size of one of our "Men of Letters" series, he has contrived to give a singularly full and luminous view not only of Shakspeare's personality—his "Mind and Art"—but incidentally of the main developments of Shakspeare criticism. The book has method, and it has style; it is the work of a man schooled in all the ways of scientific literary history, but at the same time abounding in fresh native literary force, fine observation and knowledge of the world and of nature—inured to the lamp, but familiar with the sunlight and the open air. The arrangement is essentially chronological: a plan which has the defect of often encumbering the course of the narrative with the inevitable discussion and criticism of the separate works, but the more than counterbalancing advantage of enabling each play or group of plays to be discussed in close connexion with the outer and inner conditions under which apparently it arose. These groups show considerable novelty of treatment. Prof. Dowden's well-known periods, "In the World" and "Out of the Depths," are represented by three groups, less picturesquely but not less suggestively labelled the "Falstaff," "Hamlet," and "Lear" periods. The second of these includes, besides "Hamlet," "Julius Caesar," and "Othello," the comedies "As You Like It," "Twelfth Night," "All's Well," and "Measure for Measure." One may question the rightness of detaching the first two from the other "joyous" comedy, "Much Ado." No doubt Jaques foreshadows Hamlet; but it is difficult to find any other approach in this gay and brilliant comedy to the despondency or "world-weariness" which is the dominant note of the Hamlet period; and one must take the love-sorrows of Viola, Olivia, and the duke seriously indeed to detect this gloomy round-tone amid the uproarious fun of "Twelfth Night." That "breach of brotherly love is the elegiac ground-tone of 'As You Like It'" is true, we think, only in the sense in which the deadly animosity of Ephesus and Syracuse is the "elegiac ground-tone" of the "Comedy of Errors." From first to last, it may surely be said, Shakspeare's comedy is prone to deal with potentially tragic situations. On the other hand, the grouping of the three tragedies together under the rubric, "World-corruption and reformers," is very suggestive; Hamlet, Brutus, and Othello are connected by a real analogy—they act, with pain and reluctance, as ministers and executants of a supposed Right; while Othello, the latest of the three, is no doubt connected by his more purely passionate nature with the tragedies of sheer passion which follow and are here grouped apart. The reforming Duke in "Measure for Measure" also works in well with this conception. The treatment of the separate dramas, though necessarily brief, is always suggestive and interesting. There is little or nothing of "aesthetic criticism," few expressions of admiration, no fantastic arabesques of style; but the growth of the play out of its sources, its plot, its interpretation, are concisely and effectively discussed, with frequent illuminating sidelights of literary lore or theatrical reminiscence. We think that the book ought to be translated, as being on the whole superior to anything similar that we possess. Prof. Dowden's admirable Primer is now several years old, his recent Introduction does not aim at the same completeness, and Dr. Furnivall's Introduction in the "Leopold Shakspeare," though full of good points, is deficient in breadth of criticism. It is unfortunate that Prof. Brandl's reputation among us has suffered through the demerits of the translation of his book on Coleridge, which handles several aspects of the poet neglected, or purposely ignored, by all his other biographers. We trust that it is superfluous to call the attention of students of Middle English to his full and compact bibliographical summary of that literature in Paul's Grundriss.

The third of the books above named is far above the average of the ordinary "New solution of the Hamlet problem." Its author, Professor of Law at Jena, approaches the matter as a jurist rather than as a Shaksperian; and this of itself adds interest to his work. The domain of Shakspeare criticism is crowded with critical monstrosities, and in no department of it has the keen dialectic of a trained legal mind a more legitimate province than in the criticism of "Hamlet." The first section of Prof. Loenig's volume (pp. 1-144) is the most valuable critical history known to us of Hamlet criticism in Germany. From the first crude notions about "Hamlet," to Goethe, and from Goethe to our own time, the Hamlet theories of the past are summarised, discussed, and dismissed with scrupulous but rigorous justice; and even the agnostic, who seeks refuge from interminable controversy in the faith that "Hamlet" is an insoluble riddle, is sternly driven from his retreat. "For insoluble riddles and undiscoverable mysteries there is simply no place in a work of art that deserves the name." Perhaps, without disrespect to Prof. Loenig, one may say that that is a conception of a work of art more natural to a jurist than to a poet, or to one profoundly versed in the ways of poets. It is the defect of his book, in our view, to abstract "Hamlet" too much from Shakspeare's personality, and from the outer and inner conditions under which he wrote it—to deal with it as an isolated and independent working out of a problem, to the nature of which it is supposed to furnish an exhaustive clue. It is characteristic that Prof. Loenig emphasises the juridical elements in the action—the "providential" punishment of the king's crime through the medium of Hamlet and in spite of Hamlet's reluctance; so that the play is in a sense a "Schicksalstragödie," without, however, as he is careful to point out, ceasing to be a "tragedy of character," since that "reluctance" of Hamlet is the ground of the whole action. This "reluctance," the central topic of dispute in Hamlet discussion, is by Prof. Loening effectually despoiled of intellectual and moral elements. The delicate and sensitive Hamlet of Goethe, the thought-oppressed Hamlet of Schlegel and Coleridge, the conscientious Hamlet of Ulrici, have all been ruthlessly thrown overboard, and nothing remains but a Hamlet constitutionally indisposed to vigorous action—a "lazy" Hamlet.

"He did not neglect his duty, as Goethe thought, because it was too difficult for his nature, but solely because it was too troublesome, too laborious, and thence unpleasant and repulsive."

But is the "lazy" Hamlet a tragic figure? Whatever may be thought, however, of the conclusion, Prof. Loening's book contains a profusion of valuable incidental criticism. We may particularly thank him for his admirable treatment of the "madness" question, and for his defence of the grievously maligned Ophelia.

C. H. HERFORD.

NEW NOVELS.

The Real Charlotte. By E. C. Somerville and Martin Ross. In 3 vols. (Ward & Downey.)

No Hero, but a Man. By Annie Thomas (Mrs. Pender-Cudlip). In 3 vols. (White.)

For Love and Liberty. By Alfred Harcourt. In 2 vols. (Chapman & Hall.)

The Translation of a Savage. By Gilbert Parker. (Methuen.)

Misther O'Ryan. By Edward McNulty. (Edward Arnold.)

Jack's Partner and other Stories. By Stephen Fiske. (Gay & Bird.)

The Diary of a Nobody. By George Grossmith and Weedon Grossmith. (Bristol: Arrowsmith.)

COLLABORATION, to justify its doubtful expediency, should entirely conceal itself. The ancient example of Beaumont and Fletcher, the modern one of Messrs. Besant and Rice, are each difficult to follow. It is therefore gratifying to find The Real Charlotte a whole book. If two brains there were, the idea is one and complete in itself. Two minds have conceived in the same manner the creation and development of one character. This character, Charlotte Mullen, would appear to be an attempt to realise the ultimate condition of a woman who, according to the old ideals, had failed in life. Charlotte loves, in such fashion as she can, but her love returns upon herself as something else. She never marries; she has no domestic ties; but circumstances turn her into a landowner and man of business. Given these conditions in a woman of violent nature, under whose not very admirable social polish lurks a coarse, hungry, self-seeking real ego, and what can the end be but unsatisfactory? Returned love would probably have saved her. Indeed, as long as there was a chance that the affection and money she had expended might come back to her, the real Charlotte remained in abeyance. It was only when she was undeceived by a cruel disenchantment that her inner nature arose in its strength, and Charlotte showed herself the selfish and brutal woman she was. To say more would be to tell the story, which has its own surprises and is worked out with considerable skill. Many readers will, perhaps, give the place of heroine to Francie, Charlotte's penniless little protégée, a much-beloved person with the sweet flower-face of extreme youth and thoughtlessness. Francie is one type of the Irish girl: ignorant, pleased with everybody, always ready to fall in love, with a mouth full of picturesque flatteries and childlike rudenesses, speaking an atrocious Dublin accent, but in spite of all utterly fascinating. How she flits to her fate—soaring, sinking, dipping like the veriest butterfly—is a tragic tale enough. Of other Irish types there are excellent specimens throughout the book. The style is pleasantly fresh, and the story distinctly one to be read and not soon forgotten.

Half the title of Mrs. Pender-Cudlip's book—No Hero, but a Man—is undeniably true, but the other half is only dubiously so. Persons in male habiliments walk her pages; but there is hardly one, and that possible one is certainly not the central personage, who can with full justice be called a man. The book shows marks of great haste, both in matter and in manner; and any special criticism might therefore seem harsh. A fat, florid, boastful man, who dies suddenly in a railway carriage, after having just had time to tell his name with something of his history to the as-yet-mutually-unknown hero and heroine, is not a promising beginning. Nor is it encouraging when the hero—one uses the word perforce—assumes the dead man's name and luggage, and hands him over, a nameless corpse, to the officials at the next station. Mrs. Pender-Cudlip succeeds better with her women characters than with her men. The well-developed lady of middle age, who gets up private theatricals in order to pose as a statue of Venus in a love-sick poet's chamber, and has a tact for scandal, is a decided hit in the way of character-sketching. But whether from haste or from other causes the book is decidedly poor in quality.

A glaring red and yellow cover is doubtless chosen as representing the sentiments expressed in Mr. Harcourt's For Love and Liberty. The yellow design, moreover, turns out on close inspection to be a sketch map of the particular district in Spain in which the hero and heroine, and the attendant "supers," move and act and suffer. But the interest of the book does not centre so much in the handsome and high-miued hero, or in his fair Donna Mercedes (the little mystery of whose parentage is easily cleared up) as in the really praiseworthy sketch of the Armada from the point of view of the Spanish. The hero sails in one of the Spanish ships, with the promise of a command in England, and is taken prisoner with a suitable assortment of friends, and brought to London, where he interviews Queen Elizabeth. One realises in Mr. Harcourt's chapters the inevitable hopelessness of the expedition. He adds several special dabs of pitch to the blackness with which history has invested the character of Philip. The scheme, as we know, was all Philip's, and the failure was entirely of his causing. Mr. Harcourt makes us understand how hard it was, up to the last, for Spanish sailors to believe that the holy and invincible Armada could be beaten by "these heretics," "these islanders." There are some good things in the book—notably the hero's adventures in the Holy Office, and the appalling fate of the Inquisitioner.

Mr. Gilbert Parker has taught his readers to expect much from him, and in The Translation of a Savage he does not disappoint them. It is a story in which the swain is jilted at the outset; whereupon he at once plunges into a new match and an unpremeditated marriage. It happened in this wise. Frank Armour is out in Canada, where he learns from an English newspaper that his ladylove has married somebody else. In the passion of the moment—a passion (be it confessed) which brandy has helped to evoke—he straightway espouses the daughter of an Indian chief. She is a beauty, a brave, heroic young woman, with Scotch blood in her veins; and she makes a grand figure in her blanket and moccasins, and with her greased black hair. In this state her reckless husband hurries her across the American continent, and ships her off to England, for his fine old father, the general, his rather ordinary sister and mother, and his clever and interesting brother Richard, to take to their respective hearts. The only intimation this much-tried family has had of her coming is a letter in which the bridegroom tells them that, knowing their wish that he should marry "acceptably," he has "married into the aristocracy, the oldest aristocracy of America"; that he has also married wealth, since his bride is "rich in native unspoiled virtues"; and that they "could not cavil at her education, for she knew several languages—aboriginal languages—of the north." After this supreme act of revenge, the young gentleman lies quiet for some years in Canada, while his wife, Lali, with much sorrow and tribulation, but also with much heroism, learns the new life set before her in England. Whether because of her "good Scotch blood," or of her more exalted aboriginal ancestry, Lali adapts herself with wonderful quickness to her new surroundings, and, what is more difficult, to the mental and moral ideals of refined English society. But there is truth in the idea that it is only the outer differences—which are easily surmounted—that make one true man or woman, of whatever race, seem unlike another. Nobility of nature is the same in any garb. Frank Armour has reason enough at last to rejoice in the wife he has wedded, but it may be a nice question whether he suffers enough for his dastardly trick. Needless to say, the story is full of cleverness.

Misther O'Ryan is Irish of the Irish, yet it is distinct from such purely Irish books as The Real Charlotte, noticed above, and Mrs. Hinkson's Cluster of Nuts, which was reviewed by the present writer in the ACADEMY a few weeks ago. It is as though Mr. McNulty had deliberately severed himself from his own people, and drawn them, trait by trait and word by word, from the outside; whereas the authors of those other books have identified themselves with their characters to the last degree. The picture is true to life in each case, but the subjective method is the sympathetic one.

Without a word of direct criticism, Mr. McNulty yet does criticise his Irishmen for you. He knows to a fraction how Irish they are, and has much pleasure in pointing it out to you, though he gives you no flavour of that quality which Mrs. Hinkson calls "kindly Irish of the Irish." His characters include the inflated orator and agitator, O'Ryan himself; a priest who has won the love of his people, but who is nevertheless a hard-hearted, hard-drinking tyrant; and the usual helpless and picturesque old man, so commonly the victim of the moonlight assassin. But of the sweet fascination of Irish blarney and the glamour cast by Irish eyes there is none. There is much cleverness in the way in which Misther O'Ryan arrives on the scene at Ballycusha, a ragged tramp, and by sheer force of character and eloquence of the Irish Micawber type commands the situation, forces the "Lague" on the people, and spreads dissension and destruction everywhere around him. There is also real pathos in the figure of "ould Paddy, plase yir honour's ladyship," who works in the garden for what he can get, and crawls home to that "poor dark craythur," his wife, whom he solaces by inventing and pretending to read to her letters from their son Larry in America.

The stories in Mr. Stephen Fiske's book are all more or less slight in construction, save "An American Ghost," which has detail and solidity; but with a sure hand they touch on pathos, humour, and passion. There is apparently a kind of man that grows freely in America—a man brave and true and clever, but simple as a child, and reverent towards women. That kind of man Mr. Fiske knows how to draw. In fact, if you are to judge of him from stories, carefully marking off the knifer of the Far West, there is something abnormally simple about the average American man. In Mr. Fiske's stories—which are thus differentiated from the ordinary American story—the woman is vague, remote, charming, but her part is a secondary one.

The Diary of a Nobody (the handiwork of Messrs. George and Weedon Grossmith) is that of Mr. Charles Pooter, a city clerk, who looks up with awe to his chief, the great Mr. Perkupp, loves his "dear wife Carrie," and hopes as the best end of all things that his son Lupin may get taken into "the office." Day by day the artless account goes on, clever in its very baldness, giving us such entries as this:—"Planted mustard and cress, and went to bed at nine;" or this, after an insult from Lupin, "I left the room with silent dignity, but caught my foot in the mat." Mr. Pooter is an estimable grown-up Verdant Green among city clerks; and though there be few such persons, life doubtless has its satisfactions for them. Mr. Weedon Grossmith is to be particularly congratulated on the way in which he has caught the spirit of the narrative, and made it fixed and visible in his drawings.

GEORGE COTTERELL.

TWO TRANSLATIONS FROM THE GREEK.

The Idylls of Theocritus. Translated into English Verse by James Henry Hallard. (Longmans.) Mr. Hallard has undertaken his pleasant though difficult task with his nation's seriousness, and yet with a good deal of grace and some audacities. As examples of the first characteristic, we may instance one of his reasons against the tempting idea of rendering the Doric strain into "Scots," with its broad vowels—that one cannot "imagine a Lothian shepherd pouring forth a passionate song about a beautiful youth"—or his elaborate method of writing English hexameters without the usual "gross, false quantities," which he "endeavours to avoid by never letting the second or third syllable of a foot (when such syllable ends in two different consonants, or when it ends in one consonant and the next word begins with a consonant also) remains short, unless one of those consonants be h, w, y, or one of the liquids, or unless the syllable in question, ending in a consonant and coming before a consonant, be an easily slurred vocable like and, with, &c."

As examples of the boldness and grace of his performance, we would cite the great variety of metres—none badly and some very well written—which he employs, his principle being "to use blank verse for dialogue and description, anapaests for lyric passages, and hexameters for narrative" (Pref. p. ix). As we all know, he has formidable rivals—Calverley in verse, Mr. Lang in prose:

νίκη μὲν οὐδαλλος, ἀνῆσσαντο δ' ἐγένοντο—but Mr. Hallard is not unworthy of their company, though we cannot hold his mastery of blank verse to be equal to Calverley's. Here, however, is an example—let our readers judge of its merits—from Id. 21.

"The gear of their hard handicraft
Beside them lay, the creels and rods and hooks,
The weed-bodraggled bait, the lines and weels,
The bow-nets made of rush, the cords, the oars,
And an old cable set on prows. Beneath
Their head a matting scant; for coverlet
Their clothes. These were the fishers' only means,
Their only wealth; nor bolt, nor door, nor dog
Had they, and all such things were deemed by them
Superfluous; for Want their watcher was.
No neighbour came anigh them, but the sea
Came softly rippling up a narrow creek
Close to their cabin."

What is wanting here? Something, we think, of the pathos, the prolonged sigh, of the original. Theocritus' hexameter seems to breathe from his lips; Mr. Hallard's blank verse scans—not badly, by any means, but without any sign of natural gift for melody. Here is a specimen of his hexameters (Id. xvi., "The Poet's Plea," p. 81):

"Dead men's wealth shall be spent by the quick
That are heirs to their riches;
But 'twere an equal task on the shore of the ocean to number
Waves that a wind may drive to the beach with surge of the green sea,
Yea, or from bricks to remove their colour in limpid water,
As to entreat that man whom hunger of pelf hath smitten.
Farwell, such! May their wealth of gold and silver be endless,
Ay, and a craving lust for more be their master for ever!"

In its way this is good—but it is the hexameter of Longfellow rather than that of Kingsley. For our own part, we think Mr. Hallard happier in his rhyming measures—as in Id. 24, where he follows Mr. Morris' story. The snakes are creeping to the cradle of Heracles and Iphicles—

"And from their eyne leapt forth an evil flame,
And from their mouths evenom'd ooze did fall,
As ever nearer to the babes they came
With flickering tongues. But Zeus, who knoweth all,
Wakened the boys; his glory filled the hall,
And loud screamed Iphicles when he espied
Those monsters' teeth above the buckler wide."

It is curious, we think, that the hand which has rendered the hexametric lament of Polyphemus (Id. vi) into elegiacs with such skill (pp. 34-5), has not reproduced the actual elegiacs of Theocritus' eighth Idyll, in the same metre: the famous μή μοι γὰρ Πέλοπος, κ.τ.λ., seems to "pipe and whistle in its sound" when rendered thus—

"The land of Pelops is naught to me, Nor Croesus' bountiful store of gold," &c.

On p. 11, we wonder why Εὐδαιμόνιος becomes Euthydemos: nor do we believe that παραιβάτης (Id. 3, l. 32, p. 16) is a proper name: nor (p. 66) that Κλεόνικος should be scanned in English as a quadrisyllable. On pp. 60-1, "love thee" and "above me" are bad rhymes, and (p. 88) "Cilicians" and "Carians" are worse: τὸ πᾶν λίθος (Id. 3, l. 18) is feebly translated "pure loveliness"; and, at the end of the same Idyll, is it correct to identify Iasion with Jason?

Oedipus at Colonus. By Arthur Compton Auchmuty. (Simpkin, Marshall & Co.) This is an attempt, and a very interesting attempt, to render Greek choric measures in syllabic facsimile. The iambic part of the play is wisely rendered into ordinary blank verse, in which Mr. Auchmuty shows considerable skill: he rarely falls into the prosaic, though somewhat more often into the doubtfully rhythmical. Here is a specimen—(p. 29, ll. 607-623)—where the dignity of the original and the art of blank verse are favourably exhibited.

"Oed.—Dear son of Aegæus, to the gods alone
Befalls not ever to grow old or die;
But all things else almighty Time confounds.
Earth languisheth, and the corporeal frame:
Faith dies, and faithlessness breaks forth and buds;
And never the same spirit constant still
'Twixt friend and friend, city and city, bides;
But, now for these, now those, or rather or late,
Their honey turns to gall, then friends again.
And, though in Thebes to-day, 'twixt her and thee,
Full summer reigns, Time, in his myriad march,
A myriad nights and days engendereth;
Wherein the present concord of right hands
Their spears, on some slight plea, shall toss to the winds:
When, slumbering in the grave's seclusion cold,
Their warm blood by and by my corse shall drink;
Be Zeus still Zeus, and his Apollo true."

The blank verse is not all at this level: e.g., on p. 75, ll. 1627-8, the mysterious summons to Oedipus quite stumbles and limps in the second line:—

"What he! When, Oedipus, when? Why linger we
To go? Hath been slackness with thee this while."

It can be scanned—but then, the awkward inversion, the cadence, the heavy monosyllables, are not weighty and mysterious, but merely flat and clumsy, and quite unlike the original. So again (p. 77, l. 1666):

οὐκ ἔν παρείμην οἶσι μὴ δοκῶ φρονεῖν is not gracefully turned,

"I care not to court those misdoubt me sane."

But the "experiment in metre," as Mr. Auchmuty calls it on his title-page, is the endeavour to render the choric odes, &c., with syllabic correspondence. The difficulty, of course, is to make the lines read like any English poetry that gives any sense of beauty to an English reader—it is not, be it remembered, a question of equivalent, but of counterpart. Here is a specimen, taken from the famous chorus (ll. 668 κ.τ.λ. p. 32):

"She, the clear-throated, trills her plaint,
The sweet nightingale—haunts she most
Here, deep-buried in green glades.
The dark wine-coloured ivy here,
Hers the god's unapproached bower,
Myriad in fruitage and berry, un-sun-lighted, un-wind-disturb'd when storm blasts
Rage all round, where the lord of wine,
Lord of mirth, Dionysus, rangeth still, 'mong
Th' young goddesses once who nursed him."

It is interesting; but more than this will be required to persuade us that the charm of a Greek chorus can be thus transferred, syllabically, to English. Nevertheless, in both the choric and the comic parts, the experiment was worth trying, see especially pp. 6-12, 24-6, 57-8; and the closing lament of Antigone and Ismene. In addition to the misprint given on the fly-leaf, we think that there must be one on p. 23, l. 3: "Invoked" makes no sense, query, "invoke." On p. 31, l. 12, should not "thither" be "hither"? On p. 26, l. 2, "but and" sounds queerly; and, on p. 27, l. 10, we do not like the modernism of "help to bring him through" for συνεκσάξεν.

SOME ECONOMICAL BOOKS.

The Joint Standard: a Plain Exposition of Monetary Principles and of the Monetary Controversy. By Elijah Helm. (Macmillans.) This work is from the pen of a Manchester man of business, who has adopted the bimetallic faith and is able to give a reason for it. Like other people, he gives freshest illustration when he draws on his own knowledge of the world of business. The most striking points are, perhaps: (a) that there has been rather a restriction than an extension of the system of credit, and hence to that extent no relaxation of the strain on gold. "The internal trade of the United Kingdom is now done upon a prompt cash basis to an extent not dreamed of twenty years ago" (p. 13, cf. p. 63, &c.). In the Indian trade payments have become much prompter (p. 134, &c.). (b) That "the prevailing mental mood in all commercial markets in gold standard countries has been that of persistent selling" (p. 94). The sellers have been more anxious than the buyers and prices have gone down. The cause is "monetary unsettlement" (p. 95). (c) That on the whole Lancashire has not lost its advantages in the trade with India (p. 146 seq., especially pp. 150, 152, 156, cf. 169). It remains to be said that the author still assumes that prices have not risen in India with the fall in silver—an assumption now doubtful. He boldly faces the bimetallicist's chief crux—Wages (ch. xiii., cf. p. 36). He confesses that rates of wages have not fallen; but he contends that actual earnings are smaller, the unemployed multiplying upon us, also that low prices do not imply a proportionately low cost of living, and there is a heavier burden in the shape of grants from provident funds for unemployed unionists, and that dull trade actually leads in many cases to an extension of works and therewith a greater demand for labour (p. 120). By and by, however, the labourer's turn must come (p. 121). "The struggle for the 'living wage' is essentially a struggle against low prices of commodities" (p. 124).

The Distribution of Wealth. By Prof. J. R. Commons, of Indiana. (Macmillans.) This is one of a group of writings for which Prof.

J. B. Clark and S. Patten may be said to have been responsible, and in which the American economists seem to compete with the Austrians. There is risk that, from fear of overlooking the 'elements' of the doctrine of value cost and supply, &c., we may give ourselves too much of them, and waste our strength in vain repetitions of the economical alphabet. This particular book is not beyond such a criticism; and the writer seems to have felt this, for he introduces, to relieve the old commonplaces, a novel dictum of his own: "Soil is capital, and its returns are governed by the same law as that which governs returns from machinery" (p. 137). Yet Prof. Common has good remarks to make on "diminishing returns": the force of the principle is, that the values are diminishing and not the products (p. 145). This may not be the whole truth, but it points to an aspect of the case that needs more consideration than it usually gets. Prof. Common sees in it the whole question of Distribution (p. 144).

The Evolution of Modern Capitalism: a Study of Machine Production. By J. A. Hobson. (Walter Scott.) This is a short history of "the structural changes in modern industry," together with an attempt to study them "as a subject-matter in process of organic change" (Preface). The historical portion is, on the whole, non-controversial. From the nature of the case it is not original; but the sources have been well used, and the sketch does credit to the author. The most recent authorities, American and German, as well as English, are freely used, both in this history and in the description which follows of modern business as it now is. The diagrams are a good feature of the book. Mr. Hobson dwells on the darker sides of monopolies and "machine production" with evident preference; but he is more candid than avowed Socialists, while he has obviously sent his pitcher very often to their well. From his previous writings we are led to expect a few crotchets, and they duly appear. "The amount of present 'saving' which is justified from the point of view of the community is strictly limited" (p. 199). If by this it is only meant that we may easily put too much into fixed capital, the reply is that the excess may safely be put into capital that is not fixed. The remarks of Mr. Elijah Helm on the subject of over production (Joint Standard, p. 88 seq.) may be commended to Mr. Hobson's notice; but we fear from his retention of the notion in a second book that it has become with him a fixed idea, like Mr. Macleod's "credit is capital." It seems to be an old fallacy of Malthus, unseasonably revived and not without capacity for mischief. Curiously enough, luxury, interpreted as many "real legitimate wants" (p. 284) making a high standard of living, is to Mr. Hobson a desideratum just as it was to Malthus. By spending time on this rediscovery, of which any of his economic histories would have informed him, Mr. Hobson has less to give to more important matters. It is strange to find in his book no recognition of the importance of the co-operative movement, either for production or for consumption. We are told that industrial partnerships as well as trades unions are helpless against monopoly, and the State must interfere (p. 358). But the great wholesale societies are in their own way quite as remarkable a phase of "modern capitalism" as the Standard Oil Trust of America, which gets ample attention (ch. vi.).

NOTES AND NEWS.

IN accordance with the general hope, Mr. S. R. Gardiner is continuing his History of England in the Seventeenth Century beyond the death of Charles I. The first volume of a new series, dealing with the Commonwealth and the Protectorate, will be published by Messrs. Longmans & Co. in the course of the autumn.

MESSRS. LONGMANS also announce a continuation of the Memoirs of the Verney Family during the Civil War, compiled by Lady Verney from the letters at Claydon House, and illustrated with portraits and woodcuts.

MR. EDWARD DICEY has written an account of his visit to Bulgaria in the spring of the present year, which will be published by Mr. John Murray, under the title of A Pleasant State.

MR. HALL CAINE'S new novel, "The Manxman," which has been running serially in the Queen, will be published in book form by Mr. Heinemann, probably in the course of the next month. In view of the recent discussion about three-volume novels at the circulating libraries, it is interesting to learn that it has been decided to issue the book in a single volume, of more than 400 well-printed pages. Messrs. Appleton & Co. have purchased the American rights; and the book will also appear simultaneously in the colonies, at Leipzig (in the "English Library" continental form), and in a German translation.

A SECOND volume of the "Fur and Feather" Series, dealing with The Grouse, will be issued by Messrs. Longmans before the end of the present month. The same contributors treat the same subjects as in the case of The Partridge. The Rev. H. A. Macpherson writes on natural history; Mr. A. J. Stuart-Wortley on shooting; and Mr. George Saintsbury on cookery. The illustrations are by Mr. Stuart-Wortley and Mr. A. Thorburn.

MR. JOHN MURRAY will publish at once, in time for the tourist season, a new edition of his Handbook for Scotland, thoroughly revised and in great part re-written, with detailed information for the use of pedestrians, and an entirely fresh equipment of maps.

MESSRS. MACMILLAN & Co. will issue immediately a History of Rome to the battle of Actium, by Mr. Evelyn S. Shuckburgh, illustrated with maps and plans.

MISS E. H. HICKEY has undertaken to write a short preface to the new edition of the Hon. Roden Noel's Livingstone in Africa, with illustrations by Mr. Hume Nisbet, which Messrs. Ward & Downey have in the press.

MESSRS. BLADES, EAST & BLADES have in preparation a work by Mr. J. T. Danson, entitled Our Next War. The book will present the altered conditions of maritime war likely to result from the changes of the last eighty years in our shipping, warlike and commercial, and in the relations of the maritime powers to each other. It will also show the premiums recorded in the voyage books of several underwriters eminent at Lloyd's during the twelve years 1805-16, and distributed over the several lines of our commerce during that period.

MESSRS. LONGMANS & Co. announce for publication this week a volume of school sermons, preached in the chapel of Bradfield College by the warden and headmaster, the Rev. Dr. H. B. Gray. The title chosen is Men of Like Passions: being Characters of some Bible Heroes.

As a memorial of Miss C. M. Tucker—the Zenana missionary so well-known as A. L. O. E.—a Lady of England—the Christian Literature Society for India are raising a special fund of £500, in order to republish (with illustrations) all her works for Indian readers, and to translate them into a larger number of languages than is at present the case.

MR. ELLIOT STOCK announces for early publication Seven Love Songs and Other Verses, by Ellis Walton; and a drama in five acts, entitled Elizabeth and Leicester.

MESSRS. SAMPSON LOW, MARSTON & Co. are including in their popular half-crown library, uniform with the works of Mr. R. D. Blackmore, Mr. William Black, Mr. Clark Russell, and others, two novels by Mr. Joseph Hatton: The Old House at Sandwich, and Three Recruits and the Girls they left behind them. The former will contain a photogravure portrait of the author.

MESSRS. HENRY SOTHERAN & Co. will shortly issue a cheap edition of Mr. J. G. Millais's Game Birds and Shooting Sketches, with illustrations by the author, and a frontispiece by Sir J. E. Millais.

MR. GLADSTONE will contribute an article to the August number of the Nineteenth Century on "The Place of Heresy and Schism in the Modern Christian Church."

IN the August number of the New Review will appear the second of Mr. Frederick Dolman's articles on "Municipalities at Work," the subject being Liverpool.

THE seventeenth annual meeting of the Library Association of the United Kingdom will be held at Belfast on September 4 and the three following days, under the presidency of the Marquis of Dufferin and Ava, who—it will be remembered—took an active part in the meeting of the association at Paris last year. Papers will be read, and discussions held, on questions of practical librarianship, bibliography, and the development of the public library movement; and the draft of a Public Library Amendment Bill will be considered.

IT is intended to celebrate on April 25, 1895, the third centenary of the death of Torquato Tasso. A new life of the poet is being written for the occasion by Prof. Angelo Solerti, and is to be published early next year by Messrs. Loescher & Co., of Rome and Turin. This book will embody the valuable matter contained in some five hundred documents, hitherto unpublished, and will be illustrated with photogravures of all the portraits of which copies can be obtained, besides other interesting memorials. Prof. Solerti is also preparing a critical edition of the minor poems of Tasso, of which two volumes have been already published by Messrs. Zanichelli, of Bologna. Prof. Solerti appeals to the English literary world for such assistance as it may be in the power of any individuals or public bodies to give him. Five portraits that are known to have existed in Italy in the last century cannot now be traced. Any communications on the subject will be gratefully received by Prof. Angelo Solerti, 22, Via dell'Indipendenza, Bologna.

ON behalf of the council of the London Booksellers' Society, the hon. secretary has addressed a letter to the principal publishers, from which we quote the following extract:

"As the whole question of three-volume novels is now being raised, we should like to say that it would be a great satisfaction to us if good works of fiction ceased to be issued in this way. We are unanimously in favour of such novels being published at once in a six-shilling form, or, at any rate, at some popular price; and we feel convinced that not only would the bookseller order such volumes in large numbers, but that the 'Library' orders would not be diminished. As to other books, we have long been of opinion that the price at which they are issued upon first publication prohibits sales."

We understand that the committee of the Incorporated Society of Authors will have a special meeting to discuss the question on Monday next.

UNIVERSITY JOTTINGS.

THE course of lectures which Prof. J. A. Froude has recently been delivering at Oxford upon the Life and Letters of Erasmus will be published shortly by Messrs. Longmans & Co.

THE next volume in Mr. John Murray's series of "University Extension Manuals," to be published immediately, will be The English Novel, from its Origin to Sir Walter Scott, by Prof. Raleigh, of University College, Liverpool.

MR. J. ARTHUR PLATT, of Trinity College, Cambridge, has been elected to the chair of Greek at University College, London, vacant by the resignation of Prof. Wyse.

THE Council of Owens College, Manchester, has made the following appointments to research fellowships: Dr. A. W. Crossley and Mr. Wilmot Holt, jun., in chemistry; and Mr. A. H. Jameson, in engineering.

AT the last meeting of the council of University College, Liverpool, it was announced that the Rev. S. A. Thompson Yates had given the sum of £15,000 to build physiological and pathological laboratories.

THE annual report of the curators of the Bodleian Library records that the most munificent donor during the year was again Mr. E. M. Satow, now minister in Morocco, who presented nearly thirty volumes relating to South America. Among single books presented, the following may be specially mentioned: The House of Moncrieff, by George Seton, privately printed for Sir Alexander Moncrieff, with the numerous coats of arms emblazoned in colours; Hand List of Proclamations, vol. i., 1509-1714, compiled and given by the Earl of Crawford and Balcarres; Record Book of the Scinde Irregular Horse (2 vols. 1856, privately printed), given by Mr. C. H. Firth; General Lord Mark Kerr's Journals, 1841-1889 (privately printed); A Catalogue of the Library at Knowsley Hall, 4 vols., given by Mary, Countess of Derby; Catalogue of the Muniments of Oriel College, by C. L. Shadwell (only twelve copies printed); Catalogue of Original and Early Editions of English Writers from Langland to Wither, printed for the Grolier Club, New York, with 87 facsimiles of title-pages and frontispieces; Catalogue of the Collection of Autographs formed by Ferdinand Julius Dreer (2 vols. Philadelphia); Edda Sömund den Vises, translated by Frederick Sander from Icelandic into Swedish, and embellished with many illustrations.

THE Oxford Historical Society has now issued to its subscribers two volumes for the current year: Vol. III. of the Rev. Andrew Clark's The Life and Times of Anthony Wood, and the Rev. C. W. Boase's Register of Exeter College (third edition), which was in the nature of an extra volume, presented by the compiler. The committee hope to issue, before the end of 1894, the first volume of The Cartulary of St. Frideswide's, edited by the Rev. S. R. Wigram; and, early in 1895, Vol. IV. of The Life and Times of Anthony Wood. Besides several continuations, they also have in active preparation a volume on the place-names of the diocese of Oxford. The treasurer's accounts for last year show a total income of £728, and a balance in hand of £179.

ON the occasion of the coming of age of University Extension, Messrs. Macmillan have published, under the title of Aspects of Modern Study, the annual addresses given to students of the London Society at the Mansion. These addresses are nine in number, for the custom was first instituted in 1886. Lord Playfair, this very year, dealt with "The Evolution of University Extension as a Part of Popular Education"; and Canon Browne, in 1892, with "The Future of University Extension in London." After these two, the other addresses are arranged in chronological order, being of a general nature. Mr. Goschen—who spoke extempore—chose for his subject, "Hearing, Reading, and Thinking"; Mr. John Morley, "The Study of Literature"—reprinted in his Studies in Literature (1891); Sir James Paget, "Scientific Study"; Prof. Max Müller, "Some Lessons of Antiquity"; the Duke of Argyll, "The Application of the Historical Method to Economic Science"; Bishop Westcott, "Ideals"; and Prof. Jebb, "The Influence of the Greek Mind on Modern Life." If this volume cannot altogether compare with the Rectorial Addresses delivered at the University of St. Andrews (A. & C. Black) it is at least welcome as a permanent record of those who have associated themselves with a successful popular movement.

PROF. A. MACALISTER, of Cambridge, has reprinted in pamphlet form (Henry Frowde) the Robert Boyle Lecture which was delivered last May "before the above club"—that is to say, though nowhere explicitly stated, the Junior Scientific Club at Oxford. The title is "Some Morphological Lessons taught by Human Variations"; and it must be admitted that the subject is dealt with in a very technical manner.

PROF. GOODELL, of Yale, has been appointed to the chair of Greek language and literature in the American School at Athens.

A COMMITTEE of the Alumni of the University of Pennsylvania have published a biographical catalogue of matriculates, from 1749 to 1893, together with lists of members of the college faculty, and of trustees, officers, and recipients of honorary degrees. It forms a volume of about 600 large octavo pages.

ORIGINAL VERSE.

AT THE MORGUE.

I AM afraid of death to-day,
For I have seen the dead,
Where, in the Morgue, they lie in bed,
And one dead man was laughing as he lay.
And that still laughter seemed to tell,
With its inaudible breath,
Of some ridiculous subterfuge of death,
Some afterthought of heaven or hell,
The last and the lost mystery,
Which, being known, had bred
Such cynic laughter in the dead,
A laughter that outlived mortality.
Ah, mortal to mere mortal breath,
This ultimate farce of things:
To have heard the laughter from the wings,
The coulisses of the comedy of death!

ARTHUR SYMONS.

MAGAZINES AND REVIEWS.

THE Theologisch Tijdschrift for July strikes us as specially interesting in its book reviews. Kisters (the successor of Kuenen at Leyden) gives an approving notice of Hackmann's recent work on Isaiah's expectation of the future; Van Loon reviews with high appreciation, but from an outside point of view, Fairbairn's "The Place of Christ in Modern Theology"; Bosch notices with warm sympathy Carpenter's "The First Three Gospels" (in its Dutch version); Oort reviews Benzinger's "Hebrew Archaeology," criticising it chiefly on the score of method, and Buhl's "History of the Edomites," criticising its view of the historical import of the stories of Esau and Jacob, and of the relation of the Edomites to the Judaeans after the fall of Jerusalem. Of the main articles, the first relates to the philosophy of Schopenhauer, à propos of the work of an apostle of Schopenhauer in Holland. The reviewer (W. Scheffer) does well to point out the fatal consequences for the higher religion which would flow from the acceptance of the theory of the blind will. But is there any chance for Schopenhauer in such a practical country as Holland? The second article, by that acute and well-informed radical critic, W. C. van Manen, discusses a work by Prof. Everett, of Harvard, on the "Gospel of Paul," and pronounces that a fuller and critically more consistent work on the subject of Paul's teaching on the atonement would be of the highest interest and value, though the present incomplete attempt does not appear to have succeeded. The third, by J. Reitsma, is called forth by a short but lucid guide to the critical investigation and literary treatment of the history of the Church by a Leyden professor, J. G. R. Aequoy. Another professor of the same university (Hockstra) announces a work by himself on the doctrine of morals (Amsterdam, 1894), the slowly ripened fruit of several decades of years. Among the notices of periodicals, Oort's notice of the Jewish Quarterly Review for last January and April may be mentioned, especially the friendly criticism of Montefiore's "First Impressions of Paul."

THE chief contents of the Boletín of the Real Academia de la Historia for June are memoirs of de Vargas Ponce and F. de Navarrete, two former directors of the Academy at the commencement of the century. The most valuable writings of both were connected with the history of the Spanish Marine. It is a curious example of "cosas de España" that, though both were buried with the highest honours, no steps were taken to purchase their graves in perpetuity; consequently, when their remains are now sought for re-interment in the Pantheon, it is found that their respective niches have since been occupied three or four times over by other corpses, and their bones have been thrown into the common indistinguishable heap. Padre F. Fita prints documents concerning the councils of Salamanca (1154) and Valladolid (1155), and some earlier bulls of Urban II. They all relate to the boundaries of dioceses in Northern and North-Western Spain. Perhaps the most curious feature is the different style of the Latinity—even in the same signatures—in the documents proceeding from the Papal Court and those by native writers. Sánchez Moguel writes a notice of some interest on the first Conde de Ficallo, in Portugal, one of the great Borgia family. Sculptures of Sphinxes lately discovered at Agost (Icosium) near Elebe add to the many traces of oriental art and worship in Eastern and South-Eastern Spain.

SELECTED FOREIGN BOOKS.

GENERAL LITERATURE.

- BERNARDINI, L. La Littérature Scandinave. Paris: Plon. 3 fr. 50 c.
BIBLIOGRAPHIE der schweizerischen Landeskunde. Fasc. I. a, V. 9 a-c u. g. B. Bern: Wyss. 7 M.
DARBYSH, M. Les trois Carant: Histoire de cent ans (1789-1888). Paris: Picard & Kaan. 3 fr. 50 c.
FILON, A. Mémoires et ses Amis. Paris: Hachette. 3 fr. 50 c.
FRANCO, Anatole. Le Lys rouge. Paris: Calmann Lévy. 3 fr. 50 c.
KUOLER, B. Die deutschen Codices Alberts v. Aschen. Tübingen: Fues. 4 M.
LAUNAY, Adrien. Histoire générale de la Société des Missions étrangères. Paris: Challamel. 21 fr. 50 c.
LENIENT, Ch. La Poésie patriotique en France dans les temps modernes. T. 1. 18^e—17^e Siècles. Paris: Hachette. 3 fr. 50 c.
MOREAU-VAUTHIER, Ch. La Vie d'Artiste: Maquettes et Pastels. Paris: Plon. 3 fr. 50 c.
PELLECHET. Catalogue des Incunables des Bibliothèques publiques de Lyon. Lyon: Berooux. 20 fr.
RINACH, J. Diderot. Paris: Hachette. 2 fr.
SCHOLL, S. Die Vergleiche in Monchrestiens Tragödien. Nördlingen: Beck. 1 M. 50 Pf.
STUMME, H. Tripolitanisch-tunisische Beduinenlieder. Leipzig: Hinrichs. 5 M.

- TAINÉ, H. Derniers essais de critique et d'histoire. Paris: Hachette. 3 fr. 50 c.
 VARNHAAGEN, H. Ueb. die Miniaturen in vier französischen Handschriften d. 15. u. 16. Jahrh. auf den Bibliotheken in Erlangen. Erlangen: Junge. 10 M.
 WEISS, J. J. Trois années de théâtre 1833-1835. Le Drame historique et le Drame passionnel. Paris: Calmann Lévy. 3 fr. 50 c.

THEOLOGY.

- DIERL, W. Erklärung v. Psalm 47. Giessen: Ricker. 1 M.

HISTORY, LAW, ETC.

- BALAU, Sylvain. La Belgique sous l'Empire et la Défaite de Waterloo 1804-1815. Paris: Plon. 5 fr.
 BIANCHI, E. Dei Privilegi e delle cause di prelazione del credito in generale. Napoli: Margheri. 16 fr.
 CHASSIN, Ch. L. La Vendée Patriote 1793-1795. T. III. Paris: Dapont. 10 fr.
 CLÉMENT, Le Lieutenant. La Prise de Bône et Bougie (1832-1833). Paris: Lethielleux. 3 fr. 50 c.
 GESCHICHTSQUELLEN der Prov. Sachsen u. angrenzender Gebiete. 27. Bd. Halle: Henfel. 15 M.
 KAYSERLING, M. Christoph Columbus u. der Antheil der Juden an den spanischen u. portugiesischen Entdeckungen. Berlin: Grunbach. 3 M.
 LA MOTTE-ROULE, Général de 1re Série. Empire, Restauration, &c. Paris: Lethielleux. 6 fr.
 LEFÈVRE-PONTALIS, Eug. L'Architecture religieuse dans l'ancien diocèse de Soissons au XI^e et au XII^e siècle. Paris: Plon. 50 fr.
 PÉLISSIER, L. G. Lettres inédites du Baron G. Peyrusse écrites pendant les campagnes de l'Empire 1809-1814. Paris: Didier. 3 fr. 50 c.
 SCHWENKOW, L. Die lateinisch geschriebenen Quellen zur Geschichte der Eroberung Spaniens durch die Araber. Göttingen: Vandenhoeck. 2 M.
 UNTERSUCHUNGEN, historische, E. Fürstmann gewidmet. Leipzig: Teubner. 4 M.
 VIBORIUM clarorum sac. XVI. et XVII. epistolae selectae. E. edd. M. S. Göttingensis ed. E. Weber. Leipzig: Teubner. 2 M. 40 Pf.

PHYSICAL SCIENCE AND PHILOSOPHY.

- EXNER, S. Entwurf zu e. physiologischen Erklärung der psychischen Erscheinungen. 1. Thl. Wien: Deuticke. 11 M.
 LACROIX, A. Les Enclaves des roches volcaniques. Paris: Baudry. 40 fr.
 PÄZMANY, P. Opera omnia. Tom. I. Dialectica, rec. S. Bognár. Budapest: Kilian. 12 M.

PHILOLOGY.

- FRIEDRICH, G. Q. Horatius Flaccus. Philologische Untersuchungen. Leipzig: Teubner. 8 M.
 IAMBICHI in Nicomachi introductionem liber, ad fidem cod. Florentini ed. H. Pistelli. Leipzig: Teubner. 2 M. 40 Pf.
 MAIER, H. Beiträge zur Würdigung der Handschriften des Caesius Dio. Leipzig: Fock. 1 M. 50 Pf.
 PRISCIANI, Th. Epitoston libri III. cum Physicorum fragmentis edita v. Rose. Leipzig: Teubner. 5 M.
 SCHOLIA in Aeschylum Persas. Resensuit O. Dähnhardt. Leipzig: Teubner. 3 M. 60 Pf.
 SIEMERT, P. Plautus in Amphitruone fabula quomodo exemplar graecum transliterat. Leipzig: Fock. 2 M.
 STUBBS, griechische, Hermann Lapsius zum 60. Geburtstag dargebracht. Leipzig: Teubner. 6 M.
 STUBBS, semitische. Hrzg. v. C. Bezold. 1.-3. Hft. Berlin: Felber. 24 M.

CORRESPONDENCE.

OLD-IRISH GLOSSES ON THE FIRST GEORGIC.

London: July 14, 1894.

A tenth-century MS. in the Laurentian Library, Florence, marked Plut. xlv., Cod. 14, contains 124 Old-Irish glosses on two abridgments of Philargyus' scholia on the Bucolics. These glosses have been published in Kuhn's Zeitschrift (xxxiii. 62-80, 313-315), and in the Transactions of the Philological Society, 1893 (pp. 308-326). I take this opportunity of mentioning that the latter part of the colophon to the first abridgment seems to contain a Latin rendering of the name of the Irish abridger:

"Quicumque lgeris hanc glosolam Deum pro me misero roges ut animae meae apud patrem meum nerlam in caelo merear, qui nomine sum Fatosus."

Here Fatosus is an exact translation of the Irish man's name Toitchech, an adjective derived from tocad, tocad "fate," = W. tynghed.

The scholia on the Bucolics are followed by an anonymous commentary on the Georgics from the beginning of the first book to l. 91 of the second. It is partly drawn from the well-known commentary of Servius, and to some extent it agrees with the Berne scholia published in 1867 by Hermann Hagen. A few extracts from it have been given by T. Mommsen in the Rheinisches Museum (Neue Folge, xvi. 442). But he has not noticed the following glosses, which, taken in connexion with the spelling of the Latin, point to an Irish origin of the codex from which this part of the Laurentian MS. was, mediately or immediately, derived.

Fo. 26^b, 23, temo air chura rathir (Georg. i. 171).

Fo. 29^a, 37, merui corui marinae fiolu infulice idem est (Georg. i. 361, 362, 363).

In the first gloss air chura rathir should obviously be airchur arathir, "the beam (pole or tongue) of a plough," where arathir is the gen. sg. of arathar, W. aradr = ἀροτρον. The second gloss should be read thus:

mergi corui. marinae fulicae foilinn idem est, where foilinn is the nom. pl. of foileinn (gl. alcedo) = W. gŷylan, Corn. guilan, Bret. goelann, whence the French goeland and Eng. gull. See Urkteltischer Sprachschatz (Göttingen, 1894, p. 285).

These glosses will probably be found in perhaps a less corrupt form, also in a codex of the Bibliothèque Nationale (MS. lat. 7960), as to which see the ACADEMY for January 17, 1891 (p. 64, col. 3).

WHITLEY STOKES.

"DINNER."

I.

Ducange, s.v. disnare, cites Papias as saying "Jantare, Disnare dicitur vulgo." The words immediately following are "Gallis disner," but it is not easy to decide whether these are the words of Papias or his own. Probably they are his own, for Diez also cites Papias as saying only "Jentare [sic] disnare dicitur vulgo." But the question which I wish to deal with is: are these words really to be found in Papias, and, if so, where? I lately bought a copy of Papias printed at Milan in 1476. Now this is, I believe, the first edition, and I am told by my bookseller that it is the best, though his criterion very likely may be that it is the most rare, and fetches the most money. Anyhow, I cannot find in it the words above quoted. "Jantare" (not "jentare") is, indeed, there under the form "janto," but all that he says is, "Ianto gusto ante prandium"; and neither disnare, nor disinare, nor desinare are to be found, at least in the places which they ought to occupy alphabetically. Where then did Ducange get his quotation from, and Diez his, if, as is probable from the form jentare, he did not borrow it from Ducange? Perhaps from some later edition. I hope some correspondent will be able to throw light upon the matter.

Now that I am upon the word "dinner," perhaps I may be allowed to say a few words about M. Gaston Paris's derivation (Romania viii., 95) of the French equivalent from disjunare (O.F. desjuner). This derivation seems now generally to be adopted, but I cannot say that it altogether satisfies me. According to his explanation, the ju of desjuner originally fell out in those parts of the verb only in which, as in desjuner itself, desjunons, &c., the accent was on the last syllable. But afterwards this exclusion of the ju was extended to the whole verb. There is, no doubt, something in this argument; for there are apparently four French verbs (aider, parler, arraisnier, mangier) in which there is a somewhat analogous difference between the forms in which the root, and those in which the ending, bears the accent. See what G. Paris himself says upon this subject, and Schwan's Gramm., d. Altfrz. (2nd ed. § 446). But I fail to see that he has shown this to be the case with desjuner and disner. In the first place, would it be likely that, when disner had once become complete in all its forms, the old form would still remain complete in all its forms as well? I should say not; yet this is distinctly maintained by G. Paris when he says: "Puis parla suite il s'est formé de là deux verbes distincts, desjuner et disner, qui ont eu chacun leurs temps complets." At all events, the verb desjuner should commonly be used in the same meaning as disner, and G. Paris would seem to argue that this is so. I shall discuss this point further on; but I may say at once that I am unable to find more than one or two more or less doubtful passages which at all support this view, while even in them the reason for the interchange of the two words may at least as readily be found elsewhere, as in supposing them to have a common origin. Compare the two forms derived from adrionare (of which more a little further on)—viz., araisner and araisnier, which are also used side by side (see Schwan, § 446, 2, and Romania, v. 155), but without, so far as I know, any difference in meaning. Compare also the other verbs given above—viz., aidier, parler, and mangier, which, although also used in two different forms, always, I believe, retain the same meaning. And, besides all this, desjuner ought surely to be an older form than disner; and yet, so far as I know, desjuner is not met with—at any rate, in the sense of taking an early meal—for some centuries after disner!

Again, G. Paris himself feels that it may well be urged against him that "le j contenu dans disjunare" would, even though it disappeared, still act upon "l'a de la terminaison" and change it into ie. This would seem to be the case in aidier (from adjutare), in which there is an unaccented ju, as in desjuner; but G. Paris maintains that this is not a case in point, because, forsooth, the d tumbled out before the j at a very early period. I must confess that I fail to see the weight of this argument. Surely, the j would have much more influence than the d, and the j remained for some time at least in aidier (which is considerably older than aider) and gave rise in it to the i in the ier. In adrionare, too, there is io (= jo), which closely resembles the ju in disjunare; and this, though it has disappeared, or been merged, in araisnier, as much as G. Paris supposes the ju in disjunare has disappeared, or been merged, in disner, still has given rise to araisnier instead of araisner. He himself finds much greater analogy in ma(n)sionata which has given the two forms mainiede and mainiede. But in these two forms I find two arguments against him; for the very fact that there is ie in the first of them shows that disner would probably also sometimes have been written disnier with an ie, and yet, although the word dates back as far as the ninth century (Diez), I have never yet seen the form disnier. In the second place, G. Paris is of opinion that the i of the ai in ma(n)sionata is the j of ma(n)sionata which has jumped backwards over the s, and I believe that this opinion is now generally accepted (see Horning's Gram. to Bartsch's Chrestomathie, Paris, 1887, § 142). But, if so, then, when desjuner was shortened by the disappearance of the ju from its proper place, would it not have been likely that the j would also jump back over the s to its other side and so produce deisner. Very possibly, G. Paris is of opinion that the i of his disner arose from the change of the ei in deisner thus produced into i; but, if so, he ought to have given his reasons, for one of my greatest objections to his view is what seems to me the unwarranted change of desjuner, not into desner (or deisner), but into disner.*

* The whole colophon is printed by Georg Thilo in the Rheinisches Museum (Neue Folge, xv. 119).

And now let us pass on to G. Paris's argument derived from the supposed fact that desjuner and disner "sont quelquefois pris l'un pour l'autre dans la même phrase." He quotes three passages. In the first, there is, "Ne se desjuneront nis de un disner"; but here, surely, the two verbs are used in a very different meaning, for se desjuner has its original meaning of breaking one's fast, whilst disner is used of a particular meal. If these people had been made to fast a few hours longer, it might well have been said of them that "Ne se desjuneront nis de un souper"; but this would not have proved that se desjuner was used = souper. In the second case also, where somebody says first, "J'ay faim, si me vueil desjuner," and then three lines later on, "Alez querre, si disnerons," se desjuner is again used of breaking one's fast, and disner of a particular meal for which either breakfast or supper might have been substituted if the fast had been less long, or longer.

The third passage, which is more important, is quoted from Froissart by G. Paris at second hand, for he found it in Sainte-Palaye. The passage runs: "Les Gantois se desjeunerent d'un peu de pain et de vin pour tout. . . . Quand cestui disner fut passé," &c. Here, again se desjeuner may well mean to break one's fast; and as they had not broken their fast before that morning, and when they did so, it was dinner time, so the meal was called disner. But, besides this, Sainte-Palaye's version was taken from some old edition; and in the very much more modern and more carefully revised edition which I possess (J. A. C. Buchon, no date, but published within the last few years) the word disner does not appear. What I find (Book ii. ch. 155) instead, in that part of the sentence is as follows: "Quand ce desjeun, dont ils faisoient diner, fut passé," &c.† There is, however, one other passage in Froissart in which desjeuner and disner are distinctly used of the same meal. This is (in my edition) in Book iv., ch. 75, p. 349, while in the older edition already quoted by me it is ch. 110. Here, again, desjeuner is used, not in the sense of taking breakfast, but in that of breaking one's fast;‡ and the meal taken—which was not taken so very early, seeing that the Earl of Derby, who recommends Richard II. to take it as he had a long journey (from Flint to London) to make, had already broken his fast some time before—is called disner (once in my edition, twice in the other), and well so called, I think, as the king was not likely to get another for a long time. In every other part of Froissart there is always a very clear distinction made between desjeuner and disner. Unlike G. Paris, I have not consulted him at second-hand; I have examined every passage in which the two words occur, and not only this, but I have also gone through the whole of Villehardouin (1150-1213), the whole of Joinville (1224-1318), who preceded Froissart (1333-1400), and the whole of de Commynes (1445-1511), who followed him.

In Villehardouin I do not find either desjeuner or disner; but then there is not much mention made of taking food or drink, and when it is mentioned the words mangier and boire are found sufficient, and no meal is named. Thus, in Paulin Paris's edition (Paris: 1838), p. 56, I find, "Petit mangièrent et burent, car petit avoient viande." In the continuation by Henri de Valenciennes, of which I do not know the date, but which is in the same volume, I find (p. 174) "et puis s'est un petit desjeunés de pain biscuit et de vin"; but here, as before, se desjeuner merely = to break one's fast, and is not used of any particular meal, and, indeed, in this case, the fast seems to have been broken somewhat late.

In Joinville, I do not seem either to have found the word desjeuner at all, and mangier seems frequently to take the place of that word, or more often of disner (see de Wailly's edition (Paris: 1874), §§ 54, 93, 94, 95, 97 (a grand dinner), 196, 327, 349, 375, 376, 409, 411, 504, 508, 583, 595).

Froissart also is by no means fond of the word desjeuner. As a verb with se, it occurs four times (Liv. ii., ch. 115, ch. 155, and ch. 195, Liv. iv., ch. 28), and seems to mean as much to break one's fast as to take breakfast, though once, indeed, the meal is called le desjeuner (ii. 155). I also find the verb once in the past part., desjeuné (iv. 75). As for the subst. desjeuner, I find it only once (Liv. ii., ch. 155), and once there is le desjeun (Liv. ii., ch. 41). Once only (Liv. iii., ch. 28) is the time of the meal given, and it is 8 a.m. or soon after. The word disner, on the contrary, both as a verb and as a substantive, must occur some hundreds of times, and I have every passage noted down. *Se disner is used, but only a very few times. This frequent use of disner may be taken as an argument that breakfast was originally called disner only, and that afterwards the second and longer word, desjeuner, came to be used for it when it meant the first meal. But this is by no means the case in Froissart. If the word desjeuner was so little used by him, it was simply because the first food and drink taken in the day was designated in another way. The word commonly used to express this early meal, if such it can be called, was boire; but, from iv. 29 (if we compare pp. 159 and 162) it seems probable that boire also sometimes included manger, and we do occasionally find munger et boire un coup or boire (un coup) et manger, as in i. (part 2) 50, ii. 66, iv. 15, 75. See also and especially what I say further on about Pierre de Craon. Mass was generally first heard, and then fast was broken. Some of the expressions used were the following, viz.: après messe et boire, i. (part 2) 14, 237, iv. 12, 29; (après avoir) eu la messe et bu un coup, ii. 76, 184 iv. 51; and comp. iii. 124, iv. 20, 28 (where, p. 151, there is boire un coup and p. 152, there is se déjeûner of the same meal); après boire i. (part 2) 237, iii. 19, iv. 8 (bis); après (le) boire du matin, iii. 83, iv. 6. Occasionally, it would seem that, as in Villehardouin, dinner was also designated by the words manger et boire (see i. 231), or by boire alone, as in iv. 29, where the same meal apparently is designated by boire (p. 159), and by diner (p. 162); but this is very rare. The great meal of the day had nearly always its proper name given to it. At what time it took place it is seldom easy to say; but it was certainly commonly after l'heure de tierce (nine o'clock, I suppose, but Buchon in a note on i. 153, says "avant midi"), see i. 153, ii. 212, iii. 29. Even at that early hour the dinner seems sometimes to have had more than one course, see i. (part 2), ch. 286. It was when the meal was so early that it was particularly likely to be confounded with the desjeuner. Then, no doubt, as now, in the middle and upper classes at any rate (for I am inclined to believe that among the lower classes in France, at all events in the country, their fast was at all times commonly broken almost immediately after they got up, as it seems to be now) there were some who took a little refreshment soon after rising, and some who went on without until the very early dinner. At the present time, a first déjeûner, commonly a very slight meal, is taken at the most convenient but uncertain hour, and then from, say, ten (which is, however, early) till one (which is very late) a second déjeûner is taken = our lunch. The same word (and, not as G. Paris would have it to have been of old, two different forms of the same word) is thus used of two perfectly distinct meals, and yet there is no confusion. Unless it is wished to distinguish between the two meals, the numeral adjectives premier and second are seldom prefixed. In an ordinary way, déjeûner means lunch, for the first meal is so uncertain and so summary that it is considered hardly worth talking about, much as in Froissart. The second déjeûner, however, may sometimes be confounded with dinner. If a Parisian goes into the country and sees a peasant eating his dinner at, say, twelve, he is somewhat apt to call this meal déjeûner; and, indeed, I have known an old gentleman call his meal at 12 o'clock first déjeûner, on account of the time, and then correct himself and call it dîner, because he took soup at it, and during the rest of the day ate nothing more solid than two eggs at 6 p.m. We, in such a case, say "early dinner," but if it had not been for the soup which to him made it dinner, he would have called it déjeûner, though it really was his dinner. We see, therefore, how in former times when dinner was habitually taken so early, it might easily be called desjeuner when the hour was very early and nothing had been taken before, and it was but a slight meal. Still, as I have said, this confusion was very rarely made (only twice in the whole of Froissart) and the distinction between desjeuner and disner was very sharply drawn.

F. CHANCE.

* For the change of e open and shut (close) into i, see Horning, op. cit. §§ 32 and 45. In both cases, the e has first to be developed into iei before it can become i. If the first e in desjuner had the accent, it would, being close (see Horning, §§ 42 and 29), become diphthonged into ei (H., § 45); but it is atonic, and if, therefore, it becomes ei it can only be in the way which G. Paris says, viz., through the influence of the following j (see Schwan, § 254). This would give us deisner, which would not, however, become disner, unless the d could evolve or disengage (dégager) an i. But is the d capable of evolving such an i? I should say not, and, if not, then deisner would not become disner.

† If G. Paris had taken the trouble to refer to Froissart himself, his case would have been somewhat stronger; for between the se desjeunèrent, and the cestui disner quoted by him, there are the words "après le desjeuner," showing that the meal itself was so called. I have an old edition of Froissart, published by Michel Sonnius at Paris in 1574; and there (ii. 97—in this note, as a rule, I cite the books and chapters only, not the pages), the passage corresponds with G. Paris's quotation, except that there is celui disner instead of cestui disner.

‡ This is shown by the circumstance that, while in Buchon's edition the Earl of Derby says to the king, "Êtes-vous encore desjeuné?" in Sonnius there is "Êtes-vous encores ieun?" Buchon has, wrongly I think, commonly adopted the modern orthography.

* Se disner is found—Liv. ii., ch. 41, 81 (bis), 212; Liv. iv., ch. 67—five times in all, so that, considering how very much more frequently the verb disner is used than the verb desjeuner, the reflective pronoun is much more commonly found with this latter verb; and this is exactly what we should expect if disner has, etymologically speaking, nothing to do with desjeuner; for this latter may well take se when it means to break one's fast, which is by no means necessarily the same thing as breakfasting. With regard to the reflective pronoun, I shall have more to say further on.

SCIENCE.

RECENT BOOKS ON GEOMETRY.

An Elementary Treatise on the Geometry of Conics. By Asutosh Mukhopadhyay. (Macmillans.)

Analytical Geometry for Beginners. Part I. By Rev. T. G. Vyvyan. (Bell.)

Modern Plane Geometry. By G. Richardson and A. S. Ramsey. (Macmillans.)

Elements of Synthetic Solid Geometry. By N. F. Dupuis. (Macmillans.)

MR. MUKHOPADHYAY'S Treatise on the Geometry of Conics is really an excellent text-book. He devotes a chapter to each of the three curves, parabola, ellipse, hyperbola, and discusses their properties separately. Some authors start with establishing several general properties relative to all the three curves, and this method appears to secure the advantage of conciseness. The conciseness however is more apparent than real. The method of treatment here adopted is to begin in each case with the description of the curve, then to develop the properties of chords, tangents, and normals. In the case of the ellipse these are followed by the properties of conjugate diameters, and in the case of the hyperbola by the properties of asymptotes, conjugate diameters, and the equilateral hyperbola. Each chapter closes with a set of miscellaneous examples, of which there are about a hundred. One of the special features of the book is the large number of deductions, or "riders," appended to most of the propositions: they amount to more than six hundred. These deductions are well selected: in general they are easy, and when they are not, hints are frequently supplied for their solution. The propositions of the text are those which have now become classical; and no important theorem has been omitted, except, perhaps, the one which establishes Archimedes' quadrature of the parabola. The arrangement of the propositions in text-books on geometrical conics varies with each author, and if it were not for examination purposes no inconvenience would result from this variety of treatment. The sequence adopted by Mr. Mukhopadhyay, while it is strictly logical, does not differ very materially from that of some recent authors. It may be added that no propositions occur which relate to space of three dimensions, and that no use has been made of the method of projections. The diagrams, which are white on a black ground, are neat and clear.

Mr. Vyvyan, in his Analytical Geometry for Beginners, discusses the straight line and the circle. He intends the book partly for young boys with some mathematical taste, and partly for those who have to get up the elements of the subject, and who do not wish to advance beyond the requirements of certain examinations. The contents consist of nine chapters, the first treating of the point, the next three of the straight line, and the next four of the circle; the last takes up projections, oblique axes, transformations; and there is an index to the paragraphs where the principal formulæ are to be found. The explanations and illustrations are full and clear, and each part of the subject is followed by a large number of easy examples for solution. The difficulties which nearly all pupils encounter in the transition from pure to analytical geometry are well known to mathematical teachers. In Mr. Vyvyan's little book nearly everything has been done which could be done to clear these difficulties away, and to smooth the learner's path.

The Association for the Improvement of Geometrical Teaching (familiarily known as the A. I. G. T.), some years ago issued a syllabus of Modern Plane Geometry, which consisted of the enunciations of a large number of systematically arranged theorems, with (of course) the necessary definitions. Messrs. Richardson and Ramsey have based their Modern Plane Geometry on this syllabus: that is to say, they have adopted, without change of arrangement, the enunciations of the theorems. What they have done besides is to supply demonstrations of them, to add a fair amount of explanatory matter where that seemed called for, and to append collections of examples to each of the chapters. The contents of the book consist of the properties of the triangle, the quadrangle, the circle; harmonic ranges and pencils; maxima and minima; cross ratio, involution, reciprocal polars; and projection. The authors have done their part well; and their book will form, as they intend it to do, an excellent sequel to the Elementary Plane Geometry published by the A. I. G. T. In view of a second edition, a suggestion or two may be offered. The explanation of "symmedian" (p. 36), would be made clearer if it were stated that the term is an abbreviation of the phrase symétrique de la médiane. It seems difficult to root out the erroneous designation "Simson line." This line was discovered by William Wallace about thirty years after Simson's death.

Mr. Dupuis has been induced to publish his Synthetic Solid Geometry, partly by receiving numerous inquiries as to what work on solid geometry he would recommend as a sequel to his Plane Geometry, and partly because he estimates highly the value of the study of this subject as a means of mental discipline. To quote his words: "It seems to exercise not only the purely intellectual powers in the development of its theorems, but also the imagination in the mental building-up of the necessary spatial figures, and the eye and the hand in their representations." Mr. Dupuis's treatise contains a good deal more than is usually given in English manuals of solid geometry, and it is hardly possible to make a detailed analysis of it without simply transcribing the table of contents. The following extracts from the preface may convey a sufficient idea of the extent to which the subject is carried:—"The first part deals with a consideration of the descriptive properties of lines and planes in space, of the polyhedra, and of the cone, the cylinder, and the sphere." "The second part deals with areal relations: that is, the relations among the areas of squares and rectangles on characteristic line-segments of the prominent spatial figures. The third part is devoted to stereometry and planimetry." The fourth and last part treats of perspective projection, the plane sections of the cone, and spheric geometry. Some recent transatlantic books on geometry show a tendency to run riot in the matter of terminology. Mr. Dupuis has not gone to an extreme in this matter, though he has introduced a few new terms, such as ant-orthogonal projection, colunar triangle, triclinc, diclinc, and monoclinic parallelepiped, &c. It is satisfactory to see that he has adopted Mr. Hayward's coinage cuboid instead of his own orthopiped, which, from an etymological point of view, would be a thoroughly objectionable term.

J. S. MACKAY.

LITERARY WORK IN EGYPT.

THE work of Ibn Iyās (+930 A.H.) belongs to the most valued Arabic chronicles of the medieval history of Egypt. The impression made by it on the Arabs of the tenth (sixteenth) century may be gathered from the fact that the name of its author was foisted on a third-rate compendium of Aegyptio-Arabic history (see Zeitschrift der D. M. Ges., 1889, p. 104).

The portions of Ibn Iyās's Chronicles which are found in various European libraries have been made good use of by Arabic scholars. But the circumstance that no complete copy of the work could be found anywhere prevented them from studying it as a whole and editing it. One of the Cairo presses commenced printing it some years ago, but did not get beyond the thirteenth sheet, from lack of patronage. The Khedivial Library in Cairo has at last succeeded in completing its own imperfect copy from private libraries in Egypt, and in arranging for the printing of the whole work at the well-known Bulak Press. The first of the three volumes which it is intended to comprise has appeared. It covers the period from the earliest times to Mu'iyad (A.H. 815 - A.D. 1412). The second and third volumes deal with the following century. This arrangement shows that the work now changes from a general summary of events to an exact chronicle. The information which it thus supplies to historians, archaeologists, epigraphists, is immense. Ibn Iyās's style stands midway between that of the usual chronologists and the style of the Arabian Nights, and foreshadows in many respects the present dialect of Cairo. The printing of the whole work will, it is hoped, be completed by the autumn of the current year.

His Majesty Abdulhamid II. has given a fresh proof of his intelligent care for the higher interests of his subjects by ordering that a standard "édition de luxe" of the Traditions of el-Bokhârî shall be printed at his expense. The well-known vocalised text of the Bulak edition is to be revised from one of the most exact MS. of the Khedivial Library (see Cat., second ed., vol. i., p. 302, Hadith No. 84). It is true this is not quite what we should expect for an edition of this work brought out under such high auspices. For while we should base a revision of the text on older MSS., the copy selected for that purpose represents a text favoured by the first traditionists of the eighth century after the Hijra, and is thus best suited to the requirements of Muhammedan savants. The work is passing through the Bulak Press, and will probably be out next spring.

SCIENCE NOTES.

WE are requested to state that a volume containing a memoir of the late Dr. G. J. Romanes will be published. Those who possess letters of general interest written by him are requested to forward them to Mrs. Romanes, St. Aldate's, Oxford. The letters will be returned directly their contents have been noted and copies made.

THE Société d'Encouragement pour l'Industrie Nationale has awarded its grand medal to Lord Kelvin, for his scientific works; and also the sum of 2000 francs (£80) to Prof. Roberts-Austen, for his researches on alloys.

PROF. ALPHONSE RENARD, of Ghent, has been elected a foreign member of the Geological Society.

THE "long excursion" of the Geologists' Association this year will be to Shropshire, from July 30 to August 4, under the direction of Prof. C. Lapworth and Mr. W. W. Watts, who read a joint paper on the geology of the county at the last meeting of the association at University College, London. A detailed programme, with map, sketch section, and a bibliography, has just been issued.

At the last general monthly meeting of the Royal Institution, a donation of £25 was acknowledged, from Sir Douglas Galton, to the fund for the promotion of experimental research at low temperatures.

A SET of diagrams prepared by Sir J. B. Lawes and Sir J. H. Gilbert for the Chicago Exhibition, to illustrate the agricultural investigations conducted at Rothamsted during the past fifty years, is now temporarily exhibited in the western galleries of the South Kensington Museum.

WE quote the following from the annual report of the council of the Marine Biological Association, with reference to scientific investigations:—

"Both Mr. Cunningham and Mr. Holt have continued during the past year their inquiries into the various questions relating to the maturity of food-fish, which were to prominent last year before the House of Commons Select Committee on Sea Fisheries, and upon which much information is still required. The value of the evidence adduced on these points by the officers of the Association has been acknowledged in the Report of this Committee.

"Mr. Cunningham has finally settled by direct experiment the much-debated question of the identity of the egg of the pilchard. He has been able to rear the larvae of plaice, hatched and fertilised in the aquarium at Plymouth, to the age of thirty-seven days: no flat-fish larvae have hitherto been reared in confinement from the ovum to this age, and this result is of great economic value.

"Mr. Holt's valuable statistical observations on the fish landed at Grimsby have been continued. From his watching of the results of the newly opened Iceland fishery, on which he contributes a paper to the last number of the Journal, may be expected interesting light as to the effect of fishing on a virgin ground, with a direct bearing on the problems presented by the North Sea. The arrangement by which the Association contributes towards the expenses of the Cleethorpes Aquarium of the Marine Fisheries Society (Grimsby), in return for Mr. Holt's use of their laboratory and tanks, is being continued for a second year.

"A number of interesting analyses of sea water have been made by Mr. Frank Hughes for the Association, and experiments on the changes produced in sea water in aquaria are being carried out by the director."

PHILOLOGY NOTES.

MESSRS. MACMILLAN & Co. have issued this week a new edition of Mr. R. D. Archer-Hind's Phaedo, which originally appeared in 1883. The chief novelty about it, as the editor himself admits, is that it is the first book in which the publishers have used their new fount of pseudo-ancient Greek type, so highly lauded by Dr. Rutherford in a recent number of the Classical Review. As to its merits, we must still continue to hold our judgment in suspense, merely remarking that the test is scarcely fair when English notes occupy more than half of each printed page. The experiment, nevertheless, deserves the warmest thanks of all scholars.

THE July number of the Classical Review (David Nutt) is not particularly interesting. Among the continuations are the critical notes of Prof. J. B. Mayor on the "Stromateis" of Clement of Alexandria, and of Mr. H. Richards on the "Republic" of Plato; while Prof. Robinson Ellis's collation of the Madrid MS. of Manilius is concluded. Prof. R. Y. Tyrrell contests vigorously the real existence of the "vetustissima exemplaria" of Euripides, which Henry Stephens (Estienne) claimed to have used; and Mr. R. G. Bury discusses the use of δύναμις and φύσις in Plato. Mr. C. F. Abdy Williams writes at some length upon Greek music, in reference to a fragment of a chorus of the "Orestes" with musical notation, found among the Rainer papyri: the article was apparently written before the discovery of the Delphic hymn to Apollo. Among the reviews, the most notable is that in which Mr. Cecil Torr again assumes the part of advocatus diaboli with regard to Prof. Petrie's discovery of Aegean pottery at Tel el-Amarna. Prof. Ellis notices the first fasciculus of Postgate's new edition of the "Corpus Poetarum Latinorum"; Mr. F. A. Hirtzel—a pupil of Prof. Ellis—writes about the knowledge of Horace in the early middle ages; and Prof. T. Clifford Allbutt tells us something about a Persian medical treatise, compiled towards the end of the tenth century.

Plutarchi Pythici Dialogi Tres. Recensuit G. R. Paton. (Berlin: Weidmann.) The publication of a new edition of these difficult and corrupt dialogues is most appropriate at a moment when the attention of scholars is turned to Delphi by the French enterprise there. What the excavations may disclose it is impossible to say; but it is quite probable that the mysterious E of Delphi may receive some new light, so that we may no longer be confined to Plutarch's writing for knowledge—or rather for guess-work—on the subject. But the dialogue will always be worth reading as a curious record of its time; and, if it be less amusing than the other two here printed (on the priestess not prophesying in verse, and on the decay of oracles), yet it must always appeal to readers interested in the history of opinion and in the efforts (by turns rationalistic and mystical) by which civilised and religious men try to explain old usages and symbols whose meaning is lost or seems disagreeable. Mr. King's translation of these and other theosophical essays of Plutarch (1882) was accompanied by a good deal of valuable comment; but it would probably have been better than it is if he had had the advantage of a good new text to work on. Mr. Paton (who dates his preface "Aberdoniae") has done his best, but the material is defective. What can be substantiated, that he prints, admitting, of course, good conjectures which are not against the MS. readings; but he will not desert the MS. for mere improvement's sake. Thus, in De E apud Delphos 385A he still reads συμφιλοτιμούμενος, while he justly remarks in his note, "vix patiendum est vulgatum nisi συμφιλοτιμουμένων." His labours are marred by some carelessness in the printing: see, for instance, pp. 28.17; 29.31.

REPORTS OF SOCIETIES.

ENGLISH GOETHE SOCIETY.—(Monday, July 9.)

DR. THORNE in the chair.—Dr. John G. Robertson read a paper on "The Beginnings of the German Novel." Taking as his starting-point Gellert's Swedish Countess, an avowed imitation of Pamela, the lecturer proceeded to discuss at length the immediate effects of Richardson's influence on German literature. Not merely did Richardson create a school, but the effects of his influence can be traced through almost the entire history of German fiction. Wieland's Don Sylvio von Rosalba marks the beginning of a new epoch: in freshness and originality it is an enormous advance on the works of Gellert's school. In Agathon Wieland created the first typical German novel: it was the first attempt to give fiction a consistently psychological basis. Dr. Robertson next proceeded to discuss at some length the influence of Rousseau in Germany and the intimate relations between Goethe's Werther and The New Heloise. In conclusion, he pointed out that the peculiar characteristics of the German novel as a type were in great measure due to the conditions of its origin.

FINE ART.

The Venetian Painters of the Renaissance, with an Index of their Works. By Bernhard Berenson. (Putnam's Sons.)

THE recognition of a new and important branch of mental and sociological science is involved in the utterly different impression which this small volume will make upon two classes of readers; and the progress of this new science may be assisted or impeded not a little by the choice which Mr. Berenson will have to make between those two classes of readers.

For the merely intelligent and cultivated reader, unconscious that art is a possible subject for scientific investigation, Mr. Berenson's volume will be merely another contribution to the vague, pleasant thing called "culture"—a mixture of subjective impression, historical fact, and picturesque hypothesis, of the sort rendered popular in the Essays and Studies of the late Mr. Symonds, and the Voyage d'Italie of Taine; and the index of painters will appear in the light of a practical addition in the style of Baedeker. For the student, on the other hand, of artistic morphology, Mr. Berenson's book will consist of a list of the works of the principal Venetians, a list not merely revealing marvellous learning and intuition, but embodying a whole new scientific method; to which has been added, to decoy the Philistine, some eighty pages of the usual considerations on the Renaissance, the Venetian oligarchy, the pageants of the fifteenth century, and the Catholic reaction.

Both kinds of reader will be correct in their estimate, and both, I think, will be equally disappointed: the dilettanteish reader, because Mr. Berenson has done rather badly what so many essayists, from Mr. Pater downwards, have done very well; and the scientific reader, because Mr. Berenson has refrained from giving a full account of Venetian art morphology, which his index of painters shows him to be so admirably, nay, uniquely, fitted to give.

The science of artistic morphology is as yet so completely rudimentary—perhaps, indeed, it is waiting for none other than Mr. Berenson to give it a definite existence and dignified status—that it is unknown not merely to the public at large, but in a sense also to most of the persons who are carrying it on. It has not yet separated itself from the mere practical connoisseurship of which it was born. And if the intelligent outsider is apt to smile at the disputes about who painted what, and what sort of ears and hands may be considered as Titian's or Raphael's sign manual, it must admitted that the usual connoisseur of the school of Morelli is little better than a wine-taster, and has absolutely no inkling that his studies and decisions have anything to do with the laws of intellectual activity and evolution. Indeed, if the late Giovanni Morelli may be considered as the Darwin of a new branch of evolutionary science, his wonderful and wearisome volumes do not show many indications of the dignity of his discovery; and one suspects that he thought of himself in connexion with Messrs. Crowe and Cavalcasello and Dr. Bode, rather than with Hegel, Spencer, and the other teachers of philosophy of art. But, consciously or unconsciously, Morelli and his followers have been accumulating the facts, preparing the methods, and even, to a certain extent, formulating the hypotheses, of a great new science.

What is this science? The science, I think one might define it, of artistic form in connexion with the mind of the individual artist and the character of his surrounding civilisation. But this science, many persons will answer, is not at all new. It was inaugurated by Winckelmann, systematised by Hegel, popularised by Taine, and has entered into the work of every modern writer on art, from Mr. Ruskin to Mr. Symonds. Quite so! But what has existed hitherto has been the conception of the science, not its method or its facts: the recognition that a law of artistic evolution must exist, but no tolerable hypothesis as to the working of that law. For when we have said—and we have all, all of us, said and repeated it—that art is the expression of the character of the artist, and also of the character of his surroundings, we have really said nothing at all. To be scientific we must say by what means, or at least in what way, art, that is to say visible or audible form, can express the character of either individual or civilisation; and for that we must have, before everything else, accurate facts and working hypotheses concerning the nature and necessities of this peculiar mental product, artistic form.

How can that be attained? Certainly not, I think, by indulging any more in comparisons between Greek art and Greek life, between the Renaissance and its artists, between the magnanimity and crankiness of Michelangelo and the ceiling of the Sistine Chapel; for however much all these may tally in their effect on our feeling, this similarity of subjective impression does not sufficiently explain the objective phenomenon: we want to know why and how this similarity has come about. When we have read the seventy pages which Mr. Berenson has devoted to Venetian, the Renaissance and Venetian art, we are still as far off as ever from knowing how Venetian art came to be what it was, and even from knowing what are the visible qualities which constitute a Venetian picture. For, if we say that Titian in his youth expressed the spirit of the Renaissance, and in his old age the spirit of the Catholic reaction, we are considering his works as mere symbols, indicative of peculiarities which might be equally indicated in literature or unwritten speech: we are not considering them as pictures, Venetian pictures, pictures not by Giorgione or Tintoret, but by Titian, and pictures by Titian young or Titian old, that is to say, as special combinations of visible peculiarities affording impressions of a specially visual description, absolutely apart from any symbolical reference to the Renaissance, the Catholic reaction, or any other non-visual, non-pictorial item.

What therefore is the method for really coming in contact with this visual, pictorial thing, this form, this actual reality of the work of art? A careful examination of Mr. Berenson's wonderful index, comparing it item by item with the official catalogues of the galleries mentioned, will afford the best answer. Here we find several pictures, like the Pitti "Concert," once called a Giorgione and now identified as an early Titian, given from one first rate master to another; a much larger number transferred from great names to almost unknown ones. What does this mean? A mere matter of taste, collector's caprice, dilettante's crotchet about the "correggiosity of Correggio?" At first sight one would say: undoubtedly. But there is another new element in this index (representing the labours of Morelli, of all the best Morellians, and of the very delicate investigation of Mr. Berenson himself)—What is the meaning of these new sequences of master and pupil, upsetting all tradition; what is the explanation of the appearance of new personalities, hitherto mere names, like Catena, Bissolo, and Cariani? It means a very important thing. Not merely the study of the form in every individual picture, every separate master, and every school, the identification of line with line, movement with movement, and quality with quality; but also the recognition, through such a work of comparison, of certain necessities of persistence and variation of form in each painter, of certain necessities of transmission of form from master to pupil. The Morellians, however fragmentarily and unconsciously, have got hold of what is as certain as the laws of embryology. They know why we must eliminate certain pictures off the list of Titians, Giorgiones, or Palmas, in order to obtain a Titian, a Giorgione, or a Palma who is homogeneous and organic as an artist, as he must have been, despite all variations and evolutions, homogeneous and organic as a man. They know why the pictures thus eliminated to make the real individual masters must be collected afresh, by a new process of comparison and elimination, into new organic groups, new individuals, into Bissolo, Previtali, Cariani, Catena. They know why Lotto must have been the pupil of Alvise Vivarini instead of the pupil of Bellini; and they know why a given picture by a given master must have been painted between two other certain pictures. They know (I cannot help mentioning it, although irrelevant to Venetian painting) they know why Raphael was not really the pupil of Perugino, but of his own supposed follower, Timoteo Viti.

All these things, and a hundred analogous ones they know, because they have, however unconsciously, grasped the reality of artistic form: because they have, however hazily, perceived the law of that form's evolution. What that law is, what are the complex necessities of this newly-discovered intellectual organism, it will probably be Mr. Berenson's mission in life to determine and promulgate.

VERNON LEE.

THE WORKS OF MR. ROUSSEL.

ARTISTIC people, interested in technical achievement and single-minded aim, will like the little exhibition that Mr. Theodore Roussel holds just now at the Dowdeswell Galleries. There is nothing commonplace about it. Banality is not tolerated. No quarter is shown either to Mrs. Grundy, on the one hand—that venerable dictatrix to our middle classes—or, on the other hand, to the "modern" admirers of the hideous; for Mr. Roussel is a sincere and charming artist, more concerned with the problems of art and the delights of nature than with popular appreciation. It is characteristic of such an artist that he should treat many themes; monotony and the repetition of a given impression could not be endured by him. It is yet more characteristic that he should employ many mediums, and should carefully adjust the treatment to the particular subject. Thus, one of his most charming compositions is a pastel suggesting exquisitely an evanescent "effect" at Brighton. His oil portraits have solidity and distinction. His etchings, as is well known to the real students of that craft, reveal his command of expressive and vivacious life; and, though they are not now exhibited in Bond-street, they must count for something important in the sum of his work. Lastly, Mr. Roussel's lithographs—one, especially, of river-side buildings, and another, not less admirable, of a svette nudity, a model extended on a couch—are singularly successful instances of the particular form and method of draughtsmanship which lithography involves if it is to be rightly applied. Singular refinement of taste and of vision, and an agreeable, since never obtruded, dexterity of hand, have presided over the conception and execution of much of the really engaging work which Mr. Roussel places before the visitor.

F. W.

CORRESPONDENCE.

EARTHWORKS ON THE YORKSHIRE WOLDS.

Settlington Rectory, York: July 18, 1894.

It must not be assumed, from a note in the ACADEMY of July 7, that the earthworks on our Yorkshire Wolds were all constructed for military purposes, at some one period, and by the same race.

For many years I have had abundant opportunities of examining many of them, and have gradually been driven to the conclusion that they belong to different stages of culture, dating from the stone age almost to our own times, and were originally intended to serve a variety of purposes. Many, doubtless, were military works: there are Roman camps, and others which may be British, Anglian, or Danish. From natural advantages of position some spots have been the strongholds of almost every successive race, an earthwork of the neolithic people being altered, enlarged, and strengthened from time to time. Some of the most important of these earthworks are clearly of post-Roman date, as is proved by their connexion with Roman roads which they intersect, and which they must have been constructed to defend, not from northern assailants, but from invaders landing in the Humber and marching northward. They were probably constructed by the British provincials as defences against Anglian invaders. And yet, in the immediate neighbourhood of works whose date is so clearly marked, neolithic flint implements may be picked up, showing that earlier mounds may have been utilised in the construction of these defences.

There are other earthworks which seem to have a definite relation, not to Roman roads, but to the cemeteries of the early bronze period. In some cases hills, which have apparently been scarped for defensive purposes, prove on examination to have been merely terraced by the plough, the scarps being the steep sides of lines running horizontally round the hill. Quadrangular earthworks, which have been mistaken for Roman camps, are merely Bercaries, probably of Tudor date, and are sometimes flanked by long outlying banks, seemingly intended to facilitate the process of folding the sheep. Other earthworks seem rather to have been cattle pens or corrals. More curious and mysterious are the long V shaped banks, found usually at the bottom of the dales, and often extending over many miles. These seem to have been devices of primeval hunters, of palaeolithic or neolithic age, intended as fences for enclosing large game, horses, or wild oxen, which could thus be driven into pitfalls at the point of the V, or into enclosures resembling the "kheidas" made by elephant hunters in India. Other extensive ditches and dykes may have served as tribal boundaries, or in more recent times may have marked the limits within which the cattle of existing parishes, driven out to pasture on the wolds, were allowed to stray. Some earthworks run along the boundary lines of modern parishes. Hedge and ditch enclosures of the Georgian epoch, now disused as fences, often bear a curious resemblance to prehistoric earthworks. Of course it must be borne in mind that the original height of the banks has been greatly reduced, and in most instances they must have been crowned by palisades or abattis.

ISAAC TAYLOR.

ASSYRIAN DISCOVERIES.

Brighton: July 16, 1894.

In the obituary notice of Sir Henry Layard which appeared in the last number of the ACADEMY, there are two errors which I trust you will allow me to correct.

The first is, where it is stated that "it was from Lord Stratford de Redcliffe that he [Sir Henry Layard] received both encouragement and pecuniary means to excavate the site of Birs Nimrud, near Mossul, in 1845." The site which he first began to excavate was the mound of Nimroud and not Birs Nimrud; the latter is in Babylonia, near Baghdad.

The second mistake is, where it is said that a "second expedition, under the auspices of the trustees of the British Museum, revealed the library of Sardanapalus." The library which Sir Henry discovered was found in Sennacherib's palace in 1850; but the library of Sardanapalus, or Assur-ber-pal, I myself discovered in 1853, in the palace of the latter monarch.

H. RASSAM.

NOTES ON ART AND ARCHAEOLOGY.

It is stated that the late Sir Henry Layard has bequeathed to the National Gallery a selection of the most valuable of his pictures. The gift is to take effect on the death of his wife.

The Queen has accepted the office of patron of the Congress of the British Archaeological Association, which is to be held this year in Manchester. The meeting will begin on July 30, and continue until the end of the week.

The antiquities, ranging from prehistoric to Roman times, lately discovered by Prof. Flinders Petrie in the temple of Koptos in Upper Egypt, will be exhibited to the public in the Edwards Library at University College, Gower-street, from July 23 to September 1.

MESSRS. CHAPMAN & HALL will publish early in the autumn two more volumes of their translation of The History of Ancient Art, by MM. Georges Perrot and Charles Chipiez, dealing with primitive Greece.

THE seventh annual meeting of the Guild and School of Handicraft will be held at Essex House, Mile End-road, on Saturday of this week at 4 p.m. Sir Albert Rollit will deliver an address; and the report of the committee will be presented by Mr. Walter Crane.

ON Saturday of this week, Messrs. Sotheby were to sell the collection of prints by Lucas van Leyden, formed during the last thirty years by Lord Thurlow, which comprises almost a complete series of the engraved work of that master. The greatest rarity is a "Christ giving the Benediction," from the collection of the late W. B. Scott, which is believed to be unique.

WE do not know whether the Society for Checking the Abuses of Public Advertising—which, we are glad to say, is commanding a good deal of support—proposes to address itself seriously to the art of the hoarding: to the establishment, for instance, of a Committee of Taste, or of a Director of Town and Country Placards. That there really may be art in the hoarding, just as well as ugliness, is made evident, in England, say, by the occasional efforts of a Herkomer, the more recent manifestations of a Beardsley, a Dudley Hardy, and even, if we may be permitted to surmise from a recent Pull Mall placard, of a Greiffenhagen: not to speak, of course, of the work done in France by the very prince of the art of the pictorial poster, M. Cheret. Three of the four gentlemen whom we have named—all of them, that is, except Mr. Greiffenhagen—have taken up their parable upon this matter in the July number of the New Review, which is wont to discuss the modern problem as well as to issue to us the modern story. Mr. Beardsley's contribution betrays a little doubtful temper. "One's ears," he says, "are weary of the voice of the art teacher who sits like the parrot on his perch learning the jargon of the studios." Now as it happens (though Mr. Beardsley may not know it) the art teacher—writer, he means—of any reputation is conspicuous for his avoidance of the studio. The writer who takes art for one of his subjects is hardly ever met in the studio. Why should he be? He is busy in a larger world, probably, and with the exercise of his own art. Perhaps the qualified writer has treated Mr. Beardsley rather hardly of late; he is not at all likely, however, to have failed to do justice to Mr. Beardsley's capital placard for "Arms and the Man." In writing, Mr. Beardsley's style is cheaply Whistlerian; but then it would be scarcely reasonable to expect that an artist in draughtsmanship should be an artist in literature. Mr. Dudley Hardy's writing is, at all events, more practical; and M. Cheret, on the matter he happens to know about, utters plain words and to the point.

THE current number of the Illustrated Archaeologist (Charles J. Clark) begins a new volume, which induces us to hope that this interesting magazine is now firmly established. If only from the number and excellence of its illustrations, it assuredly supplies a want. Here, for example, under "Notes on Museums," are figures of several curious horns in the collection under the charge of Sir A. Franks in the British Museum, and also of the magnificent Roman shield recently found in the bed of the river Tyne, with the inscription, LEG VIII AVG MAGNI IVNI DVBITATI. Among the original articles we may specially mention: a careful report, by Mr. P. M. C. Kermode, of the excavation of a stone circle in the Isle of Man, which seems to have been the place of sepulture of the inhabitants of neighbouring hut villages, probably prior to the bronze age; notes on sculptured Norman tympana in Cornwall, with a list of Norman fonts and other examples of Norman architecture still remaining in the parish churches of the county, by the editor (Mr. J. Romilly Allen); a description of a menhir in Brittany, of which the lower portion is carved with human figures, apparently of Roman mythology; and a report on the excavations at Silchester during the past year, which is again made specially valuable by the plans and other illustrations.

MUSIC.

RECENT CONCERTS.

M. LÉON DELAFOSSE, French pianist, gave a concert at the new Salle Erard last Thursday week. He is young and talented, and so far as one can judge from a first appearance, he is a better exponent of modern than of classical music. He played Beethoven's Sonata in C sharp minor, but in such a restless, spasmodic manner as to destroy the poetry and charm of the music. The impression made was by no means satisfactory; one could not but feel that he read without understanding, or that he had been misdirected. His rendering of Chopin's Nocturne in E flat (Op. 55, No. 2) was clear, but cold. In some modern pieces, however, notably in two of M. Théodore Dubois' charming Poemes Sylvestres, M. Delafosse displayed rare technical ability and considerable refinement. If he would only select a programme better suited to his style of playing, he would no doubt achieve success. M. Clément sang extremely well in some songs by Mlle. Chaminade and M. Benberg, who accompanied in turn. M. Clément, unfortunately, did not temper his voice to the moderate size of the room, so that in loud passages the effect was unpleasant.

Miss Liza Lehmann, who is about to be married, made her last appearance in public at St. James's Hall on Saturday afternoon. She has long been a favourite in the concert-room, for she possesses a pleasing voice, and sings with skill, refinement, and charm. Of the concert little need be said. Many well-known vocalists appeared, and added to the success of the afternoon. Mme. Haas and Miss Fanny Davies played Saint-Saëns' "Danse Macabre" for two pianofortes, and the latter was after heard to considerable advantage in some short pieces by Brahms. Mlle. Lehmann sang her best, and was, naturally, received with enthusiasm. An "Ave Maria" for contralto voices (solo and chorus), with cello obbligato and accompaniment of harp, organ, and pianoforte, by M. Herbert Bedford, Mlle. Lehmann's future husband, proved a smoothly written and fairly effective composition.

A Quartet for strings ("Costa" prize) by Mr. A. Mistowski (student) was performed at the Trinity College Conversazione held at the Royal Institute of Painters, Piccadilly, on Wednesday evening. It is an interesting and promising work. The thematic material is fresh, and though art is not entirely concealed, the music is never dry and laboured. The first and last of the four movements seem to be the best, although there is much to praise in the Andante. The selection of keys for the various movements is not altogether satisfactory. The Quartet was carefully played by MM. Czezanowski, Fenigstein, Mistowski, and Van Der Straeten. The production of works by students is to be commended; it encourages and instructs them.

J. S. SHEDLOCK.

TERMS OF SUBSCRIPTIONS

TO

THE ACADEMY.

(PAYABLE IN ADVANCE)

| | YEARLY. | HALF-YEARLY. | QUARTERLY. |
|---|---------|--------------|------------|
| | £ s. d. | £ s. d. | £ s. d. |
| If obtained of a Newsvender or at a Railway Station | 0 13 0 | 0 6 6 | 0 3 3 |
| Including Postage to any part of the United Kingdom | 0 15 2 | 0 7 7 | 0 3 10 |
| Including Postage to any part of France, Germany, India, China, &c. | 0 17 4 | 0 8 8 | 0 4 4 |

MR. MURRAY'S LIST.

NOW READY, crown 8vo, 6s.

THE QUARTERLY REVIEW, No. 357.

CONTENTS.

- | | |
|---------------------------------|------------------------------------|
| 1. THE NEW CHRISTIAN SOCIALISM. | 6. THE ATTACK on the WELSH CHURCH. |
| 2. ENGLISH CASTLES. | 7. FORESTRY. |
| 3. ICELAND TO-DAY. | 8. IRISH FOLK-LORE. |
| 4. DR. PUSEY. | 9. OLD HAILEYBURY COLLEGE. |
| 5. LATIN POETRY of the DECLINE. | 10. PARTY GOVERNMENT. |
| 11. THE FRENCH SOUDAN. | |

With Portrait, crown 8vo, 12s.

SONGS, POEMS, AND VERSES.

By HELEN, LADY DUFFERIN.

(Countess of Gifford.)

Edited, with a Memoir, and some Account of the Sheridan Family, by her Son,
The MARQUESS of DUFFERIN and AVA.

[Just out.

8vo, 12s.

A PEASANT STATE.

AN ACCOUNT OF BULGARIA IN 1894, DERIVED FROM A RECENT VISIT TO THE COUNTRY.

By EDWARD DICEY, C.B.

[Ready on Monday.

TWO NEW EDITIONS OF MURRAY'S HANDBOOKS.

Crown 8vo, 9s.

HANDBOOK FOR SCOTLAND.

A New Edition, thoroughly Revised and in great part Rewritten, with special detailed information for Pedestrians, and entirely New Maps. Printed on specially light thin paper.

[Just out.

Crown 8vo, 5s.

HANDBOOK FOR WORCESTERSHIRE AND HEREFORDSHIRE.

A NEW EDITION.

With Maps of the Counties and of the River Wye, and Plans of the Cathedrals, &c.

[Just out.

JOHN MURRAY, ALBEMARLE STREET.

THIS DAY, 464 pp., demy 8vo, cloth, 10s. 6d.

THE ENGLISH REVOLUTION of the 20th CENTURY. With Introduction, and Edited by, HENRY LAZARUS, Author of "Landlordism," &c.

This book will be found to be an indictment of the whole system of party government. It deals strenuously with abuses of the day, and sketches the improved national happiness which might be brought about through land nationalisation.

LONDON: T. FISHER UNWIN, PATERNOSTER SQUARE, E.C.

NATIONAL PROVIDENT INSTITUTION.

For Mutual Life Assurance.

PROFITS.—The whole are divided amongst the Assured. Already divided, £1,600,000.
At the division in 1892 there were nearly eight hundred Policies in respect of which not only were the Premiums entirely extinguished, but also Annuities were granted or Cash Bonuses paid, whilst in the case of many Policies the original sums assured are now more than doubled by the Bonus Additions. Applications for Agencies invited.
48, Gracechurch Street, London, E.C.

ARTHUR SMITHER, Actuary and Secretary.

MUDIE'S SELECT LIBRARY

For the CIRCULATION and SALE of all the BEST ENGLISH, FRENCH, GERMAN, ITALIAN, and SPANISH BOOKS.

TOWN SUBSCRIPTIONS from One Guinea per annum.
LONDON BOOK SOCIETY (for Weekly Exchange of Books at the Houses of Subscribers) from Two Guineas per annum.

COUNTRY SUBSCRIPTIONS from Two Guineas per annum.
N.B.—Two or three friends may unite in One Subscription and thus lessen the cost of carriage.

LIBRARY BOXES GRATIS.

Town and Village Clubs supplied on Liberal Terms.

Prospectuses and Monthly Lists of Books gratis and post free.

SALE DEPARTMENT.

All the leading Books of the Past Seasons are on Sale, second-hand at greatly Reduced Prices.

LISTS GRATIS AND POST FREE.

MUDIE'S MANCHESTER LIBRARY,
10 to 12, BARTON ARCADE, MANCHESTER,
Is in daily communication with this Library.

MUDIE'S SELECT LIBRARY, Limited,

30 to 34, NEW OXFORD STREET, LONDON;

241, Brompton Road, S.W.; and 48, Queen Victoria St., E.C.

THE AUTOTYPE COMPANY

Has the honour to announce the Publication of

NINETY-THREE DRAWINGS

BY

ALBERT DURER,

Reproduced in Facsimile from Originals in the British Museum, and accompanied by Descriptive Text by

SIDNEY COLVIN, M.A.,

Keeper of Prints and Drawings, British Museum.

"The British Museum collection, reproduced in this volume, is," says Professor Colvin, "a fairly complete and representative survey of the several phases of Durer's activity as a draughtsman and sketcher during all periods of his career."

The Volume is Imperial folio, half-morocco, Plates Linen-Guarded and Interleaved. Edition 100 Copies.

Price Six Guineas.

The AUTOTYPE FINE-ART CATALOGUE (New Edition), of 181 pages, with Illustrated Supplement, containing 63 Miniature Photographs of notable Autotypes, post free, ONE SHILLING.

"AUTOTYPE: a Decorative and Educational Art."

NEW PAMPHLET, FREE ON APPLICATION.

THE AUTOTYPE COMPANY,
74, New Oxford Street, London,

MESSRS. J. C. DRUMMOND & CO., ART REPRODUCERS,

19, HENRIETTA STREET, COVENT GARDEN, W.O.
Are the sole representatives in Great Britain of

HERR HANFSTAENGL, of Munich,

the well-known Artist in PHOTOGRAPHURE, now patronised by the leading London Art Publishing Firms. A large Collection of important Plates always on view.

Process Blocks for the purpose of Ordinary Book Illustrations.

Messrs. DRUMMOND & CO. supply the cheapest and best Processes in the market, which are specially adapted to meet the wants of Antiquarians, Archaeologists, and those engaged in the investigation and publication of Parochial and Diocesan Records.

J. C. DRUMMOND & CO. invite attention to their Improved Rapid Photo-Mechanical Process

For the Reproduction of Works of Art, Original MSS., Designs, Lace Manufactures, Photographs, Views, Book Illustrations, Artistic Advertisements, Catalogues, &c., at a moderate cost.

Specimens and price list on application.

Offices: 14, HENRIETTA STREET COVENT GARDEN, LONDON.

THE ACADEMY.

A WEEKLY REVIEW OF LITERATURE, SCIENCE, AND ART.

No. 1160.
[New Issue.]

SATURDAY, JULY 28, 1894.

PRICE 3d.
[Registered as a Newspaper.]

| TABLE OF CONTENTS | PAGE |
|---|------|
| RAWNSLEY'S LITERARY ASSOCIATIONS OF THE ENGLISH LAKES, by T. HUTCHINSON | 59 |
| ANDREW LANO'S COCK LANE AND COMMON SENSE, by F. YORK POWELL | 60 |
| PROTHERO'S SELECT STATUTES OF THE REIGNS OF ELIZABETH AND JAMES I., by R. SEYMOUR LONG | 61 |
| STREET'S AUTOBIOGRAPHY OF A BOY, by PERCY ADDLESBAY | 62 |
| THE DIATESARON OF TATIAN, by J. H. BEENARD | 62 |
| NEW NOVELS, by GEORGE SAINTSBURY | 63 |
| SOME BOOKS ABOUT THE COUNTRY | 64 |
| NOTES AND NEWS | 65 |
| UNIVERSITY JOTTINGS | 66 |
| ORIGINAL VERSE: "A LIFE'S EPILOGUE," by GRANT ALLEN | 67 |
| MAGAZINES AND REVIEWS | 67 |
| SELECTED FOREIGN BOOKS | 67 |
| CORRESPONDENCE— | |
| The Canon of Chaucer's Works, by Walter W. Skeat; The Septuagint and Samaritan versus the Hebrew Text of the Pentateuch, by Sir Henry Howarth | 67 |
| THE TEXT OF BROWNF, by HENRY BRADLEY | 69 |
| CURRENT SCIENTIFIC LITERATURE | 70 |
| SCIENCE NOTES | 71 |
| PHILOLOGY NOTES | 71 |
| REPORTS OF SOCIETIES | 71 |
| TWO BOOKS ON ROBERTS, by WILLIAM SHARP | 72 |
| NOTES ON ART AND ARCHAEOLOGY | 73 |
| STAGE NOTES | 73 |
| THE LETTERS OF FRANZ LISZT, by J. S. SHEDLOCK | 74 |
| MUSIC NOTES | 74 |

TO INVALIDS.—A LIST OF MEDICAL MEN in all parts, willing to RECEIVE RESIDENT PATIENTS, giving full particulars and terms, sent gratis. The list includes private asylums, &c.; schools also recommended.—Address Mr. G. B. STOKER, 8, Lancaster Place, Strand, W.C.

POPULAR WRITERS OF FICTION wishing to secure the most extensive COPYRIGHTED PUBLICATION obtainable in United States, Canada, and elsewhere, should communicate with P. F. COLLIER, 521, West Thirteenth Street, New York City.

TYPE-WRITING. AUTHORS, PUBLISHERS, &c.—Scientific, Literary, and Medical MSS. carefully and promptly typewritten by RAYNE & CO., 40, Norfolk Street, Strand, W.C. Private room for dictation. Highest references. Translations.

THE FLEET STREET TYPEWRITERS 115, FLEET STREET, E.C. Lowest Charges. Highest Speed. Every kind of Typewriting Work Done. Price List—115, Fleet Street, London.

TYPE-WRITERS.—SECOND-HAND MACHINES, equal to new. FOR SALE, EXCHANGE, or LENT ON HIRE. Machines sold by instalments on terms to suit purchasers. Use of Machine taught free to buyers or purchasers. Remingtons, Yosts, Hammonds, Caligraph, Barlocks, Fitch, &c., from 28. MS. Copied with accuracy and despatch at lowest rates. Highest references. Illustrated Catalogue free.—N. TAYLOR, Manager, National Type-Writer Exchange, 74, Chancery Lane, London (Holborn end).

CATALOGUES FOREIGN BOOKS AND PERIODICALS promptly supplied on moderate terms. CATALOGUES on application. DULAU & CO., 37, SOHO SQUARE.

BAEDEKER'S & BADDELEY'S TOURISTS' GUIDE BOOKS. New fully detailed Catalogue sent post free on application. DULAU & CO., 37, SOHO SQUARE, LONDON, W.

FOREIGN BOOKS AT FOREIGN PRICES.

WILLIAMS & NORGATE, Importers of Foreign Books, 14, HENRIETTA STREET, COVENT GARDEN, AND 20, SOUTH FREDERICK STREET, EDINBURGH. CATALOGUES post free on application.

G. P. PUTNAM'S SONS, PUBLISHERS and BOOKSELLERS, of 27 and 29 West 23rd Street, New York, and 24, BEDFORD STREET, LONDON, W.C., desire to call the attention of the READING PUBLIC to the excellent facilities presented by their Branch House in London for filling, on the most favourable terms, orders for their own STANDARD PUBLICATIONS, and for ALL AMERICAN BOOKS AND PERIODICALS.—CATALOGUES sent on application.

IMPORTANT.—PRINTING AND PUBLISHING NEWSPAPERS, MAGAZINES, BOOKS, &c.—KING, SELL & RAILTON, Limited, high-class Printers and Publishers, 12, Gough Square, 4, Bolt Court, Fleet Street, E.C., have specially-built Rotary and other fast Machines for printing illustrated or other Journals, and specially-built Machines for fast folding and covering 16 or 32 page Journals at one operation. Facilities upon the premises for Editorial Offices, free. Advertising and Publishing Departments conducted. Telephone 2730. Telegraph, "Africanism, London.

UNIVERSITY of ST. ANDREWS.

In consequence of Professor Jones having intimated to the University Court his intention to vacate the CHAIR of LOGIC and METAPHYSICS at 1st October next, APPLICATIONS, accompanied by Twenty copies of Testimonials, may be lodged with the Secretary of the Court until 10th September. The appointment will be made subject to such alterations as to the duties of the Chair as may hereafter be enacted by Ordinance of the Scottish Universities Commissioners. The new Professor will be expected to enter on his duties on 10th October.
St. Andrews, 20th July, 1894.

UNIVERSITY of DUBLIN.

The Council will proceed to Nominate a PROFESSOR of MUSIC in Michaelmas Term of the present year. The Chair is tenable for five years, and the Professor may be re-elected at the end of that period. Details as to the duties of the Chair, and other particulars, may be obtained from the Registrar of Trinity College, to whom candidates should send testimonials and copies of their published works before the 10th of October, 1894.

JOHN K. INGRAM, Registrar.

BRITISH ASSOCIATION for the ADVANCEMENT of SCIENCE.

Burlington House, London, W.

The NEXT ANNUAL MEETING of the Association will be held at OXFORD, commencing on WEDNESDAY, August 8th.

PRESIDENT-ELECT—The Most Hon. The MARQUIS of SALISBURY, K.G., D.C.L., F.R.S., Chancellor of the University of Oxford.

Information about Local Arrangements may be obtained from the Local Secretaries, The Museum, Oxford.

G. GRIFFITH, Assistant General Secretary.

BRITISH MUSEUM.

EVENING OPENING (8 to 10 P.M.). Exhibition galleries of the British Museum, Bloomsbury, will again be OPEN to the Public in the EVENING, from 8 to 10 o'clock, on and after WEDNESDAY, August 1st.

E. MACNIE THOMPSON, Principal Librarian and Secretary.

British Museum, 24th July, 1894.

ROYAL ACADEMY of ARTS.—LAST WEEK.—The Exhibition will CLOSE on the EVENING of MONDAY, August 6th.

ROYAL ACADEMY of ARTS.—EVENING EXHIBITION.—The Exhibition will be OPEN in the EVENING from MONDAY, July 30th, to MONDAY, August 6th (BANK HOLIDAY), from 7.30 to 10.30. Admission 6d. Catalogue, 6d. On Bank Holiday the Admission throughout the day will be 6d. On other days it will be as usual.

ALFRED D. FARR, R.W.S., Secretary.

ROYAL SOCIETY of PAINTERS in WATER-COLOURS.—The SUMMER EXHIBITION will CLOSE on SATURDAY, August 4th, 5, PAUL MALL EAST, from 10 till 6. Admission, 1s. Catalogue, 1s.

BRITISH MUSEUM.—ASSYRIAN SCULPTURES.—Statuettes of Sennacherib, Assurbanipal, and his Queen. Also reduced Facsimiles of the unique and beautiful "Garden of Eden" Winged Human-headed Lion and Bull, &c. Modelled from the famous Nineveh Sculptures, and made in Porcelain (parian). "Interesting and faithful reproductions."—Athenaeum, Oct. 7, 1893.

Descriptive Prospectus on application to ALFRED JARVIS (Sole Publisher), 43, WILLES ROAD, LONDON, N.W.

LONDON SCHOOL of MEDICINE for WOMEN. 30, HANDEL STREET, BRUNSWICK SQUARE, W.C., and the ROYAL FREE HOSPITAL, prepare for all the Medical Examinations open to Women. Entrance Scholarship, value £30; Stuart Mill Scholarship, £30 a year for four years; Mackay Prizes of £20 each, &c.—Apply to SECRETARY at School.

DR. KLEIN has now added to the CIVIL SERVICE INSTITUTE, at 110, Cannon-street, E.C., a REGISTRATION BUREAU for the Clerical and Scholastic Professions. Principals of Schools at Home and Abroad, Rectors, Vicars, and Assistant Teachers, may confidently rely upon the Doctor's long and varied experience in professional matters being placed promptly at their disposal.

PHILOLOGICAL PUBLICATIONS of the late PRINCE LOUIS-LUCIEN BONAPARTE.

At the end of No. 533, for July (just published), of SOTHERAN'S PRICE CURRENT of LITERATURE, will be found a LIST of all PRINCE L. L. BONAPARTE'S PHILOLOGICAL PUBLICATIONS of which any copies still remain for sale; besides a collection of good editions of Standard Works for the Library.

A Copy sent free on application to H. SOTHERAN & CO., Booksellers, 140, Strand, W.C., or 37, Piccadilly, W.

TO BRITISH AND FOREIGN AUTHORS.

F. TENNYSON NEELY, Publisher, Chicago, U.S.A., solicits correspondence with Authors of works in Fiction and General Literature. The Copyright Laws now protect Literary Property by simultaneous publication in the United States and Great Britain. Treaty for absolute purchase of authors' rights, or publication, on royalty if desired. Prompt reply in every instance will be made.—Address F. TENNYSON NEELY, care of C. Mitchell & Co., 12 and 13, Red Lion Court, Fleet Street, E.C.

THE AUTOTYPE COMPANY

Has the honour to announce the Publication of NINETY-THREE DRAWINGS

BY

ALBERT DURER,

Reproduced in Facsimile from Originals in the British Museum, and accompanied by Descriptive Text by

SIDNEY COLVIN, M.A.,

Keeper of Prints and Drawings, British Museum.

"The British Museum collection, reproduced in this volume, is," says Professor Colvin, "a fairly complete and representative survey of the several phases of Durer's activity as a draughtsman and sketcher during all periods of his career."

The Volume is Imperial folio, half-morocco, Plates Linnen-Guarded and Interleaved. Edition 100 Copies.

Price Six Guineas.

The AUTOTYPE FINE-ART CATALOGUE

(New Edition), of 181 pages, with Illustrated Supplement, containing 68 Miniature Photographs of notable Autotypes, post free, ONE SHILLING.

"AUTOTYPE: a Decorative and Educational Art."

NEW PAMPHLET, FREE ON APPLICATION.

THE AUTOTYPE COMPANY,
74, New Oxford Street, London,

MESSRS. J. C. DRUMMOND & CO., ART REPRODUCERS,
14, HENRIETTA STREET, COVENT GARDEN, W.C.

Are the sole representatives in Great Britain of

HERR HANFSTAENGL, of Munich.

the well-known Artist in PHOTOGRAPHY, now patronised by the leading London Art Publishing Firms. A large Collection of Important Plates always on hand.

Process Blocks for the purpose of Ordinary Book Illustrations.

Messrs. DRUMMOND & CO. supply the cheapest and best Processes in the market, which are specially adapted to meet the wants of Antiquarians, Archaeologists, and those engaged in the investigation and publication of Pictorial and Diocesan Records.

J. C. DRUMMOND & CO. invite attention to their

Improved Rapid Photo-Mechanical Process

For the Reproduction of Works of Art, Original MSS., Designs, Lace Manufactures, Photographs, Views, Book Illustrations, Artistic Advertisements, Catalogues, &c., &c., at a moderate cost.

Specimens and price list on application.

Offices: 14, HENRIETTA STREET COVENT GARDEN, LONDON.

EDUCATION.—Particulars as to the best University or Army Tutors, and Schools for Boys or Girls, at home or abroad, may be obtained (free of charge) by sending a statement of requirements to R. J. BEEVOY, M.A., 8, Lancaster Place, Strand.

IMPORTANT WORK ON THE HISTORY OF THE NOVEL. A GUIDE TO

BRITISH & AMERICAN NOVELS.
BEING A COMPREHENSIVE MANUAL TO BRITISH AND AMERICAN FICTION FROM THE EARLIEST PERIOD TO THE END OF 1893.

BY PERCY RUSSELL,

Author of "The Author's Manual," &c.

Crown 8vo, cloth, 300 pp., price 3s. 6d. net; by post, 3s. 10d.

The Guide contains a Complete History of the NOVEL, LIVING NOVELISTS, AND NOVELISTS OF THE PAST.

BY THE SAME AUTHOR.

THE AUTHOR'S MANUAL.
WITH PRELIMINARY REMARKS BY MR. GLADSTONE.

Seventh and Cheap Edition. With New Preface, 304 pp., Crown 8vo, cloth, price 3s. 6d. net; by post, 3s. 10d. With Portrait.

"Mr. Russell's book is a very complete manual and guide for journalist and author. It is not a merely practical work—it is literary and appreciative of literature in its best sense. . . . We have little else but praise for the volume."—Westminster Review.

LONDON: DIGBY, LONG & CO., PUBLISHERS,
13, BOUVERIE STREET, FLEET STREET, E.C.

RICHARD BENTLEY & SON'S LIST.

Now ready, price One Shilling.

THE TEMPLE BAR MAGAZINE.

CONTENTS for AUGUST, 1894.

- I. THE ADVENTURES. Chaps. V.-VIII.
- II. KISMET.
- III. A WEST-END PHYSICIAN.
- IV. HANNAL.
- V. THE LAST FIGHT in ARMOUR.
- VI. EXPERTO CREDE.
- VII. ENNUI and the OPIUM PIPE.
- VIII. WILLIAM COLLINS, POET.
- IX. THE WORTH of a LASS!
- X. RECORDS of an ALL-ROUND MAN.
- XI. SNOW-BLANCHE.
- XII. AN INTERLOPER. (Conclusion)
- XIII. AN HOUR AGO.

NOW READY.

MORE ABOUT GORDON. By ONE WHO KNEW HIM WELL. In 1 vol., fcap. 8vo, 2s. 6d.

"The author of 'More About Gordon' is right in supposing that this book does not come too late. England will never tire of hearing of its hero, who appealed to her on so many sides of the national character. There is the more reason for this book because it is, as it professes to be, by 'One Who Knew Him Well.' The writer is a lady, and we learn that her acquaintance with Gordon began in 1867."—Daily News.

NEW NOVELS NOW READY.

NOW READY.

AN INTERLOPER. By Frances MARY PEARD, Author of "The Baronessa," &c. In 2 vols., crown 8vo.

"From the author of 'The Rose Garden' we expect certain qualities of style, among them just proportion and quiet elegance, to use a word as old-fashioned as the attribute itself. In 'An Interloper' both of these are manifest, and the book will have its charm for those whose taste is not too far perverted to recognise their excellence. Miss Peard's story of a man's weakness and a woman's devotion is admirably written, and exhibits with effect the writer's skill in the drawing of character."—World.

NOW READY.

A TROUBLESOME PAIR. By LESLIE KEITH, Author of "Lisbeth," &c. In 3 vols., crown 8vo.

"Mr. Leslie Keith, who has for some time past been favourably known to the public as a clever and entertaining writer of fiction, has just given publicity, under the title of 'A Troublesome Pair,' to a story of such conspicuous ability that its authorship can scarcely fail to place him high in the ranks of contemporary English novelists. A more wholesome or amusing book has not reached our cognisance for many a day."—Daily Telegraph.

NOW READY.

IN a CINQUE PORT: a Story of Winchelsea. By E. M. HEWITT. In 3 vols., crown 8vo.

"In a Cinque Port" strikes us as a book which has been written with much deliberation. The author seems to have been under the influence of the ancient sea-forsaken Sussex city which he has chosen for the setting of his scenes. He describes lovingly and well, and those who know Winchelsea will take pleasure from the description apart altogether from the plot and action of the story."—Daily Chronicle.

NOW READY.

MRS. ROMNEY. By Rosa N. CAREY, Author of "Nellie's Memories," &c. In 1 vol., small crown 8vo, 2s.

"Miss Carey has the gift of writing naturally and simply, her pathos is true and unforced, and her conversations are sprightly and sharp."—Standard.

A NEW EDITION. In 1 vol., crown 8vo, 6s.

DIANA TEMPEST. By Mary CHOLMONDELEY, Author of "Sir Charles Danvers," &c.

"Miss Cholmondeley writes with a brightness which is in itself delightful. Let everyone who can enjoy an excellent novel, full of humour, touched with real pathos, and written with finished taste and skill, read 'Diana Tempest.'"—Athenaeum.

RICHARD BENTLEY & SON, New Burlington Street
Publishers in Ordinary to Her Majesty the Queen.

ESSAYS, RECOLLECTIONS AND CAUSERIES.

BY THE HON. LIONEL A. TOLLEMACHE.

[Collected in their original form at MARK
PATTISON'S request.]

Demy 8vo, pp. 451, cloth, 5s.

SAFE STUDIES.

Contents:—

HISTORICAL PREDICTION.—Sir G. C. LEWIS and LONGEVITY.—LITERARY EGOTISM.—CHARLES AUSTIN.—RECOLLECTIONS of Mr. GROTE and Mr. BABBAGE.—Mr. TENNYSON'S SOCIAL PHILOSOPHY.—PHYSICAL and MORAL COURAGE.—THE UPPER ENGADINE.—NOTES and RECOLLECTIONS of Sir CHARLES WHEATSTONE.—DEAN STANLEY, and CANON KINGSLEY.—THE EPICURIST'S LAMENT.—TRANSLATIONS.

POEMS AND TRANSLATIONS

BY

THE HON. MRS. L. A. TOLLEMACHE.

Demy 8vo, pp. 233, cloth, 2s. 6d.

STONES OF STUMBLING.

CONTENTS:—

THE CURE for INCURABLES.—THE FEAR of DEATH.—FEARLESS DEATHS.—DIVINE ECONOMY of TRUTH.

APPENDICES:—

RECOLLECTIONS of MARK PATTISON.—Mr. ROMANEY'S CATECHISM.—NEOCHRISTIANITY and NEOCATHOLICISM: a Sequel.

* This is also published separately, demy 8vo, cloth, 1s.

These Books are issued at COST PRICE.

"Mr. Tollemache's essays seem to us to possess literary merit of a rare and high order. He is not only pleasantly anecdotic; he is eminently sympathetic, ingenious, thoughtful, and appreciative, and many of these qualities are also exhibited in his more speculative and less personal papers. His recollections of Grote, Charles Austin, and Pattison are full of interesting anecdote and suggestive comment, while those of Babbage, Sir Charles Wheatstone, Dean Stanley, and Canon Kingsley belong to the same order. The 'Recollections of Pattison' are very charming."—THE TIMES.

"The 'Safe Studies' are those to which it is impossible for any human creature to raise the smallest objection on any ground whatever, and they are about four times as long as the 'Stones of Stumbling.' These stumbling-blocks may possibly at some period or other have given scandal to a part of the population by no means likely to read them; but in these days the public has swallowed so many camels that we do not think Mr. Tollemache's gnats would even make any considerable portion of them cough. We propose to make some observations on the most important of these charming essays. They are all singularly well worth reading, and may be described as the works of a most ingenious, accomplished, and cultivated man of leisure, who writes in order to fix recollections and systematise speculations which interest him, and not for the purpose of advocating particular views in the spirit of a partisan or propagandist. The only likelihood of Charles Austin being remembered at all lies in the chance of the survival of the touching and striking account given of him by his accomplished, grateful, and most appreciative pupil."—The late Mr. Justice FITZJAMES STEPHEN in the ST. JAMES'S GAZETTE.

"Since the death of Hayward, we know of no English litterateur who has, in the same degree as Mr. Tollemache, the happy knack of recollecting or collecting the characteristic sayings and doings of a distinguished man, and piecing them together in a finished mosaic."—THE DAILY CHRONICLE.

LONDON:

WILLIAM RICE, 86, FLEET STREET, E.C.

Sold also by BERTANO, 17, Avenue de l'Opéra, Paris, and 31, Union Square, New York; TITTMANN, Dresden; VIGUSSI, Florence, PITHOEVER, Rome; and all Book-sellers.

Mr. Wm. Heinemann's New Novels

READY AUGUST 3rd.

HALL CAINE'S NEW NOVEL, THE MANXMAN.

* * This New and Important Novel will be published in the first instance as a ONE-VOLUME book, crown 8vo, price 6s.

BY THE SAME AUTHOR.—3s. 6d. each.

THE BONDMAN. Twenty-six Thousand. THE SCAPEGOAT. Twenty-first Thousand. CAPTAIN DAVY'S HONEYMOON.

The Pioneer Series OF ORIGINAL ONE-VOLUME NOVELS.

Fest 8vo, in ornamental paper cover, 2s. 6d. net; uniformly bound in cloth, 3s. net.

READY.

JOANNA TRAILL, SPINSTER,

By ANNIE E. HOLDSWORTH.

W. L. GOSWELL in Daily Telegraph.—"The character of the spinster is admirably drawn throughout, with a sympathy and insight which reveal no small measure of artistic gift. Miss Holdsworth evidently has both power and pathos, and if this is, as I understand, her first novel, it contains abundant promise of future success."

GEORGE MANDEVILLE'S HUSBAND.

By C. E. RAIMOND.

Daily Chronicle.—"So vivid indeed is our sympathy with Rosina, the daughter of George Mandeville, a beautiful and touching figure, that we cannot but wish that the author had found some means of letting her live, though her death is doubtless the artistic culmination of the tragic-comedy. The closing scenes are strongly realised and poignantly pathetic. One of the chief merits of the book is its easy and thoroughly vitalised style, which rises at one or two points to unusual strength and dignity."

To be followed by
THE WINGS OF ICARUS. THE GREEN CARNATION.
BY LAURENCE ALMA TADEMA. AN ALTAR OF EARTH.
By THYMOL MONK.

TWO NEW LIBRARY NOVELS.

The MERCHANT of KILLOGUE

By EDMUND DOWNEY (F. M. ALLEN), Author of
"Through Green Glasses." In 3 vols.

World.—"An inside and intimate picture of Irish life and character, in phases and circumstances which have not, so far as we know, been approached by any other novelist or satirist. The swift stroke of fate and sudden investment of the scene with tragic interest, are Mr. Downey's own. Mick Moloney's last 'few words with the master' is an incident worthy to be placed beside the famous death-scene in the mountain-pass in 'Tom Burke.'"

THE POTTER'S THUMB. By

FLORA ANNE STEEL, Author of "From the Five Rivers." In 3 vols. Second Edition.

Spectator.—"As a novelist Mrs. Steel has come rapidly to the front, and her most recent work, 'The Potter's Thumb,' seems to us undoubtedly her best. So far as treatment of native life is concerned, Mrs. Steel's stories hint at a lifetime of sympathetic study, and a garnered store of comprehensive knowledge, which in the books of an English author is all but unique."

Guardian.—"From the moment we open the book we are transported bodily to India, in many respects to a novel India, but one that fascinates and impresses itself indelibly on the mind."

St. James's Gazette.—"We are inclined to regard 'The Potter's Thumb' as one of the best novels of Indian life ever written; and the author is entitled to rank with the most accomplished novelists of this generation."

Court Journal.—"The Potter's Thumb' is one of the few novels of the season which should not merely be read, but bought."

THE NOVELS of IVAN TURGENEV.—Vol. I. RUDIN. Translated from the Russian by CONSTANCE GARNETT. With a Portrait of the Author. 12mo, cloth, 8s. net.

Daily Telegraph.—"Not the least notable of the literary events of the last few days is the commencement of a new edition to English of Tourgeniev's novels, of which the first volume ('Rudin'), admirably translated by Mrs. Garnett, has just been published."

NEW ONE-VOLUME NOVELS.

BLESSED ARE THE POOR.

By FRANÇOIS COPPÉE. Translated from the French by WINIFRED HEATON. With an Introduction by T. P. O'CONNOR. Post 8vo, cloth extra, 3s. 6d.

Scotsman.—"The stories are both touching and charming. The first has a literary excellence in great part that it suggests inevitably a comparison with the Christmas books of Charles Dickens."

The STORY of a MODERN WOMAN.

By ELLA HEPPWORTH DIXON. Crown 8vo, cloth extra, 6s.

A SUPERFLUOUS WOMAN. A New Edition. 6s. Sixth Thousand.

A COMEDY of MASKS. By Ernest DOWSON and ARTHUR MOORE. A New Edition. Crown 8vo, 6s.

HEINEMANN'S INTERNATIONAL LIBRARY.

Edited by EDMUND GOSSE.

THE GRANDEE. By Don Armando

PALACIO VALDES, Author of "Froth." Translated from the Spanish by Rachel Chalice. With an Introduction by the Editor. Cloth, 2s. 6d.; paper cover, 2s. 6d.

LONDON:

WM. HEINEMANN, 21, BEDFORD STREET, W.C.

SATURDAY, JULY 28, 1894.

No. 1160, New Series.

THE EDITOR cannot undertake to return, or to correspond with the writers of, rejected manuscript.

It is particularly requested that all business letters regarding the supply of the paper, &c., may be addressed to the PUBLISHER, and not to the EDITOR.

LITERATURE.

Literary Associations of the English Lakes.
By the Rev. H. D. Rawnsley. In 2 vols.
(MacLehose.)

In the Reminiscences and Experiences of the late Edmund Yates there is an excellent story told of which, while reading these two volumes, I have been once and again reminded. Amongst the habitués of the Garrick Club, in the days when Dickens and Albert Smith and Benjamin Webster were members, there was a certain original named Andrew Arcedeckne, of whom Thackeray, to the intense mortification of his victim, and in open violation of the sanctities of club life, had not scrupled to give to the world, in the character of Harry Foker, Esquire, a portrait absolutely cruel in its uncompromising fidelity. The injured man vowed vengeance, and before long fate threw a golden opportunity in his way. It chanced, says Edmund Yates, that on the night after Thackeray's delivery of his first lecture on the "Humourists" at Willis's Rooms, where he had a very aristocratic audience, the great cynic was preening himself under a mass of congratulations at the Cider Cellars Club, when Arcedeckne entered and walked up to him. "How are you, Thack?" he said, buttoning his coat across in his usual fashion. "I was at your show to-day at Willis's. What a lot of swells you had there—yes! But I thought it was dull, devilish dull! I'll tell you what it is, Thack. You want a Piano!"

Now, though it would be neither civil nor to the point were we to hint to the author of these volumes that he "wants a Piano," one may, without impropriety, observe that Mr. Rawnsley's style is undoubtedly of the kind that, in order to be tolerable, demands the accompaniment of a lantern with limelight effects. A very large proportion—probably two-fifths—of the space in either volume is occupied with quotations from various standard authorities on the Lake Country and its poets—extracts from De Quincey's Reminiscences, for example, from Southey's Life and Correspondence, from the Lives of Wordsworth (Knight) and of Coleridge (Dykes Campbell), &c.; but these detached passages, though they undoubtedly impart a certain value to the work, are embedded in a mass of Rawnsleian prose which, whether regard be had to the thoughts of which it is the vehicle, or to its intrinsic merits in respect of style, must be pronounced infinitely better adapted to the platform of the parochial lecture hall than to the "pensive citadel" of the literary student.

The subject to which Mr. Rawnsley addresses himself is one that combines formidable difficulties with attractions of no common kind. It would be hard to conceive anything more fascinating than a theme which includes among its leading topics the personal characteristics and literary productions of Wordsworth, Southey, and De Quincey, of the two Coleridges (father and son), of John Wilson, Harriet Martineau, and Matthew Arnold, not to mention a whole host of lesser lights; while, on the other hand, the fact that this field is not virgin soil, having been already exploited with brilliant results by more than one famous writer, enhances in no small measure the difficulties of the task. That the subject is not utterly threadbare—that it is still possible to find something neither offensively stale nor wholly irrelevant to say upon it—has been recently proved by Mr. Stopford Brooke, who, in his admirable monograph, Dove Cottage, Wordsworth's Home from 1800 to 1808, has contrived, within the strictest possible limits, to impart a charm so potent to his simple narrative, that, having once begun to read, we find ourselves unable to lay down the book until we have read it through. But then it is of course necessary, if one desires to write acceptably upon a well-worn theme, that one should first have in one's mind something definite and appropriate to say. And herein, we are persuaded, lies the proper explanation of the fact that Mr. Rawnsley, notwithstanding that he labours at his task with such a hearty good will, has nevertheless wholly failed to produce an interesting book. The truth is that he has not only, like Bishop Warburton, a rage for saying something when there is nothing to be said; but also, unlike that fertile-minded prelate, a rage for saying something when he has nothing to say!

We have searched the original portion of these volumes right through, and have failed to light upon a single thought or sentiment in it that might not have proceeded from "many men, many women, and many children." In a word, if we except the liberal extracts from various famous writers with which Mr. Rawnsley has diversified his pages—no inconsiderable exception, to be sure—the Literary Associations of the English Lakes may be honestly described as the triumphant consummation of triviality and platitude.

If it be true, as Prince Hal once upon a time observed, that "he is a blessed fellow who thinks as every man thinks," then indeed must Mr. Rawnsley be numbered among the blessed; for assuredly "never a man's thought in the world keeps the roadway better than his." A sample or two of his amazing talent for humdrum must now be given. His subject being, as we have seen, the literary associations of the Lake Country, he has hardly made a fair start before he must needs turn aside to deliver his views upon the irrelevant question of Coleridge's domestic infelicity. After quoting De Quincey's familiar account of his first meeting with Mrs. Coleridge (in the Chubb's drawing-room at Bridgewater), the concluding sentence of which runs:—"From this short but uncongenial scene I gathered, what I afterwards learned redundantly, that Coleridge's marriage had not been a very happy one"—Mr. Rawnsley proceeds:

"De Quincey may have been right, but who was to blame? Was it the constantly unselfish, if unintellectual and rather over-domestic gentle woman, who, for all her fussiness [!], kept a household together for years in the hope that her queer-natured [!] spouse would return to his bairns and superintend their education? or was it the fault of the man of over-strung nerves and constant invalidism [!], of whom Southey once said, 'the moment anything assumed the shape of a duty, Coleridge felt incapable of discharging it, who unhappily sought refuge in opium for ills that it only added to? We cannot pronounce judgment; it is enough for us to know that life was not all roses [!] for the pair who took up residence in the beginning of this century at Greta Hall,' &c."

Now, we ask, can meaningless slip-slop of this kind be said to answer any good purpose? Does it serve to throw any fresh light upon the obscure and most unpleasant question of Coleridge's matrimonial difficulties—a question with which, be it observed, the writer was not in any way called upon to intermeddle? And, if not, what is it but a gratuitous impertinence?

Again, Mr. Rawnsley quotes a passage from the Grasmere Journal, in which Dorothy Wordsworth describes how painfully she had been oppressed by the persistent inquisitiveness of Thomas Wilkinson, the Quaker-poet.

"Every question," writes the poor woman, "was like the snapping of a little thread about my heart. I was glad when he left me. Then I had time to look at the moon while I was thinking my own thoughts. The moon travelled through the clouds, tingeing them yellow as she passed along with two stars near her, one larger than the other," &c.

Upon which our author platitudinises as follows:—"What a close observer of things in heaven and things on earth Dorothy was!"

Again, of Bishop Watson, of Calgarth, Mr. Rawnsley writes:

"The man who, going up to Cambridge . . . with little knowledge except a sound grounding in mathematics, could win the Professorship of Chemistry without one iota of chemical knowledge up to the hour when he gained it; and then determined to play the same feat with the Royal Chair of Divinity, must have been a remarkable man!"

And then adds:

"Chemistry has made great strides since these days. The Bishop probably never dreamt of Prof. Dewar and his solidified air."

Probably not, indeed, though it would, of course, be unwise to speak too positively on the point! It will be observed that Bishop Watson is spoken of above as a "remarkable" man. This word "remarkable" is a favourite of Mr. Rawnsley's, for the obvious reason that it may, according to the exigencies of the occasion, be taken to mean anything or nothing. Thus, for instance, when writing of the associations connected with Old Brathay, he first describes Charles Lloyd as one who was "no common man," and then proceeds to inform us that "Lloyd published his first volume of poems in 1796, and, if they are not very remarkable, at least they have been credited with some [!] vigour and originality." And, again, of Mrs. William Calvert, of Windy Brow, he observes:

"Those who have looked upon the pretty little pencil drawing of her, in her quaint scuttle bonnet, or half hat, half bonnet, will see at once—"

See what, in the name of patience? The lengthy protasis sets one all agog with curiosity. Why—

"— what a remarkable face Mrs. Calvert must have had," —to be sure!

In truth there is no limit to the number of these harmless nothings, these unmeaning and unprofitable splutterings of the author's pen. Here is another, on which, as we open at random volume ii., our eye casually lights:

Prof. Wilson speaks:

"There is to be seen thence [from the back of Calgarth House] the widest breadth of water, the richest foreground of wood, and the most magnificent background of mountain, not only of Westmoreland, but, believe me, in all the world."

Whereon Mr. Rawnsley observes:

"Strong words for the Professor; but then such a Professor in knowledge of his Westmoreland scenery had a right to use strong words!"

On perusal of which sapient reflection the gentle reader will in his turn, it is to be feared, be sorely tempted to let fall a "strong word" or two by way of comment.

One other instance of the essentially trite and obvious character of our author's remarks, and we have done. It goes without saying that he gives us Hazlitt's oft-quoted description of Coleridge as he was in the winter of 1798, the closing sentence of which, as every one knows, runs after this fashion; "His hair was thin, black, and glossy as the raven's, and fell in smooth masses over his forehead." On this sentence our platitudinarian glosses as follows:

"This long, liberal hair is peculiar to altruists."

Now, if what Mr. Rawnsley intends to say here be what his words do actually convey, viz., that every man who wears his hair long is an altruist, then it follows that in this gloss he merely voices the popular error under which for a time the simple folk of Bleeding Heart Yard (in Little Dorrit) laboured, and from which they were ultimately delivered by the shears of the energetic Pancks. We allude to the forcible tonsuring of old Casby, the Patriarch, who, notwithstanding that he fattened on moneys wrung without remorse from his hapless tenants in "the Yard," had contrived to establish and maintain for himself, by sheer force of long, grey, silken locks and broad-brimmed hat, the character of an ardent benefactor of his species. His "long liberal hair" was accepted by the unsophisticated Yard, in spite of his life-long habits of extortion and money-grubbing, as irrefragable proof of his altruistic sentiments.

We have lingered so long over the crying fault of Mr. Rawnsley's book, that we must be content to leave unnoticed certain other matters which we had marked for animadversion: namely, the too fervid quality and (so to speak) plethoric habit of his prose, the shallowness of his attempts at characterisation, and his lack of tactful discrimination in the choice of material. But probably enough has been already said to show that in our judgment the task attempted in these volumes is one which Mr. Rawnsley, had he been duly alive to the responsibilities of authorship, would never have dreamt of undertaking.

Happily, the book is not all worthless; chap. iv., for example, and parts of chaps. vii. and viii. of vol. i. may be read without offence, and even with positive gratification. Especially pleasing is the story of John Dalton, who was born on September 5, 1766, in the little hamlet of Ecclesfield (Eaglesfield on the map at the end of vol. i.), near Cockermouth, to Quaker parents of humble rank, and, after becoming the village preceptor at the age of thirteen, migrated in his sixteenth year to Kendal, where he worked at mathematics under the guidance of Gough, the blind naturalist. In 1793, Dalton was appointed teacher of science in the New College at Manchester; and in 1808 "he took the scientific world by storm with his New System of Chemical Philosophy," in which Dalton's Atomic Theory was advanced and expounded. Mr. Rawnsley relates several interesting anecdotes of the great chemist's early life. Coming once upon a time from Kendal to see the old folks at home, he brought his mother a present of what he believed to be a fine pair of silken hose of a sober drab. "Thou hast brought me a pair of grand stockings, John; but what made thee fancy such a high colour? What! I could never go in them to meeting in town." John protests that the stockings are drab. Son Jonathan is called in—he sides with brother John, and pronounces the goods to be of the orthodox colour. Then all Ecclesfield is called together, and the village verdict is "Varra fine stuff, but uncommon scarlety"; and so "the Daltons' humble cottage becomes the birth-place of scientific observation on the phenomenon of colour-blindness." Dalton never married. Once, for a week's space, he was under the bondage of love, having fallen victim to the charms of a young person who descanted "on the use of dephlogisticated marine acid in bleaching, and the effects of opium on the animal system"; but some novel electrical experiments drove the lady out of his head, and he never came in jeopardy again.

Very delightful, too, is the account which Mr. Rawnsley quotes from Mrs. H. M. Wigham's Bag of Old Letters of John Dalton's cousin, Elihu Robinson of Ecclesfield, the friend of Thomas Wilkinson of Yanwath, to whom, on one occasion, he sent a letter of kindly invitation (given at page 214 of volume i.), not unworthy, for the dignified simplicity of its harmonious prose, to be placed beside John Milton's famous invitatory sonnet, "To Mr. Lawrence." But for this, as well as for other particulars regarding the tender-hearted "Friend Robinson," a bare reference to Mr. Rawnsley's pages must now suffice.

As a rule, the dates and other matters of fact given in these volumes are remarkably correct. There are, however, a few errors, which it may perhaps be worth while to point out. Sara Coleridge was born, not in September, 1802 (i. 51), but on either December 22 or 23 in that year—probably on December 23. Coleridge "domiciled himself with Wordsworth at Allan Bank," not in 1807 (i. 57), but in September, 1808. The date given on p. 12, vol. i.—"Wednesday, June 22, 1800," is an impossible one. June 22 in the year 1800 fell, not upon a Wednesday, but upon a Sunday. The date "August, 1823" (ii. 15) should be August, 1825; and it is misleading to say that, on the occasion to which the author refers, Sir W. Scott "was en route for Rokeby," seeing that, in the absence of any news from his friend Morritt, Scott abandoned his intended visit to Rokeby, and started at six o'clock on the morning of August 26 from Lowther Castle direct to Abbotsford. Prof. Dowden no longer "thinks that William Calvert was in Wordsworth's mind when the latter wrote v.-vii. of the Castle of Indolence Stanzas" (i. 90). He is now convinced—and rightly—that "Wordsworth describes the countenance and character of Coleridge in the last four stanzas" (Aldine Wordsworth, i. 383). There are, moreover, one or two very trifling errors which it is unnecessary to particularise. The two volumes are separately and elaborately indexed, and volume i. is furnished with a map of the Lake District.

T. HUTCHINSON.

Cock Lane and Common Sense. By Andrew Lang. (Longmans.)

EVEN when one does not wholly agree with Mr. Lang it is always a pleasure to hear what he has to say on subjects of which, like ghosts and folklore, he is, above most men, entitled to speak. And this book was certainly worth writing, and is therefore well worth reading. It is difficult to summarise without misrepresentation, but we may at least try to put the case Mr. Lang is arguing somewhat to this effect. All the world over, for many years, certain phenomena are reported to have occurred that are outside our ordinary every-day experiences. Various explanations have been suggested of them, some obviously absurd, others more satisfactory, but none that to the scientific mind completely accounts for the phenomena in question. It is urged that there is here a subject worthy of careful investigation without prejudice. Mr. Lang is clearly neither "occultist" nor "spiritualist": he is not even convinced of the objectivity of these curious phenomena, he is simply struck by their constant and invariable recurrence, and concerned to point out the problems they offer. Only on the last page of his book does he seem for a moment to quit his scientific and sceptical attitude.

"Now if there is but one spark of real fire to all this smoke, then the present materialistic theories of life and the world must be reconsidered. They seem very well established, but so have many other theories seemed that are long gone the way of all things human."

Here there is an assumption, surely, of a very risky character. Even if these phenomena be objective and "real," there is no need to suppose them to be "supernatural," or that they will upset our "materialistic theories," any more than the discovery of electricity, of hypnotism, of a dozen other new provinces of natural knowledge. The working of the human nervous system is not so clear and plain that we can as yet explain why the continuous exhibition of alcohol will determine the common illusions of delirium tremens, yet few scientific men suppose that here is anything more than the symptoms of brain disorder. The illusions of insanity, again, can be classed under comparatively few species: at most we may conclude that the brain and other ganglia appear occasionally, under conditions we are not yet acquainted with, to respond to stimuli that, in a normal state of things, they do not regard. The whole animistic theory must be kept out of the question, and the ordinary scientific tests rigorously applied without parti pris. The history of the past explanations of these phenomena is one thing, a part of the history of scientific theories and religious ideas; research into the phenomena themselves is a wholly separate matter, a matter for the physiologist, the physicist, the psychologist.

Mr. Lang may be interested to know that the falling or stumbling spell was known and used in the Midlands within a very few years ago; that levitation, ascribed to the direct agency of the devil, was also believed in by English peasants of this century; in one case the "levite" was borne along over the tops of a row of elms, so close that he could, as he touched the highest twigs, hear "the young rooks calling for bread and cheese." It should be mentioned also that Mr. Lane, in the end, was doubtful of the bona fides of his sick son, though at first he had been convinced of the impossibility of imposture. Mr. Kellar's experiences are, of modern descriptions of magical phenomena, perhaps the most surprising (excepting the New Zealand stories Mr. Lang has himself gathered), but they certainly require corroboration from other witnesses.

There are a few repetitions in the book which might easily be removed; but they were, probably, almost inevitable from the way the volume has grown into its present shape, and the reader will not be much disturbed by them. The humour and freshness of the style is unflagging and unforced, and distinctly helps the necessary presentment of a vast mass of detail. It is useless to try and pick out the plums of such a rich pudding: one can only recommend the reader warmly to the book itself as one of the most interesting treatises existing on a subject that, by reason of its mystery, its hearings on numerous much-debated questions, its extraordinary difficulties, must long have a peculiar fascination. Mr. Lang has certainly put a strong case in an excellent light.

F. YORK POWELL.

Select Statutes and other Constitutional Documents illustrative of the Reigns of Elizabeth and James I. Edited by G. W. Prothero. (Oxford: Clarendon Press.)

THIS volume supplies a want which must have been felt by all historical students, by giving us in a concise form the most important documentary materials for a critical period in our national annals.

There is no need to say much of Mr. Prothero's qualifications for the task of editor; they will be readily appreciated by all who have any knowledge of his previous labours in similar fields. It would be unjust and invidious to draw comparisons between his introductory survey and Bishop Stubbs's masterly preface to the Select Charters. It is rarely, indeed, that so much first-class historical work is contained in such a brief compass as is the case with the latter; but the former certainly performs admirably the function of serving as a guide to the subject-matter of the book.

The two reigns here dealt with present, amid some features of superficial resemblance, many more of fundamental opposition. The contrast has often been drawn between the strong and popular despotism of the Tudors and the weak and unpopular tyranny of the Stuarts; and the difference is forcibly brought before our mind by a comparison of the utterances of the last of the former dynasty with those of the first of the latter.

Elizabeth was often autocratic and imperious enough in her tone, but she rarely forgot the essential nature of the Tudor monarchy as a dictatorship founded on the popular will. She could issue orders to her parliaments in a sufficiently peremptory fashion as to what they might say and what they were to leave unsaid.

"Privilege of speech is granted, but you must know what privilege you have; not to speak every one what he listeth, or what cometh in his brain to utter that; but your privilege is, aye or no."

She would tolerate no interference with her prerogative, especially in ecclesiastical matters. In a message delivered to the Speaker of the Commons in 1593, she forbade the House to "meddle with matters of state, or in causes ecclesiastical," and "wondered that any would be of so high commandment to attempt a thing contrary to that which she hath so expressly forbidden, wherefore with this she was highly displeased."

But with all this she knew how far she could go with prudence, and could yield frankly and with dignity when occasion required, as in the memorable instance of the monopolies. And while, in fact, almost absolute in her power, she never formulated such theories of its unbounded extent as were often to be heard from the lips of her successor. As Mr. Prothero says, with truth, of James I.: "The notions of the prerogative set forth in his speeches and writings transcend anything claimed by the Tudors." Englishmen had been willing to put up with much at the hands of a vigorous and popular sovereign, but they were by no means disposed to listen with patience to such language as the following from a ruler who possessed neither of these characters:

"It is atheism and blasphemy to dispute what God can do: good Christians content themselves with His will revealed in His word, so it is presumption and high contempt in a subject to dispute what a king can do, or say that a king cannot do this or that; but rest in that which is the king's revealed will in his law."

Practically absolute as the Tudors had been, they had never claimed a power entirely independent of the national will as expressed by its representatives. The theory, even under Henry VIII., was that complete sovereignty resided with the union of the king and the estates of the realm in parliament, and not with either separately. As a writer of Elizabeth's reign expresses it:

"The most high and absolute power of the realm of England consisteth in the parliament . . . which representeth and hath the power of the whole realm, both the head and the body. For every Englishman is intended to be there present either in person or by procuration and attorney . . . from the prince (be he king or queen) to the lowest person of England. And the consent of the parliament is taken to be every man's consent."

In the Stuart view, however, complete sovereignty belonged to the king alone, and the parliament existed merely by his good pleasure.

"In the parliament (which is nothing else but the head court of the king and his vassals) the laws are but craved by his subjects, and only made by him at their roagation and with their advice; for, albeit, the king make daily statutes and ordinances enjoining such pains thereto as he thinks meet, without any advice of parliament or estates, yet it lies in the power of no parliament to make any kind of law or statute without his sceptre be to it, for giving it the force of a law. . . . And as ye see it manifest that the king is over-lord of the whole land, so is he master over every person that inhabiteth the same, having power over the life and death of every one of them"— a doctrine which James put into practical operation almost as soon as he entered England, when he caused a pickpocket to be hanged without trial on his progress from Scotland to London, thus violating one of the best known and most valued provisions of the Great Charter.

In fact, it was no longer possible to hold to the theory of the conjoint sovereignty of king and parliament when the two began to be at variance; and the pretensions of James to absolute dominion led, if not in his reign, yet in that of his son, to the opposite doctrine, which was in reality a return to old English traditions, that the national assembly was the supreme power, and that the monarch was accountable to it.

A large portion of the documents in this volume refer, as might be expected, to ecclesiastical matters; and it cannot fail to be remarked, even by the most superficial reader, how the State was the primary agent in making religious changes in England, and how completely subordinate the Church was to the civil power. In this point there was no dispute in principle between the sovereign and the parliament. There were wide differences as to the manner in which the authority of the State was to be exercised, but neither party dreamed of allowing the Church to govern itself. The High Churchmen of the sixteenth and seventeenth centuries must be regarded by their modern successors as decidedly remiss in asserting the spiritual independence of the clergy. No protest was raised on their side against such peremptory instructions as were issued by James I. to the Archbishop of Canterbury in 1622, prescribing minutely what topics might be treated of in the pulpit, and forbidding preaching on many of the most exciting subjects of theological controversy.

The first Protestants who altogether denied the right of the Sovereign to interfere in religious matters were the small body of the Brownists, afterwards better known as Independents. Their founder thus expresses himself:

"The magistrates may do nothing concerning the church, but only civilly and as civil magistrates: that is to say, they have not that authority over the church as to be prophets or priests or spiritual kings, as they are magistrates over the same, but only to rule the commonwealth in outward justice . . . to compel religion, to plant churches by power, and to force a submission to ecclesiastical government by laws and penalties belongeth not to them."

The phraseology of the statutes of the two reigns presents some curious features, particularly in the different way in which past sovereigns are mentioned. Thus, in the preamble of the Act of Supremacy, the parliament addressing Elizabeth, describe Henry VIII. as "your most dear father of worthy memory," and Edward VI. as "your majesty's most dear brother," in whose reigns "divers good laws and statutes were made and established," while Mary, in whose reign "all the said good laws and statutes were all clearly repealed and made void," is less respectfully designated simply "your highness' sister."

Elizabeth herself draws the same invidious distinction between her predecessors in several of her public utterances. Henry VIII. is "the late king of famous memory, our dear father," Edward VI. "our dear late brother"; both are collectively styled "the noble kings of famous memory," while Mary is only "our late sister," without any adjective of praise or affection.

On the vexed question of the origin of the Star Chamber Mr. Prothero expresses a decided opinion in favour of the substantial identity of the later court of the name with the tribunal established by the statute of the third year of Henry VII. The opposite view, which has been maintained by some eminent historians, that Henry VII.'s court ceased to exist within the space of half a century from its establishment and had no continuity with the Star Chamber of Elizabeth's reign, is certainly prima facie less probable, and "is opposed to the tradition of the sixteenth century, which, in a matter of so recent date, may probably be trusted." The question is, however, one of considerable complexity, owing to the fact that the judicial powers of the Privy Council existed in an ill-defined form long before the Tudor period, and that "only a part, and that probably the smaller part, of the jurisdiction exercised by the Star Chamber in the seventeenth century could be based on the Act of 1487," but was derived from the ancient powers of the council. What appears to have taken place was an amalgamation of two bodies originally distinct, the council as a judicial body and the court of Henry VII., the process being facilitated by the fact that "the court was at first little more than a committee of the council."

R. SEYMOUR LONG.

The Autobiography of a Boy. By G. S. Street. (Elkin Mathews & John Lane.)

THIS is a book concerning which it were impossible to be critical. It is full of distinguished humour; it is irresistibly, but never blatantly, truthful; the sarcasm pierces with rapier-like neatness. One hundred and seventeen pages contain the last, even as they utter the first, word on a fascinating subject. The very faults seem to be of necessity, akin to the matter, and not less valuable than virtues. In short, the reviewer, be he never so conscientious, can only praise. Tiny as the volume is, it is a masterpiece. Mr. Street possesses the rare gift of explaining by suggestion the most complicated moods. Not the weakest intellect can wholly mistake his meaning.

When these sketches originally appeared in the National Observer, the cleverness of them was recognisable; but as separate items they missed something of their aim. To be thoroughly understood, to achieve their proper mood of success, they must be read together as parts of a finished whole. And this demand is easy of fulfilment, for no one who begins the book will put it down unread. Nor is it astonishing; for Mr. Street asks one's attention for barely a hundred minutes, and gives in return a quite priceless treasure.

Tubby is indeed a new immortal. He stands for all time as the typical aesthete, the perfect example of the fin de siècle youth of Modern Oxford, the individual whose affectations may never develop into mannerisms. It is his mission, so hopelessly misunderstood, to live beautifully. Were they not so pertinacious he would ignore the vulgar cares of life, and his smile of "infinite indulgence" is no mean shield against the worst calamities. How true it is, he exclaims—and who shall doubt him?—

"that genius, to give the world of its sweetest, must be unhampered by sordid cares. Of late my muse has had no heart to sing. I came across a paper, tossed aside a while ago, which almost brought tears to my eyes. On the top I had written: 'A Dirge of Desire Dead,' and there followed a few lines which sorrow herself seemed to have dictated to song, and then—rows of squalid, hideous figures, and vulgar commercial symbols. Surely, I mused, here is all the pathos of life."

His was the right to be biliously angry with the world, had he so willed, for his "Ballad of Shameful Kisses" won for him only the title of "Tubby the Troubadour"; moreover, a companion commented, "I blush for you, Tubby. I think you're a very wicked young man." Yet was his university career not really a failure, though prematurely closed. "His humour of being carried in a sedan chair, swathed in blankets and reading a Latin poet, from his rooms to the Turkish bath, is still remembered in his college."

Fate, the traditionary enemy of genius, was Tubby's foe. The ambition he nurtured was modest enough to have won success, but did not: "to be regarded as a man to whom no chaste woman should be allowed to speak." Once he reviewed some books for a newspaper, but a couplet from Shelley was all he could honestly repeat by way of criticism. His father regarded him as a fool, yet he could say in all sincerity, "I have never fallen into the mistake of despising my father because he is old-fashioned and a little dull." At times, indeed, the "old fellow's" homely good sense sufficed to soothe a son's weary intellect and jarring nerves. At last the "pink" story and a little speech to a bishop went far towards compelling a crisis. Tubby is now in Canada. The last chapter, most fatuous and most delicious of all, sums up his career and forecasts his future:

"This day I leave my native land. It is five in the morning; the last of my companions who spent the evening with me is gone, and I sit in my lonely room to end this account of my life so far before sleeping a few hours. When they dine to-night I shall be far away. It is intensely dramatic. A weaker man might well shed tears, but my eyes are dry."

Little cause had Tubby to weep, though his self-restraint is sufficiently pathetic, for his conduct was never less immaculate, intelligently judged, than his taste and his trousers. Canada, too, was not without a unique interest for him. A certain refined lust for slaughter seized on him as a pleasing and novel emotion. The forests and the mountains, "or whatever they are," loomed with consolation. Evening dress was easily abandoned at the thought of that "red sash" he had chosen to be the keynote of his scheme.

But Tubby's capital, one learns with expectant interest, is not large. His editor shrewdly prophesies that in six months his friend will return: not because he shuns labour, for with pride has he told us that "In the true sense of the word there is more work in a ballad of mine" than in all his father's soldiering. No, he will return because of those "sordid difficulties" from which none but millionaires escape. To many of us his reappearance will be welcome, though he deems us less grateful than cats. Maybe, too, he will gladly dine with us again and adjourn, after coffee and cigarettes, to "that barbarous plush place" whereof he once expressed himself so weary.

PERCY ADDLESHAW.

The Diatessaron of Tatian. By J. Hamlyn Hill, B.D. (Edinburgh: T. & T. Clark.)

THIS is a carefully planned piece of work and will probably take its place at once as an indispensable aid to the student of Tatian's Harmony. Mr. Hill has had the way cleared for him by the labours of his predecessors. Dr. Zahn, Prof. Fuller, Dr. Wace, Prof. Hemphill, Prof. Harris, have all contributed in various degrees to the elucidation of the many problems which were suggested by the pioneer work of Moesinger and Ciasca; and in the present edition full use has been made of their investigations.

The main sources from which the Diatessaron has to be reconstructed are, as is well known, two in number. We possess, on the one hand, an Armenian version of the Commentary on Tatian's work written by Ephraem the Syrian; and, on the other, an Arabic version of the Diatessaron itself which is extant in two MSS. Ephraem's Commentary was made accessible in 1876 by Moesinger in a Latin translation; the Arabic Harmony was published, with a Latin version by Ciasca, in 1888. It might seem at first sight as if Ciasca's book would bring us much nearer to the original Tatian than would any reproduction of Ephraem's Commentary; but it so happens that, although in the Arabic version we have without doubt the Diatessaron in substance, yet it is there only in a revised form as regards its text. For we cannot be sure that Tatian's work was turned into Arabic from its original Syriac before the eleventh century; and long before that date we know that the Peshito version of the New Testament had replaced in common use that older Syriac version which Tatian seems to have followed. This disturbing element is not present to the same extent in the portions of the Diatessaron embedded in Ephraem's Commentary; and thus, even though the latter is only preserved in Armenian, it affords more reliable evidence where we are concerned with questions of reading.

However, we cannot reconstruct the whole of the Diatessaron from Ephraem's Commentary; and so Mr. Hill offers us, as the main part of his book, an English version (the first that has appeared) of the Arabic Harmony. It is, perhaps, a matter for regret that this was not made direct from the Arabic, but through the medium of Ciasca's Latin. Mr. Hill, indeed, is careful to assure us that his work has been corrected from the Arabic by a competent scholar, and no doubt a fair degree of accuracy has been thus reached. But yet one cannot help thinking that it would have been better had the English version been made in the first instance from the Arabic, and subsequently tested by the aid of the Latin rendering already published. No such criticism is applicable to the treatment of the Ephraem fragments in this volume. Mr. Hill has been fortunate in obtaining the services of Prof. Robinson, who has translated direct from the Armenian MSS. the portions of the Commentary in which the Diatessaron is preserved. This part of the book before us adds, in important respects, to our materials for the critical study of Tatian's text.

In the appendices Mr. Hill has brought together, in a form very convenient for reference, a large body of valuable matter; and it is only due to him to say that his book, as it stands, will give the English reader a clearer idea of the work of Tatian than any other in the market. His English version of the Arabic Harmony brings out with sufficient clearness the significant fact (now no longer a matter of controversy) that Tatian's Four Gospels were the canonical four; and for the purposes of textual criticism the appendices on the Ephraem fragments and on the variants in the Arabic text are of the highest interest.

J. H. BERNARD.

NEW NOVELS.

The Potter's Thumb. By Flora A. Steel. In 3 vols. (Heinemann.)

Mary Fenwick's Daughter. By Beatrice Whitby. In 3 vols. (Hurst & Blackett.)

A Cumberer of the Ground. By Constance Smith. In 3 vols. (Methuen.)

A Hidden Chain. By Dora Russell. In 3 vols. (Digby, Long & Co.)

'Midst the Wild Carpathians. Translated by R. N. Bain from the Hungarian of Maurus Jokai. (Chapman & Hall.)

A Consul's Passenger. By Harry Lander. (Bliss, Sands & Foster.)

Young Sam and Sabina. By Tom Cobbleigh. (Fisher Unwin.)

IN The Potter's Thumb the intimate knowledge of Indian life and the remarkable power of projecting Indian atmosphere and colour which Mrs. Steel has shown in her shorter tales appear with plenty of space—and with the advantage or disadvantage thereto appertaining. In the present case it is almost wholly advantage. There is at least as much scope for description and evocation of scene in a connected story as in the same bulk of sketches; and there is of course much greater scope for character-drawing. In the latter respect Mrs. Steel deserves no small praise for the contrast—sharp, but by no means forced or obtruded—of the Indian courtesan, Chandni, and the English girl, Rose Tweedie. The former is, by the necessity of the case, more conventional and less living than the latter, who is a really capital study, not in the least apparently out-of-the-way, and, therefore, not in the least really commonplace. Of the other figures who complete the scheme of presentation of feminine character (a very complete and ambitious scheme) the girl Azizan is much more of an "academy" than Chandni, and Gwen Boynton, the peccant widow, is less living than Rose. But both are good in their way, as also (for we must not forget her) is the Eurasian, Beatrice Norma Elfrida ("Her Highness"), who is a new and distinctly promising type, though she is not, like the others, a type of race and character, but of cross-breeding and artificial circumstance. Nor for those readers, who care more for incident than character, will the fortunes of the Ayodhya pot and its precious things be disappointing, while the setting is as good as ever. We may, however, take this opportunity of pointing out a little more in detail what we meant on a former occasion by saying that Mrs. Steel does not "punctuate" her story sufficiently. More than one or two readers, we can vouch for it, have felt in reading The Potter's Thumb a slight bewilderment and puzzlement over the course of the action—the intertwining of the fraud about the pot (itself rather complicated) with the intrigues of the Hodynuggur people to get the sluices opened. Some have said that the suicide of the hero is insufficiently motivated, and that the quickly following death of his friend Fitzgerald is gratuitous and not wholly probable; while others object that the Simla steeplechase and some other matters have a false air of connexion with the story and a real irrelevance which is disappointing. We do not endorse all these criticisms; but we do think that what Mrs. Steel chiefly needs, in order to make quite the best use of her remarkable faculty and acquirement, is the jeu serré of construction and arrangement. In other words, she wants what, among the equal immortals, Fielding had and Thackeray had not.

The very beginning of Mary Fenwick's Daughter is somehow not appetising, and the very end is a little wanting in crispness; but the greater part of the book is good. It is, like so many others, an attempt to sketch the young woman of the period; but it differs from most such attempts by being quite clean, and not in the least dull. Mary Fenwick (or "Bab," as she is called to distinguish her from her mother) is not a "new woman," which follows from the fact that she is a lady; but she is hodiernal, first, in being very athletic, and, secondly, in not ostensibly feeling the necessity of anything more than comradeship with the opposite sex. Miss Whitby has indulged in an excellent irony by showing that "Bab," restive in the extreme to her first lover, who is altogether a good fellow, submits to be bullied in a sort of fascinated fashion by her second, an authoritative little coxcomb, whom she has once refused. But it is perhaps rather a Rarefied than a Petruchian manner of taming her to break her back, expose her to jilting by her selfish intended, and then throw her in the condition of damaged goods, a penitent and an invalid, on the hands of good cousin Jack. However, the process was no doubt effective (at least till she got quite well), and it might have happened. Some of the scenes and characters are excellent.

In A Cumberer of the Ground Miss Constance Smith has attacked an old problem—How far ought you to give weight in choosing a wife or a husband to other people's requests, to unguarded precontracts of your own, and so forth, instead of simply marrying the man or the woman you love most at the time of asking, and sticking to him or her? Dorothy Temple, the heroine of Miss Smith's novel, makes what we hold to be the wrong choice, though she sticks to it nobly. Verdict: right in sticking, not right in choosing. That is to say, this is our verdict, not Miss Smith's, who has laudably abstained from taking a didactic side in the matter. The book is a clever one, though to a certain extent undigested. We did not think that anyone could do the mad dog trick with a difference; but it is here quite satisfactorily freshened up; and many other fences are handsomely negotiated. The weakest part of the book, as so frequently happens with ladies' novels, is to be found in the male characters. It remains true that of women drawn by men you may find one in a thousand, but of men drawn by women scarcely that. Miss Austen could draw men because she knew exactly where to stop, and merely drew them as she saw them, so that they were true, if not the whole truth; George Eliot never drew a real man, though Tito and Grandcourt came near to reality; and Miss Smith is not a Jane Austen or even a George Eliot. Her hero, the suddenly enriched Lyon, is a stick—a decidedly good stick, but still sticky. The wicked Travers is a lay figure; and his brother, the orthodox, intellectual, self-sacrificing scholar and divine, is flawed with all sorts of impossibilities. Nevertheless, the book has something more than glimmerings, and Dorothy Temple is not wholly unworthy of her delightful namesake.

We have often thought that Miss Dora Russell is the most undervalued novelist in her own class and way now living and writing. She is the sole heir of Miss Braddon; and though she does not keep up with the times as her great exemplar does, and commits many grotesque simplicities which that exemplar avoids, she has a most unusual knack of weaving off the loom a solid web of fiction that really does not ravel up or slit across as most of them do. Personally, we do not care much for the kind at any time; and it must be admitted that Miss Russell does not put herself to the expense of any "literary" efforts over it. But her stuff does its own work in its own way right craftsworthily, and that is something, nay, much. A Hidden Chain is not much better than its brethren, but it is not at all worse than the run of them.

We are always rather reluctant to pronounce judgment on a translated book of which we do not know the original; and we do not know the original of Midst the Wild Carpathians. But it is, we believe, the favourite in Hungary among the historical novels of its popular author; and though it by no means seems to us, in Mr. Bain's very well written translation, to come up to the ideal of that magnificent and difficult kind, it has its merits. There is plenty of interesting incident, and the general picture of the wild, half-oriental, wholly unfamiliar, society of Transylvania in the seventeenth century is given vigorously enough. But there is next to no character-drawing: the two most elaborate studies—those of the wise Princess Apafi and of her valiant Don Juan of a brother-in-law, the magnate Banfi—do not reach the full point of lifelikeness; while the incidents are heaped with an undramatic lavishness which G. P. R. James sometimes avoided, and Eugène Sue seldom fell into. Azrael (is Azrael a common woman's name?), the naughty Turkish concubine, is not alive at all, and her panther belongs to the same menagerie as the white bear of Ilan d'Islande. But there is vivacity if not life, and bustle if not action; and we own frankly that we read the book through.

A Consul's Passenger is a little slight. The breaking up of the operatic troupe at Nico is well told, and the purgatory of the hero, Billy Ashenden, who has to work his passage as a deck hand, still better. But the love interest which the author has thought proper to weave in is very slight and strained. The heroine is nothing; Julius Nachsinnender, the amiable Teuton, is a marionette; and the German, which Mr. Lander or the printer has put into his mouth, is a fearful and wonderful lingo.

Of Young Sam and Sabina, on the other hand (except that the gentleman interloper between the personages of the title is not very good), we can speak in terms of unalloyed commendation. It is what, for want of a better word, modern England appears to be agreed to call an "Idyll"—a Somerset idyll—an idyll of the marshy plains that stretch by Parret and Tone. And it is extremely well done, with enough dialect to give it a zest, but not enough, we hope, to disgust those feeble folk who can put up with nothing but newspaper English, with local colour justly put on and not overdone, with live touches of character and scene. Let Mr. "Tom Cobbleigh" give us much more also.

GEORGE SAINTSBURY.

SOME BOOKS ABOUT THE COUNTRY.

Scotch Deerhounds and their Masters. By George Cupples. With a Biographical Sketch of the Author by James Hutchinson Stirling. (Blackwoods.) This handsome volume has a melancholy interest. It is the posthumous work—and in some sense the life-work—of one whose name is known to a generation that is now passing away as the author of The Green Hand, that novel of the sea which ranks with almost the best of Maryatt's. Mr. Cupples also published books on Emerson and Christopher North, and moved among, though somewhat aloof from, the leaders of literary society in Edinburgh. But that to which he was devoted above all other things was the honour of the old Scottish deerhounds. Though not a sportsman himself, it was the supreme qualities of the breed for strength and courage that attracted him. His aim was not to win prizes at dog-shows, but to rear animals that should maintain their reputation among Scottish emigrants in the Far West and at the Antipodes. His reward has come, though late, in a form which he would have himself most desired. Enthusiastic Scotsmen in New Zealand, with the Governor at their head, have furnished the subscriptions by which the production of the present book was rendered possible. And it must be admitted that the book is not one for all tastes. Mr. Cupples so worshipped his deer-hound that he persuaded himself to regard it as the Palladium of the Celtic race. Wherever there are Celts, there there must also be deerhounds; and wherever there are deerhounds, there also Celts must have been, at some time or another. The fallacy of arguing from language to race is surpassed by this, for it is evident that nothing can be more variable than a highly domesticated animal. But Mr. Cupples was allured, rather than daunted, by the quicksands of philological ethnology. Nearly half the present volume is occupied with a pseudo-learned discussion about the aboriginal inhabitants of the Caucasus, and their connexion with the ancient Iberians and the modern Albanians, with allusions also to Hyksos, Berbers, and Basques. A good more of the kind has apparently been left in MS., of which we cannot recommend the publication. It would, however, be unjust to Mr. Cupples's memory to imply that the entire book is occupied with a chimaera. The early chapters contain an historical account of all that is known about the Scottish deerhound during the present century, based mainly upon personal communications made to the author several years ago. It is curious that so little should be ascertained about the breed in the last century, and that so little use should be made of it in actual sport at the present time. No less an authority than Mr. Horatio Ross lays it down that it is "a great mistake to use dogs for either recovering wounded or coursing cold deer." It seems probable, therefore, that future generations will be acquainted with deerhounds only at champion dog-shows or in the pages of Walter Scott. Even if that be so, Mr. Cupples's monograph will become the more valuable, as a record of the breed while traditions of its achievements in Highland deer-forests are still fresh. We must not forget to add that the volume is enriched with a portrait of the author, and with several admirable reproductions of drawings of famous dogs bred by him.

"THE BOOKLOVER'S LIBRARY."—Walton and Some Earlier Writers on Fish and Fishing. By R. B. Marston. (Elliot Stock.) This pleasant, chatty volume is just the book to thrust into the pannier and read at noon-tide by the riverside during the "approaching time of the Fly and the Cork," as Sir H. Wotton says. The author disarms criticism by avowing at the outset that the lover of the Compleat Angler need not expect much that is new concerning it, and it is not probable that much more will be known of Walton than is here so carefully put together. There are chapters also on Dame Juliana Berners, Leonard Mascall, John Dennys ("J.D.") and Gervase Markham; but the same account must be given of them. They form cheerful piscatory reading, but are somewhat superficial. Most people will prefer the author's bibliographical remarks on early Waltons and kindred matters. He shows that the market value of a first edition of The Compleat Angler in 1816 was about £4 4s. A short time ago £235 was asked for one, and (like so many rare angling books) it went to America. When Mr. Marston writes practically on trout breeding, and on the little attention now paid by landowners to ponds and streams, his remarks are entirely to the point. It is a pity that more people do not adopt his most sensible advice. The Fordige trout of Walton that "bit not for hunger but wantonness" is identified by Mr. Marston with the Bull Trout. This fish is so essentially a northern form that Yarrell's belief of the Fordige trout being merely a salmon trout has always seemed the more probable. Before this point can be settled, however, many a generation of anglers will have gone to its rest. Were a piscatorial enthusiast desirous of knowing something of Colonel Venables, Barker, and other great names of the craft in the old days, at the same time that he brought his piscatorial keenness to a still sharper edge, no more delightful volume of fishing gossip could be put into the hands than Mr. Marston's prettily printed little book.

"CLIMBING IN THE BRITISH ISLES."—I. England. By W. P. Haskett Smith. (Longmans.) Not a few stay-at-home people probably learnt for the first time, from a chapter in the Badminton volume on Mountaineering, that climbing in the British Isles has become a special cult, with its headquarters at Westdale. The first attraction seems to have been the apparently inaccessible Pillar Rock, which has now been ascended from all four points of the compass. Then it was discovered that the Lake District supplies not only unsurpassed opportunities for rock climbing, but also training in wintertime for the use of the ice-axe. The cult has now reached such a stage that every pinnacle and gully has received an appropriate name, and first ascents are duly recorded with name and date. Even the horrid Screens overhanging Westwater have been scaled. Of this new development of "sport" Mr. Haskett Smith is the coryphaeus. For though his little book purports to deal with the whole of England (excluding Wales), a great deal more than nine-tenths of it is devoted to the Lake district, the only other localities mentioned being the chalk-cliffs near Dover, the coast of Cornwall, and the Tors on Dartmoor. In view of the dangers of amateur rashness, it is probably just as well that information should be limited to the region which has been made fairly safe by accumulated experience. We cannot praise the mode of arrangement, which ought to have been topographical; but there can be no doubt that the excellent illustrations will add largely to the utility of the volume.

Ladies in the Field: Sketches of Sport. Edited by the Lady Greville. (Ward & Downey.) Not only in politics and literature is woman determined to show that she is no longer the "lesser man"; she would fain cope with the other sex in her amusements. Thirteen ladies fond of outdoor sport in some form or other have here written essays on their respective recreations. The book itself may thus be deemed woman's manifesto that she is "almost on a level with MAN," as one of the authoresses puts it. Naturally, these sketches are of varying degrees of excellence, but all are sensible and amusing. Miss Anstruther Thomson's paper on Team and Tandem Driving is full of good humour and excellent stories. That written on "The Wife of the M. F. H.," by Mrs. Chaworth Masters, abounds in thoughtfulness for others and sound common sense. She would have a master of foxhounds' wife, from the moment she steps out of her carriage at a meet, be a Dea ex machina, who should soothe ruffled farmers, rebuke by her example people who leave gates open and gallop over young wheat, and even fill up all her husband's omissions and forgetfulnesses. He has grave responsibilities, and she ought to be nothing less than an attendant conscience to him and a moral policeman to all delinquents. Mrs. E. R. Pennell adopts a thoroughgoing hedonistic position; she deems "our amusements, after all, the main thing in life," which appears a slightly immature philosophy. How "a bicyclist can scorch (sic) in triumph along the tiniest foot-path" surely requires a little explanation for envious and benighted man. Lady Greville herself is so enamoured of riding that she gives, as her "advice to girls, to take a riding man for a husband." A man of somewhat old-fashioned ideas on the sights and sounds which ladies should avoid would scarcely deem participation in the slaughter of a deer-drive as described by Diane Chasseresse conducive to the refinement and tenderness of womanhood. Tiger-shooting, rifle and covert-shooting might well be left, he would also think, to the sterner sex. Punting appears an exceedingly graceful exercise for a skilful young woman; but on a blazing day in summer, especially when the pole finds no bottom or sticks in the mud, it leads to unpleasant exhibitions, to say the least. Miss Salaman, however, recommends it. Riding, whether in an English fox hunt or in Ireland and India, claims most votaries in this book. It serves the moralist as a useful mark to show how far the aspirations of women have advanced, and, while amusing an idle man, will benefit women of leisure by suggesting amusements which all entail a closer study of nature.

Twelve Years' Residence on the West Coast of Scotland. By Captain J. Mason. (Gurney & Jackson.) Although this little book is a record of sport with rod and gun, it cannot be affirmed that it advances the cause of either shooting or natural history; the reader finds himself wondering how so little that is noteworthy resulted from so many years of sport. Every page, however, shows kindness of heart, and deep sympathy with the tone of thought and inhabitants of the Western Highlands. There is much enthusiasm, too, for the moor and its grouse and blackcock. Valuable hints may be picked out here and there on taking moors, on heather burning, on the dogs best suited for grouse-shooting, and the like. Captain Mason does not care for a great slaughter of game by driving it on well-stocked hills, but sensibly prefers a pleasant day of exercise with a friend and a reasonable bag. His moor was not celebrated, and has evidently been much shot over before he took it; but his friends and he obtained 12,422 head of game in the twelve years of his tenancy. Without being able to congratulate the author on his powers as a writer, it may be asserted that his book is in good taste throughout, and will pleasantly while away half-an-hour while a sportsman is speeding to the north.

Travels in a Tree-Top. By Charles Conrad Abbott. (Elkin Mathews & John Lane.) Mr. Abbott has produced a sufficiently readable book of talk about the country. It is furnished with the usual naturalists' index; nevertheless, the talk is more personal than scientific. The author's observation of nature, if not profound, is intelligent and, as a rule, sympathetic. He tells of various experiments he has made to prove the intelligence of animals and birds, gives personal reminiscences, and a variety of anecdotes, more or less humorous and entertaining. Throughout the whole runs a strain of very mild philosophising. There is a distinct flavour of Thoreau about the book, as there is, now, about so many American books of this class. As a consequence, the concluding essay on "Dead Leaves" reminds us of Thoreau's own discourse on "Fallen Leaves" in his essay called "Autumnal Tints," and it must be owned that Mr. Abbott's effort does not gain by the inevitable comparison. Still, in justice be it said, a writer may be far behind this delicate and graceful piece of Thoreau's work and yet possess unquestionable merit. Perhaps the best thing in the book is the definition of a town quoted from "A queer old character that had lived all his life in the country":—"It is a good place to dump down what we don't want on the farm." On the whole, we are disposed to pronounce this book of Mr. Abbott's good and a promise of something better.

WE must content ourselves with commending heartily the series entitled The Country Month by Month (Bliss, Sands & Foster), of which we have already received five volumes. It is not difficult to distinguish the contributions of the two authors: Prof. G. S. Boulger, who deals with the plant-world under such headings as "In the River Meads," or "By the Brink of the Sea"; and Mrs. J. A. Owen, who has learnt her intimate knowledge of wild life, furred and feathered, from "A Son of the Marshes." It was a happy idea to tell townspeople what they may expect to find in their country wanderings month by month. And the idea has been excellently carried out, in simple language, but yet with that literary skill which the example of Richard Jefferies has led us to demand. A word of praise is also due to the publishers for the neatness of the print and binding. The volumes deserve to live long after the year for which they are written.

NOTES AND NEWS.

MR. GLADSTONE'S translation into English verse of the Odes of Horace, including the Carmen Saeculare, will be published shortly, in large crown octavo, by Mr. John Murray, the same firm which issued his first book, The State in its Relations with the Church, just fifty-six years ago. That book, we may add, was so successful as to pass through four editions in the course of three years.

VOLUME III. of Canon Liddon's Life of Pusey will be published by Messrs. Longman & Co. in the course of the autumn. A fourth volume is still wanted to complete the work.

MESSRS. SAMPSON LOW & Co. announce a new book of travel by Mrs. Howard Vincent, the wife of the member for Sheffield. Under the title of China to Peru, it gives an account of her journey through South America and over the Andes. It will have numerous illustrations.

MR. AUSTIN DOBSON will publish, through Messrs. Chatto & Windus, early in the autumn, a second series of Eighteenth-Century Vignettes. There will be a limited large-paper edition.

MR. STOPFORD BROOKE has been offered and has accepted the Lowell Lectureship at Boston this autumn. His subject will be "Modern English Literature."

MR. W. ROBERTS, the editor of the Bookworm, is preparing for publication during the autumn a volume entitled A Book-hunter in London. Historical and Personal Studies of Book-collectors and Book-collecting.

MR. WILLIAM MORRIS announces that his Kelmscott Press edition of Chaucer, so long in preparation, is now likely to make an appearance at the middle of next year. He has also in the press a new romance, entitled The Wood beyond the World, a new edition of his Life and Death of Jason, and a volume of poems by Mr. Theodore Watts.

MR. JOHN MARTINEAU'S Life of Sir Bartle Frere will be published by Mr. John Murray, it is hoped, early in the autumn. All Sir Bartle's papers have been placed at the disposal of his biographer.

A NEW and revised edition of the late Prof. Robertson Smith's Religion of the Semites is now being prepared for publication by Dr. Sutherland Black and Mr. C. Michie Smith, the Professor's brother.

THE Roxburghe Press will issue early in August The Mountain Lake and Other Poems, translated, with a biography and bibliography, from the works of Friedrich von Bodenstedt, by Miss Julia Preston.

DR. A. CONAN DOYLE'S first book, Micah Clarke, which was not very well received at the time of its appearance, has now sold to the number of 30,000 copies.

MESSRS. CHAPMAN & HALL have in the press Incidents of Foreign Sport and Travel, by Colonel Pollok, an old Madras officer.

MESSRS. ALEXANDER GARDNER, of Paisley, have in the press a volume entitled Curious Episodes in Scottish History, by Mr. R. Scott Pittis.

MESSRS. WARD & DOWNEY will publish immediately a new edition of Judge O'Connor Morris's study of Moltke.

A COMMITTEE has been formed at New York to raise a fund of 25,000 dollars (£5000), in memory of the late George William Curtis. It is intended that part of the money should be devoted to an artistic monument, and the remainder to the foundation and endowment of an annual course of lectures upon the duties of American citizenship or kindred subjects.

IT is interesting to record that Yale University has recently conferred upon Mr. E. C. Stedman her highest honorary degree—that of LL.D. Yale is Mr. Stedman's own university.

MR. ELLIOT STOCK announces that he will publish shortly two new volumes of illustrated verse: The Flute of Athena, by Mr. Reuben Bradley, and Lea Spray and Other Poems, by Miss Jeannie Bednall.

MESSRS. JARROLD & SONS intend to add to their one-volume series of fiction new editions of six of the works of Miss Helen Mathers, the first to appear being Cherry Ripe.

MR. W. MORTON FULLERTON, of the Paris staff of the Times and the author of In Cairo, is preparing for the press a volume of essays, which have already appeared in the magazines.

At the meeting of the Council of the Authors' Society to consider the action of the libraries in relation to the three volume novel to which we referred last week, the following resolution was passed:

"The Council, after taking the opinions of several prominent novelists and other members of the Society, and finding them almost unanimously opposed to the continuance of the three volume system, considers that the disadvantages of that system to authors and to the public far outweigh its advantages; that, for the convenience of the public, as well as for the widest possible circulation of a novel, it is desirable that the artificial form of edition produced for a small body of readers only be now abandoned; and that the whole of the reading public should be placed at the outset in possession of the work at a moderate price."

It may be added that opinion was practically unanimous in favour of the discontinuance of the present system, only one novelist being in favour of retaining the three-volume form.

MRS. OLIPHANT'S new novel, A House in Bloomsbury, will shortly be published in three volumes by Messrs. Hutchinson & Co.

To the August number of the New Review Mr. Hall Caine, whose Manzanar will be ready on August 3, will contribute an article on "The Novelist in Shakspeare"; Mr. T. W. Russell, M.P., will write upon the "Evicted Tenants in Ireland"; Mr. W. S. Lilly has a paper entitled "In Praise of Hanging"; and Mr. J. Henniker Heaton, M.P., a paper entitled "The Chaos of the Marriage and Divorce Laws."

ON July 31, Messrs. Sotheby, Wilkinson & Hodge will commence a three days' sale of a large number of coins, medals, and tokens in gold, silver, and copper from the collections of Lord Grantly, Mr. Frank Hurst, the late Mr. George Manners, F.S.A., the late Mrs. Bury, and General Sir Edward Stanton. Among the lots will be many rare Greek and Roman coins, some historical medals and British military decorations, including the Victoria Cross.

THE latest publication of the American Academy of Social Science at Philadelphia is an essay upon "The Political Ethics of Herbert Spencer," by Prof. Lester F. Ward. We have also received, from the same source M. Paul de Rousier's, "La Science Sociale," and Mr. Gustav Schmoller's "The Idea of Justice in Political Economy."

THE Rev. W. Done Bushell has sent us No. V. of his Harrow Octocentenary Tracts. (Cambridge: Macmillan & Bowes.) It is not, like the preceding ones, a reprint of some forgotten document connected with the early history of Harrow, but a popular lecture upon the Benedictine Abbey of Le Bec, in Normandy, which sent two successive archbishops to Canterbury—Lanfranc and Anselm, the founder and the consecrator of Harrow parish church. The last abbot of Le Bec, we may add, was none other than Talleyrand.

SIR CHARLES GAVAN DUFFY is preparing a memoir of his early days in Ireland and his political career in Australia, to be entitled My Life in Two Hemispheres.

THE preparation of a biography of A. L. O. E. = A Lady of England (the late Miss C. M. Tucker) has been entrusted to Miss Agnes Giberne, who will be glad to receive reminiscences of her, or the loan of letters written by her.

MR. EDWARD STANFORD has issued a large chart of the field of the Naval Manœuvres, showing clearly by colours the coast-lines which are assigned to the several fleets, and also the "forbidden belt" which is a special feature of this year's plan of operations. It is reproduced (by permission) from the Admiralty Chart, and therefore gives the soundings and other marine marks; but the familiar plans on land are also given, so that the chart does not seem so strange as usual to a landsman's eye. Tables are printed on the map, containing the names of the ships engaged, the places of assembly, &c.

UNIVERSITY JOTTINGS.

MISS LILIAN M. FAITHFULL, now lecturer in English at the Royal Holloway College, has been appointed to the vice-principalship of the Ladies' Department of King's College, in Kensington-square, vacant by the resignation of Mrs. Wace.

THE University of Dublin has conferred the degree of Doctor of Science upon Mr. Daniel Morris, assistant director of the Royal Gardens at Kew.

IN addition to the lectures upon Velasquez and Vandyke, it is now announced that Mr. C. W. Furse will lecture upon Rembrandt at the Oxford Summer Meeting of the University Extension Society. Among other lecturers on the history, literature, and philosophy of the sixteenth century appear the names of Dr. S. R. Gardiner, Mr. Walter Pater, Dr. Fairbairn, Dr. Fiske, Prof. Sir Frederick Pollock, Bart., Mr. Churton Collins, and Mr. H. Morse Stephens.

HER Majesty's Commissioners for the Exhibition of 1851 have made the following appointments to science research scholarships for the year 1894, on the recommendation of the authorities of the respective universities and colleges. The scholarships are of the value of £150 a year, and are tenable for two years (subject to a satisfactory report at the end of the first year) in any university at home or abroad, or in some other institution approved by the Commissioners. The scholars are to devote themselves exclusively to study and research in some branch of science, the extension of which is important to the industries of the country. Edinburgh, John Carruthers Beattie; Glasgow, James Robert Erskine-Murray; Aberdeen, William Brown Davidson; University College, Bristol, Reginald Charles Clinker; Yorkshire College, Leeds, Frankland Dent; University College, Liverpool, Alfred James Ewart; University College, London, David King Morris; Owens College, Manchester, Julius Frith; Durham College of Science, Newcastle-on-Tyne, Robert Beattie; University College, Nottingham, William Beckett Burnie; Queen's College, Galway, John Alexander McClelland; University of Toronto, Frank Boteler Kenrick; Dalhousie University, Halifax, Nova Scotia, Frederick James Alexander McKittrick.

AN annual grant of £700 for five years, out of parliamentary funds, has been made to Bedford College, London, on the same terms as to other university colleges.

THE late Mr. Samuel Sandars, whose donations of early printed books to the University Library at Cambridge have often been recorded in the ACADEMY, has left the following bequests: to the University of Cambridge, £500 for the purchase of rare English books, and a selection of valuable topographical and other works from his own library, and also the sum of £2000, to apply the income in payment of a reader in bibliography (who is to deliver lectures on bibliography, palaeography, typography, bookbinding, the science of books and manuscripts, and the arts relating thereto); to the library of Trinity College, £500 for the purchase of books; and to the Fitzwilliam Museum, a picture of "Faith, Hope, and Charity," by Rubens.

WE quote, from the annual report of the curators of the Bodleian Library, the following, with regard to the cataloguing of early printed books:—

"Under the special grant for work on arrears, Mr. R. G. C. Proctor completed the catalogue of incunabula, together with a list of fifteenth century printers, giving a chronological clue to the arrangement of the catalogue, a list of the numbers in Hain and Campbell's bibliographies, represented in the catalogue, and a statistical table of the Bodleian incunabula. From this last, it appears that on May 26 there were in the Library 4832 separate books printed in the fifteenth century, besides 605 duplicates and 172 fragments. Of these, excluding duplicates, there were 57 books and 12 fragments printed at Westminster, 9 books and eight fragments printed at Oxford (the second English city in which the art was employed), 27 books and 13 fragments printed in London, 4 books and 3 fragments printed at St. Alban's, and 5 unattributed prints. Under the same grant, Mr. Proctor also catalogued about 200 English proclamations.

"Under a special grant from the delegates of the common university fund, Mr. Proctor likewise carried back from the beginning of N to the beginning of H the rough list of British and Irish books in the Library printed after 1500 and before 1641; he also compiled the article 'Elizabeth' for this catalogue. Having become an assistant in the British Museum, Mr. Proctor was unable to complete the catalogue; but before the end of the year, some progress had been made by other special assistants with the remaining letters, A—G."

THE Rede Lecture on "Libraries in the Medieval and Renaissance Periods," which Mr. J. W. Clark delivered last month at Cambridge, has been published in a neat little volume by Messrs. Macmillan & Bowes. It may be as well to state at once that the lecture does not deal at all with books, but only with the material appliances of libraries, such as book-cases, desks, seats, and (in particular) the old custom of chaining books. Mr. Clark's special object seems to have been to illustrate the early history of what is known about college libraries from the yet earlier records of monastic libraries. The original lecture was abundantly illustrated with lantern-slides; the volume, too, contains seven illustrations—partly from old prints, partly from archaic library-furniture that still survives at Zutphen, Cesena, and elsewhere.

THE Library Bulletin of Cornell University records the gift of a remarkably rich and extensive Spinoza collection, thought to be the largest in existence, from ex-president White; some 200 volumes of works on romance philology, from Prof. Crane; and such additions to Prof. Willard Fiske's Dante collection as to bring it up to nearly 3000 volumes, and to constitute it "undoubtedly the richest outside of Italy." The library has also issued a catalogue of Prof. Fiske's Rhaeto-Romanic (Romaunsch) collection, gathered rapidly by the donor three years ago in the Tyrol. It fills thirty-two pages in double columns; and the collection, which has a curious linguistic interest, probably has no rival in completeness.

ORIGINAL VERSE.

A LIFE'S EPILOGUE.

I TURN the tiny key and scan with care
My reliquary's treasure unbeholden.
I tell their tale, those hoarded locks of hair,
The sheeny black, the silver grey, the golden.

What envy I you singers lofty-throned,
Who voice each mood in life's eternal poem?
No sweeter love than mine their lips have moaned.
They sang their songs—but I have lived my poem.

GRANT ALLEN.

MAGAZINES AND REVIEWS.

THE second number of the Yellow Book (Mathews & Lane), though too bulky to be convenient, and far too full of "short" stories which are too diffuse to be short, is in some respects an improvement on the first number; but the improvement, we are bound to say, is far more marked on the pictorial than on the literary side. Even Mr. Hamerton, in his most genial hour, could hardly say that all this "easy writing" is easy reading—that it is "literature" rather than "letterpress." The amateur element—young ladies with pet names, like actresses at the Gaiety—is far too conspicuous than it should be if the Yellow Book is to be continued and is to command respect; while of those literary performers who condescend to be brief, more than one reminds us of a description given in the old days of Miss Kate Vaughan's dancing: "You think she is going to begin, or she does begin it may be; but just as you settle down seriously to witness, behold she stops." Of his "betrothed," for instance, has Mr. Gale nothing more to tell us than the not very original or valuable information that "... Whatever my grief

There is healing and rest,
On the pear-blossom slope
Of her beautiful breast."

From Mr. Max Beerbohm there comes an explanation that his essay in the last number in praise of cosmetics was satirical. He thinks he "has" the critics because none of them thought it so; but, if he wished them to, he should have told them his intentions earlier; but perhaps he did not recognise how heavy was his hand in satire, and how deplorably the explanation was needed. In the department of art, though Mr. Beardsley's type of woman-kind—whether he calls it Réjane or leaves it a nameless horror—is as offensive as ever, and as thoroughly morbid, his cleverness in other work is not hidden under a bushel. Those three "garçons de café," for instance, are full of the entertainingness of rather chargé portraiture. Mr. Sickert is, as usual, striking and interesting; and Mr. Wilson Steer's portrait of himself—espied behind the slender legs and flying skirts of a model putting on her shoe—is, though scarcely sufficient as a likeness, a charming production. Mr. Aymer Vallance's four drawings for the backs of playing-cards would be extremely suitable if the cards were there. Mr. Alfred Thornton's landscape has real dignity.

SELECTED FOREIGN BOOKS.

GENERAL LITERATURE.

- BALZO, C. del. Poesie di mille autori intorno a Dante Alighieri. Paris: Fischbacher. 48 fr.
DE L'ORMS, Philibert. Œuvre de, p.p. C. Nizet. Paris: May & Motteroz. 80 fr.
FORER, R. Die Zeugnische der byzantinischen, romanischen, gotischen u. spätern Kunstepochen. Strassburg: Forer. 75 M.
FRANCE, Anatole. Le Lys rouge. Paris: Calmann Lévy. 8 fr. 50 c.
HARMANN, E. Die sozialen Kernfragen. Leipzig: Friedrich. 10 M.

- MONOD, Gabriel. Renan, Taine, Michelet. Paris: Calmann Lévy. 3 fr. 50 c.
STEINCHEN, F. Raphaels seit 1508 verschollene, in St. Petersburg aufgefunden Madonna di Siena. St. Petersburg: Schmitzdorff. 5 M.
STIEGLITZ, A. de. De l'Equilibre politique, du légitime et du principe des nationalités. T. II. Paris: Pedone-Lauriel. 10 fr.
THOMAS, Ch. Kleine deutsche Schriften, m. e. Einleitg. versehen u. hreg. v. J. O. Opel. Halle: Hendel. 3 M.
VABIGNY, H. de. En Amérique: souvenirs de voyage et notes scientifiques. Paris: Masson. 3 fr. 50 c.

THEOLOGY, ETC.

- BULMEZINGO, A. v. Das Zukunftsbild des Propheten Jeremia aus 'Anathoth. Riga: Hoerschelmann. 2 M.
KAENKEL, M. Josephus u. Lucas. Der schriftsteller. Einfluss des jüd. Geschichtschreibers auf den christl. Leipzig: Haessel. 10 M.
LOEBERT, J. Der Communismus der mährischen Widerkäufer im 16. u. 17. Jahrh. Leipzig: Freytag. 3 M. 60 Pf.

HISTORY, ETC.

- BIERLING, E. R. Juristische Prinzipienlehre. 1. Bd. Freiburg-i. B.: Mohr. 7 M.
DUQUESNOY, Adrien. Journal d', sur l'Assemblée Constituante, 3 Mai 1789—3 Avril 1790, p. R. de Crèvecoeur. T. I. Paris: Picard. 10 fr.
HAMBERGER, J. Die französische Invasion in Kärnten im J. 1809. Klagenfurt: Ferd. v. Kiehmayer. 1 M.
HEUSER, E. Die Belagerungen v. Landau in den J. 1702 u. 1703. Landau: Kaussler. 4 M.
LELLIS, C. de. Scritti e autografi di Cristoforo Colombo. Paris: Fischbacher. 150 fr.
MALZACHER, A. Alamannens Heldenaal u. Ehrentempel. Geschichte der Alamannen bis zum Abgang des Herzogth. Schwaben. 1. Bd. Stuttgart: Metzler. 2 M.
PÉLISSIER, L. G. Lettres inédites du Baron G. Peyrouse écrites à son frère André pendant les campagnes de l'Empire de 1809 à 1814. Paris: Didier. 3 fr. 50 c.
PENSA, H. L'Algérie: organisation politique et administrative, etc. Paris: Rothschild. 10 fr.
PUBLICATIONEN aus den k. preussischen Staatsarchiven. 58. Bd. Die Politik d. letzten Hochmalsters in Preussen Albrecht v. Brandenburg. Von E. Joachim. 2. Thl. 1618—1621. Leipzig: Hirzel. 12 M.
SUTTER, C. Aus Leben u. Schriften des Magisters Boncompagni. Freiburg-i. B.: Mohr. 2 M.
WIAET, René. Le Régime des terres du fief au Bas-Empire. Essai sur la Precaria. Paris: Larose. 6 fr.

PHYSICAL SCIENCE AND PHILOSOPHY.

- GALLE, J. G. Verzeichniss der Elemente der bisher berechneten Cometenbahnen, neu bearb., ergänzt u. fortgesetzt bis zum J. 1894. Leipzig: Engelmann. 12 M.
GARBE, R. Die Samkhya-Philosophie. Eine Darstellg. des ind. Rationalismus nach den Quellen. Leipzig: Haessel. 12 M.
HALLER, B. Studien üb. dogmatische u. rhipidologische Probranchen, nebst Bemerkgn. üb. die phylet. Beziehgn. der Mollusken untereinander. Leipzig: Engelmann. 82 M.
LINDEN, L. Lea Orchidées exotiques et leur culture en Europe. Paris: Deim. 25 fr.
MOBAN, J. de. Mission Scientifique en Perse. T. I. Etudes géographiques. Paris: Leroux. 40 fr.
OSTWALD, W. Die wissenschaftlichen Grundlagen der analytischen Chemie. Leipzig: Engelmann. 4 M.
SEMPER, C. Ueb. die Niere der Pulmonaten. Hrg. v. H. Simroth. Wiesbaden: Kreidel. 24 M.

PHILOLOGY.

- GILLHAUER, M. Die drei Systeme der griechischen Tachygraphie. Leipzig: Freytag. 3 M. 80 Pf.
KORSCHWITZ, E. Grammaire historique de la langue des Églises. Paris: Welter. 5 fr.
MEYER, R. Einführung in das ältere Neuhochdeutsche zum Studium der Germanistik. Leipzig: Reissland. 1 M. 60 Pf.
MEYER-LÜCKE, W. Grammatik der romanischen Sprachen. 2. Bd. Formenlehre. 2. Abtlg. Leipzig: Reissland. 8 M.
WESER, P. Geistliches Schauspiel u. kirchliche Kunst in ihrem Verhältnis erläutert an s. Ikonographie der Kirche u. Synagoge. Stuttgart: Ebner. 4 M.

CORRESPONDENCE.

THE CANON OF CHAUCER'S WORKS.

Cambridge: July 20 1894.

I understand that I am being blamed in a certain quarter for rejecting "The Cuckoo and the Nightingale" from the canon of Chaucer's Works.

It is difficult to get some people to understand the nature of evidence. I have not "rejected" this poem from the canon, because it cannot, in strictness, be said to have a place in it. It has to make its way in. That is the very point.

The nature of the so-called "Chaucer MSS." is often ill understood. They are, usually, MSS. which contain poems by many authors, being, practically, albums or collections of scraps. If we happened to open a modern album with a poem by Tennyson in it, that would not carry with it the ascription to Tennyson of every poem in the book. Yet this is the extraordinary position which some well-informed people take up in the case of works "attributed" to Chaucer.

To take the case of the poem now in question. It occurs in five MSS.—viz., Fairfax 16, Bodley 638, Tanner 346, and Arch. Selden B. 24, all at Oxford; and in MS. Ff. 1. 6, at Cambridge. All of these MSS. are collections of scraps by many authors. Thus, Ff. 1. 6 contains poems by Chaucer, Gower, Hoccleve, Lydgate, a certain "Godwhen," Sir Richard Ros, and others; not to mention the Romance of Sir Degrevant.

"The Cuckoo and the Nightingale" is not ascribed to Chaucer in any one of the five MSS. Nor is it mentioned by Lydgate or Shirley. Hence there is no external evidence in its favour.

The fact of its appearance in Thynne's edition proves nothing. Helabelled his book "Chaucer's Works" for convenience; but he inserted poems by other authors. Lydgate's name is expressly mentioned by him several times; and the very poem which precedes "The Cuckoo and the Nightingale" has Gower's name to it, both at the beginning and again at the end, to make quite sure.

The other early editions are mainly reprints, till we come to Stowe and Speght. These editors added more poems, but they let the old ones stand. Stowe even added the portentously long poem of "The Storie of Thebes," not because it was Chaucer's, but because it was well known to be Lydgate's. The mere reprinting did not alter the facts. Gower's poem still remained his, and the anonymous poems remained anonymous.

Tyrwhitt was the first person to consider the whole question. He wished to make a glossary, and for this purpose he wrote a short account of the principal works in the editions. As to "The Cuckoo and the Nightingale," he gives no clear opinion, except that he was quite sure that the ballad which followed it, and seemed to form part of it, did not belong to it, and was certainly spurious. He probably regarded it as sufficiently genuine for glossarial use. Perhaps if he had edited it, which he never did, he might have changed his mind. It does not seem to be generally known that Tyrwhitt edited nothing whatever, except the Canterbury Tales only.

It is curious that the very title—"The Cuckoo and the Nightingale"—useful and descriptive as it is, was first employed by Thynne; and he may have invented it. In MS. Fairfax, it is called "The Boke of Cupid"; in Bodley 638, it is "The Boke of Cupide god of loue"; and in Tanner 346, it is called "The God of loue." The other two MSS. give no title at all. The old scribes had no faculty for inventing titles, and invariably drop the title when they do not know it. Hence it is that so many well-known pieces have, in the MSS., neither title nor author's name.

The book which set the fashion for the modern "Canon of Chaucer's Works" was the anonymous edition published by Moxon in 1855, and inscribed to Mr. A. Dyce by the publisher. It seems to have been edited by Tyrwhitt's ghost, as it is entitled "The Poetical Works of Geoffrey Chaucer, &c.; by Thomas Tyrwhitt." Tyrwhitt died in 1786, and this edition, containing twenty-five poems which he did not edit in his lifetime, and mainly reprinted from the old black-letter editions

* Not six; it is not in MS. Harl. 7333, as I have unfortunately said at p. 39, owing to misunderstanding the note by Dr. Morris to which I refer. I found that out, and omit mention of in describing the MS. at p. 58. But I forgot to strike out my former remark.

sixty-nine years after his death, might very fitly be called the "ghost edition." This curious work was actually adopted as the standard even by Dr. Morris. It is absolutely of no authority, its sole value consisting in the fact that it omits such pieces as Tyrwhitt decisively rejected, though it admits such pieces as "The Court of Love," "Chaucer's Dream," and other anonymous pieces written (as the language shows) in the fifteenth century at the earliest. Dr. Morris followed suit in 1866, but it is due to him to say that he lived to know better. Alas, for the loss of my good colleague in more books than one!

Since then the question has been taken up in earnest. The names of Bradshaw, Ten Brink, Child, Ellis, Sweet, Furnivall, Koch, Zupitza, and others are familiar to Chaucer students; and I am not aware that any scholar of repute has lately accepted this poem as genuine. Of course they have all seen the point: viz., that there is no external evidence in its favour, and that it has to make its way into the canon by force of internal evidence, which happens to be unconvincing. Prof. Lounsbury considers the question in his Studies in Chaucer (i. 487), and gives it up. "Its tone is not his tone, nor is its manner his manner."

The internal evidence, rightly understood, is also against it from a metrical point of view. I have already pointed out some faults of rhyme, but I now find yet another. In st. 17 there is a fatal rhyme, that of upon and ron (rained) with mon! Mon is meant for man; and it is surely an act of common prudence to find an example of Chaucer's use of mon before we rashly force the poem upon him. The rhyme of gren-e with been, in st. 13, is equally fatal.

An attempt is now being made to meet this last objection, by questioning my statement that gren-e is dissyllabic in Chaucer; but it is past all question, now that we have a complete set of indexes to Chaucer's rhymes. I have examined all the cases; but I cannot here exhibit the results, as the examples are very numerous. Of course, this investigation can only be made, or followed, by such as know the difference between correct and incorrect spelling. The spelling in the MSS. is sometimes absurd, and must be corrected by etymological and phonological laws. Critics must condescend to learn these laws, or, at the least, to look out words in Stratmann's Dictionary, before they take upon themselves to discourse upon what they do not understand even in the most elementary way. I may note that the adjectives gren-e, ken-e, shen-e, y-sen-e, sweet-e all take final e, because they have a "mutated" vowel, and have, therefore, a mutating tail appended to them (see Sweet, History of English Sounds, pp. 318-350). Philologists will see the point of this remark. The word grede (st. 28) is not in Chaucer's Vocabulary; but in "The Owl and the Nightingale" it occurs at least five times.

WALTER W. SKEAT.

THE SEPTUAGINT AND SAMARITAN VERSUS THE HEBREW TEXT OF THE PENTATEUCH.

Athenaeum Club.

I think I have succeeded, in the letters which you have been good enough to print, in showing that the Masoretic text of the Old Testament is a very untrustworthy guide. The position that this text was originally put together by, and accommodated to, the polemical necessities of the Rabbis at Jamnia, in their efforts to differentiate Judaism from its rivals, and especially from Christianity, seems to be fairly established. The alteration and accommodation of the text appears to have been carried out even in the case of the Pentateuch. I will now give some examples, drawn in a considerable measure from Whiston and others, which might be greatly enlarged.

The patriarchal numbers as given in Genesis, being the numbers upon which the received chronology chiefly rests, are notoriously divergent in the several texts.

First, with regard to the patriarchs before the Flood, we have a remarkable fact. As I have said on many occasions in your pages, if we are to recover the true text of the Septuagint, it must be by patient criticism and examination of the materials which have reached us, and not by merely transcribing the Alexandrian or the Vatican or some other MS., which represents not the Septuagint but largely an eclectic text due to the labours of Origen and others who endeavoured to equate the various texts then existing. This is specially obvious in the case of the numbers attached to the patriarchal names in the various Greek codices. Augustine had already observed this, and said, "nec casum redolet sed industriam" (De Civit. Dei, xv. 13, 1-3.)

If we are to find the numbers as they were in the original Septuagint, we must turn to Josephus, who based his narrative on that version. We shall then find that, in the case of the first seven patriarchs, the Greek texts have added 100 years to the age of each one of them at the time when his son was born. In every case among these seven the authority of the original Septuagint, as reported by Josephus, is supported by the Samaritan numbers, by those in the Book of Jubilees, and in every case but one by the Masoretic numbers also; and it can scarcely be doubted that the numbers as reported in the manuscripts of the so-called Septuagint version are untrustworthy, and that we must subtract 100 years from the age of each patriarch at the time when his son was born, if we are to reach a just conclusion from these MSS.

Accepting this argument, the chronological result is as follows:—

| | Age at his son's birth. | Years lived after the son's birth. | Total length of life. |
|-----------------|-------------------------|------------------------------------|-----------------------|
| Adam ... | 130 | 800 | 930 |
| Seth ... | 105 | 807 | 912 |
| Enos ... | 90 | 815 | 905 |
| Cainan ... | 70 | 840 | 910 |
| Mahaleel ... | 65 | 830 | 895 |
| Jared ... | 62 | 785 | 847 |
| Enoch ... | 65 | 300 | 365 |
| Mathushelah ... | 67 | 653 | 720 |
| Lamech ... | 53 | 600 | 653 |
| Noah ... | 600 | | 950 |

Number of years to the Flood, 1307.

Having seen reason to accept the Samaritan numbers for the pre-diluvian patriarchs, the conclusion gives us confidence in appealing to the same authority in regard to the post-diluvian patriarchs also. In regard to the age of eight of them at the birth of their sons we can scarcely be in doubt, since the numbers of Josephus and those of the Greek codices commonly quoted as representing the Septuagint are in complete accord with the Samaritan tradition; and the view is generally held now by the best critics that this concurrence is conclusive. The Masoretic numbers in each case differ, and differ only in the subtraction of 100 years from each, a uniformity which is consistent only with a methodical and artificial re-arrangement of the numbers.

In the case of one name only—namely, that of Jared—the Masoretic text agrees with the Septuagint and differs from both Josephus and the Samaritan version. As the latter are also supported by the Book of Jubilees, and as the difference consists in a hundred years having been added to the patriarchal numbers, we can hardly doubt that the Masoretic text here presents a sophisticated number, and that some corruption has also crept into the text of Josephus.

In the case of the next patriarch, Mathushelah, we have a somewhat curious result. The Samaritan copy of the Bible quoted by Jerome differs from that quoted by Eusebius and from the present Samaritan Pentateuch in giving the age of this patriarch at the birth of his son, the former at 187 and 182 years respectively, and the latter at 67 and 53. It would seem almost certain that the Hieronymian text had been altered so as to equate it with the Masoretic text, and so also with the numbers in Josephus. For, curiously enough, the numbers in the Book of Jubilees completely confirm those in Eusebius and the numbers in the current text of the Samaritan Pentateuch. Another confirmation of this conclusion is to be found in the fact that in the Greek codices already referred to the age of Mathushelah at his son's birth is given as 167, which merely adds the regular accretion of 100, elsewhere found in that edition, to the numbers in the Samaritan version.

For these and other reasons it seems pretty clear, as Whiston argued long ago, and as Ewald, Bertheau, and Dillman seem to agree in our own day, that the Samaritan Pentateuch has preserved the original numbers. This is agreeable to a priori reasoning, for we can assign no possible polemical reason for the Samaritans wilfully altering their numbers. In all these numbers the Samaritan text agrees with Josephus and with the Greek MSS. of the Old Testament. There is only one difference, and this is that in the Greek MSS. just quoted an additional name has been inserted in the pedigree between Arphaxad and Sala, namely Cainan, to whom 130 years are assigned. This name does not occur in the Masoretic text, in Josephus, or in the Samaritan version, nor, as Whiston says, in Irenaeus, Theophilus of Antioch, Clement of Alexandria, Africanus, Origen, Eusebius, Jerome, Josephus, Christianus, Hilarian, or in the Slavonic edition of the Bible. It was apparently inserted in the Greek codices already mentioned to make them consistent with the genealogy in St. Luke's Gospel, or perhaps it was derived in both cases from a corruption which had crept into the corresponding genealogy in 1 Chron. xviii. 24.

When we came to Nahor, the grandfather of Abraham, we have a curious inconsistency in the various copies. The length of his life is made 148 years in both the Masoretic text and the Samaritan, but curiously enough his age when his son Terah was born is given differently. In the Masoretic text when he was 29, and in the Samaritan when he was 79. The Samaritan numbers seem to be confirmed by the Greek codices, some of which give his age when Terah was born at 79 and others at 179 years. Josephus apparently here agrees with the Hebrew text. The reliability of the Samaritan version in these genealogies is more marked perhaps in the case of Terah, the son of Nahor and the father of Abraham. The Masoretic and Samaritan texts agree with Josephus and with the Greek MSS., in the statement that Terah was 70 years old when Abraham was born. They all agree again that Abraham was 75 years old when he left Haran after his father's death. Whence, as Whiston says, Terah must have been no more than 145 years old at his death. Yet the Masoretic text, Josephus, and the Greek copies all state he was 205 years old when he died. The Samaritan version distinctly makes him 145 when he died, which was the number in the copy of the Septuagint consulted by Philo (see De Somniis, p. 572). All this goes to show that the Samaritan version preserves the oldest and best tradition on the subject before us, and strengthens the contention that its numbers ought to be accepted instead of those in the sophisticated Hebrew text. We will now give these figures:—

| | After his son's birth. | Length of his life. |
|---------------------------------------|------------------------------|---------------------------|
| Shem after the Flood | 2 | 500 |
| Arphaxad when his son was born ... | 135 | 303 |
| Sala | 130 | 303 |
| Eber | 134 | 270 |
| Phaleg | 130 | 209 |
| Ragau or Reu ... | 132 | 107 |
| Sarug | 130 | 100 |
| Nahor | 79 | 69 |
| Terah | 70 | 75 |

From the Deluge to the birth of Abraham, 942.

Turning from the chronological tables, we shall find numerous instances in the Pentateuch wherethe Septuagint and the Samaritan versions clearly preserve a better text than that of the Masoretic. Thus, in verses 6, 7, and 20 of chapter i. of Genesis, the Septuagint preserves clauses which are no longer found in the Hebrew, but which were present with little doubt in the original. In verse 4 of chapter ii. we are told, in the Samaritan and Septuagint versions, that God finished the work of creation on the sixth day, and not on the seventh as the Hebrew has it. The former reading is confirmed by the Syriac translation, by Josephus and the copies, and by Philo, Irenaeus, and Barnabas (see Whiston's Essay, 59). In verse 24 of chapter ii. the word "twin" omitted in the Hebrew text is present in the Samaritan and Septuagint. It is quoted Matt. xix. 5 and 6, Mark x. 7 and 8, 1 Cor. xix. 16, Eph. v. 31. In verse 8 of chapter iv. these two texts supply a phrase about Cain, not now present in the Hebrew—namely, "Cain said to his brother Abel, Let us go into the field." This must have been in the original, as it is in the Syriac translation, in two of the Targums of Philo and Clement, and in the Itala (ib. 60). In the Masoretic texts there is a blank, and a mark at this place acknowledging an omission. In verses 3 and 8 of chapter vii. the Septuagint and Samaritan versions supply words distinguishing between clean and unclean fowls, which were clearly in the original, but are no longer in the Hebrew. In Genesis xvii. 12, 13, and 14, we have the injunction that every male child should be circumcised on the eighth day. This is contained in the Samaritan and the Greek copies, and was present in the copies used by Philo, Justin Martyr, and Origen. Philo mentions that the injunction was found to be oppressive by the Jews of his time. Hence probably why the clause was cut out, and no longer exists in the Hebrew copies (ib. 61 and 62).

The same result follows from an examination of mere verbal differences. Thus in the Masoretic text the youngest son of Jacob is always called Benjamin, which is a Chaldee corruption. In the Samaritan text the name is given in its true Hebrew form—namely, Beniamin. By a peculiar punctuation, Jacob, in the Masoretic version of Genesis xlvii. 31, is made to worship leaning on the top of his bed, while the Septuagint has it leaning on the top of his staff, as the phrase is no doubt rightly quoted in Hebrews xi. 21. In verses 8 and 17 of chapter iii. of Exodus, the Gergeshites are omitted from the names of tribes mentioned, while they occur in both the Septuagint and Samaritan versions.

In verse 40 of chapter xii. of the same book the Masoretic text makes the children of Israel dwell in Egypt 430 years. The Samaritan and Septuagint versions and Josephus tells us that this was the time they lived in Canaan and in Egypt—that is, the 430 years includes the time which Abraham and his family dwelt in Canaan before they went to Egypt, which is exactly consistent with the statement in Galatians iii. 17. In Numbers iv. 14 the account of the brazen laver with its drapery is omitted from the Masoretic text, although the clause is necessary to the sense. It is contained in both the Samaritan and Septuagint versions.

In Numbers x. 6 the signals for the marching of the camp are given only for two of its quarters in the Hebrew, but for all four, as they clearly ought to be, by Josephus and the Septuagint.

Josephus, doubtless quoting the true Septuagint and the Samaritan version, tells us Korah was burnt with the Levites, and was not swallowed up like Dathan and Abiram. This is agreeable to Psalm cvi. 17, and also to the account in Clement, Ignatius, and Eusebius, who quote from the unsophisticated Septuagint; and it ought to be accepted rather than the Hebrew reading.

In the Masoretic text of Deuteronomy x. 6 Aaron is made to die at Mosera, contrary to the statements in Exodus. The whole story is told correctly in the Samaritan version. In the Masoretic text, verse 3 of chapter xxxii. of Deuteronomy is unintelligible and has given rise to various ingenious comments and concordations. The true reading is preserved by the author of Ecclesiasticus, by Philo, and Clement, quoting, no doubt, from the true Septuagint.

St. Paul in Galatians iii. 10 quotes this passage from the law: "It is written, Cursed is everyone that continueth not in all things that are written in the book of the law to do them." The words underlined are no longer present in the Masoretic text of Deuteronomy xxvii., from which they are quoted. They both occur, however, in the Greek versions, and are implied in the reasoning of Justin Martyr (Dial. con Trypho, p. 322). The Samaritan version preserves the words, "in all things." The Syriac version also has the particle "all" as quoted by the Apostle. Jerome specially calls attention to the Jews having erased this word for polemical purposes; but, he says, it was present in the more ancient copies of the other nations, and was thus attested. It is a remarkable fact that, notwithstanding the Greek codices have been "edited," they still agree in 1000 places with the Samaritan as against the Hebrew. This concurrence is only consistent with the Hebrew text having been altered, for we cannot understand the Septuagint translators adapting their text to that of the Samaritans.

These quotations will suffice to give point to my contention, that it is quite time we ceased to admit the value that has been attached to the Masoretic text. It is natural, perhaps, that those whose whole lives have been spent in learning Hebrew, and who fancy that thereby they have secured a treasure beyond the reach of the common herd, should habitually exaggerate the virtues of the Hebrew Bible. But for the rest of us it is better we should realise that, if we are to secure a text of the Pentateuch free from the sophistications of the Jews, we must try and recover the original Septuagint text, and must also reconsider the judgments which have been hastily passed upon the Samaritan version. As Whiston says, we have no direct evidence whatever that the Samaritans tampered with their texts, while we know the Jews tampered with theirs—the Samaritans had no feud with the Christians and no motive to alter the Bible, but every motive to preserve it intact in view of the fierce criticism of their neighbours. I am not sure that Whiston is not right in extending this reasoning even to the two well-known texts which are supposed to have been sophisticated by the Samaritans—namely, Exodus xx. 17, and Deuteronomy xxvii. 4—which require an altar to be built and sacrifices to be offered, not at Mount Ebal but at Mount Gerizim. Whiston argues that it seems more likely prima facie that the altar for divine worship and sacrifice, as well as for the inscription of laws, should be at the mountain appointed for the blessings, as Gerizim was, and not at that appointed for the curses, like Ebal.

The site fixed upon by the Samaritans seems to be the place where Joshua set up a stone for a witness to the Israelites, because, as he says, "it had heard all the words of the Lord which he spake unto them," which was at Sichem, close to Gerizim, and not at Mount Ebal. Christ seems to allow that the woman of Samaria was right when she claimed that their fathers worshipped on that mountain of Gerizim. Nor is there any known reason why the Samaritans should have selected Gerizim rather than Ebal. Josephus says the altar was in a plain between Mounts Ebal and Gerizim, "and not far from Sichem," which last descriptive phrase is in the Samaritan, but not in the Hebrew copies. It is not improbable, therefore, that even in these critical passages the Samaritan text preserves the true reading.

My letter is outrageously long, but my subject is a very fertile as well as an important one, and is not yet exhausted.

HENRY H. HOWORTH.

SCIENCE.

Beowulf. Edited, with Textual Footnotes, Index of Proper Names, and Alphabetical Glossary, by A. J. Wyatt. (Cambridge: University Press.)

THIS excellent and handy edition of Beowulf is, for the special requirements of English students, decidedly preferable to those of Heyne and Holder, which are practically its only competitors. In the construction of his text Mr. Wyatt has almost entirely abstained from original conjectures, and has for the most part shown sound judgment in his selection of emendations. Every deviation from the reading of the MS. is carefully indicated in the footnotes. Perhaps the book would have been more widely useful if it had contained explanatory as well as critical annotations, especially as the glossary is rather concise. Mr. Wyatt is now and then unduly scornful and wrathful in his references to the shortcomings of previous editors. On l. 1734, for example, he writes: "With admirable and shameless audacity Heyne and Wülker foist in for at the beginning of this line without a word of comment." Now in the case of Prof. Wülker (whose name, by the way, Mr. Wyatt always spells with the c, which the Leipzig professor has latterly discarded), it is almost certain that the omission of any remark on the insertion is simply one of those unfortunate oversights to which everyone is liable, even Mr. Wyatt himself being no exception, as is evident from his long, though not complete, list of errata. The bracketed note of exclamation, also, appears oftener than is quite commendable.

In one or two instances Mr. Wyatt's choice of readings appears unsatisfactory. In l. 21, where the MS. is defaced, he follows Grein (in his later text), Heyne, and Wülker, in reading wine. Prof. Wülker's statement that this is virtually the reading of the MS. does not seem to be justified. Its only foundation is the fact that Thorkelin, who saw the MS. when it was in better condition than at present, gives the word as pine, which would be an easy mistake if the MS. had wine. But from what Prof. Zupitza says about Thorkelin's two transcripts, it is clear that the Danish editor only arrived at this reading after some wavering, which shows that the word was already by no means distinctly legible. And even if the reading wine unquestionably existed in the MS., it would still be open to strong objection, both on grounds of sense and of metre. A hemistich of the form ~~~~~ is something very unusual: a few instances do occur, but in some of them the reading is doubtful, and in others the eccentricity may be plausibly accounted for on grounds that are not here applicable. If the indications of the MS. permitted it, I should like to read býsne, which would give a good sense, and be metrically unobjectionable. This, however, does not seem to be consistent with the traces of letters that can be made out. Apparently the horizontal line preceding the ne can only be the tag of an r, and the long downstroke of this letter seems to be visible below the line. Hence the most satisfactory reading yet proposed appears to be arne (as in Grein's Bibliothek), though there is room at the beginning of the line for at least three letters before ne. In quoting Prof. Zupitza's note on this line as it appears in the facsimile, Mr. Wyatt has unfortunately omitted the last and more important part, thus giving the misleading impression that the facts as stated by Zupitza are consistent with the reading wine. In l. 1333 the MS. reading gefrægnod is retained without comment; and, strangely enough, the word does not appear in the glossary. Perhaps syllu gefrægnod, though it sounds rather ill-suited to the context, may be justified by the parallelism of æse wlane in the preceding line; but Grein's conjecture of gefegnod at least deserves mention. In l. 1383 Mr. Wyatt adopts Grein's hælum for the "hæ nū" of the MS.; but is hælum a possible form? Line 3171 is printed in the text, after Grein, as "woldon [ceare] cwīðan, kyning mænān." This is most likely correct; but in a footnote Mr. Wyatt makes the infelicitous suggestion, that the now illegible word may have been wōpe, which does not properly alliterate. It is true that Prof. Zupitza's transliteration indicates a gap of only four letters; but, if this point be pressed, the spelling care will meet the difficulty.

In two places Mr. Wyatt has made excellent textual suggestions, which, so far as I know, have not been anticipated. One of these is the reading, "ða cōm beorht scacan [sunne ofer grundas]." This is based on Heyne's conjecture, but the transposition of sunne and scacan is a great improvement. In l. 3084 the awkward and obscure "hēoldon hēah geseap" is altered to "hēold on hēah geseap," the expression being illustrated by a reference to the Middle English "heald hardiliche o þet tu haues bigunnen." Mr. Wyatt is, I think, justified in expunging many of the hyphens which other editors have placed between adjectives and substantives. It was very natural that the earlier scholars should have preferred, wherever possible, to assume composition rather than syntactical combination, in cases where the emphasis denoted by alliteration falls on the adjective and not on the following noun, because dominant stress on the adjective seems strange to modern feeling; but now that the matter is well understood, the retention of the hyphens appears to be due to mere traditional prejudices.

The "Index of Persons and Places" is, on the whole, very good, but in some cases it fails to indicate that illustrative matter may be found outside the limits of the poem. For all that here appears to the contrary, the names of Eormenric, Scyld and Scyldingas, Thrytho, and some others, might be peculiar to the Old English epic. This is hardly as it should be.

The glossary is an admirable piece of work, the explanations being obviously the fruit of careful original study of the text. No etymologies are given, but the modern English forms of the words appear in small capitals—as a part of the gloss when the original sense survives, in other cases within brackets. This method has too many advantages to be condemned; but it tends rather to encourage the common fallacy of young students, that what is now the most prominent sense of a word was the primary sense in Old English. Most scholars, I think, would confess that their appreciation of Old English poetry was for some time seriously hampered by an unconscious prepossession of this kind. To read a poem like "Beowulf" with the modern English etymological equivalents of the words in one's mind, is to obtain a totally false impression of its tone and spirit. A few remarks on this point might with advantage have been prefixed to the glossary. There are several unfortunate omissions: forlæcan, gang, lang-twidig, mægþ. It is difficult to avoid oversights of this kind: a useful precaution would have been, before passing the proofs of the glossary, to go through Heyne's glossary or Grein's Sprachschatz word by word, so as to make sure that nothing had been forgotten. The glossary ought to have included the words in the Finnesburh fragment given in the appendix. In the arrangement of the glossary strict alphabetical order has been observed, except that the prefix-verbs are placed under the simple verbs. Although Mr. Wyatt expresses some misgivings about this, it appears to be the most useful method. There is a curious innovation in marking as long the vowels in the non-West-Saxon forms wælm and mærcels. If the unetymological lengthenings (which are not universally acknowledged) are to be marked in these words, the same rule ought in consistency to be applied to underne and some other instances of the same kind. It would, perhaps, be well to use the circumflex for compensatory and other secondary lengthenings, while retaining the macron as the mark of original long quantity.

HENRY BRADLEY.

CURRENT SCIENTIFIC LITERATURE.

A Dictionary of Medicine. By Various Writers. Edited by Richard Quain, Bart., M.D. New Edition, revised throughout and enlarged. In 2 vols. (Longmans.) The first edition of this well-known work owed its great success to the reputation of its editor and contributors, and to the intrinsic merit of presenting, in convenient form, a clear, concise, and methodical statement of what was most important to be known and done in medicine. After a careful comparison of this new edition with our familiar friend of 1882, we are able to say decidedly that the new is even better than the old. The original success has put editors and contributors on their metal: the veterans in a few cases have had the satisfaction of being able to present their first articles unchanged; but, as a rule, they or their successors have diligently revised and brought them up to date; the recruits, all of established quality, have proved themselves worthy of their company; Sir Richard Quain has promoted to be sub-editors under him two of the most capable and laborious of our younger physicians; and the result of their combined efforts has been a first-rate text-book of modern medicine, sober and practical without condescension, learned without pedantry. We had prepared a list of the more important of the new or revised articles, but it is far too long: suffice it to say that the work bears everywhere marks of conscientious industry and anxiety to be on a level with the best knowledge. The earlier edition was said to suffer from the considerable interval that divided the composition of some of the articles from their publication, especially in respect of microscopical pathology. That cannot be said of the new, which, so far as a book can be, is abreast with that restless science. To give only one instance of very many: in the first edition micro-organisms were dismissed in a very few pages, here they occupy no less than fifty. Both editions fail to draw the line between dictionary and encyclopædia; but that is a venial failure, and perhaps the line does not exist. We know that the first edition had a popular as well as a professional success, and circulated widely among a curious or anxious laity. For good or for evil, patients, and especially their friends, will read up cases; and if they must do so, it is far better for them to read a sound honest work like this than the advertising tracts and manuals of quacks and sharks. We can assure all such painful inquirers that this titled more sumptuous Quain, no less than the old almost dingy oracle, is accessible, trustworthy, and responsive to intelligent questionings; for the rest, so much or so little as they do not understand—credant quia non intelligunt.

A Pocket-Flora of Edinburgh and the Surrounding District. By C. O. Sonntag. (Williams & Norgate.) The neighbourhood of Edinburgh ("from thirty to forty miles in diameter") contains an unusually large and varied flora, and Mr. Sonntag deserves the thanks of all lovers of flowers for his careful review of what it has to offer. He has, of course, used the localities given in the catalogue of the late Professor Balfour, but has also made his own collection; and it is not likely that much has escaped the eyes of two careful searchers. The woody ravine of Hawthornden may, however, be added to the list of stations for Cardamine impatiens. Mr. Sonntag gives a scientific description of each plant named, an artificial key to them, and a glossary of terms; and these features make his book much more helpful than local floras are wont to be, while in size it remains small and handy. His characterisations, clear and precise, throw a great deal of light on some critical genera, as Salix and Hieracium. But Vicia sativa and V. angustifolia need to be better distinguished by pointing out that the latter plant has not the remarkably retuse and even deeply notched leaflets of the former. Of Anacharis Alismastrum Mr. Sonntag says: "Male flower not known in Europe," and certainly we have never met with the male; but a writer in Hardwick's Science Gossip (1880) claimed to have found it in Britain. A few foreign plants, as Laburnum, Pisum, Robinia, Zea Mays, are included in the flora to the extension of its usefulness, but no Characeae are given. There are some errors of printing in botanical names; and it will be well in another edition to conform to usage, and print the second (or specific) name of each plant without a capital, except when there is a special reason for doing otherwise: thus we should have Triodia decumbens, but Lythrum Salicaria. The term "dimorphous," applied to the primrose, needs a little more explanation than it gets. But after making these suggestions, we feel it a duty to repeat that the book is most lucid and useful. It may give to all young botanists, even away from Edinburgh, a very pleasant and instructive summer.

SCIENCE NOTES.

THE president and council of the Royal Society have awarded the Joule studentship for the first time to Mr. J. D. Chorlton, of Owens College. This studentship was founded for the purpose of enabling students to carry out certain researches on lines laid down by Joule, more especially with the view of determining the constants of some of the instruments employed by him, which his representatives can place at the student's disposal.

THE Physical Society—which has met in the Royal College of Science since its foundation in 1874—will in the future hold its meetings in the rooms of the Chemical Society, Burlington House.

MESSRS. L. REEVE & Co. announce the publication of a work on "Foreign Finches in Captivity," by Dr. Arthur G. Butler, consisting of between 300 and 400 pages, with 60 plates, drawn by Mr. F. W. Frohawk, and coloured by hand. The mode of issue will be in ten parts, appearing at intervals of about six weeks; and the edition is limited to 300 copies.

THE Pengelly Memorial Fund now amounts to about £1360; and the committee have determined to proceed immediately with the erection of a lecture theatre, as part of the proposed addition to the Natural History Museum at Torquay, of which Mr. Pengelly was the founder.

THE July number of the Geographical Journal (Edward Stanford) contains the second of Mr. W. L. Slater's articles on "The Geography of Mammals." It deals with the Australian region, and is illustrated with a large map, in which the five sub-regions are clearly marked, as laid down by Mr. A. R. Wallace. In one point, however, Mr. Slater differs from Mr. Wallace, by transferring the island of Celebes to the Oriental region, on the evidence displayed by its mammalia. With regard to New Zealand and its adjoining islands, he follows Mr. Wallace (as opposed to Prof. Huxley and Prof. Newton) in refusing to give it the status of an independent region; while, at the same time, he criticises the theory recently put forward by Mr. H. O. Forbes, of the former existence of a great southern continent. Of the dingo, he says:

"The question of the origin of the dingo has not yet been settled. Although fossil remains of the animal have been found in the recent Tertiary deposits, it is difficult to say whether the dingo was introduced into Australia by the aborigines, or is indigenous. At the present time, it appears to be found both in a wild state and in a semi-domesticated condition among the native Australians."

THERE is also a paper on the geographical distribution of animals in the current number of Natural Science (Macmillans). Mr. G. H. Carpenter, in opposition to the views of Mr. A. R. Wallace—of a Palaearctic and a Nearctic region—argues in favour of a theory which has obtained some support in America: that the Canadian sub-region should alone be called "Boreal," but that south of it there extends an independent region, which it is proposed to call "Sonoran." He maintains that this Sonoran region has a much larger proportion of distinctively American types, both of mammals and of birds, than the Borean. We are glad to find so much attention being devoted just now to this interesting subject.

PHILOLOGY NOTES.

WE hear that the Société Ramond, which has its headquarters at Bagnères de Bigorre, is about to publish the text of the Basque Pastoral of St. Helen of Constantinople, which (in the opinion of Prof. Vinson) is the best of all, and which has a special interest for English readers, in that the heroine marries King Henry of England. The text used is that preserved in the municipal library at Bayonne, with the necessary corrections introduced by an English Bascophile, who copied it in 1892. It will be accompanied by a French translation, made by Canon Luchauspe (who has also revised the Basque text), and the Abbé P. Hariztoy, curé of Zubiburu. We may add that an English translation exists, waiting for a publisher. Last year the Société Ramond issued a very interesting and complete account of the Souletin Pastorals, by the Rev. Wentworth Webster.

IN illustration of the increasing study of Tibetan language and literature, we quote the following from the annual address delivered by Sir Charles Elliott, as president of the Asiatic Society of Bengal:

"The labours of Father Desgodin, S.J., claim particular notice. He has just completed his Tibetan-Latin-French Dictionary, a work begun by a fellow priest of his on the China-Tibet border fifty years ago. The French Government, to whom he first applied for help, having declined to assist him, Father Desgodin has arranged to publish the work at Hong-Kong, at the expense of the Roman Catholic Mission Society of China.

"The Tibetan-Sanskrit Dictionary, in the compilation of which Babu Sarat Chandra Das has been employed, is approaching completion. Arrangements have been made for buying the entire 'Tangyur' collection, consisting of 225 block-print volumes, to enable him to embody all the philosophical and technical terms contained in it in the Dictionary. The Bengal Secretariat Press has prepared three founts of Tibetan types, each consisting of 220 letters (both simple and compound), for printing the Dictionary, a Compendious Tibetan Grammar, and a work on Tibetan Correspondence.

"Babu Sarat Chandra Das has published several interesting papers on Buddhism and the Bon religion of Tibet in the Journal of the Buddhist Text Society of India. Among his translations from Tibetan, the 'Lamden,' which is a Tibetan version of the Sanskrit work called 'Bodipatha Pradipa,' by the celebrated Indian Pandit, Dipamkara Sri Jñāna, deserves special notice. It contains brief yet full accounts of the state of Buddhism and its cult, as understood in Magadha and Bengal during the tenth and eleventh centuries A.D. It also clears up some obscure points of Indian chronology, particularly the dates of the reigns of King Mahi Pala and his son, Naya Pala. These have hitherto been fixed, approximately only, from inscriptions. Some important facts regarding the rise and progress of the Mahayana School of Buddhism, in Kashmir and the countries lying on its northern and western borders, have also been brought to light from the works of Sumpa Khanpo, the greatest historian of Tibet.

"The cause of Tibetan literature has suffered a serious blow from the death of Dr. Wenzel, whose contribution on Buddhism and Tibetan added so much to the value of the Journal of the Royal Asiatic Society. The Journal of our own Society has contained a number of interesting articles, by Dr. Waddell, dealing with Tibet. One fasciculus of the 'Pag-sam Thi Sin,' edited by Babu Sarat Chandra Das, and one of the 'Avadana Kalpalata,' edited by that gentleman and Pandit Hari Mohana Vidyabhushana, have appeared in the Bibliotheca Indica."

REPORTS OF SOCIETIES.

BRITISH SCHOOL AT ATHENS.—(Annual Meeting, Wednesday, July 12.)

THE RIGHT HON. JAMES BRYCE in the chair.—The hon. secretary (Mr. George A. Macmillan) read the report of the managing committee for 1893-94, of which the following is a summary:—Though the number of students was rather below the average, and the one piece of excavation undertaken (on the site of Abae) was hardly so fruitful as had been expected, the School had held its own and had attracted more pecuniary support than in any recent session. After a short account of the work of Mr. A. G. Bather, Mr. E. F. Benson, Mr. J. I. Myres, Mr. V. W. Yorke, Mr. D. G. Hogarth, Mr. E. R. Bevan, Mr. Gilbert Davies, and Mr. Arkwright, the report said that the site of Abae, in Phocis, was chosen for excavation after very careful consideration. It was famous for its oracle; and reference was made, not only by Pausanias, but by Herodotus and Sophocles, to the oracle, the fortress, and the temple of Apollo. The indications on the spot seemed full of promise; but after some three weeks' work, carried on in very severe weather, the excavators succeeded only in laying bare the plan of the temenos, with a temple, a pronaos, and a stoa. The whole place must have been sacked; for of sculpture only a few late fragments were discovered, and a few inscriptions, mostly of Roman date. Some bronze bowls of early technique were the only artistic product of much importance. On the adjoining site of Hyampolis some inscriptions were found, but nothing else of consequence. Mr. Bensen had made an encouraging report on the prospects of archaeological discovery at Alexandria, but for this purpose there were not anything like adequate funds. There was, however, an active archaeological society in Alexandria itself, which had already done no small amount of work with very limited resources. Arrangements had happily been made to prolong the services of the director, Mr. Gardner, whose college fellowship and Craven studentship had expired, and who would, in the absence of further aid, have been obliged to resign. But by the efforts of Mr. Egerton, the British Minister at Athens, and others, the committee had been able to re-appoint Mr. Gardner for one year only, at a salary of £500. A special fund was being privately raised to meet the additional expenditure, and most opportunely a grant of £200 had been made to the School by Lord Rosebery from the Royal Bounty Fund. This gift was due to an appeal addressed to her Majesty's Government a year ago, urging the claims of the School to support from the public funds. The relations of the School with the other foreign Schools in Athens and with the Greek archaeological authorities had, as usual, been most friendly. Every facility was given by M. Kavvadias and his colleagues for carrying on the work at Abae; and special mention was due to the courtesy of M. Homolle, in allowing the director of the School to examine at leisure the remarkable discoveries made by the French School at Delphi. The director and students had also had the advantage of following in detail the excavations still being carried on with so much success by Dr. Dörpfeld on various sites in Athens. As already mentioned, the list of donations to the School had been considerably above the average of former years. Mr. Egerton had contributed £20, and had promised £20 more. Through his influence, £25 had been received from the Earl of Durham and £20 from the Dowager Lady Howard de Walden. From a document prepared by Mr.

Egerton, it appears that the French School enjoys an income of more than £3,000, and the German School an income of £2,000. Both these Schools are endowed by their respective Governments; but even the American School, which was of much later foundation, and depended upon the voluntary contributions of various colleges, could command an income of about £1,400 a year. These facts formed in themselves an irresistible argument for enlarging the precarious income of £450, upon which the British School now depended. In the autumn of 1893 the Hellenic Society renewed their annual grant of £100 for another period of three years. The report concluded with an earnest appeal for further funds to enable the School to carry on its work in a manner worthy of the name it bore." Among the subsequent speakers were Mr. Bryce, the Rev. J. E. C. Weldon, Mr. H. H. Asquith, Dr. C. Waldstein, Mr. D. B. Monro, and Mr. Hamilton Lang.

FINE ART.

TWO BOOKS ON ROSSETTI.

Dante Gabriel Rossetti: and the Pre-Raphaelite Movement. By Esther Wood. (Sampson Low.)

Dante Gabriel Rossetti. By F. G. Stephens. "Portfolio" Monograph. (Seeley.)

THESE two studies on Rossetti are welcome, if for no other reason than because their appearance indicates the growth of public interest in the work in two arts of the remarkable man who died twelve years ago. To that small company of friends who stood by his grave at Birchington in February, 1882, it must be difficult to realise that so long a period has elapsed. Most of them, if not all, are still alive. Is there one whose prognostication, as to how Rossetti would stand a decade after his death, has been verified exactly? I recollect the discussion on that occasion. Some thought that Rossetti's reputation as a poet was of a more temporary nature as a painter; a few held the contrary opinion. There was one who was convinced that within ten years the author of "The House of Life" would be known to a few hundred rather than to a few thousand persons; and there was another who maintained that, whether Rossetti's fame as poet grew or waned, his fame as a painter would steadily fall away. "Ten years will suffice to see him dethroned from his leadership; twenty to see his pictures sought only by enthusiasts; and fifty years hence they will have little interest, save as illustrations to his poems."

Neither they who held these exaggerated and contradictory opinions, nor they who frankly confessed absolute uncertainty, foresaw the steadfastness of Rossetti's reputation. But even now it would be difficult to prove that there has been any wide and deep recognition of his work as a painter. There must be hundreds of visitors to the Walker Art Gallery in Liverpool, or to the National Gallery, who take pleasure in "Dante's Dream," or in "Ecce Ancilla Domini": but a surer test is the frequency of reproductions from drawings and paintings by Rossetti which are to be seen in the art-magazines and in art-shops; and in the publication of books so handsome and elaborately illustrated as the two before us. It is surprising, however, to find how much ignorance still prevails. Presumably there are not many who are so wide of the mark as the journalist who, the other day, alluded to Rossetti as "the able disciple of Sir E. Burne-Jones"; but there is a goodly number of those who regard him either as an isolated and eccentric man of genius, as unclassable, almost as incomprehensible, as William Blake; or, on the other hand, who look upon him as simply a not very important member of an insignificant group.

We are still too near the man to estimate aright his influence, direct or indirect. But slowly the conviction is growing that his was one of the most potent creative minds which have influenced the Victorian era. It is easy to understand how the charm and beauty of Tennyson may appeal far less to the readers of 1894 than to those of to-day: or how the major part of the work of Browning may by that time have lost its savour. It may, of course, be otherwise; yet the possibility is one that must occur to many admirers of the two poets. On the other hand, it is difficult to conceive of "The House of Life" being forgotten, or so neglected as to amount to being forgotten. It will never be popular, as, for example, the Idylls of the King is popular. Rossetti will ever be a poet's poet—the Keats of the Victorian epoch. It is possible that "The King's Tragedy" and other noble ballads may lose part at least of the attraction they have for us; but "The House of Life" is based on something far stronger than any literary vogue or temporary taste. Love has its high priests, whom Time cannot dethrone. We still thrill to Catullus'

"Lesbia illa,
Illa Lesbia, quam Catullus unam
Plus quam se atque avos amavit omnes!"

to Heine's "Und als ich so lange, so lange gesäumt"; to the rarefied passion of the "Sonnets from the Portuguese"; to that last sonnet of Keats' hopeless love. Perhaps more than any of these poets Rossetti will always appeal, in one particular way. He is one of the few who have wrought an equal music from body and soul, who in emphasising the one have denied nothing to the other. Above all, he has expressed supremely the sentiment of passion in loss. He is brother to all who out of their long weariness and pain exclaim,

"Ah! dear one, I've been old so long!"

In verbal music Rossetti touched a deeper note than any writer of his age. Since Milton there has been no such volume of sound. The noblest blank verse, the finest passages in "The Cenci" or "Hyperion," in Landor or Wordsworth, do not evoke so sonorous a note as certain of the "House of Life" sonnets. It may be that his supreme distinction lies, as Mr. Walter Pater has said, in "the adding to poetry of fresh poetic material, of a new order of phenomena, in the creation of a new ideal"; but it must not be forgotten that he has taught us a profound and haunting music which no other Victorian poet has rivalled.

When we come to consider what Rossetti accomplished in art, we are met at once by a difficulty unusual in the estimating of a painter's work. Everything from his brush or pencil is so permeated by his poetic imagination that it is difficult to deny the aptness of that criticism which would make his painting secondary to his poetry, if on no other ground than that it is essentially illustrative. It is easy to point to the poem and the picture of "The Blessed Damozel," and to emphasise the incontestable superiority of the poem; but the instance is not a fair one. We must also bear in mind "Sibylla Palmifera": still more, perhaps, "Astarte Syriaca," "Venus Verticordia," "Mnemosyne." These stand alone; and it is a mere accident that they complement, or are themselves complemented by, certain sonnets of great beauty. Still, we are faced with the fact that, in hardly any instance where Rossetti found expression in two arts for the same emotional idea has he equalled with the brush what he achieved with the pen. If ever a man delivered himself of his message in one short poem, it is in the sonnet, "Sibylla Palmifera." How much of Rossetti is there, comparatively, in the painting of the same name? Beautiful as are "Proserpina" and "Astarte Syriaca," there must be many who love Rossetti's work in both arts who could not hesitate as to whether, in each instance, he has best expressed himself in verse or paint. Even paintings so distinctively decorative as "The Sea Spell," "Fiammetta," and "The Day Dream," seem to illustrate the sonnets better than the sonnets illustrate them. The painting can give "Her lute hangs shadowed in the apple tree, While flashing fingers weave the sweet strung spell

Between its chords;"

but it cannot give also that exquisite completion,

"And as the wild notes awell,
The sea-bird for those branches leaves the sea."
The picture can suggest—

"But to what sound her listening ear stoops she?" but in the poem there is a more profound appeal—

"What netherworld gulf-whispers doth she hear,
In answering echoes from what planisphere,
Along the wind, along the estuary?"

Even in so dramatic a subject as "Found," there is nothing that is not conveyed in the sonnet written for the picture. Nay, is there anything in the painting to surpass the exquisiteness of the verbal delineation: how, as the "lamps across the bridge turn pale

In London's smokeless resurrection-light,
Dark breaks to dawn."

It is only now and again that Rossetti expressed in a picture or a design what he could not have as well expressed in verse: as in the drawing of "Mary Magdalene at the Door of Simon the Pharisee," or in "How They Met Themselves"—or again, though in a less degree, in "Hesperia Rosa" or "The Sphinx."

In painting, this was Rossetti's triumph, to have given to the world a new type, or rather the several variations of a new type, and to have raised the impersonation of abstractions to a height which surpassed everything since Dürer's "Melancholia." Of course, the type of face, which is broadly called Rossetian, existed in this country before Rossetti was born, and at this day may be seen so frequently as to justify one in saying that it is native. Strangely, it is mainly, though of course not exclusively, metropolitan: and again, strangely, it is to be discerned far oftener in central or eastern London than in the West End. Again, Lionardo in "Monna Lisa," Albrecht Dürer in "Melancholia," many minds in divers ways, have embodied in a human figure what would otherwise be incommunicable by pictorial art; but in "Astarte Syriaca," "Mnemosyne," "Proserpina," "Pandora," "Silence," Rossetti achieved what no man before him has done with like intensity and completeness.

Of the two volumes before us, one of which deals wholly, and the other largely, with Rossetti as a painter, that of Mr. F. G. Stephens is the more thorough, while that of Mrs. Wood is of more interest to the general reader. While both are valuable, neither can be called indispensable. All of actual importance that is said or chronicled in either has been said or chronicled already.

Both writers are commendably accurate in all essential details. Naturally, in the case of so inconsequent and variable a man as Rossetti, there are dates and designations recorded by Mr. Stephens which are open to question; but only a few persons exist to whom literal exactitude in this respect can be important. But we must take leave to doubt Mr. Stephens's conjecture that the beautiful poem called "The Portrait" was inspired by Miss Alice Wilding, a model for many of Rossetti's paintings between 1864 and 1874.

Mr. Stephens is able to reveal one or two episodes of Rossetti's early life which are interesting. Here and there, too, he has introduced a few lines or passages which the close student of Rossetti will do well to note. For the rest, there is little in his monograph which is not to be found in the concise and admirably ordered art-record which we owe to the conscientious pen and industry of Mr. W. M. Rossetti.

To be frank, the chief value of both books is in their wealth of illustration. The owner of them may fairly claim to possess a representative collection of Rossetti's paintings and drawings in excellent reproductions. We have his first complete design, "Genevieve," and one of his earliest pictures, "Ecce Ancilla Domini"; his mature powers are indicated by designs such as "How They Met Themselves" and "The Sphinx," "Lancelot in the Chamber of Guenever," and "Dr. Johnson at the Mitre"; or in compositions such as "Venus Verticordia," "Proserpina," "Aurea Catena," and "Our Lady of Pity."

There is so much that is readable in Mrs. Wood's book that it may seem ungracious not to speak more highly in its favour. If it tells nothing that is new to those already familiar with the subject, it is at least the most comprehensive account of the Pre-Raphaelite movement that has yet been put together. It is a mosaic of other people's opinions, skilfully made by one who is sympathetic as well as judicious. Mr. Hall Caine, Mr. Joseph Knight, Mr. Myers, and others, have been largely drawn upon; but neither they nor any other concerned will grudge Mrs. Wood her industrious appropriation of material, partly because that material is now for the most part common property, but mainly because she has made such good use of it. There are many passages which show that she can think for herself, and some of these are both significant and admirably expressed.

Both books should, therefore, be welcomed. In particular, Mrs. Wood's will certainly help many people, not only to a better understanding of the life-work of the poet and painter, but also of that vast intellectual movement, of which Pre-Raphaelitism was only an eddy, which owed its stimulus to the French Revolution, and is still sweeping us onward, though to new seas and alien shores.

WILLIAM SHARP.

NOTES ON ART AND ARCHAEOLOGY.

MESSRS. TURNER & Co. opened on Wednesday last at 104, New Bond-street an exhibition of fine-art porcelain.

AN exhibition of the works of students in the South Kensington Schools of Art has just been opened in the Museum.

MR. WALLIS, the director of the Nottingham Art Gallery, is now arranging an autumn exhibition in the Castle Museum Galleries of a collection of the works of the different schools of painters who have made Coruwall their place of work. This will be the first time, we believe, that a representative collection of these schools has been exhibited.

WE quote the following, with regard to the coin-collection, from the annual report of the curators of the Bodleian Library:

"A very important gift was received from Mr. E. L. Hussey, who presented all those of his gold and silver British coins of which the Bodleian did not already possess good specimens. These were 95 in number, ranging from William I. to Victoria. He also gave a gold coin of Philip V. of Spain, a gold coin of John V. of Portugal, and 5 English silver tokens, together with all his English brass or copper tokens not already represented in the Bodleian. A collection of 37 assignats of the French Revolution were presented by the Misses Swann.

"23 Gaulish Æs. and a few others were bought at auction for £1 4s. and 62 Anglo-Saxon stycas for £2 8s. The guinea of 1785 and the two-pound piece of 1823 were purchased privately. And the Mint supplied at cost price the imperial and colonial coins struck by it in 1891 and 1892.

"Mr. Oman brought almost to completion his catalogue of the Anglo-Saxon coins. The Librarian arranged provisionally for consultation all the unarranged English coins from William I. to Philip and Mary, 702 in number, dividing them under each reign, so far as was practicable, by towns and moneys as well as by value. With the help of Mr. Hutt, he sorted 252 coins of Elizabeth to Charles I., for arrangement in 1894. And under his direction Mr. Hutt arranged by date and value 1133 unarranged coins from the Commonwealth to George III."

MAJOR TEMPLE has reprinted from the Indian Antiquary (London: Luzac) his illustrated paper, entitled "Notes on Antiquities in Ramannadesa," of which some mention has already been made in THE ACADEMY. It may be as well to explain that Ramannadesa (= the country of Rama) is the ancient name for the coast of Burma which was occupied by the Talaings; and that Major Temple is here dealing primarily with only a small portion of it, namely, the river caves in the immediate neighbourhood of Maulmaia. These caves teem with Buddhistic sculptures of various dates, which are copiously illustrated here in no less than fifteen photographic plates. Unfortunately, the inscriptions are few in number, and apparently of no great antiquity or historical importance. Not only is this paper of Major Temple's the most elaborate study of Burmese archaeology with which we are acquainted, but he has made it still more valuable by the discussion of incidental matters—such as the history of the glazed ware known as Martaban or Pegu jars; and the prevalence of Northern Buddhism in its Tantrik forms as far south as Thaton. Major Temple even goes so far as to hint that Burma may possibly have received its religion, not from Ceylon, but from Bengal.

MR. JOHN MURRAY has in the press a Handbook of Ancient Roman Marbles, compiled by the Rev. H. W. Pullen, whom some will perhaps recognise as the author of The Fight at Dame Europa's School—a book in its time nearly as famous as The Battle of Dorking. It will consist of a history and description of all ancient columns and surface marbles still existing in Rome, with a list of the buildings in which they are found. Mr. Pullen, we may add, has recently revised the Handbooks for Northern, Central, and Southern Italy, and also for Rome.

An Atlas of Ancient Egypt. Special Publication of the Egypt Exploration Fund. (Kegan Paul & Co.) We hope this handy and very complete little volume will have a large sale, particularly among schoolmasters and clergymen. It will serve to dispel many of the false notions about Egypt, both modern and ancient, some of which have had disastrous practical consequences. The maps are numerous and unreservedly excellent. They include maps of ancient and modern Egypt and the Soudan, as well as one to illustrate M. Naville's discoveries in the land of Goshen. What gives especial value to the Atlas is the letterpress which accompanies it. This has been written by one of the best and most accurate of English Egyptologists, and contains in a small space all that is most necessary to know about the geography and history of Ancient Egypt. A summary is added of "Mr. Naville's geographical discoveries relating to the sojourn of the Israelites in Egypt and to the route of the Exodus." There is, further, a list of Egyptian place-names mentioned in the Bible, as well as an account of the chief authorities on Egyptian geography and history. The names of the nomes are given in hieroglyphics, and the indices at the end of the volume leave nothing to be desired. The Egypt Exploration Fund is to be congratulated on the successful completion of a very useful piece of work.

THE STAGE.

STAGE NOTES.

THE theatrical season—so barren of interest as regards new pieces—is at an end, and we have almost nothing to congratulate ourselves upon except the continued excellence of certain performers. "Sarah" remains great, though the latest pieces she has "created" have been not quite worthy of her—inferior not alone to the masterpieces of old tragedy or modern comedy in which her fame was acquired, but likewise, in some respects at least, to "La Tosca," which is said, with all its horrors, to be the piece of her predilection. Since the star of Eleonora Duse has for the time being set, the star of Réjane has been in the ascendant; and, in regard to this skilled artist and so engaging personality, it must be said that "Madame Sans Gêne" has possessed the advantage of summarising the whole of her talent. M. Sardou, though far from being an original thinker or an exquisite writer, is the most dexterous of all possible measurers of the ability of an actor or actress; and just as he fitted Sarah Bernhardt with "La Tosca," so he fitted Mme. Réjane with "Madame Sans Gêne." And Réjane, in London as in Paris, with her freedom and her style, her momentary distinction, her momentary abandonment, has had her unquestioned triumph. In London, though Mr. Irving has appeared in no new part, he has not, we are glad to say, rested satisfied with the revival of "Faust." Several performances of "Becket" and one of "The Merchant of Venice" have reminded the playgoer not only of Mr. Irving's versatility, but of his singular and undisputed mastery of his particular art. We have heard actors who would fain be his rivals, and jealous little actresses whom it has not been convenient to him to engage, say of him—as if they summed up the whole of the situation in the word—that he is "a great stage-manager." Mr. Irving is that, beyond doubt; but intelligent, unprejudiced opinion has long declared that, whatever may be his "mannerisms," he is nothing less than a great actor besides. At the Haymarket we have seen the marked success of "A Bunch of Violets," and, as Mr. Tree was justified in saying in his parting speech, some distinct rise in the dramatic abilities of Mrs. Tree. The Comedy has been the scene of Mr. Willard's welcome return, and he has shown us the spontaneity of his humour, and not only reminded us of the intensity of his pathos.

MUSIC.

MUSIC PUBLICATIONS.

Letters of Franz Liszt. Collected and edited by La Mara, translated by Constance Bache. In 2 vols. (Grevel.)

As in the correspondence between Wagner and Liszt, so again here we have the writer quite au naturel: most of the letters were evidently penned on the spur of the moment, and without any thought of their falling into the hands of any other persons than those to whom they were addressed. Of course there are allusions to men and events which, in the course of years, have lost their point; but, reading between the lines, we notice many passages of great interest. A few of these may be selected, to tempt our readers to search the volumes for themselves.

The earliest letter, addressed to Czerny, bears date December 23, 1828; while the last, to the master's favourite pupil, Sophie Mentor, was written only a few weeks before his death, July 31, 1886. In the first letter, Liszt reproaches himself for having forgotten "that good master to whom I owe both my talent and success." Liszt was, in the main, a sincere man, and yet at times his language is certainly hyperbolic. The early letters remind one forcibly of the marked changes that have taken place in musical art during the past half century. We read of Czerny's now forgotten concertos, which are "making a stir in Paris"; of Pixis, Ebner and Kalkbrenner, and other worthies, now mere names. In a letter to Schumann in 1838, Liszt questions whether Henselt "is anything but a distinguished mediocrity." Forty years later, however, Henselt's works are, for him, "the noblest jewels of art." Liszt took a great delight in Schumann's works, and, indeed, in this same letter he says:—"To speak frankly and freely, it is absolutely only Chopin's compositions and yours that have a powerful interest for me." There are several interesting references to Beethoven. In a letter written to W. Lenz, that enthusiastic admirer of the Bonn master, he proposes, not the generally adopted division of the composer's art-work into three styles, but into two categories: one in which thought is governed by traditional form; the other in which thought determines form. And thus, as he justly observes, "we arrive in a direct line at those incessant problems of authority and liberty." And again in a letter to the Intendant of the Weimar Court Theatre, written in 1855, he explains why he has not put a Beethoven Symphony into the programme which forms the subject of the letter. He is quite willing to "respect, admire and study the illustrious dead, but why not also sometimes live with the living?" He does not wish Weimar to follow the example of Paris, London, Leipzig, Berlin, and a hundred other cities, and stop at Beethoven, "to whom," as he pointedly remarks, "while he was living, they much preferred Haydn and Mozart." These words were written nearly forty years ago, and yet there are musicians still stopping at Beethoven: nay, some stopping at the works of the so-called second period. Liszt's admiration for Berlioz is well known. In addressing Wilhelm Fischer, Wagner's faithful friend, he refers to "Benvenuto Cellini" as, with exception of the Wagner operas, "the most important, most original, musico-dramatic work of art which the last twenty years have to show." This was written in 1854, at which period the latest Wagner opera was "Lohengrin." And having mentioned Schumann and Berlioz, let us quote one sentence from a Roman letter of 1868. Liszt says:—"Neither Schumann nor Berlioz could rest satisfied at seeing the steady advance of Wagner's works. Both of them suffered from a suppressed enthusiasm for the 'music of the future.'" This we consider a very happy expression. Writers are apt to speak of the lack of appreciation of a great composer for his illustrious contemporaries. It seems, at any rate in many cases, far more sensible to ascribe this coolness, not to want of understanding, but to "suppressed enthusiasm."

There is no letter from Liszt to Mendelssohn; and we are not aware that the two ever corresponded with each other. In a recently published brochure, Liszt is quoted as having said that Mendelssohn always disliked him; but a reference to "Mendelssohn, at whose recommendation you formerly published my pianoforte scores of the Pastoral and C minor Symphonies" certainly does not show ill-feeling on either side. Liszt often speaks of his own compositions, and of the hostile attitude of the press. "It stands clearly written," he says in a letter to Walter Bache, "a hundred times over, that I cannot compose." It pained, but did not discourage him. In the letter just quoted, and in others, he announces his intention to go on quietly writing in his own way. It surely must have been some malicious criticism which caused him to write to Louis Köhler about "all the cackle of goose-quills." If the footnote on page 427 of vol. i. be correct, and we have no reason to doubt it, there were men who condemned him unjustly. It appears that a Liszt pianoforte piece was announced on a programme of a concert given by Boskowitz in 1860. The latter, however, substituted the "Jagdlied" from Schumann's "Waldscenen," but the correspondent of the Deutsche Musikzeitung carped "at the supposed Liszt composition." One word about Schubert, whom Liszt idolised. To Prof. Lebert he writes of him, in his most exuberant style:—

"O never-resting, ever-welling genius, full of tenderness! O my cherished Hero of the Heaven of Youth! Harmony, freshness, power, grace, dreamings, passion, seethings, tears, and flames pour forth from the depths and heights of thy soul, and thou makest us almost forget the greatness of thine excellence in the fascination of thy spirit."

But his enthusiasm did not prevent him from judging, and in that same letter he says: "H. [Schubert] was too immoderately productive, wrote incessantly, mixing insignificant with important things, grand things with mediocre work." And there is one other passage in this letter that we must quote. Liszt, referring to his edition of Schubert's pianoforte works, says:—

"In the Sonatas you will find some various readings, which appear to me tolerably appropriate. Several passages, and the whole of the conclusion of the C major Fantasia, I have re-written in modern pianoforte form, and I flatter myself that Schubert would not be displeased with it."

Liszt's tamperings with classical texts cannot always be justified; though the above extract shows that it was not the vanity of a virtuoso which prompted him, but a strong desire to present the "old masters" in what seemed to him the best light.

The translation of the letters by Miss Bache is excellent. Though Liszt, as a letter-writer, is not so formidable as Wagner, still, at times, he must have given the translator considerable trouble. There is, also, an index most useful for reference. The volumes contain several letters from Liszt to the late Walter Bache, brother of the translator. Bache worshipped his master and friend, and we find Liszt constantly thanking him for his devoted efforts to make known his compositions. Here is a good specimen:—

"Truly, dear Bache, you are a wonder-working friend. Your persevering trouble, exertions, expenditure of time and money for the production of my bitterly-criticised compositions in London during the past fifteen years, are among the most uncommon occurrences in the annals of art."

These Liszt Letters are a welcome addition to musical literature. At some future day we may hope for a further instalment, for there must be still very many unpublished.

J. S. SHEDLOCK.

MUSIC NOTES.

LAST Saturday was produced the last novelty of the season at Covent Garden, Mr. Emil Bach's "The Lady of Longford," the libretto of which was written by Sir Augustus Harris, and Mr. Frederic E. Weatherly. There are three things to praise in this opera: the brevity and directness of the book, the modern character of the music, and the improvement which it shows over Mr. Bach's first work of the kind. Short libretti are now the fashion, and if we praise the brevity of the one in question, it is because it shows a fault in the right direction; but the interest of the story is naturally of a slender kind. Then again, the music is written on Wagner lines, but Mr. Bach follows the master longo intervallo. Mr. Bach aims high by nature; by instinct, however, he can scarcely lay claim to strong dramatic gifts. Of course it is right to note progress in a composer, yet, after all, a critic must compare, and it must be admitted that "The Lady of Longford" is the least interesting of the novelties this season. Mr. Cowen's "Signa" was not the best, but in it there was greater interest, and workmanship of a far better kind. On Saturday evening Mme. Eames played the part of the Countess of Longford with much dignity. MM. Alvarez and M. E. de Reszke were excellent, the one as the Earl of Longford, the other as the Roundhead Colonel. Mr. Mancinelli conducted with great spirit. The authors and composer were called before the curtain.

NEW WORK BY DR. MACLAREN.
Crown 8vo, cloth boards, price 5s., post free.

THE WEARIED CHRIST, and other
Sermons. By Rev. ALEXANDER MACLAREN, D.D.

London: ALEXANDER & SHEPHEARD, Fumival Street, E.C.

MACMILLAN & CO.'S THREE-AND-SIXPENNY SERIES.

Crown 8vo, 3s. 6d. each volume.

By F. MARION CRAWFORD.

MR. ISAACS: a Tale of Modern India.
Portrait of Author.
DR. CLAUDIUS: a True Story.
A ROMAN SINGER.
ZOROASTER.
MARZIO'S CRUCIFIX.
A TALE of a LONELY PARISH.
PAUL PATOFF.

WITH the IMMORTALS.
GREIFENSTEIN.
SANT' ILARIO.
A CIGARETTE-MAKER'S
ROMANCE.
KHALED.
THE THREE FATES.
THE WITCH of PRAGUE.

By MRS. OLIPHANT.

A BELEAGUERED CITY.
JOYCE.
NEIGHBOURS on the GREEN.
KIRSTEEN.
HESTER.
SIR TOM.
A SON of the SOIL.
A COUNTRY GENTLEMAN and his FAMILY.
THE CURATE in CHARGE.

HE THAT WILL NOT WHEN HE MAY.
THE RAILWAY MAN and his CHILDREN.
THE MARRIAGE of ELINOR.
THE HEIR PRESUMPTIVE and the HEIR APPARENT.
THE SECOND SON.
THE WIZARD'S SON.
YOUNG MUSGRAVE.

LADY WILLIAM.

By CHARLOTTE M. YONGE.

THE HEIR of REDCLIFFE.
HEARTSEASE.
HOPE and FEARS.
DYNEVOR TERRACE.
THE DAISY CHAIN.
THE TRIAL.
PILLARS of the HOUSE. Vol. I.
PILLARS of the HOUSE. Vol. II.
THE YOUNG STEPMOTHER.
CLEVER WOMAN of the FAMILY.
THE THREE BRIDES.
MY YOUNG ALCIDES.
THE CAGED LION.
DOVE in the EAGLE'S NEST.
THE CHAPLET of PEARLS.
LADY HESTER, and the DANVERS
PAPERS.
MAGNUM BONUM.
LOVE and LIFE.
UNKNOWN to HISTORY.

STRAY PEARLS.
THE ARMOURER'S 'PRENTICES.
THE TWO SIDES of the SHIELD.
NUTTIE'S FATHER.
SCENES and CHARACTERS.
CHANTRY HOUSE.
A MODERN TELEMACHUS.
BYE WORDS.
BEECHCROFT at ROCKSTONE.
MORE BYWORDS.
A REPUTED CHANGELING.
THE LITTLE DUKE.
THE LANCES of LYNWOOD.
THE PRINCE and the PAGE.
P'S and Q'S, and LITTLE LUCY'S
WONDERFUL GLOBE.
TWO PENNILESS PRINCESSES.
THAT STICK.
AN OLD WOMAN'S OUTLOOK.
GRISLY GRISELL.

By MRS. CRAIK.

(The Author of "JOHN HALIFAX, GENTLEMAN.")

OLIVE. With Illustrations by
G. BOWERS.
THE OGILVIES. With Illustrations.
AGATHA'S HUSBAND. With Illustrations.
HEAD of the FAMILY. With Illustrations.
TWO MARRIAGES.

THE LAUREL BUSH.
MY MOTHER and I. With Illustrations.
MISS TOMMY: a Mediæval Romance.
Illustrated.
KING ARTHUR: Not a Love
Story.
SERMONS OUT of CHURCH.

By ROLF BOLDREWOOD.

ROBBERY UNDER ARMS.
THE SQUATTER'S DREAM.
A COLONIAL REFORMER.

THE MINER'S RIGHT.
A SYDNEY-SIDE SAXON.
NEVERMORE.

By J. H. SHORTHOUSE.

JOHN INGLESANT.
SIR PERCIVAL.
THE LITTLE SCHOOLMASTER
MARK.

THE COUNTESS EVE.
A TEACHER of the VIOLIN.
BLANCHE, LADY FALAISE.

By CHARLES DICKENS.

THE PICKWICK PAPERS.
NICHOLAS NICKLEBY.
THE OLD CURIOSITY SHOP.
DOMBEY and SON.
SKETCHES by BOZ.
AMERICAN NOTES and PICTURES from ITALY.

LETTERS of CHARLES DICKENS.
OLIVER TWIST.
MARTIN CHUZZLEWIT.
BARNABY RUDGE.
CHRISTMAS BOOKS.
DAVID COPPERFIELD.

By THOMAS HUGHES.

TOM BROWN'S SCHOOL DAYS. With Illustrations by A. Hughes and S. P.
Hall.
TOM BROWN at OXFORD. With Illustrations by S. P. Hall.
THE SCOURING of the WHITE HORSE, and The ASHEN FAGGOT. With Illustrations by Richard Doyle.

By CHARLES KINGSLEY.

WESTWARD HO! — HYPATIA — YEAST — ALTON LOCKE — TWO YEARS AGO — HEReward . the WAKE — POEMS — The HEROES —
The WATER BABIES — MADAM
HOW and LADY WHY — AT LAST
— PROSE IDYLLS — PLAYS and PURITANS, &c. — The ROMAN and the TEUTON — SANITARY and SOCIAL LECTURES and ESSAYS — HISTORICAL LECTURES and ESSAYS — SCIENTIFIC LECTURES and ESSAYS — LITERARY and GENERAL LECTURES.

THE HERMITS — GLAUCUS: or, The Wonders of the Seashore, with Coloured Illustrations — VILLAGE and TOWN and COUNTRY SERMONS — The WATER of LIFE and other SER-MONS — SERMONS on NATIONAL
SUBJECTS, and The KING of the EARTH — SERMONS for the TIMES
— GOOD NEWS of GOD — The GOSPEL of the PEN TATEUCH and DAVID — DISCIPLINE, and other
SERMONS — WESTMINSTER SER-MONS — ALL SAINTS' DAY, and other SERMONS.

By FREDERICK DENISON MAURICE.

SERMONS PREACHED in LINCOLN'S INN CHAPEL. In 6 volumes.
CHRISTMAS DAY, and other SER-MONS.
THEOLOGICAL ESSAYS.
PROPHETS and KINGS.
PATRIARCHS and LAWGIVERS.
THE GOSPEL of the KINGDOM of HEAVEN.
GOSPEL of ST. JOHN

EPISTLES of ST. JOHN.
LECTURES on the APOCALYPSE.
FRIENDSHIP of BOOKS.
SOCIAL MORALITY.
PRAYER-BOOK and LORD'S
PRAYER.
The DOCTRINE of SACRIFICE.
ACTS of the APOSTLES.

By ARCHDEACON FARRAR.

SEEKERS AFTER GOD.
ETERNAL HOPE.
THE FALL of MAN.
THE WITNESS of HISTORY to CHRIST.
THE SILENCE and VOICES of GOD.

IN THE DAY of THY YOUTH.
SAINTLY WORKERS.
EPHATHA.
MERCY and JUDGMENT.
SERMONS and ADDRESSES DE-LIVERED in AMERICA.

By VARIOUS AUTHORS.

SIR S. W. BAKER.—TRUE TALES for my GRANDSONS.
ROSE BLENNERHASSETT and LUCY SLEEMAN.—ADVENTURES in MASHONALAND.
FRANCES HODGSON BURNETT.—LOUISIANA; and THAT LASS O' LOWRIE'S.
HUGH CONWAY.—LIVING or DEAD?—A FAMILY AFFAIR.
SIR H. CUNNINGHAM.—THE CECULEANS—THE HERIOTS—
WHEAT and TAKES.
MARY A. DICKENS.—A MERE CYPHER.
SIR MORTIMER DURAND, K.C.I.E.—HELEN TREVERYAN.
LANOE FALCONER.—CECILIA DE NOEL
ARCHIBALD FORBES.—BARRACKS, BIVOUACS, and BATTLES—
SOUVENIRS of some CONTINENTS.
W. W. FOWLER.—TALES of the BIRDS—A YEAR with the BIRDS.
REV. J. GILMORE.—STORM WARRIORS.
THOMAS HARDY.—THE WOODLANDERS—WESEX TALES.
BRET HARTE.—CRESSY—THE HERITAGE of DEDLOW MARSH—A FIRST FAMILY of TASAJARA.
HENRY JAMES.—A LONDON LIFE—THE ASPERN PAPERS—THE TRAGIC MUSE.
ANNIE KEARY.—CASTLE DALY—YORK and a LANCASTER ROSE—JANET'S HOME—OLDBURY—A DOUBTING HEART.
P. KENNEDY.—LEGENDARY FICTIONS of the IRISH CELTS.
HENRY KINGSLEY.—TALES of OLD TRAVEL.
MARGARET LEE.—FAITHFUL and UNFAITHFUL.
AMY LEVY.—REUBEN SACHS.
S. R. LYSAGHT.—THE MARPLOT.
LORD LYTON.—THE RING of AMASIS.
M. MCLENNAN.—MUCKLE JOCK, and Other Stories.
LUCAS MALET.—MRS. LORIMER.
GUSTAVE MASSON.—A FRENCH DICTIONARY.
A. B. MITFORD.—TALES of OLD JAPAN.
D. CHRISTIE MURRAY.—AUNT RACHEL — JOHN VALE'S
GUARDIAN—SCHWARTZ—THE WEAKER VESSEL.
C. MURRAY and H. HERMAN.—HE FELL AMONG THIEVES.
MAJOR G. PARRY.—THE STORY of DICK.
W. C. RHOADES.—JOHN TREVENICK.
W. CLARK RUSSELL.—MAROONED—A STRANGE ELOPEMENT.
FLORA A. STEEL.—MISS STUART'S LEGACY.
MARCHESA THEODOLI.—UNDER PRESSURE.
TIMES SUMMARIES.—BIOGRAPHIES of EMINENT PERSONS. In 4 Vols.
TIMES ANNUAL SUMMARIES. In 2 Vols.
MRS. HUMPHRY WARD.—MISS BRETHERTON.
MONTAGU WILLIAMS, Q.C.—LEAVES of a LIFE—LATER LEAVES—
ROUND LONDON: Down East, and Up West—HOGAN, M.P.—TIM—
THE NEW ANTIGONE.

MACMILLAN & CO., LONDON.

THE ACADEMY.

A WEEKLY REVIEW OF LITERATURE, SCIENCE, AND ART.

No. 1161.
[New Issue.]

SATURDAY, AUGUST 4, 1894.

PRICE 3d.
[Registered as a Newspaper.]

TABLE OF CONTENTS

PAGE

| | |
|--|----|
| FIRTH'S EDITION OF LUDLOW'S MEMOIRS, by R. DUNLOP | 79 |
| HUTTON'S CRITICISMS ON CONTEMPORARY THINKERS, by A. W. BENN | 80 |
| MISS WARDROP'S GEORGIAN FOLK TALES, by W. R. MORFILL | 82 |
| CAPT. HAYES' AMONG MEN AND HORSES, by J. I. MINCHIN | 82 |
| NEW NOVELS BY J. A. NORRIS | 83 |
| CURRENT LITERATURE | 84 |
| NOTES AND NEWS | 85 |
| ORIGINAL VERSE: "THE INFINITE," by SAMUEL WADSWORTH | 86 |
| MACAZINES AND REVIEWS | 86 |
| SELECTED FOREIGN BOOKS | 86 |
| CORRESPONDENCE— | |
| Group C and the Three Priests in the "Canterbury Tales," by Dr. F. J. Fumivall; "Dinner," II, by Dr. F. Chance | 88 |
| APPOINTMENTS FOR NEXT WEEK | 88 |
| M. BONAFANT ON PROPERTIES, by Prof. R. ELLIS | 88 |
| VERNAACULAR LITERATURE IN INDIA | 89 |
| PHILOLOGY NOTES | 90 |
| ART BOOKS | 90 |
| THE PROPOSED DAM AT ASSOUAN | 90 |
| NOTES ON ART AND ARCHAEOLOGY | 90 |
| MUSIC PUBLICATIONS, by J. S. SHEDLOCK | 91 |

TYPE-WRITING.

AUTHORS, PUBLISHERS, &c.—Scientific, Literary, and Medical MSS. carefully and promptly typewritten by RAYNE & CO., 40, North Street, Strand, W.C. Private room for dictation. Highest references. Translations.

THE FLEET STREET TYPEWRITERS
115, FLEET STREET, E.C.
Lowest Charges. Highest Speed.
Every kind of Typewriting Work Done.
Price List—115, Fleet Street, London.

TYPE-WRITERS.—SECOND-HAND
MACHINES, equal to new. FOR SALE, EXCHANGE, or LENT on HIRE. Machines sold by Instalments on Terms to suit purchasers. Use of Machines taught free to hirers or purchasers. Remingtons, Yosts, Hammonds, Caligraph, Barlocks, Fitch, &c., from £25. All supplied with accuracy and despatch at lowest rates. Highest references. Illustrated Catalogue free.—N. TAYLOR, Manager, National Type-Writer Exchange, 74, Chancery Lane, London (Holborn end).

CATALOGUES

FOREIGN BOOKS AND PERIODICALS
promptly supplied on moderate terms.
CATALOGUES on application.
DULAU & CO., 37, SOHO SQUARE.

BAEDEKER'S & BADDELEY'S
TOURISTS' GUIDE BOOKS.
New fully detailed Catalogue sent post free on application.
DULAU & CO., 37, SOHO SQUARE, LONDON, W.

FOREIGN BOOKS AT FOREIGN PRICES.

WILLIAMS & NORGATE,
Importers of Foreign Books,
14, HENRIETTA STREET, COVENT GARDEN,
AND
20, SOUTH FREDERICK STREET, EDINBURGH.
CATALOGUES post free on application.

AGENCY FOR AMERICAN BOOKS.

G. P. PUTNAM'S SONS, PUBLISHERS
and BOOKSELLERS, of 27 and 29 West 23rd Street, New York, and 24, BEDFORD STREET, LONDON, W.C. (direct to call the attention of the READING PUBLIC to the excellent facilities presented by their Branch House in London for filling, on the most favorable terms, orders for their own STANDARD PUBLICATIONS, and for ALL AMERICAN BOOKS AND PERIODICALS.—CATALOGUES sent on application.

ORIENTAL WORKS.

MESSRS. LUZAC & CO. have a large stock of ORIENTAL WORKS, and can supply them, if not in stock, quickly and at moderate prices.

LUZAC & CO.'S ORIENTAL LIST.

Containing Notes and News on, and a Biographical List of, all new Publications on Africa and the East. Published Monthly. Annual Subscription (post free), 3s.

*The ACADEMY, Feb. 4, 1893, writes: "Messrs. Luzac & Co.'s Oriental List...deserves the support of Oriental students.... It gives, under the heading of 'Notes and News,' details about important Oriental works, which are both more full and more careful than anything of the sort to be found elsewhere."

Vol. V., No. VII. (July, 1894), just out. A few copies of Vols. I. to IV. are still to be had (half-bound, with full Author's Index, &c.) at 5s. net each volume.

Lists and Catalogues of Oriental Works to be had on application.
LUZAC & CO., Publishers to the India Office, 46, Great Russell Street (opposite the British Museum), London, W.C.

For Advertisements of Schools, Colleges, &c., see page 91.

CENTRAL SCHOOL of FOREIGN

TONGUES.

Directors—HOWARD SWAN and VICTOR BÉTIS.
Howard House, Arundel Street, Temple, London.
A CLASSES OF ORAL FRENCH on the "Series Method" DAILY during AUGUST for Teachers visiting London. Fee for the Month, Three Guineas.

A HOLIDAY TRAINING COURSE FOR TEACHERS on the "Series Method" will be held SEPTEMBER 3 to 14. Mornings: Lectures and Demonstrations, 10 to 12.30 a.m. Afternoons: Personal Practice, passing through the Elementary Series, Simple and Advanced Grammar, Study of Literature on the Method (with Attendance at School Classes in French, German, or other Languages). Fee, Three Guineas.

FOREIGN LANGUAGE CLASSES (ORAL) TWICE A WEEK—French, German, Russian, and Greek—will commence in SEPTEMBER. Also Advanced Courses on Modern French and German Authors, and Study of Selected Passages conducted in the Foreign Language. Fee, Twenty-five Shillings per Month (Sixteen Hours).

CLASSES for the STUDY of LITERATURE (English and Foreign) and the Art of Literary Composition and Style, commence in OCTOBER.

The following Course of Lectures will be given on WEDNESDAYS, at 7.30 p.m., commencing OCTOBER 4:—

By HOWARD SWAN.

1. Mental Visualization and Literary Expression—Colloquial and Literary Language, Essentials and Differences.
2. Shakespeare's Sonnets and the Art of Poetry as therein displayed.
3. The Literary Process of Shelley and Browning and Shakespeare compared.

By VICTOR BÉTIS (in French).

4. Study of Victor Hugo, with Extracts.
5. Modern French Short Stories (Selected).
6. The Modern Literary Movement in France.
7. Schiller and Goethe, with Extracts (in German).

By WILLIAM C. WARD.

8. The Italian Influence on Elizabethan and Jacobean Poetry.
9. The Cambridge Platonists.
10. The Drama of the Restoration.
11. The Queen Anne Poets.
12. The Eighteenth Century Novelists.

Tickets 4s. each. Reduction for the Course.

A HISTORY and GEOGRAPHY COURSE will be begun on SEPTEMBER 17 for the connected teaching of ENGLISH HISTORY and GEOGRAPHY on the Imaginative and Comparative Method, by A. W. ANDREWS, B.A., Felt. Hist. Soc.

The principle in History will be to teach the Pupils a series of clear mental pictures of the life of the people at each epoch, grouped around striking events or personalities, and compared with present times. Special attention will be paid to Economic History, the growth of the navy and towns, and to the literature, geography, and all that bears on the life of the people. Applications for the History and Geography Course to be made to A. W. ANDREWS, B.A.

For the other Courses apply to the SECRETARY, Central School, Howard House, Arundel Street, Strand, W.C.

CITY of BIRMINGHAM MUNICIPAL TECHNICAL SCHOOL.

The Corporation of Birmingham require the services of a PRINCIPAL, to undertake the General Control of the Day and Evening Teaching in the New School (now in course of erection). The salary has been fixed at £500 per annum, and the Principal will be required to enter upon his duties on the 1st January next, and to devote his whole time to the appointment, under the direction of the Technical School Committee.

Applications, accompanied by copies of testimonials, must be sent on or before the 22nd September next, to the undersigned, from whom further particulars can be obtained on application being made by letter.

GEORGE MELLOR, Secretary Municipal Technical School, Paradise Street, Birmingham.

LOWE (CHARLES) New Street, Birmingham

OFFERS Abbot's Scott's Novels, splendid set in original cloth, 47—"Punch," handsome set, vol. 1 to vol. 80, in years, £12—"Illustrated London News," vol. 1 to 70. Price as new, original cloth, 8s. 10s., cost £70—Brewer's Beauties of England and Wales, 25 vols., handsome set, 4s. 10s., cost £30—Caselli's National Library, 100 vols., cloth gilt, 25s.—Caselli's Old and New London, complete in Parts, 12s.—Spurgeon's Sword and Frowl, 19 choice vols., new half-cloth, gilt, £3, cost £12 12s.—Grand collection of Mezzotint Portraits, mostly ladies and group, by Sir J. Reynolds, about 40 plates, the lot, £150—Scott's Novels, original, 48 vol. edition choice spotless set, £5, cost £30—Virtue's Imperial Shakespeare, 4 vols., rich cloth gilt, 30s., cost £8—Strickland's Queens of England, 8 vols., 22s.—Lagard's England, 10 vols., 14s.—Papworth's Armorial Dictionary, 2 large vols., £1 10s.—Hague's Monumental Brasses, 2 vols., 22s.—Penny Magazine, 10 vols., 8s.—Geographical Journal, nice lot, 1863 to 1870, new half, £3 10, cost £8—Knight's Penny Encyclopedia, 27 large vols., 120s., cost £20—Dickens's Bleak House, first edition, 8s.; Dombey and Son, first edition, 7s. 6d.; Nicholas Nickleby, first issue, 8s. 6d.—Thackeray's Pendennis, first edition, 2 vols., half-cloth, 10s.—"Punch," 20 various vols., 12s. 6s.—Charles Knight's Land we Live In, 4 vols., 7s. 6d., cost £3 3s.—Miniatures, a choice collection. List on application.

LOWE'S £5 PACKAGES of Assorted Books for Village Libraries, Working Men's Institutes, Public Libraries, Hospitals, Private Families, have given great satisfaction wherever sent. These Packages consist of from 150 to 200 volumes, and are books well selected, and most useful for the purposes named.

These books are all very carefully selected, and are works of a deeply interesting and instructive character, and are mostly in their original binding, in nice clean condition (cost nearly £20). No duplicates supplied. Books not approved of will at once be taken back and exchanged for others.

To ladies and gentlemen desirous of making presents of books, these lots are specially adapted, as they are nice clean copies, and well selected from many thousands.

PARCELS MAY BE HAD FROM £1 IS. UPWARDS.

BOOKS! BOOKS! BOOKS!

WANTED TO PURCHASE BY

CHARLES LOWE,

NEW STREET (EXCHANGE BUILDINGS), BIRMINGHAM.

Libraries and Small Quantities of Old and New Books,

Manuscripts, Periodicals, Engravings, Oil Paintings, &c., purchased, FULL VALUE GIVEN.

CITY and GUILDS of LONDON

INSTITUTE.

President—H.R.H. the PRINCE of WALES, K.G.

Chairman of Council—
The Right Hon. the EARL of SELBOURNE, F.R.S.

SESSION 1894-95.

The MATRICULATION EXAMINATION of the Central Technical College, will be held on SEPTEMBER 17th-20th, and the ENTRANCE EXAMINATION of the Day Department of the Technical College, Finsbury, on SEPTEMBER 18th.

CITY and GUILDS CENTRAL TECHNICAL COLLEGE.

A College for higher technical instruction, adapted to the requirements of persons who are preparing to become Civil, Mechanical, or Electrical Engineers, Chemical and other Manufacturers, and Teachers.

MATHEMATICAL DEPARTMENT under the direction of Prof. Hendri, F.R.S. ENGINEERING DEPARTMENT under Prof. Unwin, F.R.S., M.I.C.E. (Dean). PHYSICAL and ELECTRICAL DEPARTMENTS under Prof. Ayrton, F.R.S. CHEMICAL DEPARTMENT under Prof. Armstrong, Ph.D., F.R.S.

THE MATRICULATION EXAMINATION will be held on September 17th-20th, and the NEW SESSION will commence on October 2nd.

Programme and full particulars of Courses of Instruction and of the Entrance Scholarships in application at the College, Exhibition Road, S.W., or at the Head Office of the City and Guilds of London Institute.

CITY and GUILDS TECHNICAL COLLEGE, Finsbury.

The DAY DEPARTMENT, for Students not under 14 years of age, embraces Courses of Instruction in Mechanical and Electrical Engineering, and Industrial and Technical Chemistry, under the direction of Prof. S. P. Thompson, D.Sc., F.R.S. (Principal), Prof. John Perry, F.R.S., and Prof. R. Meldola, F.R.S.

The Entrance Examination will be held on September 18th, and the New Session will commence on October 2nd.

For further particulars of the Day Classes, Scholarships, &c., also of the Evening Classes, apply at the College, Leonard Street, City Road, E.C., or at the Head Office of the City and Guilds of London Institute.

JOHN WATNEY, Hon. Secretary,
City and Guilds of London Institute, Gresham College,
Basilagh Street, E.C.

ST. BARTHOLOMEW'S HOSPITAL and COLLEGE.

OPEN SCHOLARSHIPS.

Four Scholarships and One Exhibition, respectively worth £150, £75, £75, £50, and £20 each, tenable for one year, will be competed for in September, 1894—viz., One Senior Open Scholarship of the value of £75 will be awarded to the best candidate (if of sufficient merit) in Physics and Chemistry. One Senior Open Scholarship of the value of £75 will be awarded to the best candidate (if of sufficient merit) in Biology and Physiology.

Candidates for these Scholarships must be under twenty-five years of age, and must not have entered to the Medical and Surgical Practice of any London medical school.

One Junior Open Scholarship in Science, value £150, and one Preliminary Scientific Exhibition, value £50, will be awarded to the best candidates under twenty years of age (if of sufficient merit) in Physics, Chemistry, Animal Biology, and Vegetable Biology. The questions for the Scholarship of £150 will be of about the nature required for Honours in the London University Preliminary Scientific Examination, and those for the Preliminary Scientific Exhibition will be of about the range of the pass questions in that examination. The Jefferson Exhibition (value £20) will be competed for at the same time. The subjects of examination are Latin, Mathematics, and any one of the three following languages—Greek, French, and German.

The Classical subjects are those of the London University Matriculation Examination of June, 1894.

The successful candidates in all these Scholarships will be required to enter to the full course at St. Bartholomew's Hospital in the October succeeding the Examination. The Examination for these Scholarships will be held on September 26th, 1894.

For particulars, application may be made, personally or by letter, to the WARREN of the COLLEGE, St. Bartholomew's Hospital, E.C.

THE COUNCIL of the COLLEGE of PRECEPTORS are about to APPOINT a PRINCIPAL for their DAY TRAINING COLLEGE for TEACHERS in SECONDARY SCHOOLS which they propose to open in the course of next year.

The commencing stipend will be £500 per annum.

Candidates must be University Graduates in Honours, and great importance will be attached to experience in teaching in good Secondary Schools.

Applications, accompanied by not more than six Testimonials, are to be sent in by September 15th.

Particulars may be obtained on application to the SECRETARY, College of Preceptors, Bloomsbury Square, W.C.

THE UNIVERSITY of ST. ANDREWS

GRANTS THE

DIPLOMA and TITLE of L.L.A. to WOMEN.

The Subjects of Examination may be selected from any seven out of thirty different subjects, the standard being the same as that for the M.A. Degree. The centres of examination are St. Andrews, Aberdeen, Bedford, Belfast, Birmingham, Bristol, Cardiff, Cheltenham, Cork, Dublin, Dumfries, Edinburgh, Inverness, Leeds, Leicester, Liverpool, London, Loughborough, Manchester, Newcastle-on-Tyne, Paisley, Turin, &c.

For Prospectus, &c., apply to the SECRETARY, L.L.A. Scheme, the University, St. Andrews, N.B.

UNIVERSITY of DUBLIN.

The Council will proceed to Nominate a PROFESSOR of MUSIC in Michaelmas Term of the present year. The Chair is tenable for five years, and the Professor may be re-elected at the end of that period. Details as to the duties of the Chair, and other particulars, may be obtained from the Registrar of Trinity College, to whom candidates should send Testimonials and copies of their published works before the 10th of October, 1894.

JOHN K. INGRAM, Registrar.

LONDON SCHOOL of MEDICINE for WOMEN.

20, HANDEL STREET, BARNSWICK SQUARE, W.C., and the ROYAL FREE HOSPITAL, prepare for all the Medical Examinations open to Women. Entrance Scholarship, value £50; Stuart Mill Scholarship, £50 a year for four years; Mackay Prizes of £50 each, &c.—Apply to SECRETARY at School.

RICHARD BENTLEY & SON'S LIST.

NOTICE.—THE TEMPLE BAR

MAGAZINE for AUGUST contains, among other Articles of Interest, THE ADVENTURESS, chaps. 5-8—A WEST-END PHYSICIAN—HANNAH—THE LAST FIGHT IN ARMOUR—ENNUI and the OPIMUM PIPE—WILLIAM COLLINS, POET—THE WORTH OF A LASS—RECORDS of an ALL-ROUND MAN—SNOW-BLANCHE—AN INTERLOPER (conclusion)—&c.

NOW READY.

MORE ABOUT GORDON.

By ONE WHO KNEW HIM WELL.
In 1 vol., fcap. 8vo, 2s. 6d.

The HISTORY of the HONOURABLE ARTILLERY COMPANY of LONDON. Including also a brief History of the American Branch of the Regiment founded at Boston in 1638. By Colonel G. A. RAIKES, F.S.A. 2 vols., with Portraits, Coloured Illustrations, and Maps, demy 8vo, 31s. 6d. each.

THE ANCIENT VELLUM BOOK OF THE COMPANY.

Being the Roll of Members from 1611 to 1682. Edited, with Notes and Illustrations, by Colonel RAIKES, F.S.A. Demy 8vo, 21s.

THE ROYAL CHARTER of INCORPORATION GRANTED by HENRY VIII., also the Royal Warrants, 1632-1889, and the Orders in Council relating to the Government of the Company. Edited by Colonel RAIKES, F.S.A. Demy 8vo, 7s. 6d.

NEW NOVELS NOW READY.

NOW READY.

AN INTERLOPER. By Frances MARY PEARD, Author of "The Baroness," &c. In 2 vols., crown 8vo.

"A graceful and charming writer. Miss Peard's touch remains gentle even when raising a corner of the veil that conceals the depths of the heart. Her stories have the freshness and delicate colouring of the finished pastel."

Morning Post.

"Miss Peard's latest book is also, we think, one of her best. The scene is laid at Poissy, and the sketch of provincial France is quaint and vivid."—Daily News.

NOW READY.

IN a CINQUE PORT: a Story of Winchelsea. By E. M. HEWITT. In 3 vols., crown 8vo.

"From the point of view of readability, a quality oft honoured in the breach, there is much to be said for this novel."—Pall Mall Gazette.

"In a Cinque Port strikes us as a book which has been written with much deliberation. The author seems to have been under the influence of the ancient sea-forsaken Sussex city which he has chosen for the setting of his scenes. He describes lovingly and well, and those who know Winchelsea will take pleasure from the description apart altogether from the plot and action of the story."—Daily Chronicle.

NOW READY.

A TROUBLESOME PAIR. By LESLIE KEITH, Author of "Lisbeth," &c. In 3 vols., crown 8vo.

"The lively record of the difficulties encountered by a retired Indian officer who has undertaken to watch over the fortunes of two young step-sisters, lovely, high-bred, but, alas! also, for the colonel's peace of mind, too high-spirited to submit to the control of a resident chaperon."

Manchester Guardian.

A NEW EDITION. In 1 vol., crown 8vo, cloth, 6s.

DIANA TEMPEST. By Mary CHOLMONDELEY, Author of "Sir Charles Danvers," &c.

"Diana Tempest" is a book to be read. It is more—it is a book to be kept and read again, for its characters will not pass into limbo with this year's fashions. It will stand in the front ranks of fiction for some time to come."—St. James's Gazette.

NOW READY.

MRS. ROMNEY. By Rosa N. Carey.

Author of "Nellie's Memories," &c. In 1 vol., small crown 8vo, 2s. "Miss Carey has the gift of writing naturally and simply, her pathos is true and unforced, and her conversations are sprightly and sharp."

Standard.

RICHARD BENTLEY & SON, New Burlington Street
Publishers in Ordinary to Her Majesty the Queen.

ELLIOT STOCK'S PUBLICATIONS.

In handsome demy 8vo, with Maps and Illustrations, cloth, price 7s. 6d.

HISTORY of COREA, Ancient and Modern.

With Description of Manners and Customs, Language and Geography.

By Rev. JOHN ROSS,
(Seven Years Resident in Manchuria.)

"Contains a vast mass of valuable information derived from Chinese documents."—Spectator.

Also, by the Same Author, price 7s. 6d.

THE MANCHUS, or Reigning Dynasty of China.

Their Rise and Progress.

"We know of no other work which offers so full and exhaustive an account of the manners and history of the Chinese as the one now before us."—Westminster Review.

THE BEST PRESENT FOR BOYS AND YOUNG MEN.

A CHEAP EDITION NOW READY.

In fcap. 8vo, tastefully printed and bound, price 1s. 6d., post free.

NOTES FOR BOYS

(AND THEIR FATHERS),

On Morals, Mind, and Manners.

By "AN OLD BOY."

Being a Series of Short, Practical and Readable Chapters on the following Subjects:—

UNSELFISHNESS—TRUTH AND HONESTY—COURAGE AND MANLINESS—ENERGY AND PERSEVERANCE—COURTESY AND GENTLENESS—GENEROSITY AND THURFT—PURITY AND CHASTITY—PATIENCE AND FORBEARANCE—MODESTY AND CONTENT—THE CHOICE OF FRIENDS—FAMILY AFFECTION—AMBITION—RELIGION, BOOKS, STUDIES—HEALTH, CONVERSATION—SPORTS, AMUSEMENTS, AND DRESS—THE CHOICE OF A PROFESSION—RELATIONS OF MEN AND WOMEN.

"An admirable little volume, full of sound sense and wise suggestions, plenty of sympathy with wholesome liberty."

Daily News.

"Always sensible, it is quite certain that any lad who would lay all this instruction to heart would be very much the better for it."—Spectator.

"Abundance of good advice, not only for boys, but for their parents and sisters."—Morning Post.

"Enduring truths presented in a modern and persuasive style."—Daily Chronicle.

"The advice is simply excellent. It is practical, minute, and although high-toned, not too stringent."—Literary World.

"A noble book charged with weighty-thoughts."

Evangelical Magazine.

CHEAPER EDITION.

NOW READY—488 PAGES.

PRICE ONE SHILLING.

TOLSTOI'S BOYHOOD:

WRITTEN BY HIMSELF,

And Translated by CONSTANTINE POPOFF.

"This edition comprises in one volume what has hitherto been issued in two or three; and in point of style it is indubitably the best English version of the Russian novelist's remarkable autobiographical work."—Academy.

"One of the most faithful and closely retrospective autobiographies of the opening years of life that have ever been given to the world. Mr. Popoff's translation reads easily, and, as he is a Russian, we may count upon its accuracy."—Literary World.

LONDON:

ELLIOT STOCK 62, PATERNOSTER ROW.

STANDARD PUBLICATIONS

OF

J. B. LIPPINCOTT COMPANY.

Allibone (S. Austin).—Critical Dictionary of ENGLISH LITERATURE, and British and American Authors, from the Earliest Times to the Middle of the Nineteenth Century. 3 vols. Imperial 8vo, cloth, £4 14s. 6d.

— Supplement to the above work, by JOHN FOSTER KIRK, LL.D. Continuing the Information to the Year 1890. 2 vols. Imperial 8vo, cloth, £3 3s.

"By no means an ordinary work of reference. It holds the field." SATURDAY REVIEW.

Chesterfield (Lord).—Letters and Works, reprinted from Lord Mahon's scarce edition. Printed in plea type, on superior paper. With 5 Portraits. 5 vols. Demy 8vo, cloth, £3 3s. A few copies on fine paper, with extra Portraits, £5 5s. net.

Dispendatory (The) of the United STATES of AMERICA. Seventeenth Edition, thoroughly Revised and largely rewritten by Prof. WOOD, REMINGTON, and SADDLER. With Illustrations. 1 vol. Imperial 8vo, (pp. 1,970), cloth, £1 16s.

This indispensable guide and authority has been brought fully up to date. It exceeds all previous issues in the practical value of its contents, and is a complete encyclopedia of the subjects upon which it treats.

Goubaux and Barrier.—The Exterior of the HORSE. Translated and Edited by S. J. HARGER, V.M.D. 346 Figures and 34 Plates by G. Nicolet. Thick 8vo, cloth, £1 10s.

"May be confidently recommended to all owners and breeders of horses."—Morning Post.

King (Capt. C.).—A Soldier's Secret. A Story of the Sioux War, and An Army Portia. 12mo, cloth, 8s. 6d.

— An Initial Experience, and other Stories. 12mo, cloth, 3s. 6d.

— Captain Blake. Illustrated. 12mo, cloth, 3s. 6d.

— Colonel's Christmas Dinner, &c. 12mo, cloth, 3s. 6d.

— Colonel's Daughter. Illustrated. 12mo, cloth, 3s. 6d.

— Deserter, and From the Ranks. Two Stories in 1 vol. 12mo, cloth, 8s. 6d.

— Foes in Ambush. 12mo, cloth, 3s. 6d.

— Kitty's Conquest. 12mo, cloth, 3s. 6d.

— Waring's Peril. 12mo, cloth, 3s. 6d.

— Marion's Faith. Illustrated. 12mo, cloth, 3s. 6d.

— Starlight Ranch, and other Stories. 12mo, cloth, 3s. 6d.

"No military novels of the day rival those of Captain King in precision and popularity."—Boston Courier.

Lippincott's Gazetteer of the World.

Edition of 1893, with the latest Census Returns. Containing Notices of over 125,000 Places, and the Pronunciation of all the Names. 1 vol., Imperial 8vo, of nearly 3,000 pages, strongly bound in half-morocco, £3 3s.

A thoroughly reliable Gazetteer for all countries, but especially full and complete as regards America. It is indispensable for all who have business relations with the United States.

Shakespeare. (A New Variorum

EDITION of.) Edited by HORACE HOWARD FURNESS, M.A. Containing a Collection of the Ancient Copies, and of the best Modern Critical Editions; Notes, Criticisms, and Illustrations from all accessible sources, and Appendix to each Play. Vols. 1 to 9 now ready. Royal 8vo, cloth, price 18s. each.

Vol. 1. Romeo and Juliet. Vol. 6. Othello.

Vol. 2. Macbeth. Vol. 7. Merchant of Venice.

Vols. 3 and 4. Hamlet. Vol. 8. As You Like It.

Vol. 5. King Lear. Vol. 9. The Tempest.

"We have not space to do full justice to Mr. Furness's volumes. Every instalment is of great value, and complete as regards the play treated. It is a source of much satisfaction to find that this, the most exhaustive work on any one of Shakespeare's plays, comes from America."—ATHENÆUM.

Worcester (Dr.).—New and Greatly

ENLARGED DICTIONARY of the ENGLISH LANGUAGE. Adapted for Library or College Reference. Comprising 40,000 words more than Johnson's Dictionary. New Edition. With Supplement. 4to, cloth, £1 11s. 6d.; or half-russia, cloth sides, marbled edges, best style, £2 2s.

The crowning labour of a scholar who devoted a third of a century to philological studies; the ripe fruits of more years of earnest and diligent toil than fall to the lot of most literary men.

— Pocket Dictionary. Compiled from the Larger Dictionary of J. E. WORCESTER. Containing Foreign Words and Phrases, Tables of all kinds, Abbreviations, Rules for Spelling, &c. Illustrated. 48mo, cloth, 1s.; or leatherette, gilt edges, 1s. 6d.

The prettiest, cheapest, and most useful Pocket Dictionary ever published.

Wurtz (A.).—Elements of Modern Chem-

ISTRY. Fourth Edition. Translated and Edited from the Fifth French Edition by W. H. GREENE, M.D. With Coloured Frontispiece and 132 Illustrations. Crown 8vo, cloth, 10s. 6d.

"Exceedingly interesting and eminently readable."—NATURE.

J. B. LIPPINCOTT COMPANY,

10, HENRIETTA STREET, COVENT GARDEN, LONDON.

SATURDAY, AUGUST 4, 1894.

No. 1161, New Series.

THE EDITOR cannot undertake to return, or to correspond with the writers of, rejected manuscript.

It is particularly requested that all business letters regarding the supply of the paper, &c., may be addressed to the PUBLISHER, and not to the EDITOR.

LITERATURE.

The Memoirs of Edmund Ludlow, 1625-1672.
Edited by C. H. Firth. (Oxford: Clarendon Press.)

THE period of the Commonwealth possesses peculiar attractions for most historians. Not to mention Ranke in Germany, Guizot in France, and our own Carlyle, it is an open secret that it has furnished the incentive for Mr. Gardiner's monumental work. For once in her history England, breaking away from her traditional conservatism, became the battle-field of contending ideals, religious and political. The central figure of the period is Oliver Cromwell. Whatever our views, whatever our prejudices, it is the elucidation of his character that is of primary importance. A sane man among fanatics, a fanatic of fanatics: how shall we interpret him and his time? It is to this end that Mr. Firth has directed his studies. His discovery of the Clarke papers, his contributions to the Dictionary of National Biography, his edition of Lucy Hutchinson's Memoirs, and now his edition of Ludlow's Memoirs, have made Cromwell himself, the problems that confronted him, and the manner in which he tried to solve them, much more intelligible than hitherto they had been.

Viewed from this standpoint, his edition of Ludlow is particularly interesting. For, whatever we may think of Ludlow, it is impossible to question his sincerity or to dismiss lightly the charges levelled by him against Cromwell. A dull, heavy man he was certainly, narrow and bigoted one might call him, capable only of one idea at a time, an idealist unable to admit the modifying force of circumstances, unscrupulous in his adhesion to his principles, and inconsistent in his application of them—he was, nevertheless, a man that by the sheer honesty of his purpose commands our respect.

The eldest son of Sir Henry Ludlow, of Maiden Bradley, Wilts, M.P. for his county in the Long Parliament, born one conjectures in 1617, and educated at Trinity College, Oxford, he early displayed that incapacity of distinguishing, as Mr. Firth puts it, between shadows and realities that marked his conduct in later life. Convinced that the question at issue between King and Parliament was simply “whether the king should govern as a god by his will, and the nation be governed by force like beasts; or whether the people should be governed by laws made by themselves, and live under a government derived from their own consent;”

he thought it his duty, considering his age and vigorous constitution, to take up arms for the Parliament. Thus we may see how, at the very beginning of his career, his identification of the Parliament with the nation was likely to land him eventually in a painful dilemma. Without any special military training, his defence of Wardour Castle gained him considerable reputation with his own party. Still, it may be questioned whether, apart from a certain doggedness, useful, no doubt, in defending a position, he possessed any remarkable military skill. He played a small and not very successful part in the first Civil War; and after Cromwell and Ireton had broken the back of the Irish Rebellion, there was little opportunity in the capturing of outlying castles, and in the guerilla warfare that ensued, to call forth any latent ability he may have possessed. In May 1646 he was returned as M.P. for Wilts. From the first he associated himself with the extreme section of the popular party, in whose political creed the necessity of turning England into a Republic was the first article. He was opposed to any compromise with the King. “An accommodation with the King,” he insisted, “was unsafe to the people of England and unjust and wicked in the nature of it.” This being his conviction, he had no hesitation in coercing Parliament to his own view of the situation.

His thoroughgoing republicanism obtained for him great influence with the Levellers; and I am not at all sure that Mr. Firth is right in dismissing as improbable the suggestion of Ludlow's friends that, in appointing him to the command of the troops in Ireland, Cromwell was actuated by a desire to remove him out of his way. It is possible, as Mr. Firth suggests, that the belief that what was wanted in Ireland was not simply a soldier, but a soldier who was something of a statesman, may have weighed with Cromwell in his choice of Ludlow. But this belief seems to me to be quite consistent with Cromwell's desire to get rid of him. Ireland, as he said, was like a sheet of clean paper. Ludlow was an ardent reformer; he was not quite satisfied with the slow progress that the reformation was making in England: let him then go to Ireland, where he would have an opportunity of putting his theories in practice and of setting “a good precedent even to England itself.” In using this line of argument Cromwell was perfectly sincere. So far as the welfare of the Commonwealth was concerned, he was at one with Ludlow. But he saw danger where Ludlow saw none. An idealist of Ludlow's stamp, incapable of admitting the logic of facts, he plainly recognised to be a danger in England. In Ireland, on the other hand, such a man would not merely cease to be dangerous, but from the very sincerity of his convictions might be instrumental in building up a strong Protestant interest there.

In truth the building up of a strong Protestant interest in Ireland was the desire not only of Cromwell and Ludlow but of Englishmen generally. In this respect all classes and creeds in England were united. To the national contempt of the Wild Irish, which had found constant expression in the most national part of the nation's literature—the drama—had recently been added a much more terrible element. At a moment of intense religious excitement, the rumour had spread through the length and breadth of the land that the Irish, instigated by the emissaries of Rome, had risen in their masses and massacred, under circumstances of revolting brutality, men, women and children, whose sole crime was that they were Englishmen and Protestants. Political intrigue co-operated with religious fanaticism. A sort of madness seized the nation. Stories, the wildest and most improbable, were caught up with credulous avidity. The employment of Irish soldiers in England was resented as an outrage on the national feeling, and added one more to the long list of Charles's crimes. The day of divine retribution arrived at last. The victories of Cromwell and Ireton paved the way for a settlement of Ireland on a radical and Protestant basis. War and famine had thinned the ranks of the Irish. The gallows, transportation, and transplantation were to do the rest. Cleansed as far as possible from the stain of popery, Ireland was to realise the dream of Elizabethan statesmen, and to become another England across the Channel.

Such was the dream that Ludlow was to help in realising, and with this object before him he arrived in Ireland early in 1651. His account of the reconquest by Cromwell and Ireton is, as Mr. Firth points out, neither clear nor consistent. Sympathy with the Irish one does not expect to find in him, but his ignorance of the country he was to assist in governing is at times astonishing. Mr. Firth has done his best in his footnotes to correct his blunders, and his illustrative documents have given to the Memoirs a value which they cannot be said to possess in themselves. But the truth is that, whatever interest Ludlow may have originally felt in Ireland, it soon evaporated. It was in England that the real battle of religious and political liberty was being fought, and it was to England that Ludlow's thoughts continually reverted. Charles had fallen; Ireland and Scotland lay at the feet of the Parliament; the enemy everywhere was dispersed and conquered,

“and the nation likely to attain in a short time that measure of happiness which human things are capable of, when by the ambition of one man the hopes and expectations of all good men were disappointed, and the people robbed of that liberty which they had contended for at the expense of so much blood and treasure.”

This, as Mr. Firth points out, was not Ludlow's first view of the situation. He was content to acquiesce in the expulsion of the Long Parliament, and it was only when the Protectorate came to be proclaimed that his hostility to Cromwell was openly manifest. From that moment all his interest in the great work of regenerating Ireland vanished. Utterly deaf to the arguments and entreaties of his fellow-commissioners, he flatly declined to have anything further to do in the management of civil affairs; and if he retained his military commission, it was not for any such specious reason as “to bring those to justice who had been guilty of the blood of many thousands of English Protestants," but because he was unwilling to relinquish a weapon which might prove serviceable against the usurper. His conduct has been described as childish: it was certainly short-sighted, for it exposed his motives to misconstruction, and debarred him from further participation in public affairs. But so long as his attitude was merely one of passive resistance, no steps were taken against him; and it was only when he began to actively intrigue against Cromwell that government felt it necessary to interfere.

In one respect Ludlow was no doubt right in regarding the Protectorate as a conservative reaction and a betrayal of the good old cause; but, as Mr. Firth says, he was incapable of perceiving that the Republic he advocated was essentially the government of a minority, and had just as little popular support as the Protectorate. His opposition to Cromwell, however, gained him the respect of the extreme party, and after Oliver's death he again became a man of importance. He had seen what influence the support of the Army had conferred on Cromwell, and it was now his great object to secure the support of the Army for the re-establishment of a republican form of government. The dissensions of the Army leaders among themselves favoured his purpose; and his account of his intrigues with the Wallingford House party, ending in the restoration of the Long Parliament and the deposition of Richard Cromwell is, as Mr. Firth points out, not only minute but of great historical value. There still remained a constant fear of friction leading to open rupture between the Parliament and the Army; but it was, as Ludlow perceived, chiefly from the side of Ireland that any immediate danger was to be apprehended. Many of the Irish officers, it was well known, were warmly attached to the Cromwells, and regarded the recent coup d'état with anything but favour. It was imperative, therefore, that the army in Ireland should be remodelled, and for this task who could be found fitter than Ludlow? But in accepting the commandership-in-chief of the Irish forces, Ludlow this time took care not to suffer himself, as he said, to be banished thither as he had formerly been by Oliver Cromwell,

"but to return to England as soon as I should have done what might be necessary for the security of that country, to contribute my endeavour towards the settlement of a just and equitable constitution of government at home, and to prevent those mischiefs which I perceived the ambition of the army to be bringing upon us."

So far as his immediate object was concerned he was entirely successful. But the discontent which his purgation of the Army created eventually proved fatal to him. Meanwhile, what he had feared had actually come to pass in England. Once again in the course of its troubled history the Long Parliament had been sent about its business. Ludlow's position was truly pitiable; and his futile efforts to effect a reconciliation between the Army and the Parliament brings into strong relief the radical weakness of his doctrine of parliamentary supremacy.

Unable, like Cromwell, or even like Monk, to mould circumstances to his will, he drifted helplessly with the current of events, step by step becoming committed to the policy of the Army. He had returned to England in October a supporter of Parliament. Only two months later he was, by a curious irony of fate, recalled to Ireland for the express purpose of suppressing a movement in favour of the restoration of Parliament. His journey was of no avail, and in his absence he was deprived by Parliament of all his offices. "The result," as Mr. Firth says, "of all his attempts at mediation had simply been to make him suspected by the adherents of the Parliament without gaining him the confidence of the leaders of the Army."

Ludlow was returned to the Convention as member for Hindon, but found himself isolated and helpless. After the Restoration he managed to escape to France, and finally to Vevay, in the Canton of Berne, where he found a more or less secure asylum, and where he relieved the tedium of exile by the composition of his Memoirs. More than one attempt appears to have been made to assassinate him, but he lived to see the Revolution. He at once hastened to England "to strengthen," as he said, "the hands of the Gideon who had been raised up to deliver the nation from the house of bondage." But, except for himself and a few fanatics, republicanism had ceased to have any practical interest for Englishmen. A motion was made in parliament for his arrest as a regicide, and he was glad to retrace his steps to Vevay. Here we may leave him.

In what I have said regarding his life I have followed on the lines of Mr. Firth's luminous Introduction. Of the present edition it is sufficient to say that it is a scholarly production. The amount of information stowed away in the notes is extraordinary, and can only be estimated at its right value by students already familiar with the history of Ludlow's times. To them Mr. Firth's work will prove invaluable. If to this it is added that for the first time the Memoirs have been printed in their entirety, with an introduction not less remarkable for succinctness and completeness than for critical insight into the character of Ludlow and the history of his times, all that it is necessary to say will have been said.

One or two blunders of a trivial sort have escaped Mr. Firth's eye. "Stout Major General" (i. 513) ought apparently to be scout master general; in the index the Earl of Westmeath referred to is not Christopher, but Richard Nugent; and Ross in Kerry is more than once confounded with Ross in Wexford.

It may perhaps interest Mr. Firth to learn (if he is not already aware of the fact) that two valuable papers were contributed to the Proceedings of the Kilkenny Archaeological Society in 1854, by the late Mr. J. P. Prendergast and the late Archdeacon Rowan, on the capture of Ross Castle by Ludlow.

R. DUNLOP.

Criticisms on Contemporary Thought and Thinkers. Selected from the "Spectator" by R. H. Hutton. In 2 vols. (Macmillans.)

Two generations ago one of Mr. Hutton's contemporary thinkers prophesied that "literature would by-and-by become one boundless self-devouring review." Carlyle's dismal anticipation seems partially confirmed by the increasing tendency to reproduce ephemeral criticisms in permanent book form. These in turn have to be reviewed, and so the process goes on. Mr. Hutton tells us that, in reprinting a selection from his contributions to the Spectator, he was guided by the advice of his nephew, the late Rev. W. R. Hutton. In nothing is it so rash to follow the counsels of one's relations as in questions of publication. They of a man's household are in these matters his worst enemies, and the customary and wholesome disparagement of domestic criticism is temporarily suspended that he may be driven into print or cloth-binding. The younger Mr. Hutton might at least have aided in revising, as well as in selecting, his uncle's essays.

The very able editor of the Spectator is notoriously not remarkable either for accuracy of statement or for elegance of style. As a journalist, he may plead that the urgent necessity of setting everybody else right about everything in earth and heaven (more especially the latter) leaves him little leisure for cultivating such minor accomplishments. But, surely, if he has time to reprint, he has time to revise. As an example of how not to write, take the opening sentence of the article on Dean Church's Oxford Movement:

"Those who did not know the late Dean of St. Paul's—perhaps the ripest scholar among our Oxford divines, certainly the most accomplished man of letters, with a large share of Cardinal Newman's perfect delicacy and simplicity of style, and an independence of thought of his own that rendered it impossible for him to follow Newman to Rome, deeply as he had entered into his genius and sympathised with the ardour of his spiritual purposes—will find in this book something as near to a literary transcript of his mind as it is often given to men to embody in their writing" (vol. ii., p. 246).

What a curious piece of literary irony that a reference to "perfect delicacy and simplicity of style" should be let fall in the midst of this rabble of clauses, elbowing one another aside, tumbling over one another's heels, and each clamouring for the whole attention of the poor distracted reader! The whole might have been re-cast in three sentences, by the very easy method of uniting the first clause with the last, and breaking up the intermediate portion into two periods. But even then we should have to ask what is meant by "something as near as is often given." Mr. Hutton can scarcely imply that many men have given as complete a transcript of their minds as Dean Church gave of his in the Oxford Movement. Probably he means "nearer than is often given," or "as near as is seldom given." Again, how characteristic is the tautology, "literary transcript in writing" and "independence of thought of his own"—as if it could have been somebody else's!

Mr. Hutton is a consummate poetical critic; and the papers that deal with poetry, though rather out of place where they now stand, are much the most valuable in the collection. But was it worth while to reprint the reply to Mr. Ruskin's unhappy attack on Wordsworth? A rather damaging defence, by the way, in its present sadly unrevised condition, as it meekly admits that Wordsworth talked about "lambs bounding to the tabor's sound" (vol. ii., p. 108), whereas what he said was "as to the tabor's sound," which may not have been very felicitous, but was not the absolute nonsense here ascribed to him. On the next page a quotation of unnecessary length from the same Ode is disfigured by the substitution of "these" for "those." It is dangerous to alter a single vowel in Wordsworth's "inevitable" diction, much more a whole word as Mr. Hutton does elsewhere, writing "Thou canst preserve the stars from wrong" for "thou dost" in one of the noblest lines in the poet's noblest Ode (vol. i., p. 292).

Verbal inaccuracies might have been excused, had the matter of these papers undergone a searching revision. But they have been hurried into book form and brought before the judgment-seat of literary criticism with their sins unconfessed and unabolved. This is particularly noticeable in the controversial essays which fill the greater part of the first volume, and in which Mr. Hutton fearlessly, but somewhat rashly, grapples with such opponents as Mr. Leslie Stephen, Prof. Clifford, Prof. Tyndall, Prof. Huxley, Mr. Matthew Arnold, and Cotter Morison. Now there seems a certain unfairness, at any rate a decided want of chivalry, in serving up the replies to nearly a score of articles and books some of which appeared more than twenty years ago. Few of Mr. Hutton's readers will have the other side of the argument fresh in their memories, or will take the trouble to study it in the original sources. Even if Mr. Hutton could give an accurate account of what was said by the persons whom he assails, its impressiveness would be very much less in his statement than in theirs. But so far is this from being his habit that he has sometimes directly and demonstrably falsified or misunderstood their meaning. Not intentionally, of course—Mr. Hutton is always transparently honest—but from an irrepressible genius for blundering. For instance, he tells us that "Prof. Tyndall appears to admit that approbation and disapprobation are unmeaning, except in that hypothesis of moral freedom which he has rejected" (vol. i., p. 243), and proceeds to expatiate at somewhat unnecessary length on the great importance of those feelings as instruments of moral discipline. "As the German thinker said of God, if they did not exist we should be obliged to invent them." It may interest Mr. Hutton to learn, what most of my readers will know already, that "the German thinker" wrote in French, and that his name was Voltaire. The important thing, however, is that Prof. Tyndall did not "appear to admit" any such absurdity, as we know on the best possible authority:

namely, that of the lamented physicist himself, who, on republishing his Address, added a note expressly disclaiming the interpretation put on his theory by the critic in the Spectator (see Fortnightly Review, New Series, vol. xxii., p. 616). Nor is this all. In the same article it was asked why Prof. Tyndall said that he had no objection to talk "poetically" of a soul, though he had "a strong objection to believe in one really," with the addition of some extremely rude language about "telling fibs" and the like. To this charge also Tyndall replied at considerable length (ut supra, p. 608); but it is now reprinted without the slightest reference to the explanation which had been over sixteen years in print (vol. i., p. 244).

Our critic gives himself away another time in the review of Clifford's Lectures and Essays. In discussing a theory of the origin of atoms put forward by the authors of The Unseen Universe, Clifford had observed that it was at any rate better than "the more common form of the argument, which may be stated as follows:—'Because atoms are exactly alike and apparently indestructible, they must at one time have come into existence out of nothing. This can only have been effected by the agency of a conscious mind not associated with a material organism.'"

He then proceeds to parody the argument in terms that I need not quote, as they seem to have given pain to some rather sensitive people. On this Mr. Hutton remarks that "it would have been fairer to have quoted the imbecile argument adduced from some outwardly respectable authority than to have manufactured it in a form inviting a parody so crushing as this." The argument is "made in order that he might travesty it," and "not derived from any actual author" (vol. i., pp. 262-3). Really one loses all patience with such ignorant whining as this. Had Mr. Hutton read or even glanced over the book he was reviewing, he would have found, in the lecture immediately preceding the essay on The Unseen Universe, the following passage:—

"Prof. Clerk Maxwell argues that things which are unalterable and are exactly alike cannot have been formed by any natural process. Moreover, being exactly alike, they cannot have existed for ever, and therefore they must have been made. As Sir John Herschel said, 'they bear the stamp of the manufactured article'" (Clifford's Lectures and Essays, vol. i. p. 203).

I hope Clerk Maxwell and Sir John Herschel are sufficiently "actual" and "outwardly respectable" to satisfy Mr. Hutton. Their argument may be "imbecile," but it seems quite as powerful as the one on which he himself seems to rely most.

"Human freewill can hardly be believed at all without belief in a personal Creator. That any mere development of material or unconscious life should lead to the existence of a being who can liberate himself from the control of the forces which had brought him into being is so utterly incredible that one cannot conceive a sincere believer in human freewill who could doubt for a moment that that will must have owed its origin to a personal God" (vol. ii., p. 71).

A perusal of Lucretius might do something towards enlarging this critic's limited powers of conception. But is it not obvious that the alleged inconceivability applies as much to the theistic as to the materialistic theory? The possessor of freewill has "liberated himself from the control" of the force that brought him into being, whether that force be personal or impersonal. Moreover, there is a third alternative, forgotten by Mr. Hutton. The human will, assuming it to be free, may have come into existence without any cause at all, for by its very existence it negates the universality of causation. While on this topic, I may observe that Mr. Hutton must have forgotten his mathematics very thoroughly when he assumed the freedom "to believe that, though the stock of physical energy in the world is always the same, incapable of increase or decrease, the way in which it is to be applied . . . is left more or less at our disposal" (vol. i., p. 242). To produce a change in the direction of movement would require a creation (or destruction) of energy just as much as the absolute starting of a movement; and Lord Kelvin seems to admit this when he calls freewill "a miracle." If miracles do not happen, it is because the conservation of energy bars them out.

Another victim of the reviewer's inability to enter into an opponent's case is Mr. Leslie Stephen, of whom Mr. Hutton says, in an answer to "The Scepticism of Believers," that he "admits he can assign no reason why a man should sacrifice himself to society except that he recognises the virtuousness of the impulse which urges him to do so," and that according to his philosophy "moral obligation is only a name for the teaching of experience as to the laws of cause and effect in human conduct" (vol. i., pp. 145-6). What Mr. Stephen really said was as follows:—

"Altruistic instincts exist; men have desires which can only be explained when man is regarded as a fraction of the social integer. . . . The existence of such instincts may appear a paradox to some reasoners. A belief in them is the mystery of the unbelievers' creed, against which the pride of reason is apt to revolt. It is not my present purpose to justify the doctrine, or to show (as I hold that it may be conclusively shown) that it involves no real offence to reason" (Fortnightly Review, ut supra, p. 373).

I must leave the reader to judge whether the sense of this passage is fairly reproduced in the reviewer's version of it.

As a general rule, Mr. Hutton seems anxious to show that his opponents have no logical right to a shred of moral principle or of religious feeling. An exception, however, is made in favour of Darwin, whose authority was too great to be lightly surrendered to the cause of unbelief. "If Plato held that God is the great geometer, Darwin certainly held that God is the great fountain of plastic art and biological method" (vol. ii., p. 152). These lines were written in 1882. Since then Darwin's Life has appeared, and from it we know exactly what his religious belief amounted to. The great naturalist rather preferred calling himself an agnostic to calling himself an atheist. That was all. Is Mr. Hutton ignorant of this notorious fact, or does he knowingly allow sentences to stand which convey an impression that is the reverse of true?

ALFRED W. BENN.

Georgian Folk Tales. Translated by Margery Wardrop. (David Nutt.)

MANY travellers have described to us the magnificent scenery and picturesque inhabitants of the Caucasus. Indeed, when we look through the list of mountain climbers who have visited these regions, it is pleasant to find how the names of our countrymen preponderate. But even to the present day, in spite of the labours of Brosset, Tsagarelli, Uslar, and others, the languages of the country have been little studied. Their names are legion, and even the classification of them is no light matter. Among them is to be found the Georgian family (including the Georgian properly so called), Mingrelian, Suanian, and Lazian. Of these Georgian is the only one which can be said to possess a literature; but this, dating as it does from the eighth century, may well be styled an old one. Little has been done by Englishmen to make this language better known; and Miss Wardrop, in the preface to the present volume, can assert with truth that only one translator has preceded her, the Rev. S. C. Malan, still, we believe, living in a green old age.

It was a happy thought of Miss Wardrop to introduce to us some of the folk-lore of this little-known country. And she has courageously carried out her resolution. We say courageously, because the Georgian language is beset with difficulties. Such an intractable verb can be found elsewhere only among the Basques. Indeed, there is a striking analogy between the languages, but it is only an analogy: there can be no question of kinship, because the vocabularies of the two have nothing in common. It seems rather as if we had to do in both cases with a period in the history of language in which the verb had not been completely developed. The tendency to incorporate the subject and object, the absence of a regular infinitive and similar peculiarities, appear to point to such conditions.

The four languages of the Georgian family—for the majority of scholars consider them to be distinct languages rather than dialects—stand alone in the region in which they are spoken. They have no Aryan characteristics. The one Aryan tongue spoken in the Caucasus is the Ossetic; but the Georgian languages are spoken by a handsome race, with thoroughly Aryan, or perhaps we should say Iranic, features.

We might well expect to find some striking folk-lore among them, and a careful selection has been made by Miss Wardrop from three sources: the collection of Mr. Agniashvili, Prof. Tsagarelli's Mingrelian tales, and an anonymous volume of specimens. In style the tales are thoroughly Oriental, and Russian, too, for that matter: there is everywhere the wildest play of fancy, and the characters undergo the most varied transformations. They have some of the humour which we occasionally find in the Arabian Nights. It would be curious to ascertain how many of them are taken directly from Oriental sources: we are inclined to suspect Persian especially. It is known that the romantic epic of Shota Rustaveli probably had a Persian original, though none has yet been found. The Georgian version of the Kalilah Wa Dimnah is certainly taken direct from the Persian, just as the portions of it found in Russian have come through a Greek medium, a fact which names like Stephanik and Ikhnilat clearly show. In many cases Miss Wardrop is able to add parallels from Western folk-lore, such as the Mabinogion. It is the recurrence of these tales in other literatures which constitutes the most valuable feature of the study. The East is certainly the officina of many of these tales, and of Russian folk-lore also; for we cannot accept the paradoxical idea which some writers have favoured, that they came to Russia from the West. By quotations from Ralston's books, Miss Wardrop shows how much these stories have in common with Russian.

The Mingrelian versions must have cost the translator much trouble, owing to the serious difference between that language and Georgian. They have, however, been furnished by Prof. Tsagarelli with a learned commentary. He was the first person who treated the language philologically and put it into a literary shape: nay, he even invented two or three characters, where the Georgian alphabet was inadequate to express all the sounds. We believe that no grammar or dictionary of Mingrelian has been published, nor, indeed, of Suanian or Lazian; at least we never heard of any while at Tiflis. The only other works dealing with Mingrelian are those by Rosen, the Orientalist (who also treats of Lazian), Klaproth, and the late Demetrius Peacock. Recently some translations into Suanian have been published. The great difference between the Mingrelian language, as Prof. Tsagarelli calls it in his volume on Mingrelian phonetics, and Georgian makes us doubt whether the former can ever be driven out of the field by the latter, as Miss Wardrop thinks: it is hardly a case of two dialects coalescing. A very useful list of books on the Georgian languages will be found in the work of Mr. O. Wardrop, to which his sister refers.

We get glimpses of the primitive beliefs of the Georgian people in many of these tales, such as the evil spirits called, among other names, indevis. The word, according to Tsagarelli, is connected with a Persian root. There is also a kind of demoniacal hag called Rokapi.

We are afraid that many people will be puzzled with the title of the third section of Miss Wardrop's book. It is not generally known that Guria is a western province of Georgia. And it is, perhaps, from the Persian form of this name, Guirja, that the common appellation of the country among us has arisen. This appears far more probable than that it should have proceeded from St. George, or from the name of some of their kings.

We hope heartily that Miss Wardrop will fulfil her intention, expressed in the preface, of publishing a version of the epic of the twelfth century, "The Man in the Panther's Skin," still read with delight by the Georgians. It is as yet hardly known in Europe, with the exception of Herr Leist's translation into German, which, although good, is very much condensed.

W. R. MORFILL.

Among Men and Horses. By Captain Hayes. (Fisher Unwin.)

It is unfortunate for Captain Hayes that his book of reminiscences should have followed so closely on the publication of Sir John Astley's Fifty Years of Sport at Home and Abroad. It is hardly possible for two thoroughly successful books on sport to appear almost contemporaneously, and I fear that the Mate's most popular volume must to a great extent take the wind out of Capt. Hayes' present venture.

The field taken up by the two men is however very different; and the most interesting portions of the present book contain Captain Hayes's experience as a breaker and teacher in India, China, and South Africa, a field absolutely untouched in Sir John Astley's volume.

Capt. Hayes tells us that he left the Buffs, into which he changed from the Bengal Staff Corps, because, under Mr. Cardwell's rule, he would have shortly been compulsorily retired, through not obtaining his majority on reaching forty; and from that time he appears to have adopted the training and breaking of horses as a profession, and to have practised it in all quarters of the world. Probably no man living has a more perfect and extensive knowledge of the horse than our author, and his experience renders his opinion on some public questions of the greatest value. He deprecates for instance the expensive experiments that have been carried on for years by the government of India to improve the breed of horses by the importation of English thoroughbreds. He justly approves of the imported Waler as more useful for military purposes than the costly country-breds, and his remarks on the Indian Government studs would be endorsed by every old Indian:

"For many years, and at an immense expenditure of money, the Indian Government steeds fought the climate by the constant importation of English sires. The costly exotics thus produced yielded only a small percentage of animals up to remount standard; but no permanent effect was made, or could be made, on the native breed of horses, which, however much stimulated for the time being, quickly reverted, on the relaxation of the forcing process, to its original type. The good effects of the English and Arab blood are to be traced only among the native ponies" (p. 58).

Racing in my time in India was carried on for sport alone. The owner almost always was his own trainer, and money-making hardly entered into his consideration. Since that time the great game has been conducted in a very different fashion, and even ponies now run for prizes never dreamed of in those early days. Capt. Hayes has much to say on this subject, and appears, since he left the service, to have trained horses at Calcutta as a profession. I am gratified to find that an opinion I have always held, that even for racing the Waler is the best horse for India, is accepted by such an authority. The racing Waler is, of course, an English thoroughbred reared in the Colonies; and, at the price which the stakes run for will allow to be paid, a better horse is procurable in the Colonies than in England.

Capt. Hayes gives a most interesting account of the racing at Shanghai, where, out of pure rivalry, to make sure of winning the local cup, Sir Robert Jardine paid four thousand guineas for Buckstone, after winning the Ascot Cup in 1863; but the horse died immediately after landing at Hong Kong. As the houses of Dent and Jardine could alone afford this game, racing for all horses soon came to an end, and the sport is now confined to China ponies, of which Capt. Hayes does not give a high character.

South Africa is another field where our author's experience in horses has been tested. He speaks disparagingly of the Cape-bred horses of the present day. Forty years ago those imported into India were quite equal to the best Walers of the time, and better tempered. But even then there was no regular trade for Cape horses, and they were only brought back to India by officers who had visited the Cape, a trip now entirely destroyed by the overland route, which has brought India within three weeks of home.

Capt. Hayes's account of his sojourn in many lands is written in a simple and pleasant style, and the work can be recommended to everyone interested in horses. The book is admirably got up, and well illustrated.

JAMES INNES MINCHIN.

NEW NOVELS.

A Sunless Heart. In 2 vols. (Ward, Lock & Bowden.)

Sarah: a Survival. By Sydney Christian. In 2 vols. (Sampson Low.)

The Fool of Destiny. By Colin Middleton. In 3 vols. (Hurst & Blackett.)

Red Cap and Blue Jacket. By George Dunn. In 3 vols. (Blackwoods.)

The Shen's Pigtail, and other Cues of Anglo-China Life. By Mr. M——. "Pseudonym Library." (Fisher Unwin.)

A Foolish Marriage. By Annie S. Swan. "Homespun Series." (Hutchinson.)

The Trial of Mary Broom. By Mrs. Coghill. "Homespun Series." (Hutchinson.)

UNLESS A Sunless Heart fails altogether to catch the attention of the great body of the reading public—and such failure is, I think, hardly possible—it will inspire exceptional interest, and be made the theme of excited discussion; for, whatever it may be, it is certainly not an ordinary book. To some readers it may appear attractively powerful and beautiful; to others it may seem repel- lently painful and morbid; but no one is likely to dismiss it as simply mediocre and insignificant. Of the three verdicts which are always possible, it may be said that A Sunless Heart presents a strong case for "good," a very plausible case for "bad," and for "indifferent" no case at all. As a narrative structure or organism, the book must be given over to the tormentors. The story of the brother and sister Gaspar and Gasparine, with its prevailing beauty and pathos, and its one grimly powerful chapter, "How Murders Happen," comes to a close with the death of Gaspar; and the transference of the interest to the one person who provides the book with a name and a raison d'être breaks the story in two, and deprives it of constructive unity. But then, as it happens, A Sunless Heart is not a novel in which constructive unity is not of the first importance. It is a work in which invention is quite subsidiary to imagination: it is not primarily a story of incident or even of character, but a study of naked emotion. For example, it can hardly be said that Lotus, one of the most impressively sombre creations in recent fiction, is in the strict sense of the word a character, any more than it can be said that Gaspar and Gasparine and Mona are characters. The reader will probably fail to realise what she is, but he will certainly realise what she feels, and most intimately and poignantly of all will he realise what she suffers. The title of the book is aptly chosen, inasmuch as the author deals not with an entire personality, but simply with a heart—a tortured heart in which the full possibilities of suffering are attained and exhausted. There would have been something morbid in the choice of such a theme had it been deliberately chosen; but A Sunless Heart owes its impressiveness and power very largely to the fact that it strikes one as being an instinctive book—a book which has behind it the irresistible compulsion of temperament and experience. What the author may be able to do apart from such compulsion is doubtful; but I think that there is in the story a power of imagination, as distinguished from a mere power of rendering, which suffices to encourage hope for the future. In the meantime, we have to deal with the present, and with this strange, gloomy, painful, but unmistakably fascinating novel. From what has been said it will be inferred that A Sunless Heart is not a book for the crowd; but those to whom it appeals at all will find that its appeal is a curiously strong one.

Sarah: a Survival, will be heartily enjoyed by simple-minded, old-fashioned people who, though they may tolerate the subtlety and "up-to-dateness" of contemporary fiction, love to escape into the wholesome common air from an atmosphere which, like opium, is either artificially stimulating or artificially depressing. It is the old story of a man and a maid, separated by space, circumstance, and other gulfs of division, but drawn each to each by the longest-known of all attractive forces; and it is told in the agreeable, leisured manner of a time when one novel per diem would have been considered the fare of a glutton. Sarah Thornborough is described as "a survival," and a very charming survival she is; but the book which gives her history is also a survival, and its charm is not less patent. If young people like Sarah and her cousin Gideon Leigh are produced now-a-days, it is much to be feared that they can be found only in some such out-of-the-world country home as Meads; while, as for the uncles, Dan and Dol, if they are not altogether extinct, they should receive the tender care due to the last members of an expiring race. I am saying next to nothing about the story as such, and in the case of many novels this would be a serious omission on the part of a critic; but in Sarah the mere narrative is so entirely made by the people, and is so much a part of the whole atmosphere of the book, that if it were pressed down into half a dozen sentences it might seem a thing of no account. The novel has very much of the emotional effect of a bright autumnal day. In the first chapter the reader thinks or feels himself in the quiet beginning of the century; and only when somebody mentions a bicycle, and somebody else makes a quotation from the Idylls of the King does he realise that he is in the living present. This may be an anachronism of tone; but I must confess that to me it is as pleasant as the sight of a Quaker bonnet in Bond-street. As the story proceeds it becomes more recognisably modern, though to the last it has an old-world air which is unspeakably soothing. Those who find this description at all appetising will do well to place Sarah somewhere near the top of their library list.

There is no doubt whatever that The Fool of Destiny is a much more symmetrical and, in a way, a more workmanlike novel than its predecessor, Imes of Blairavon; but then it is also a good deal more artificial and conventional, and for my own part I cannot bring myself to like it so well. In the former book Mr. Middleton had some good fresh material which he did not know how to utilise to the best advantage: here he has acquired a good deal of the novelist's knack, but the substance of his book is comparatively poor and hackneyed. Arthur Farquhar is the son—the legitimate son—of a distinguished and wealthy statesman who, in fulfilment of a promise made to his dying wife, keeps the boy in ignorance of his parentage. Arthur marries the wrong girl, loses her in a manner which I can only describe as glaringly absurd, discovers after her death that he has been the object of her bitter hate, and in sheer mental disorganisation and disgust with things in general, is on the point of entering the monastery of the Grande Chartreuse when he is rescued by the right girl, and—so I infer—happily married. The story is evidently intended to suggest the idea that Arthur's misfortunes are the result of his father's secrecy; but he is really one of those young men who—in a perfectly innocent sort of way—might be trusted to make a mess of his life under the most favourable circumstances. The main scheme of the book is, therefore, unsatisfactory; but some of the details are good, especially the University chapters and the character of the servant Sandy Mackay. Mr. Middleton is also to be congratulated upon his courage in giving us a rich self-made man who is not a vulgar cad but, in everything save birth, a gentleman.

Mr. Dunn is one of those novelists who speaks of his characters as "our friends." Also, when a young man (who, it must be noted, is not intended to be comic), expresses his feelings to a young woman, he does it in this fashion :

"The vital air is all the more vital because you share it. Oh, my dear, dear Bell, I cannot say how much I love you! Even Shakspeare could not express my feelings. And remember this, that my supreme wish is for your happiness. You are an orphan, and I am grieved at it; but I am glad too, for it permits me to have for you the care of a father and the tenderness of a mother, as well as the humility and devotion of a lover." "Kind, generous, noble youth!" stammered Bell, and burst into tears."

This is a sample of the sentiment: here is a touch of the humour. Mr. Simpson

"was very subdued in feeling, and even requested the minister to 'pit up a few words' before they took leave of him. 'For, ye ken, minister, we are goin' to do business on the mighty waters,' he said, by way of explanation. 'If you mean that you are going to be sea-sick, I hope not,' said Mr. Marjoribanks, with a humorous twinkle in his eye."

The heroics and the humorous twinkles are rather trying; but oases in the desert of farce and melodrama are provided by the chapters dealing with the sea-fight and with the reign of terror. They hardly suffice, however, to make Red Cap and Blue Jacket a praiseworthy novel.

The title-story is much the best thing in The Shen's Pigtail, for a detective tale with Chinese "properties" has obviously the virtue of novelty; and if, as here, it has the virtues of interest and ingenuity as well, it is worth reading. The multi-form disguises of the crafty Shen are happily invented, and the secret is well kept; so we have all the essentials of the kind of literature—I use the word as a matter of convenience—to which the story belongs. "A Little Chinese Party" is written with what may be described as reticent suggestiveness, and is not edifying; while "J's Last Horror," a sickening study of delirium tremens, has, so far as I can see, nothing to recommend it. The volume would have gained rather than lost by the omission of both these items; and though the literary etchings grouped under the general title "Office Men" are bitten in effectively with very mordant acid, it may be doubted whether they will greatly interest readers at large. On the other hand, "The General" is a capital portrait, which may be studied for profit as well as for entertainment by English officials abroad. Mr. M— knows how to deal successfully with Orientals.

Miss Annie S. Swan's latest story does not call for lengthy comment. It is shorter and slighter than most of her tales, but it has the quiet narrative interest and the wholesome sentiment which have won for her work such a wide popularity. Magdalen Grey, the daughter of a wealthy man who has been driven by bankruptcy to suicide, is left entirely without resources, and determines to support herself by assisting her rather grim maiden aunt, Miss Euphame, who keeps a boarding-house for medical students in Edinburgh. One of these boarders is the hero, the other the villain, of this little domestic drama, which has a pretty and fairly natural evolution; and few readers will find anything to complain of, except, perhaps, the sad ending, which does not seem inevitable.

The Trial of Mary Broom, by Mrs. Harry Coghill (Aunie L. Walker), is a story of good plot, interest, and quick exciting movement. It is founded, it would seem, upon historical events, in which the principal actors were the brother Elers, Dutch potters, who left their own country during the reign of their great countryman, William III., and settled at Bradwell, near Burslem. Their proficiency in their trade excited the jealousy of their English neighbours; and a real or imaginary conspiracy against them provides Mrs. Coghill with a motif, which she has skilfully and pleasantly utilised. The Trial of Mary Broom is a capital tale.

JAMES ASHCROFT NOBLE.

CURRENT LITERATURE.

Post-Prandial Philosophy. By Grant Allen. (Chatto & Windus.) This is by a man well known in the literary world, whose work always commands attention, often admiration even, and sometimes respect. The papers which compose the volume appeared originally in a London evening journal, but in their present form they demand sterner criticism and certainly arouse less pleasure in the reader. Post-Prandial Philosophy is, it is true, a book everybody ought to have; but it is also a book with which everybody ought to feel a little irritated. No essay is more than six or seven pages long: pages often suggestive and thought-provoking, invariably witty but tiresomely inadequate. They deal with all Mr. Allen's favourite hobbies: American women, the House of Lords, Democracy, London, patriotism, and marriage. They are all worth reading; but behind the paradox and the humour lurks the sneer; and the reader has an uncomfortable feeling that in the few paragraphs devoted to each subject Mr. Allen thinks he has settled conclusively every difficulty that troubles us in the understanding of these subjects. But you cannot solve a problem by a paradox, nor regenerate society by an epigram. Such a remark as "Patriotism is a vulgar vice of which I have never been guilty" either does harm or else makes us sorry for its author: it does not persuade us that patriotism is wrong. His assertion that aristocracies remain "at a lower grade of civilisation and morals than the democracy they live among" is a dangerous half-truth that blinks at the facts of history both of the past and the present. To assert that the "love of gew-gaws, of titles" animating the aristocrat proves him of "a lower grade of mental and moral status" is to forget that the middle class loves these symbols still more fervently, strives for them more earnestly and, perhaps, less scrupulously. To scoff at our public schools because, after all, "they turn out English gentlemen" is to make an unworthy jest at the expense of honour, courtesy, and courage. Were our public schools to become "real public schools, like the board schools," it has yet to be proved—it may be seriously doubted—whether such a thing as an English gentleman could be; and even Mr. Grant Allen will acknowledge that he is better than the half-educated prig. "Sincerity," says Carlyle, "is the first characteristic of all men in any way heroic." And heroism and sincerity have always been—and justly—regarded as the attributes of the English gentleman. Even paradox, though it sits enthroned to-day, wearing the crown that belongs to solid wisdom, can neither deny the past nor shape the future. It is sometimes hurtful. Mr. Allen's book is clever, delightful often, truthful too often enough; but it is spoiled by aiming at a cheap success, and bidding the unwary to acclaim as verity what is only smartness. To the thinker it is useful and suggestive; to him who does not think it may be dangerous.

Charles Whitehead: a Forgotten Genius. By Mackenzie Bell. (Ward, Lock & Bowden.) This book originally appeared nearly ten years ago, and was at that time reviewed at some length in the columns of the ACADEMY. The present work is described on its title-page as a "new edition"; but if we are to use this term strictly, the description is hardly justified. Mr. Mackenzie Bell in the opening sentences of his latest preface tells us that bound copies of his first edition have become scarce, and that "the awakened interest in Whitehead (shown by the publication in a cheap form of his novel, Richard Savage, as well as by the insertion of a selection from his poetry in The Poets and the Poetry of the Century) have rendered a re-issue of the unbound 'remainder' of my volume desirable."

Despite the evidence adduced—which is surely somewhat slender—Mr. Mackenzie Bell probably mistakes the slight turn of a sleeper for an actual "awakening"; but, after all, the re-issue of a pleasant, readable book stands in no need of justifying plea. We only desire, for the sake of the reader, to note the fact that this is a re-issue rather than a new edition, the only novelties which it contains being the preface from which we have quoted, a revised reprint of a very sympathetic appreciation of Whitehead contributed by Mr. Hall Caine in 1889 to the September number of Temple Bar, an article by an Australian journalist, a facsimile of Whitehead's MS., and a useful index. Mr. Hall Caine's essay, pleasing as it is, is necessarily slight. It was written mainly as a contribution to information, not to criticism; and many of its pages are devoted to little more than a workmanlike summary of the book which it now introduces. What criticism there is seems to us here and there a little overcharged. Though it is more than thirty years since the present writer read Richard Savage, he remembers it well as a striking and vigorous story; but surely to say "the novel is one which Fielding himself might have written" conveys an altogether exaggerated impression; and though Mr. Hall Caine protects himself by several "hedging" clauses, the general statement remains. Then, too, Mr. Hall Caine, after telling the story of how a man of great talents and fine opportunities died in the destitution brought about by habitual drunkenness, says that Whitehead was "one of the strongest souls, as I verily believe, on whom the world has yet turned its back." Winning, fascinating, opulent, the soul of Whitehead may have been; but strong—no. That Whitehead was a man of considerable imaginative power and literary ability is indisputable. Mr. Mackenzie Bell is quite right in feeling that he ought not to be forgotten; but the world's memory is capricious, and even good criticism such as this volume contains is powerless to direct its whimsical activities. The vogue of Whitehead—even in the face of the cheap edition of Richard Savage and Mr. Miles's Anthology—is dead; and Mr. Bell cannot reanimate it. His book is, however, a very agreeable one—pleasant to the eye, and also good for food if one's hunger does not demand very solid diet.

Our English Cousins. By Richard Harding Davis. (Sampson Low.) Dr. Johnson once said that "books of travel will be good in proportion to what a man has previously in his mind: his knowing what to observe; his power of contrasting one mode of life with another."

Mr. Davis, to some extent, realises the Doctor's ideal of a traveller. He is well informed, extremely acute, and not so bigoted as to give in every contrasted case the verdict to his own countrymen. It cannot be said that he has delved deeply into the intricacies of English society: his observations display no very profound thought. But his book is thoroughly good-natured and really well written. There are five chapters in all, the best of which deal with undergraduate life in Oxford and the East-end of London. Mr. Davis would seem to have set himself seriously to understand the manners and customs of the University; his commendable endeavour is, on the whole, signally successful. He makes one serious blunder in the matter of taste when he declares that "the town (?) of Oxford is at its best during the week in which the eight-oared boats of the twenty colleges belonging to the University row for mastery on the river. It is then filled with people up from London." So keen an observer as Mr. Davis should have perceived how this latter statement contradicts the first. We like better his shrewd comment on the undergraduate, "as the most interesting combination of shyness and audacity I had ever met"; and this, as a criticism of those in authority, "It struck me that an Oxford don mixes some high living with his high thinking." The triumph of the chapter, however, is the carefully-written account of the "bumping" races. Herein were pitfalls for the unwary; but their mystery has never before, even by Englishmen, been so neatly explained. Henceforth the American of the furthest west shall look in vain for sympathy if he fails to understand them. In his account of East London, Mr. Davis reaches a higher level than anywhere else in the book. A little volume of stories called Gallegher proved that he was capable of treating the life of the New York slums with power; and here he gives evidence of still greater achievement. Unfortunately Mr. Van Bibber, a rather foolish young gentleman of vast wealth, seems to claim Mr. Davis as his historian in fiction, and the brighter phases of English life fill more than three-quarters of the present volume. This is to be regretted, for though Mr. Davis appears to do all things well, there are some things he does much better than others; and he certainly does best what he seems least willing to do. The illustrations are often admirable, and never other than good. But why is the artist's name not mentioned?

The Grandee. By Armando Palacio Valdés, translated by Rachel Chalice. (Heinemann.) This is the second of Palacio Valdés' novels that has been translated in Heinemann's "International Library." The title, whether in Spanish or English, hardly corresponds with the contents. "The Grandee" is scarcely a translation of "El Maestrante," which means a member of a club for the practice of knightly exercises; and in the novel "el maestrante" is by no means the most prominent character. If Lancia, as Mr. Gosse assures us on the authority of the author, be really Oviedo, it is the second time in recent years that its society has been made the subject of a novel. The scene of La Regente by Leopoldo Alas (Clarín), a work of higher literary value than this of Valdés, is also laid there; and a more morally repulsive condition of society than that depicted in both these novels it is difficult to conceive. The character of the Maestrante shows nothing of true nobility and chivalry surviving in direct poverty, as is admirably depicted for us in some of the sketches of Pereda and of Doña Emilia Pardo Bazan, but only a sham and caricature of it. The novel is powerful in parts, and in the character of Amelia; but it is not one to have pleased Darwin, and those who, like him, require all novels to end happily. Though probably true to nature, the closing pages rouse in us only horror and disgust. In his introduction on the Spanish novel, Mr. Gosse is slightly confused on one point. The father of Fernán Caballero, J. N. Bohl de Faber, belonged to the romantic as opposed to the classical school in Spain; but this applied almost wholly to poetry and the drama. His daughter, Cecilia, who wrote under the name of Fernán Caballero, was never at the head of the Walterscottistas; their chief was the literary statesman, Martínez de la Rosa, with his novel, Doña Isabel de Solís, and one of his last followers is a far greater living statesman, Cánovas del Castillo, in his La Campana de Huesca. Fernán Caballero inaugurated a very different school, the Novela de Costumbres, which has produced works of far greater value than any which the Walterscottistas have done; and, besides, they have helped the study of folk-lore in Spain, in all that it has of real value.

The Englishman at Home, by Edward Porritt (Putnam's Sons), is a valuable book of reference, and also well enough written to interest those more or less familiar with its subject. The scheme Mr. Porritt has chosen is clear and sensible, and no one can study it without being wiser on many points. Its author skilfully avoids controversy, and yet makes his pages suggestive. He deals in a masterly way with such topics as municipal government, taxation, the administration of justice, the services both civil and military, and the press. Americans will glean from it a precise and correct knowledge of the way the Englishman is governed and governs; the Englishman himself will find a good deal made clear and definite that before was, even to him, something of a mystery. It is a useful and a clever book.

NOTES AND NEWS.

THE veteran author, Dr. Samuel Smiles, who is now approaching his eightieth year, has written a biography—or, as he prefers to call it, a personal history—of Josiah Wedgwood, the potter, which will be published by Mr. John Murray in the course of the autumn.

MR. ERIC MACKAY is preparing for the press a new volume of poems, including lyrics, sonnets, and odes. One of the odes was published last spring on the eve of Mr. Swinburne's birthday, and was accordingly inscribed to him. But in its amended form it will be entitled "Ode to an Ideal Poet," no living writer being named in it.

MESSRS. LONGMANS & Co. have in the press a book by Dr. Luckock, the Dean of Lichfield, on The History of Marriage, Jewish and Christian, with special reference to divorce and certain prohibited degrees.

MESSRS. HENRY will publish John Oliver Hobbes's new novel. It is entitled, The Gods, Some Mortals, and Lord Wickenham, and is considerably longer than any of this author's previous works.

THE same firm have in preparation a work entitled With Wilson in Matabeleland. The author, Capt. C. H. Donovan, of the Army Service Corps, was in South Africa shooting big game when the war broke out. He then joined Major Wilson's staff. The book, which is illustrated from photographs taken on the spot, is divided into two parts, treating first of sport in Zambesia, and secondly of the Lobengula expedition.

Historical Notices of the Parish of Southam in Warwickshire, by Mr. W. L. Smith, is announced by Mr. Elliot Stock for immediate publication. The work will contain an historical introduction, with accounts of the celebrated people who have been connected with the district, the parish registers from 1539, and the church accounts from 1580.

MESSRS. W. H. ALLEN & Co. will publish in the course of next week The Industrial and Social Life and Duties of the Citizen, by Mr. J. C. Parrott, with chapters on associations of workers, including trade unions, co-operative societies and friendly societies, and the state in relation to labour. The book is written on the lines laid down in Part III. of the new Education Code for evening classes.

MESSRS. HENRY will issue during this month Disillusion, a novel in three volumes, by Miss Dorothy Leighton; and also Mr. Barry Pain's new book, The Kindness of the Celestial.

MESSRS. WALTER SCOTT & Co. announce a re-issue, in bi-monthly volumes, of their popular series of "Canterbury Poets," which began to appear ten years ago under the editorship of Mr. William Sharp. The first volume will be Longfellow, to be followed by Shelley.

A SECOND edition of A Girl's Ride in Iceland, by Mrs. Alice Tweedie, will be published in a few days by Mr. Horace Cox.

MR. W. H. PRICE, the chief clerk of the Diocesan Registry at Chester, reports to Dr. Furnivall that since the spring he has found nearly a hundred more instances of child-marriages in the diocese of Chester near the close of the sixteenth century. He hopes, in course of time, to print these for the Early English Text Society.

MR. W. FERGUSSON IRVINE, of Cloughton, has just completed his copies of some Early English deeds and pleas, dated about 1370, twenty years after "the grete dethe," or black death, of 1349. These will be published in the Transactions of the Historic Society of Lancashire and Cheshire.

THE Early English Text Society has just told its members that, for its advance-issue of Texts, the following are now ready, and will be sent at once on receipt of subscriptions: Original series, 1895, 1896, 1897:—The Exeter Book (Anglo-Saxon Poems), ed. Gollancz, Part I. (1895); The Prymer or Lay Folk's Prayer-Book, ed. Littlehales, Part I. (1895); Misyn's Fire of Love and Mending of Life, ed. Harvey (1896); The English Conquest of Ireland, ed. Furnivall (1896); Child-Marriages and Divorces, Chester, ed. Furnivall (1897); Queen Elizabeth's Englishings of Boethius, &c., is all passed for press, and will be issued for 1897. Extra series, 1895: The Three Kings' Sons, c. 1500, ed. Furnivall (1895); Melusine, The Prose Romance, c. 1500, ed. Donald, is all passed for press. It and four other Texts for 1896-7 are all set, and will be ready three months after money for them comes in. Part I. is all printed. After the present issue, the advance publication of Texts will be discontinued, as some members of the committee object to incurring further possible liability. The response of members to the appeal for advance subscriptions has not been encouraging.

A COMMITTEE has been formed at Newcastle—of which Sir Matthew White Ridley is president, and Dr. Thomas Hodgkin is treasurer—to place a memorial over the grave of Robert Roxby, the fisher poet of Northumberland, who died in 1846 at the age of seventy-eight. Newcastle has recently commemorated in a similar manner the names of John Cunningham, Charles Avison, and William Shield.

THE results of the L.A. Examination at the University of St. Andrews have just been issued, from which it appears that 926 candidates entered for examination at 61 centres this year, as compared with 775 at 45 centres in 1893, and 699 candidates at 42 centres in 1892. Taking a joint view of all the subjects in which candidates entered, 1519 papers were written, passes were obtained in 891 instances, and honours in 234. In the prospectus for 1895 important changes are introduced, making certain subjects obligatory, and requiring candidates to pass in the subjects they select for examination before attempting honours.

We must be content this week to record, with sorrow, the death of Mr. Walter Pater, which took place at Oxford, very suddenly, last Monday.

ORIGINAL VERSE.

THE INFINITE.

I.

Far off, and very far !
Beyond the crystal sea ;
Beyond the worlds that are Unknown, or known to be ;
Beyond the pearly star ;
The clustering nebulae ;
Beyond dark gulphs we see
Where rolls no glittering car—
At last, at last, we come to thee,
The finite to Infinity !

II.

Ere yet, and evermore !
Before the day's delight ;
Before the dawn, before
Apollo in his might Sped forth by sea and shore ;
And after many a night,
When all the hours take flight,
Forth issuing from death's door—
Behold, behold, in death's despite Eternal looms the Infinite !

SAMUEL WADDINGTON.

MAGAZINES AND REVIEWS.

THE July number of the Jewish Quarterly Review (David Nutt) opens with a paper by Mr. Joseph Jacobs, entitled "Notes on the MS. Sources of the History of the Jews in Spain." About six years ago he visited Spain, in order to discover what unprinted materials there were in the public libraries and archives for the history of the Jews before their expulsion in 1492. His researches will shortly be published in a large volume, containing a sort of calendar of 2500 documents, together with appendices. On the present occasion he points out some of the more interesting results. They throw strong light upon the financial relations of the Jews with the early kings and archbishops, upon the numerous trades which they followed, upon the conduct of the Inquisition, and upon the origin of Hispano-Jewish names. Special praise is given to Pamplona, for the care with which it has preserved and catalogued the old archives of Navarre. Incidentally, Mr. Jacobs mentions that he has found in the British Museum what is apparently the original decree for the expulsion of the Jews from the Two Sicilies, dated 1504. It is curious to find no less than three articles in this number devoted to "The Song of Songs." Dr. M. Friedländer gives an analysis of the plot, from a novel and ingenious point of view; Dr. S. Schechter prints the first portion of a Midrash on the book, from a MS. at Parma, which he believes to be the original of later commentaries; and there is a review of a theory that the book is intended for a dream. Finally, we should mention that the Rev. R. H. Charles continues his new translation of the Book of Jubilees.

SELECTED FOREIGN BOOKS.

GENERAL LITERATURE.

- GALLI, H. De sousa diplomatiques: dix ans de politique étrangère (1884-1893). Paris: Garnier. 3 fr. 50 c.
KEUFFER, M. Beschreibendes Verzeichnis der Handschriften der Stadtbibliothek zu Trier. 3. Hft. Trier: Lintz. 8 M.
MACÉ, Jean. Saint-Evremond: étude. Paris: Hetzel. 1 fr. 25 c.
OLLIVIER-BEAUREGARD. La Cavalerie égyptienne: historique, politique et morale. Paris: Thorin. 12 fr.
SCHWENKE, P., u. K. LANGER. Die Silberbibliothek Herzog Albrechts v. Preussen u. seiner Gemahlin Anna Maria. Leipzig: Hiersemann. 25 M.
SOUVENIRS de Sébastopol, recueillis et rédigés par Alexandre III., Empereur de Russie. Traduction de N. Notvitch. Paris: Ollendorff. 7 fr. 50 c.
ZOLLA, Daniel. Les Questions agricoles d'hier et d'aujourd'hui. Paris: A. can. 3 fr. 50 c.

THEOLOGY, ETC.

- ARNOLD, C. F. Caesarius v. Arelate u. die gallische Kirche seiner Zeit. Leipzig: Hinrichs. 16 M.
ROHRBACH, P. Der Schluss d. Markusevangeliums, der Vier-Evangelien-Kanon u. die kleinasiatischen Presbyter. Berlin: Neuck. 1 M. 20 Pf.

HISTORY, ETC.

- LAUTER, Th. Vorgeschichte u. Einführung d. Kölnischen Vergleichs v. 1652. Regensburg: Wunderling. 3 M.
MARTYNOLOGIUM, Hieronymianum, ad fidem codicum adiectis prolegomenis edd. J. B. de Rossi et L. Duchesne. Paris: Thorin. 40 fr.
SITTEL, C. Die Grenzbezeichnung der Römer. Ein Beitrag zur Limes Frage. Würzburg: Stabel. 1 M. 50 Pf.

PHYSICAL SCIENCE AND PHILOSOPHY.

- ANDERSSON, A. Physikalische Prinzipien der Naturlehre. Halle: Schwetschke. 1 M. 63 Pf.
BASTIAN, A. Controversen in der Ethnologie. IV. Fragestellungen der Finalursachen. Berlin: Weidmann. 5 M.
CHRISTIANI, J. G. Ueb. die Waldarbeitverhältnisse auf dem badischen Schwarzwald. Karlsruhe: Gutsch. 2 M.
KUESTENMACHER, M. Beiträge zur Kenntnis der Gallenbildungen m. Berücksicht. des Gerbstoffes. Berlin: Borntraeger. 4 M.
WALTHER, J. Einführung in die Geologie als historische Wissenschaft. 3. Thl. Lithogenese der Gegenwart. Jena: Fischer. 13 M.
WEISMANN, A. Aeusserere Einflüsse als Entwicklungsreize. Jena: Fischer. 2 M.

PHILOLOGY, ETC.

- FÜRSTENMANN, E. Zur Entzifferung der Mayahandschriften. IV. Dresden: Bertling. 1 M.
MERGERT, H. Lexikon zu den Schriften Cicero's. 2. Thl. Lexikon zu den philosoph. Schriften. 16. Hft. Jena: Fischer. 8 M.

CORRESPONDENCE.

GROUP C AND THE THREE PRIESTS IN THE "CANTERBURY TALES."

London: July 26, 1894.

Two statements in Prof. Skeat's last Chaucer volume call for a mild protest from me.

1. At p. 434 he makes what I think an unfair statement about my moving Group C (the Doctor's and Pardoner's Tales) up to the place between Groups B and D. Of this Group C he says:

"In the best MSS., it follows the Frankeleyn's Tale; and such is, in my belief, its proper position. This arrangement was arbitrarily altered by Dr. Furnivall, in order, I suppose, to emphasise the fact that the relative order of the Groups may be altered at pleasure."

A reader of this paragraph naturally supposes that I gave no reasons for putting Group C where I did; and I think that fairness required that Prof. Skeat should have stated these reasons, printed in 1868. I now enlarge them. I found that all the MSS. of the Tales put some of them in wrong order, and that they must be re-arranged. Looking to the fourth day, or last ten miles of the pilgrimage, I found that eight long Tales were assigned to it by the MSS., and that the first of these contained the fact that the time was "pryme," while the fourth implied—at least, in my opinion—that its Group was a morning one, and the fifth was begun ere the pilgrims "fully had riden fyve myle." Four Tales for four miles—and eight for ten miles—were clearly too many. The scribes having two Groups of morning Tales, F and C, without note of place, had carelessly (as I think) put one after the other. They had also left the third day's journey without any morning Group. I found that Addit. MS. 25,718 put Group C between its imperfect D and E, that Arch. Seld. B 14—the only MS. which has Group B right—put it after G and before D 2; and that three other MSS. shifted one Tale of it. I therefore felt free to suggest the change of Group C from the fourth day, where it was not wanted, to the morning of the third day, where it was wanted, and thus made the third day's Tales equal in number to the second day's, and left a reasonable lot of six Tales for the ten miles of the fourth day's journey. This change was not, I think, an arbitrary, but a justifiable, one; the reasons for it were quietly stated on pp. 24-27 of my Temporary Preface to my Six-text Canterbury Tales; and my note to Group C on p. 42 is, "This Group may go on any morning. It is put here to make the Tales of the third day not less than those of the second." So much for my arbitrariness. Now for Prof. Skeat's.

2. The two last lines of Chaucer's description of the Prioress are in all good MSS. of the Tales, and are (I say) certainly genuine:

"Another Nonne also with hir had she,
That was hir Chapelayn, and Prestes thre."

Tyrwhitt and others thought it too great a trouble to look out the early meanings of Chaucer, and find that one was "amanuensis, secretary," and therefore said the last line was spurious, as "The chief duty of a Chaplain was to say Mass, and to hear Confession, neither of which offices could regularly be performed by a Nonne, or by any woman." Prof. Skeat has, however, looked out Capellanus in D'Arnis and Ducange, or my Temp. Pref. 184 n., and rightly treats the Prioress's "Chapelleyn" as genuine; but he rejects the "Prestes thre" as spurious, because only one Nun's Priest tells a Tale.

Now in 1876 I printed in the Chaucer Society's Essays (pp. 181-196), the Record Office MS. "Survey of the Abbey or Monastery of St. Mary, Winchester, May 14, 1537"—without knowing that it was before in the second edition of Dugdale—and there found (Essays, p. 192):

"THE CHAPELEYN OF THE SAYD MONASTERY.

Mr. John Hasard, confessor } sir John Hylton }
sir Walter Bayly } V
sir Walter Dashewod }
sir Wylliam Orton." }

On which I said (p. 186):

"Our Survey of St. Mary's shows that there were no less than five chaplains in the Monastery, who, I take it, from their titles of 'Magister' (the Confessor) and 'Sir,' must have been all priests. Surely two of these must have been enough to do all the religious work of the monastery; and the other three priests might well have been spared for a holiday outing to Canterbury or elsewhere, in company with their Prioress and one of her Nuns. The 'Magister' would be specially 'The Nonnes Preet,' the two 'Sirs,' being looked on as his underlings. So we don't want any alteration whatever of Chaucer's text."

I back the Tales MSS. and this Survey against the whole crew of editors.

Prof. Skeat's dictum on p. 504 surely applies to these "Prestes thre":

"If we are to go through the Tales, picking out and setting aside as spurious every passage which does not please us, the result can only be unsatisfactory. . . . I see no reason why we may not be content with the Tales in the form presented by the best MSS."

One can forgive Prof. Skeat for re-writing or re-spelling Chaucer, pipeclaying and ironing him, but one prays him to spare the "Prestes thre." No doubt he has kept them in his forthcoming text of the Tales.

F. J. FURNIVALL.

P.S.—May I copy another bit from my foretold to the St. Mary's Survey? As our English girls are not educated in convents,

"I had often wondered why Chaucer made such a great point of the fine manners, the deportment, of his Prioress. One would have expected, in a description of the Presidentess or Vice-Presidentess of a religious house, that her religion or her holiness, her worn features or her abstraction from human vanities, would have been most dwelt on. But no; with Chaucer, the Prioress's nice manners are his chief theme. Why? Because, as the following 'Survey' shows, the Prioress must have been 'finishing governess,' like her sister of St. Mary's, to perhaps 'xxi] Chyldren of lordys, knyghtes, and gentylmen, brought yu [her] Monastery.' In early days, deportment was of far greater importance than it is now—see my Babes Book (E. E. T. Soc., 1868)—and therefore Chaucer rightly makes the most of his Prioress's pretty ways."

"DINNER."

II.

Sydenham Hill, S.E.

Dinner was, however, not unfrequently taken a good deal later than 9 a.m. Thus iv. 52, it was "sur le point de 10 h."; iii. iii. it was later, for the Duc de Bretagne entered Paris at "sur le point de dix heures un matin," and passed through a considerable part of the town (the route is given) before he arrived at the "Chastel du Louvre," and found the king still at dinner; iv. 51, it began after 11 a.m., for the King of England, who was to dine with the King of France, did not arrive till "sur le point de onze heures," and it was after this that the dinner tables were prepared. Again, i. 139, we are told that the King of France walked from Calais to Boulogne (nearly twenty miles) "en pèlerinage à Notre Dame de Boulogne" — "devant diner," so that the dinner could not have been very early. In iv. 8, the Comte de Foix came to dine with the king; he did not start till 10 a.m., and when he arrived at the "Châtel de Toulouse" he had a long conference (parlement) with the king, and then they dined, at what hour is not stated, but after dinner they remained two hours in the Chambre deparlement, where they had "vin et épices," and it was "sur le point de quatre heures après nonne" that the count took his leave. This Comte de Foix, in his own castle, kept very late hours. Thus (iii. 13) we find him at dinner somewhere about sunset; and we are told that the custom of the count was "qu'il se couchoit et levoit à haute nonne et soupoit à mie nuit," and one of these suppers is described in the same chapter. Other people also supped very late, from which we may infer that they dined late also. Thus (iv. 16) two suppers are described that took place "à l'hôtel de l'évêque de Londres," and the dancing which took place, I should say, both before and after the supper lasted until daybreak. Of one of these suppers it is said, "si fute le souper bel et grand et bien dansé et continué toute la nuit jusques au jour." The day of his death, too, (see iv. 23) the Comte de Foix would have dined late if he had lived. He had been hunting a bear all the morning, "jusques à la haute nonne." This bear was caught, and by time the curée was finished, "ja étoit basse nonne."† Then he asked where the dinner had been prepared, and they told him "à l'hôpital d'Erlon à deux petites lieues." So they went on there at once ("tout le pas chevauchant"); and when they arrived at the "hôtel," the count talked for some time about the chase, and then, while washing his hands before dinner, he had some sort of a fit and died.

Nor were these long and late dinners at all uncommon. Comp. i. (part 2) 155, 158 ("les nobles diners, les soupers et les festoiments" and other dinners are mentioned, 160; ii. 160 (bis, one of which is "et donnoit . . . de grands diners, soupers, et banquets"), 233, iii. 41 (where the Duke of Lancaster dined with the King of Portugal "et si furent en ce déduit jusques à la nuit"). In this same chapter there are two or three other grand dinners; iii. 46, 59 (a dinner "beau et long et bien ordonné"), 64 (the Duke of Bretagne kept his barons "en souldas et en paroles amoureuses jusques à la nuit"), 71 ("le diner fut grand et bel et bien servi"), and followed as often by "vin et épices" (see note *), 85, 88; iv. 1 (bis, the second time, the dinner was considerably after noon), 4 ("si fut le diner bel et long et bien étoffé"), 8, 9 ("un diner qui coûta plus de mille francs"), 18 (bis).

With regard to the hour at which the desjeuner was taken, there is (as I have already said) but one passage which throws any light upon the matter. It is in iv. 28. Pierre de Craon had attempted to murder Olivier de Cligon, "connétable de France," at his hotel in Paris, and after his attempt had left Paris at 1 a.m. He arrived at Chartres, "sur le point de huit heures" and breakfasted, or rather, broke his fast ("s'étoit déjeuné") at once; and in the preceding page this same meal is designated by the words "Messire Pierre, quand il fut venu à Chartres, but un coup," which shows with vin et épices. And even at the present time in France at an afternoon call, if anything is given it is Malaga or some such wine or liqueur, with or without cakes, though of late years the English custom is sometimes adopted and tea is given. In conclusion, the room is often not mentioned, and once (iv. 78) the vin et épices would seem to have been served in the dining-room, and, perhaps also in iv. 4, 62, while in iv. 51, as the dinner took place in the tent of the King of France, the wine, &c., had to be taken there. The passages from which I have deduced all that I have said are: ii. 85; iii. 18, 40, 58, 59, 71, 85; iv. 1, 4, 18, 51, 62, 63, 66, 69, 78.

† I am sorry that I am unable to say at what time haute nonne, let alone basse nonne, was in Froissart's time. Originally, no doubt, nonne meant the ninth hour, or 3 p.m. But as in Mid. Eng. noon (which is derived from it) seems early to have meant midday, very likely nonne did so in France. At all events, haute nonne can scarcely have been earlier than twelve, and basse nonne was evidently later.

that, as I have already said, boire in the morning might include eating. Another meal taken by those who were pursuing Pierre, and apparently a good deal later, is called their "diner"; and this word is separated by nine or ten lines only from the "s'étoit déjeuné" given above.

The conclusion I come to is, that in the time of Froissart at any rate, the breakfast and the dinner were such distinct meals that they were never really confounded. At the same time, the dinner was generally taken so early that the same person may not always have taken both meals, and this, as now, would especially be the case with those of the higher classes. If a copious meal was taken earlier than was the usual time for dinner, it might be called either desjeuner as breaking the fast, or diner, as partaking of the nature of a dinner and perhaps replacing it, as in the passage already quoted, iv. 75. But, as even the dinner commonly took place as early as nine or ten o'clock, it is not surprising that in some parts of France as in "le Morvan" diner should still, as G. Paris tells us, be used of the morning meal, and gouter of the midday meal (see de Chambure, s. v. déjeuner). At the same time, G. Paris is certainly wrong when he says that in "toute la Suisse romande" diner se dit du repas qu'on prend en se levant, souvent de grand matin et même dans la nuit." I cannot speak for the whole of Romance Switzerland, in which several dialects are used, but in Conrad's Dict. and Grammar der Romanisch-deutschen Sprache, as it is spoken in the Grisons, the word dina is not even given, the word used for breakfast being "anzolver and collation" (= It. colazione), and for dinner "jentar." In the South of France, dina(r) is certainly used for the second meal, whilst dejuna and even desdejuna †† (= Lat. disejunare?) represents breakfast. See Mistral, who tells us that "hors le temps de la moisson, le diner des paysans provençaux a lieu vers 8 or 9 heures du matin, et celui des bourgeois vers midi." But this is not always so, for a friend of mine living at Antibes, inquired directly, at my request, of some peasants in his neighbourhood, and found that they dined at twelve, and used the word dina(r) of the meal; and even when it is taken at eight or nine, it is very likely not the first meal.

It seems to me, indeed, that the word diner (in one or other form) is more used in the south of France than in the other parts. I have often been surprised to find how little it is used among the peasants, though now, no doubt, since communication is so easy, the word is everywhere understood. Where I have made inquiries (which was not in the south), I have generally found that dinner was called either la soupe or else gouter, and that the word diner was not used. As long as the French soldiers had bouilli and the broth resulting from its preparation twice a day, the two meals were called la soupe du matin et la soupe du soir, the former being their dinner. And even now, when they have soup once only, neither of the meals is called diner, but repas du matin and repas du soir are the terms used, as I have been informed by a French officer. I am, consequently, inclined to believe that the word diner originated in Italy, especially as there desinar (disinar) is more especially used of the dinner of the poorer classes, whilst pranzo and pranzar are rather used of the more delicate dinner of those who are in a higher social station. In Tuscany, indeed (as a Tuscan lady tells me), among the labourers, the substantive used is commonly †† Dejuna means not only to breakfast, but also, and probably in the first instance, to fast = It. digiunare; and this is why there is also the verb desdejuna, which Mistral tells us is now less used than dejuna, but is almost certainly older

* The vin et épices (sometimes called vin alone, as ii. 85, iii. 59) were taken after dinner, but not always immediately, and then the interval was filled up with conversation, light or serious, and sometimes with recitations or improvisations (iii. 71). There was commonly a special room for this purpose, just as at Cambridge the fellows of the colleges adjourn after dinner to the Combination Room, and there is, very likely, some relationship between these two customs. This special room is called in Froissart chambre du roi et chambre de parlement, and twice we have the more general term galeries (iii. 18, 58). Once (iii. 71) there is parlement, instead of parlement; is this a mistake, or was the room sometimes so-called on account of the serious conversation which occasionally took place there? (see iv. 8.) On one occasion, indeed (iv. 63), the conversation waxed so hot that the king gave no orders for the vin et épices to be brought, and went and shut himself up. The expression chambre de parlement is three times used = chambre du roi, viz., iii. 40, 61, iv. 63; but in two other passages (iii. 59, 71) it is used when the dinner was given by persons of very high but inferior rank, viz., by the Duke of Lancaster and the Duc de Bretagne. In the latter case, however, the word used is parlement. On the other hand, the Comte de Foix retired after dinner to his galeries (iii. 18, 58), where, no doubt, wine was served, though it is not mentioned. Sometimes, again, no dinner is mentioned, as in iii. 40, iv. 51, 66, 69, and in all but the second passage the guests seem to have come in in the afternoon and to have been served desina; and as there is no such corresponding substantive in French, and it is at least as likely (if not more likely) that desina preceded the verb, as that it is derived from it, this is certainly some slight argument in favour of the Italian origin of the word. This desina (or disina) takes place at midday. The word is accented on the i; and it seems to me extremely unlikely that the Fr. disner should have given rise to a form disinar (desinar), with a vowel inserted between the s and the n, and that the corresponding substantive should have the accent on the inserted vowel.

But if the French word disner comes from Italy, what becomes of G. Paris's elaborate derivation? It falls to the ground at once. He himself thinks that "L'ital. disinare or desinare peut venir directement de disjunare comme aitare de ajutare," but he is evidently of opinion that the French word has no further relationship to the Ital. one than a common origin from disjunare. I, for my part, fail to see that the form aitare, which, besides, is much less used than ajutare, affords any ground for the belief that disjunare would yield disinare. A vowel a would not be unlikely to keep a j (= i) after it; but can the same be said of the consonant s followed by a j, especially when it is remembered that a Lat. j ordinarily becomes gi (= our j) in Italian? Diez has become disgi in disgiogare and in disgiungere, so that, if disjunare had been turned into Italian, it would, no doubt, have produced disgiunare, or, at most, digiunare, for digiungere has been used = disgiungere. And there is indeed the word digiunare (which, however, Diez, s.v. giunare derives from di and giunare); but, unfortunately, it means the exact opposite, viz., to fast. In Provençal, however, dejuna means both jeûner and déjeuner, and in the latter sense = desdejunare, which is also used as I have already had occasion to remark (see note ††).

It is significant also that the earliest passages in which the L. Latin disnare has been found are from Italian sources, Diez's quotations of the ninth century ("disnavi me ibi," &c.) being from W. Grimm's Glosses of the Vatican, whilst Papias (from whom I have quoted what I have been unable myself to find) was a native of Lombardy, and lived in the eleventh century. At the present time, too, the Piedmontese form is disné (Sant'Albino) the Bolognese dsnar (Ferrari), the Venetian disnar (Boerio). In the Sicilian and Neapolitan dialects I do not find the word, but in that of Reggio there is disnèr (there is no author's name to my dictionary, but it was published at Reggio in 1832). All this seems to point to the north of Italy as the place where the word may have originated, though it by no means excludes a French, and especially a southern French origin. And Diez can scarcely have been in favour of the French origin of the word, else he would not have considered its derivation under the Italian form desinare.

In conclusion, G. Paris seems to attach some importance to the fact that disnavi me, &c., is found in the ninth century, whilst se is also used with desjunar (or desjeûner). But he does not seem to have remarked that se was thus used in Old French with many verbs which to us do not seem to require it. Indeed, this se seems chiefly to have been used of those actions which are performed for the benefit of an individual, and cannot well be performed for him by any one else. See Littré s.v. se (§ 8). He quotes se dormir, se gesir, seisir, se demeurer; and he compares s'en aller, s'enfuir and s'écrier. He might have added se souper (Godefroy). In Prov. also (see Mistral) we find se cenar, se soupa.

I must apologise for the length of this note, the more especially as all my endeavours have been concentrated upon pulling down, and I have suggested no derivation of my own. But I did suggest one formerly in the pages of Notes and Queries (7th S., x. 242), though, if I now defended it, it would not be exactly on the same lines.

F. CHANCE.

APPOINTMENTS FOR NEXT WEEK.

TUESDAY, August 7, 9 p.m. Anglo-Russian Literary Society: "Dostoevski," by Mr. H. Havelock.
FRIDAY, August 10, 1 p.m. Botanic: Anniversary Meeting.

SCIENCE.

M. BONAFOUS ON PROPERTIUS.

De Sex. Propertii Amoribus et Poesi. Capita Septem Facultati Litterarum Parisiensi thesis proponebat Raimundus Bonafous. (Paris.)

AMONG the innumerable dissertations on the life and poems of Propertius which have been published of late, this thesis of M. Raimund Bonafous is one of the best. It extends to 110 pages, and contains seven chapters: I. De Cynthia; II. De Propertianorum amorum decursu; III. De amorum natura; IV. De argumentis; V. De inventione; VI. De dispositione; VII. Conclusio. The author is largely indebted to M. Plessis, though his work in no way reaches the excellence of that well-known book. It is perhaps to be regretted that, instead of a thesis, we have not—what is much more wanted—a new and good commentary. The materials are certainly not lacking for such a work. Everything on the life and reign of Augustus has been most carefully put together by Gardthausen; Rubensohn has brought into new prominence the connexion of the imperial family with literary men of the smaller kind, in his excellent edition of the Greek epigrams of Crinagoras of Lesbos; whatever is to be learnt from inscriptions is now easily available: in a word, we are fifty years removed from the date of Hertzberg's commentary. Hertzberg, indeed, was a scholar of no ordinary type: his views, which are often wrong, sometimes preposterously perverted, are based on a most exact and minute knowledge of Latin; but even those who have studied his commentary most carefully will not pretend to think him final. For some time I had hoped that Plessis would take up the task de novo; but of this there now seems to be little prospect.

One of the most interesting sections of Bonafous' treatise is to prove that Cynthia was a married woman. It does not, I confess, convince me. The general tone of the poems is against it. Very different is the case in the Amores of Ovid, and in Tibullus.

Bonafous differentiates the first three books according to the stages of passion. The Monobiblos (B. I.) is the most ideal, corresponding to the first dawn of the poet's love for Cynthia. The second is uneven, spasmodic, and irregular, corresponding to a more intense and tumultuous or even turbulent period of love now grown sensual. In the third the tone is more subdued, and the poet predominates over the lover. In this there is some truth; but the perturbed condition of B. II. must be attributed, I think, to quite different reasons.

Here, if anywhere, by the confession of most critics, and the numberless transpositions which they have introduced as a cure, our MSS. point to a faulty archetype. And some, at least, of the most impassioned elegies are to be found in B. III., e.g., Nox mihi prima uenit: primas date tempora noctis. It is also possible that B. II. was written on a rather different principle of composition. If we had even one elegy remaining of Philetas, we should be in a better position to judge. But the fragments we have are miserably short; nor indeed does the one extant elegy of Callimachus go more than a very little way for estimating his influence on Propertius, no doubt his most successful imitator among the Romans.

If Birt's theory, which Bonafous accepts, is true, and the Monobiblos is not to be counted in the arrangement of the four books of elegies, Books II.-III. of our MSS. may represent three original books, and II. will divide either after elegy 9 (Lachmann) or perhaps, as Bonafous thinks, after elegy eleven. In either case our MSS. give no hint of such an original division of B. II., which would be quite in accordance with the otherwise disturbed state of the elegies in that book. Confusion set in early, and betrays itself, not only in the unusual number of elegies which B. II. contains in our MSS., but in the disconnection of thought which has proved so baffling to critics.

The chapter on the poetical arrangement of the elegies touches, but does not penetrate, the question. The real point, after all, is: did Propertius in these elegies write on a principle of arithmetical or numerically proportioned symmetry? It appears to me indisputable that he did, and that the law which governs each individual elegy was originally traceable with little or no difficulty: what is more, that in the earliest editions of the poems, and for a considerable time after the poet's death, the sections into which each elegy was thus numerically grouped were marked off from each other by some kind of notation, which, with the decline of the Roman Empire, fell out of the MSS., and was at last almost wholly obliterated. I have spoken of this in the first volume of my Catullus (p. 251), and have tried to show that Propertius alludes to such a sectional, numerically adjusted, system of composition in the Vertumnus elegy (iv. 2). In v. 57 Vertumnus says:—

"Sex superant uersus: te qui ad uadimonis curris Non moror: haec spatium ultima meta meis."

Why six verses? Why but to show that the numerical scheme of the poem demanded a fixed number, and that number six, neither more nor less? Such a grouping is just what we should expect in an elaborate school of poetry like that of the Alexandrians, and in their Roman imitators. It is absolutely nothing against such a theory, to say that we cannot certainly trace it. How should we, separated by an interval of 1900 years? We must be contented to show its existence where it is palpable; and we must infer, what is so probable an inference as to be nearly certain, that if Propertius undeniably wrote several elegies on this principle of equable proportion, all that received his last hand were constructed similarly.

M. Bonafous' book does not aim at being exhaustive. It aims at being what it is: a résumé. As such it is readable and, though not at all conclusive, well worthy of attention.

ROBINSON ELLIS.

VERNACULAR LITERATURE IN INDIA.

WE quote the following report on vernacular literature in India, compiled by Pandit Hara Prasad Sastri for the annual address of the president of the Asiatic Society of Bengal:

"The number of publications delivered to the various Registration offices throughout India, under Act xxv. of 1867, and deposited in the eleven provincial libraries of the empire, was—7027 in 1891, 6704 in 1892, and 4150 during the three first quarters of 1893. These totals include publications in all the Eastern languages, ancient and modern, as well as in English. The number in Hebrew, Arabic, Persian, Zend, Tibetan, and Burmese is very small. Almost all the religions of the world are represented, Hinduism under its many forms supplying by far the greater number.

"The collection naturally divides into three large groups: namely, original works, republications, and translations. Original works and translations are mostly in modern vernaculars or in English, and the republications are mostly in Sanskrit, though we have some excellent original works in Sanskrit: such as the 'Chandravamea' by Mahamahopadhyaya Chandra Kanta Tarkalankara, written on the plan of Kalidasa's immortal work, the 'Raghuvamsha'; the 'Vesanta Vijaya,' which shows the superiority of the Vedanta philosophy to all other systems of thought; and the 'Tattva Kalpataru,' by Upendra Mohan Goswami, embodying the highest ideas of Chaitanya's religion. We have also republications of works written in the ancient form of the modern vernaculars during the thirteenth, fourteenth, and fifteenth centuries, when the first contact with the Muhammadans produced a large number of religious reformers, who made the vernaculars their medium of communication. The works of Kabir, Tuli Das, Nanak, and the followers of Chaitanya come under this head.

"The original works are either in prose or in verse. The vernaculars owe their prose literature entirely to the influence of the English. This embraces history, biography, and essays—branches of literature that were rarely cultivated before. Poetry India had, and poetry it has now; but modern poetry has not yet been able to shake off the longing for slavish imitation of everything European. We certainly owe some excellent poetical works to the influence of English education; but the majority are only wretched imitations.

"Among historical works, the best is the History of the Punjab, written in English by Muhammad Latif. It gives a full account of the Punjab during the eventful years of the eighteenth century. The Punjab is regarded as the great battlefield of nations in Asia. It was here that the Persians, the Greeks, the Bactrians, the Scythians, the Shahis, the Shahan Shahis, the Huns, the Maitreyas, and the Daivaputras fought with each other and with the Hindus; and it was here that Mussalmans of all denominations contested the supremacy of India. But the struggle never raged more fiercely than when the Afghans and the Sikhs, maddened by religious fanaticism, fell upon each other and fought with varied success for over a hundred years; and it is this period of the history of the Punjab that has been fully treated by Muhammad Latif. The same author has, in the second quarter of 1893, published another great work, namely, 'Lahore: its History, Architectural Remains, and Antiquities.' Both these works would do credit to any European scholar. Babu Kri-hna Narayan Sen has done a valuable service to the Maharrata race by editing an historical work, entitled 'Sahu Maharaj Yanchen Charita,' by Mahar Ram Rao Chitnavis, who was secretary to Sahu II., by whose order he wrote this and other works bearing on the history of the dynasty founded by Sivaji. Several works on the Manipur War have been published in Bengal. Of these, 'The Manipure War,' in English, by Babu Surendra Nath Mitra; 'Manipurer Itibas,' by an anonymous writer; and 'Manipur Pralika,' by Janaki Nath Basak—are worthy of note. Babu Janika Nath, who was appointed by Tikendrajit to conduct his case before the Special Court, attributes the whole Manipur affair to Paka Sena's attempt to monopolise the trade in tea-seeds. 'Ratnaprabha' and 'Chandraprabha,' two works in Sanskrit verse, by Bharat Mallik, on the genealogies of the Vaidya or medical caste, are valuable as throwing much light on the obscure period of the history of the Hindu race in Bengal.

"Some very good biographies have been written during the period under review, both in Bombay and in Bengal. The Bengal list includes memoirs of Pandit Isvar Chandra Vidyasagar, Michael Madhusudan Dutt, and Acharya Kesava Chandra—in Bengali; and of Raja Digambar Mitra—in English. All these persons are well known in Bengal, and played an important part in their respective spheres of life. The first was a great reformer, who introduced widow-marriage into Bengal, and tried to stop polygamy. The second had the honour of introducing blank verse into Bengali literature, and of creating a revolution in Bengali poetry by laying the whole of Europe, ancient and modern, under contribution for its improvement. The third was the founder of the Indian Brahmo Samaj, and of the Navavidhan Church, which is regarded in some quarters as possessing the widest catholicity among the great religions of the world. The fourth was the foremost man of his time in Calcutta, who started the subsoil moisture theory of malarious fever. Two works on the life of the late Pandit Taranath Tarkavachaspati, the author of the Sanskrit encyclopaedia entitled 'Vachaspathya,' are also worthy of note. A life of Nana Farnavis, the Maharrata statesman who propped up the tottering framework of the confederacy for twenty years, is a remarkable biographical work published in the Bombay Presidency. Not content with doing honour to their own great men, the people of India are writing biographies of great men of other countries, to show that they appreciate merit wherever it is found. Nisima, the patriot of Japan, George Washington, General Garfield, Jalaladdin, a Muhammadan saint of the thirteenth century, Madame Blavatsky, and King Wenceslas of Bohemia, have each found their admirers among the people of India.

"Though there were a few fictions in Sanskrit prose, the present luxuriant growth of vernacular novel-literature is entirely due to the influence of English education in this country. While the majority of this class of works treat only of commonplace subjects, such as enforced widowhood, child marriage, quarrels between daughters-in-law and mothers-in-law, &c., there are some works of merit among them. 'Adrishta,' by the late Babu Tarak Nath Ganguli, depicting middle-class life in the country; Babu Bankim Chandra's 'Raj Simha,' describing the last phase of the quarrel between the Rajputs and the Moghuls; Abdul Halim's 'Hasan and Anjlina,' a love story in Urdu; Saiyid Ahmad's 'Sirri-i-Dilbaran,' also in Urdu; Padma Nath Barua's 'Lahari,' in Assamese; the 'Sarasvati Chandra,' in Gujarati; the 'Sarada,' in Malayalam—deserve special notice. The 'Aslaji,' in Gujarati, describing the attempt of a miser to marry a young girl whom he was afterwards obliged to forsake for her prodigality, recalls the 'Volpone' of Ben Jonson.

"Of miscellaneous essays in prose, the best is 'Tirtha Darsan,' by Babu Barada Prasad Basu, in three volumes. It gives the history, antiquities, mode of worship, &c., of all the celebrated shrines in Southern India. 'Navadvip Mahima,' by Babu Kanti Chandra Rahi, attempts to bring together the traditions of the Nadiya Pandits, who have played so important a part in the intellectual and moral history of Bengal during the last five centuries. 'Khoja Britanta,' in Gujarati, maintains that the Khojas of Bombay were originally Rathor chiefs who embraced Islam. Babu Bhudeb's Mukerjee's 'Samajik Pravandha' compares the Hindu social system with that of the West, and concludes that Hindus have little to learn in this respect. The Hindu system, he argues, is based on sound principles of morality and religion: the best society is that which has found the highest ideal, and has enthusiastically followed that ideal. The Hindus have found it in their theory of Naish-karma, or 'duty for duty's sake,' and they try to realise it in all their thoughts and actions: nothing is so likely to shake the solid foundations of Hindu society, which has endured for thousands of years, as the suicidal attempt to imitate everything European. This work is the result of the lifelong study and observation of a Brahman of the old school, in the formation of whose mind Eastern and Western philosophy have had an equal share. Babu Bankim Chandra's 'Krishna Charita' is an attempt to pick out historical truths from the mass of wild myths which surround the conception of Krishna in the Mahabharata and the Puranas. 'Old Relics of Kamrup,' by Babu Joges Chandra Dutt, is interesting, as being the first attempt to explore the antiquities of Assam. The History of Hempi—which occupies the site of Vijayanagar, the last Hindu capital of Southern India, destroyed after the battle of Talikot, in 1665—will be useful to travellers visiting that place.

"Babu Navin Chandra Sen, one of our best Bengali poets, has published two works: 'Rai-vataka' and 'Kurukshetra,' in which the story of the Mahabharata is remodelled according to the views of nineteenth-century Hinduism. He considers the great war to represent a struggle between the liberal party headed by Krishna, Arjuna, and Vyasa, and the conservative party headed by Duryodhana and Duryasa: the former has the Gita for its religious handbook, while the latter holds to the Vedas. 'Chilka' is a descriptive poem of some merit, in Uriya, by Babu Radha Nath Ray. 'Marsia,' by Altaff Hossain, is a piece of poetry written in elegant Urdu, bewailing the death of one of the foremost Muhammadan citizens of Delhi.

"The only work on art which deserves mention is 'Modern Indian Architecture,' by Mr. Tukaram, head draftsman of the Rajputana-Malwa Railway, Ajmere. It gives, in thirty-two well-executed plates, specimens of Hindu and Mussalman architecture, which will bear comparison with western styles.

"Under the head of religion, original works comprise a large number of controversial tracts between the Deva Samaj and the Arya Samaj in the Punjab. Mirza Gholam Ahmad of Quadian, who calls himself the promised Messiah, has gathered numerous followers to support his pretensions. He is said to work miracles, and to hurl anathemas on the heads of the missionaries who venture to controvert him. The mass of Punjab literature has been greatly swelled by the tracts published on both sides. The 'Hindutattva,' by Chandra Nath Basu, points out the differences between Hinduism and other religions. It is a defence of Hinduism, from a revivalist point of view, and thus differs widely from the well-known apologetic work of Babu Raj Narayan Basu, entitled 'Hindu Dharma Sresthata.' Hinduism, according to Babu Chandra Nath, does not need any apology: its principle of the complete identity of the human soul with the divine, its love for the eternal, its minute attention to little things, its theory of uninterrupted activity in doing good with entire disregard of reward and punishment, the rigid enforcement of man's responsibility for his own actions leading to the theory of metempsychosis—are features that have raised it to a position unapproachable by any other system of religion in the world. 'Chaitanya Lilamrita,' by the late Babu Jagadishvar Gupta, is an appreciation of Chaitanya from a rationalistic and Brahmo point of view. In strong contrast with it is the 'Amiya Nimai Charita' of Babu Shishir Kumar Ghosh, who, as a devoted follower of Chaitanya, has given to the religion of love preached by that reformer a charm rarely to be met with in modern literature. 'The Prachina Havya Samgraha' series is doing a great service by publishing old Gujarati poems, written four or five centuries ago. Pandit Ramanarayan Vidyaratna, of Berhampur, is publishing a number of Vaishnavite works, in Bengali and Sanskrit, bearing on the life and teaching of Chaitanya and his disciples. Of the Bengali works of this series, the most notable are 'Prem-vilas' and 'Karnananda' on the life of Sriivasacharya, who is regarded by the Vaishnavas as an incarnation of Chaitanya. The Bangavasi is as active as ever in publishing the Hindu Sastras. Mr. Romesh Chunder Dutt's great scheme of collecting the best things in the Sastras in eight volumes has so far succeeded, that he has issued three volumes relating to the Vedas. The Kharga Vilas Press is continuing the works of Babu Harish Chandra, and is also issuing a beautiful edition of the 'Ramayanamanasa' of Tulsi Das, with a commentary. Kabir has engaged much of the attention of Hindu publishers, both in Behar and in Gujarat.

"Under the head of translations, it may be mentioned that Babu Bihari Lal Mitra has published two large volumes of his English version of the 'Yogavasishta Maharamayanam.' The press all over India is sending out innumerable Sanskrit works on the Hindu religion, accompanied by translations into the vernacular. Two rival translations of the Koran from the original Arabic are worthy of mention—one by Babu Girish Chandra Sen, and the other by Maulvi Naimuddin."

PHILOLOGY NOTES.

NUMBER XX. of Hermathena, which has just been published, contains a disquisition on Aristotle's "Parva Naturalia," by Prof. Benn; a review of Goodwin's "Homeric Hymns," by Prof. Tyrrell; of the third edition of Scrivener's Criticism of the New Testament by Prof. Bernard; "Plautina and Propertiana," by Prof. Palmer; notes on Valerius, by Prof. Bury, &c.

FINE ART.

ART BOOKS.

The Evolution of Decorative Art. By Henry Balfour. (Rivington, Percival & Co.) The Curator of the Pitt Rivers Collection at Oxford has turned his opportunities to good purpose in constructing this little book, the size of which is no index of its merit. It is a valuable contribution towards the study of the history of design; and he has done well in illustrating his subject by the living examples of the earlier stages of development which are afforded by the artistic efforts of modern savage races. By dividing the process of evolution into three clear stages, which may be shortly stated as (1) Adaptation, (2) Copying, (3) Variation, he has supplied a useful scaffolding for future builders, of whom we hope he himself will be one, for the present volume is little more than a short summary of knowledge and research which could be amplified with advantage. How soon and easily a design deteriorates by unintelligent reproduction, he illustrates very forcibly and amusingly by a drawing of a snail, which, copied and recopied by hand after hand, comes in its fourteenth "state" to be more like a bird than a snail. He has not, however, settled which of the two impulses of all art, the desire for beauty and the desire for imitation, had the precedence. From the bone drawings of the cave-dwellers, one would judge that imitation was the earlier impulse; but all other evidence seems to point the other way.

The Philosophy of the Beautiful. Part II. By William Knight. (John Murray.) The task undertaken by Prof. Knight to furnish the series of University Extension Manuals with text-books on the philosophy of the Beautiful presents unusual difficulties even to one so well informed and skilled in reasoning as himself. The chief difficulty is perhaps in the necessarily limited space at his command. To summarise previously existing theories of the Beautiful, to show the imperfections of all, and the germ of truth at the root of each, to attempt to reconcile the most important, like those of Plato and Aristotle, and to conclude with suggestions which endeavour to approach more nearly to a solution of the ever interesting but perhaps ever insoluble problem; and to do all this in some fifty or sixty pages was hard enough. This part of his work he has performed with a clearness and order which leaves little to be desired, and in language which even the ordinary reader will be able to comprehend with little difficulty. The chapters in which he applied his principles to each Art, taken separately, are also clear enough in their expression; but here the want of space is, perhaps, a more serious disadvantage. The history of the evolution of the different arts is of too great importance in the consideration of their philosophy to be compressed within such narrow limits; and it is impossible to treat the theoretical part without a more thorough explanation of the practical than can be included in a short summary. In some cases, as for instance in regard to the theory of colours, his information is scarcely "up to date"; but on the whole the volume should be of much value to students.

Art for Art's Sake. By John C. Van Dyke. (Sampson Low.) Mr. Van Dyke's lectures before the students of Princeton College, Columbia College, and Rutgers College, show that he has thought very carefully about and around the problems of modern art. The questions of "art for art's sake," of the "literary idea," and similar problems, are touched cleverly and clearly so far as language goes; but he has scarcely got to the root of the matter. In the same way he treats colour with much patience and analytical skill, but yet hardly leaves the impression that he is a master of his theme. He does not seem to grasp, for instance, that in colour harmony is everything, and that the scale, whether composed of the higher or deeper notes, is a matter of comparative indifference to the true colourist, who, like the true musician, will be always in tune. His comparison between an old Persian rug and a modern American one is of no value. The former is beautiful because it is in harmony; the latter is ugly because it is not: the fact that one is faded and the other bright has nothing to do with it. He does not think that England has ever had a great colourist—not even Turner or Sir Joshua Reynolds. He has evidently no opinion of English art at all, which he scarcely mentions. But lest we should be thought to have a grudge against him on this account, let us quote what he says of Watteau. He calls him "a light and graceful painter, with not a little feeling for harmonious colour." But though Mr. Van Dyke seems to us to have but a limited appreciation of certain artists, he does not fall into extravagance when he belauds his favourites; and we cordially agree with the warm praise he allots to such men as Millet, Corot, Rousseau, Mr. Whistler, and Mr. Sargent, not to mention others. He is also very temperate and sensible in his remarks about the impressionists and other movements of the day. It is only when he tries to be eloquent that he strikes a false note. Such passages as that beginning, "The whole world is but a unity of magnificent vertebrae" should be excised from a new edition.

Modern Painting. By George Moore. Second Edition. (Walter Scott.) The appearance of a second edition of this brightly and sometimes brilliantly-written book is a testimony to the attractive character of Mr. George Moore's style, and of the interest which is felt in "Modern" theories of art. It is difficult to judge how far Mr. Moore can be accepted as the mouthpiece of the section of artists whom he lauds with so much fervour. We fancy that some of them—and not least that astute man and unique artist, Mr. Whistler—must laugh not a little in their sleeves when they read his choice encomiums. We doubt even at times if Mr. Moore can take himself quite seriously; and cannot but regret that he finds it necessary to speak with such contempt of those artists with whose work he is out of sympathy; but the book, with all its faults, is clever and outspoken whether in praise or blame, and is in this respect a refreshing contrast to the careful trimming and halting utterance of the ordinary art critic.

THE PROPOSED DAM AT ASSOUAN.

THE following is the text of the memorial which has recently been forwarded to Nubar Pasha by the Society for the Preservation of the Monuments of Ancient Egypt:

"Inasmuch as the monuments of Egypt are the interest of the whole world, we, the undersigned authors, men of science, artists, and others in public positions desire to recall to your Excellency's attention the facts which have been published in the admirable study on the subject of "Perennial Irrigation" by the Under Secretary of State for Public Works, a report which has opened a magnificent prospect of increased prosperity to Egypt, at which we most heartily rejoice.

"We remark that the Technical Commission have recommended the construction of a reservoir dam at Assouan, which will submerge the largest and most important parts of Nubia, and ruin the temples of Daboud, Gertasseh, Tateh, Kalabsheh, Dakkeh, and Aff-ed-Donieh, as well as the towns, cemeteries, and other remains of this region, besides leading to the removal or ruin of the various temples of Philae, which are some of the most beautiful monuments in Egypt.

"We therefore express to your Excellency our deep regret at the recommended construction of a reservoir at Assouan which will cause such results, so unhappy for sciences and art; and we trust that some other project will be considered in order to reconcile the interests of agriculture with those of art, history, and archaeology. We hope that before the immediate season for action arrives some efficient scheme may be adopted which will avoid so far as possible the destruction of valuable monuments.

"We do not wish to express our opinion as to the best manner of carrying out the important object of improving the irrigation of Egypt, as this is a point for the Egyptian Government; but we would venture to ask whether it is not possible that an equally good site may be found at some place south of the Second Cataract, when, as is to be hoped, the country may again be reopened in a few years to civilisation under the rule of Egypt."

Similar memorials have been sent by the Académie des Inscriptions, and by representatives of the learned world in Germany.

NOTES ON ART AND ARCHAEOLOGY.

WE understand that Mr. Arthur Evans will read a paper at the Oxford meeting of the British Association, in the section of anthropology, on his discovery of a new hieroglyphic and pre-Phoenician script in the island of Crete.

THE death is announced of the second Viscount Hardinge, who was for many years an active trustee of the National Portrait Gallery. Owing to his father's friendship for Sir Francis Grant and Sir Edwin Landseer, he was brought up with a natural taste for art and was himself no mean painter in water-colours. In 1847, he published a handsome folio volume, entitled Recollections of India, containing twenty-six lithographs from his own drawings, chiefly of landscapes in Kashmir and Sikh chieftains. The originals hang on the walls of South Park, among the military trophies of his father.

THE South London Fine Art Gallery in Peckham-road has been reopened this week, with the addition of several new pictures. Among them—besides loan works of Sir F. Leighton, Sir E. Burne Jones, and George Mason—we may specially mention the late

F. Madox Brown's historical cartoon of "The Body of Harold brought to William after the Battle of Hastings," painted for the Westminster competition fifty years ago, which was bought for presentation to this gallery at the sale of the artist's works.

THE annual exhibition in the galleries of the York corporation includes the following: "Elizabeth Woodville parting with her younger son, the Duke of York," by Mr. P. H. Calderon; "The Flight into Egypt," by Mr. F. Goodall; "The Dinner Party," by Mr. S. Solomon, and also landscapes by Mr. David Murray, and stippled pen-drawings by Mr. Claude de Neville.

MR. H. S. TUKE's picture of "Sailors Playing Cards," which is now on exhibition at Munich, has been purchased by the Bavarian government for the collection of the New Pinakothek.

THE August number of the Art Journal contains a prompt reply to Dr. J. P. Richter's attack on the authenticity and the merit of the "Madonna and the Rocks" in the National Gallery. It is written by Mr. Poynter in a tone at once temperate and courteous. But it is firm also, and shows conclusively that the document recently discovered by Dr. Emilio Motta (and published by Signor Frizzoni in the Archivio Storico dell' Arte) does not help in the solution of the question whether the picture in the National Gallery was that painted by Leonardo da Vinci for the chapel of the Concezione in St. Francesco at Milan. Among other things, he points out that Leonardo's undoubted drawing for the figure of the Holy Infant, which Dr. Richter adduced in favour of his argument for the Louvre picture, is evidently a study, not for that, but for the picture in the National Gallery.

MUSIC.

MUSIC PUBLICATIONS.

Parzival: a Knightly Epic by Wolfram von Eschenbach. Translated from the German by Jessie L. Weston. Vol. I. (David Nutt.) This is the first translation into English of the poem which served as groundwork to Wagner's music-drama "Parsifal"; and, as the translator remarks in her preface, it is only within the present century that the original text of the Parzival has been collated from the manuscripts, and made accessible, even in its own land, to the general reader. The poem itself, quite apart from its connexion with Wagner's work, is a fascinating one, and all who read it will surely endorse these words of Miss Weston:

"This, at least, may be said with truth, that of all the romances of the Grail cycle, there is but one which can be presented, in its entirety, to the world of to-day with the conviction that its morality is as true, its human interest as real, its lesson as much needed now as it was seven hundred years ago, and that romance is the Parzival of Wolfram von Eschenbach."

Much attention has been given to the sources whence Wagner derived the material for the poems of his musical dramas. Among notable works of this kind are: M. Schuré's Le Drame Musical, M. Otto Elser's Richard Wagner's "Der Ring des Nibelungen," the two volumes of M. Maurice Kufferath on "Lohengrin" and "Parsifal," and M. Alfred Ernst's L'Art de Richard Wagner. Wagner's poems were the outcome of much reading and long reflection: the more that is known of certain myths and old poems, the greater will be the appreciation of his genius; and this is especially true of "Parsifal." Great thanks are then due to Miss Weston for this first volume, and we are glad to learn that Vol. II., completing the work, is in active preparation. When the author has ended this labour of love, she may feel inclined to translate "Titel," of which the Minnesinger Wolfram wrote the opening: this poem must have been consulted by Wagner for his "Parsifal."

The Sacred Festival-Drama of Parsifal. By Charles T. Gatty. (Schott.) This is a very handy little volume, and appropriate at this time when so many are about to make the pilgrimage to Baireuth. It is divided into three sections. The first deals with the argument, the second with the musical drama, and the third with the mystery. The argument is unfolded in a vivid manner: not only are the outlines of the story indicated, but an attempt is made to picture, as it were, the stage action. Then a plain prose translation of the text is given, adhering pretty closely to the German, though there are some passages which are not quite literal. Certain figures and letters refer to the various representative themes, which are also given. The "Mystery" section deals with the symbolic meaning of the drama—the war waged between the flesh and the spirit.

THE YORKSHIRE COLLEGE, LEEDS.

APPLICATIONS are invited for a vacant DEMONSTRATORSHIP OF PHYSICS. Salary £125, with certain fees. Particulars may be obtained from the SECRETARY, to whom applications must be sent on or before August 31st.

ST. PAUL'S SCHOOL, London.—

FOUNDATION SCHOLARSHIPS. AN EXAMINATION for filling up about 20 VACANCIES on the Foundation will be held on the 4th SEPTEMBER NEXT.—For information, apply to the BURSAR, St. Paul's School, West Kensington, W.

HIGHER CAMBRIDGE, Froebel and

Advanced EXAMINATIONS.—STUDENTS PREPARED, in Classes connected with the North London Collegiate School, under the Superintendence of Miss Buss. Arrangements made for Boarding in the neighbourhood.—Address the Head Mistress, Miss TOPPIS, L.C.P., 145, Camden Road, N.W.

EDUCATION.—Particulars as to the best

University or Army Tutors and Schools for Boys or Girls, at home or abroad, may be obtained, free of charge, by sending a statement of requirements to R. J. BEEVON, M.A., 3, Lancaster Place, Strand.

TO INVALIDS.—A LIST OF MEDICAL

MEN in all parts, willing to RECEIVE RESIDENT PATIENTS, giving full particulars and terms, sent gratis. The list includes private asylums, &c.; schools also recommended.—Address Mr. G. B. STODER, 5, Lancaster Place, Strand, W.C.

DR. KLEIN has now added to the CIVIL SERVICE INSTITUTE, at 110, Cannon-street, E.C. a REGISTRATION BUREAU for the Clerical and Scholastic Professions. Principals of Schools at Home and Abroad, Rectors, Vicars, and Assistant Teachers, may confidently rely upon the Doctor's long and varied experience in professional matters being placed promptly at their disposal.

BRITISH MUSEUM.

DEPARTMENT OF PRINTS AND DRAWINGS.

The Exhibition-Gallery of PRINTS and DRAWINGS will be CLOSED on THURSDAY, August 9th, and RE-OPENED on MONDAY, SEPTEMBER 10th. The STUDENTS' ROOM will be CLOSED from MONDAY, August 13th, to SATURDAY, SEPTEMBER 8th, inclusive.

E. MAURICE THOMPSON,
Principal Librarian and Secretary.

British Museum, 31st July, 1894.

BRITISH ASSOCIATION for the ADVANCEMENT OF SCIENCE.

Burlington House, London, W.

OXFORD MEETING, AUGUST 8-15.

President—The Most Hon. the MARQUIS of SALISBURY, K.G., D.C.L., F.R.S.
The JOURNAL, President's Address, and other printed papers issued by the Association during the Annual Meeting, will be sent daily to Members and others who will forward 2s. 6d. to Mr. H. C. STEWARDS, or CLERK of the Association, Reception Room, Oxford, on or before August 2.

G. GRIFFITH, Assistant General Secretary.

NATIONAL PROVIDENT INSTITUTION.
For Mutual Life Assurance.
Invested Funds £4,700,000
Paid in Claims £9,000,000
Death Duties provided for by Life Assurance.

PROFITS.—The whole are divided amongst the Assured. Already divided, £1,600,000.
At the division in 1892 there were nearly eight hundred Policies in respect of which not only were the Premiums entirely extinguished, but also Annuities were granted or Cash Bonuses paid, whilst in the case of many Policies the original sums assured are now more than doubled by the Bonus Additions. Applications for Agencies invited.
48, Gracechurch Street, London, E.C.
ARTHUR SMITHER, Actuary and Secretary.

TO BRITISH AND FOREIGN AUTHORS.

F. TENNYSON NEELY, Publisher,
Chicago, U.S.A., solicits correspondence with Authors of repute in Fiction and General Literature.
The Copyright Laws now protect literary property by simultaneous publication in the United States and Great Britain. Treaty for absolute purchase of authors' rights, or publication, on royalty if desired. Prompt reply in every instance will be made.—Address F. TENNYSON NEELY, care of C. Mitchell & Co., 12 and 13, Red Lion Court, Fleet Street, E.C.

IMPORTANT.—PRINTING AND PUBLISHING

NEWSPAPERS, MAGAZINES, BOOKS, &c.—KING, SELL & RAILTON, Limited, high-class Printers and Publishers, 12, Gough Square, 4, Bolt Court, Fleet Street, E.C., have specially-built Rotary and other fast Machines for printing illustrated or other Journals, and specially-built Machines for fast folding and covering 16 or 32 page Journals at one operation.

Facilities upon the premises for Editorial Offices, free. Advertising and Publishing Departments conducted.

Telephone 2759. Telegraph, "Africanism, London.

Take with you on Vacation

A TABLET

OF

VINOLIA SOAP

Price 4d.

ESTABLISHED 1851.

BIRKBECK BANK, Southamptons Buildings, Chancery Lane, London. TWO-AND-A-HALF PERCENT. INTEREST allowed on DEPOSITS repayable on demand.

TWO PER CENT. ON CURRENT ACCOUNTS, on the minimum monthly balances, when not drawn below £100.

SAVINGS DEPARTMENT. For the encouragement of Thrift the Bank receives small sums on deposit, and allows interest monthly on each completed £1.

BIRKBECK BUILDING SOCIETY.

HOW TO PURCHASE A HOUSE

FOR TWO GUINEAS PER MONTH.

BIRKBECK FREEHOLD LAND SOCIETY.

HOW TO PURCHASE A PLOT OF LAND

FOR FIVE SHILLINGS PER MONTH.

The BIRKBECK ALMANACK, with full particulars, post free. FRANCIS RAVENSCROFT, Manager.

OLD SHIRTS RE-FITTED, Fine Irish Linen, 2s.;

or very best Irish Linen, returned free, ready to wear, 2s. 6d. Sample Shirt, for Dress and ordinary wear, any size, post free, 2s. 9d., 3s. 9d., 4s. 9d., 5s. 9d., or 6s. 9d. Twilled Night Shirts, 2s. 11d., 3s. 9d., 4s. 9d., or 5s. 9d. LINEN COLLARS and CUFFS. Best 4-fold Collars, 4s. 6d. and 5s. 6d. doz.; made exact to pattern, 2s. 9d. half-dozen, post free. Napkins, 2s. 6d. per doz.; Dinner Napkins, 4s. 6d. per dozen; Table

IRISH LINEN

Cloths, 2 yards square, 2s. 9d. each, 2½ yards by 3 yards, 5s. 6d.; Kitchen Table Cloths, 10½d. each; real Irish Linen Sheet, fully bleached, 2 yards wide, 1s. 11d. per yard; and Linen Diaper, 8½d. per yard; Nursery Diaper, 4½d. per yard; Surplus Linen, 7d. per yard; Glass Cloths, 3s. 6d. dozen. LINEN LUCKABACK TOWELS, 3s. 6d. per dozen; Damask Towels, 6s. 6d. per dozen; Turkish Bath Towels, 1s. each; Twilled Linen Pillow Cases, from 1s. 3d. each. IRISH CAMBRIC HANDKERCHIEFS.—Children's, 1s. 2d.; Ladies', 2s. 3d.; Gent's, 3s. 6d. Hemstitched—Ladies', 2s. 3d.; Gent's, 4s. 11d. per dozen. Better qualities equally cheap. Price Lists and Patterns of all kinds of Linen Goods and Hosiery sent to any part of the world, post free. Monograms, Crests, Coats of Arms, Initials, &c., woven and embroidered. Samples and Illustrated Price Lists post free to any part of the world.

B. & E. M'HUGH & CO., Limited, BELFAST

To H.R.H. the PRINCE OF WALES.

BRAND & CO'S AI SAUCE,

SOUPS, PRESERVED PROVISIONS

POTTED MEATS, and YORK and GAME

PIES. Also,

ESSENCE OF BEEF, BEEF TEA,

TURTLE SOUP, and JELLY, and other

SPECIALITIES for INVALIDS.

CAUTION—BEWARE OF IMITATIONS.

SOLE ADDRESS—

11, LITTLE STANHOPE STREET, MAYFAIR, W.

BLACKIE & SON'S NEW BOOKS.

Just published, the First Half-Volume, cloth, 12s. 6d. net, and the Fourth Part, 2s. 6d. net, of

THE NATURAL HISTORY OF PLANTS:

Their Forms, Growth, Reproduction, and Distribution.

From the German of ANTON KERNER von MARILAUN, Professor of Botany in the University of Vienna.

By F. W. OLIVER, M.A., D.Sc., Quain Professor of Botany in University College, London.

With the assistance of MARIAN BUSE, B.Sc., and MARY EWART, B.Sc.

With about 1,000 Original Woodcut Illustrations and 16 Plates in Colours.

* * The Work will be completed in Four Half-Volumes, imperial 8vo, cloth, price 12s. 6d. each net, issued at intervals of four months; and in Sixteen Monthly Parts, price 2s. 6d. each net.

"The work is one of first-rate importance, and not less remarkable for its technical details and scientific accuracy than for its lucid exposition and charm of style."—Speaker.

"A book which, while serving as a source of knowledge to specialists and scholars, is also suitable for the many who take an interest in botany, and who wish to obtain information of the progress of this ever-fresh science."—National Observer.

"One of the most ambitious works in botany ever written... has the great merit that, while specialists and scholars can go to it and learn much about the life of plants, the many will find in its pages a mass of most interesting facts conveyed in a singularly attractive manner."—Westminster Gazette.

Just published, New Volumes, crown 8vo, cloth, 1s. 4d. each.

BLACKIE'S SCHOOL and HOME LIBRARY.

A selection of the best and most interesting books, carefully edited to render them suitable for young readers.

SCOTT'S TALISMAN. THE BASKET OF FLOWERS.

* * Two Volumes of this Library will be issued on the 1st of each month.

"The new series promises to be one which all who have to select books for young readers will do well to keep in mind."—Scotsman.

LONDON: BLACKIE & SON, LIMITED,
OLD BAILEY.

JOURNAL OF EDUCATION.

No. 301, for AUGUST.

THE LEAVING CERTIFICATE in SCOTLAND. By A. M. WILLIAMS
THE EDGEMORTHS on PRACTICAL EDUCATION. By Prof.
L. C. MIAL, F.R.S.

SLOYD in ITALY. By J. S. THORNTON.
TEACHERS and NERVE EXHAUSTION. By C. S. BRENNER.
THE FROEBEL EDUCATIONAL INSTITUTE.
THE CHRIST'S HOSPITAL SCHEME.
THE DOCTOR'S BOY. (To be continued.)
A NOTE on M. MARION'S PEDAGOGICS.
&c. &c.

Price 6d., per post, 7d.

Office: 86, FLEET STREET, LONDON, E.C.

Now ready, for August, price 5s. 6d. net.

THE EXPOSITORY TIMES.

Edited by Rev. JAMES HASTINGS, M.A.

Contents include—Editor's Notes of Recent Exposition; Prof. A. B. Davidson on "The Theology of Isaiah"; Dr. Walker on "The Parables of Zechariah"; Prof. Plummer on "The Inspiration of Waiting"; Prof. Margoliouth on "Christ in Islam"; Miss Mary A. Woods on "Tennyson's In Memoriam"; Great Text Commentary; Books of the Month; Contributions and Comments, &c.

EDINBURGH: T. & T. CLARK, 33, GEORGE STREET.

Just ready.] THE NEW "AUTONYM." [Just ready.

Fcap. 24mo, 2s., cloth; paper, 1s. 6d.

MAD SIR UCHTRED of the HILLS.

By S. R. CROCKETT, Author of "The Stickit Minister," and "The Raiders."
"Exceedingly well written."—Daily News.

THE ANARCHIST PERIL. By FÉLIX

DUBOIS. Translated and Enlarged, with the Author's permission, by RALPH DERECHIEF. With a Chapter on "ANARCHISM in ENGLAND," by the Translator. Freely illustrated from Anarchist propaganda. Crown 8vo, cloth, 5s.

LONDON: T. FISHER UNWIN, PATERNOSTER SQUARE, E.C.

EDWARD STANFORD'S LIST.

New Tourist Catalogue sent post free on application.

Just ready, SIXTH and CHEAPER EDITION, Revised.

THE PHYSICAL GEOLOGY and GEOGRAPHY of GREAT BRITAIN: a Manual of British Geology. By the late Sir ANDREW C. RAMSAY, LL.D., F.R.S. Edited by HORACE B. WOODWARD, F.G.S., of the Geological Survey. With a Geological Map printed in Colours, and numerous Illustrations. Post 8vo, cloth, 10s. 6d.

REISSUE OF STANFORD'S COMPENDIUM OF GEOGRAPHY and TRAVEL. REVISED, AND IN GREAT PART REWRITTEN.

AUSTRALASIA. Vol. I. Australia and NEW ZEALAND. By ALFRED RUSSEL WALLACE, LL.D., D.C.L., F.R.S. With numerous Maps and Illustrations. Large crown 8vo, cloth, 15s.

STANFORD'S TWO-SHILLING SERIES OF TOURIST GUIDES.

Fcap. 8vo, cloth, with Maps, &c.

BEDFORDSHIRE. KENT.
BERKSHIRE. LONDON (ROUND).
CAMBRIAGESHIRE. NORFOLK.
CHANNEL ISLANDS. SOMERSETSHIRE.
CORNWALL. SUFFOLK.
DERBYSHIRE. SURREY.
DEVON, NORTH. SUSSEX.
DEVON, SOUTH. WARWICKSHIRE.
DORSETSHIRE. WILTSHIRE.
ENGLISH LAKES. WORCESTER.
GLOUCESTERSHIRE. WYKE (The).
HAMPSHIRE. YORKSHIRE, EAST and NORTH.
HERTFORDSHIRE. YORKSHIRE, WEST.

"For the pedestrian, horseman, and bicyclist a handy pocket guide is almost indispensable. Mr. Stanford has estimated the situation correctly, and, as far as we can judge, has made most creditable provision. Nothing can be more convenient than the volumes of this little two-shilling county series; the type, though closely printed, is clear, and they are nearly as light and twice as portable as a fairly filled cigar-case."—Saturday Review.

JENKINSON'S PRACTICAL GUIDES.

Fcap. 8vo, cloth, with Maps, &c.

THE ENGLISH LAKES. Ninth Edition. With 8 Maps. 6s.
THE ISLE OF WIGHT. Fifth Edition. With 2 Maps. 2s. 6d.
NORTH WALES. Fourth Edition. With 2 Maps. 6s. 6d.
NORTH WALES. (Smaller Guide.) With 3 Maps. 3s. 6d.
THE ISLE OF MAN. Third Edition. With Map. 5s.
CARLISLE, THE ROMAN WALL, &c. With Map. 5s.

"The special merit of these handbooks is their trustworthiness. Mr. Jenkinson has visited every place described, and travelled by every route suggested, and has throughout viewed things as a practical guide should view them. His directions to the pedestrian are so minute and clear that it is hardly possible to go wrong, and his advice as to what to see and what to avoid is always worth attention."—Academy.

LONDON: EDWARD STANFORD,

26 and 27, COCKSPUR STREET, CHANCERY CROSS, S.W.
Geographer to Her Majesty the Queen.

IMPORTANT WORK ON THE HISTORY OF THE NOVEL.

A GUIDE TO

BRITISH & AMERICAN NOVELS.

BEING A COMPREHENSIVE MANUAL TO BRITISH AND AMERICAN FICTION FROM THE EARLIEST PERIOD TO THE END OF 1893.

BY PERCY RUSSELL,

Author of "The Author's Manual," &c.

Crown 8vo, cloth, 300 pp., price 3s. 6d. net; by post, 3s. 10d.

THE GUIDE CONTAINS A COMPLETE HISTORY OF THE NOVEL, LIVING NOVELISTS, AND NOVELISTS OF THE PAST.

BY THE SAME AUTHOR.

THE AUTHOR'S MANUAL.

WITH PREFATORY REMARKS

BY MR. GLADSTONE.

Seventh and Cheaper Edition. With New Preface, 304 pp., crown 8vo, cloth, price 3s. 6d. net; by post, 3s. 10d. With Portrait

"...Mr. Russell's book is a very complete manual and guide for journalist and author. It is not a merely practical work—it is literary and appreciative of literature in its best sense. ... We have little else but praise for the volume."—Westminster Review.

LONDON: DIGBY, LONG & CO., PUBLISHERS,
18, BOUVERIE STREET, FLEET STREET, E.C.

MUDIE'S SELECT LIBRARY

For the CIRCULATION and SALE of all the BEST ENGLISH, FRENCH, GERMAN, ITALIAN, and SPANISH BOOKS.

TOWN SUBSCRIPTIONS from One Guinea per annum.

LONDON BOOK SOCIETY (for Weekly Exchange of Books at the Houses of Subscribers) from Two Guineas per annum.

COUNTRY SUBSCRIPTIONS from Two Guineas per annum.

N.B.—Two or three friends may unite in One Subscription and thus lessen the cost of carriage.

LIBRARY BOXES GRATIS.

Town and Village Clubs supplied on Liberal Terms

Prospectuses and Monthly Lists of Books gratis and post free.

SALE DEPARTMENT.

If the leading Books of the Past Seasons are on Sale, second-hand at greatly Reduced Prices.

LISTS GRATIS AND POST FREE.

MUDIE'S MANCHESTER LIBRARY

10 to 12, BARTON ARCADE, MANCHESTER,

Is in daily communication with this Library.

MUDIE'S SELECT LIBRARY, Limited,

30 to 34, NEW OXFORD STREET, LONDON;

211, Brompton Road, S.W.; and 49, Queen Victoria St., E.C.

THE AUTOTYPE COMPANY

Has the honour to announce the Publication of NINETY-THREE DRAWINGS

BY

ALBERT DURER,

Reproduced in Facsimile from Originals in the British Museum, and accompanied by Descriptive Text by

SIDNEY COLVIN, M.A.,

Keeper of Prints and Drawings, British Museum.

"The British Museum collection, reproduced in this volume, is," says Professor Colvin, "a fairly complete and representative survey of the several phases of Durer's activity as a draughtsman and sketcher during all periods of his career."

The Volume is Imperial folio, half-morocco, Plates Linnen-Guarded and Interleaved. Edition 100 Copies.
Price Six Guineas.

The AUTOTYPE FINE-ART CATALOGUE

(New Edition), of 181 pages, with Illustrated Supplement, containing 63 Miniature Photographs of notable Autotypes, post free, ONE SHILLING.

"AUTOTYPE: a Decorative and Educational Art."

NEW PAMPHLET, FREE ON APPLICATION.

THE AUTOTYPE COMPANY,

74, New Oxford Street, London,

MESSRS. J. C. DRUMMOND & CO. ART REPRODUCERS.

14, HENRIETTA STREET, COVENT GARDEN, W.C.

Are the sole representatives in Great Britain of

HERR HANFSTAENGL, of Munich.

the well-known Artist in PHOTOGRAPHURE, now patronised by the leading London Art Publishing Firms. A large Collection of important Plates always on view.

Process Blocks for the purpose of Ordinary Book Illustrations.

Messrs. DRUMMOND & CO. supply the cheapest and best Process in the market, which are specially adapted to meet the wants of Antiquarians, Archeologists, and those engaged in the investigation and publication of Parochial and Diocesan Records.

J. C. DRUMMOND & CO. invite attention to their Improved Rapid Photo-Mechanical Process for the Reproduction of Works of Art, Original MSS., Design, Lace Manufactures, Photographs, Views, Book Illustrations, Artistic Advertisements, Catalogues, &c., &c., at a moderate cost.

Specimens and price list on application.

Offices: 14, HENRIETTA STREET COVENT GARDEN, LONDON.

THE ACADEMY.

A WEEKLY REVIEW OF LITERATURE, SCIENCE, AND ART.

No. 1162.
[New Issue.]

SATURDAY, AUGUST 11, 1894.

PRICE 3d.
[Registered as a Newspaper.]

TABLE OF CONTENTS

| | PAGE |
|--|------|
| MR. AND MRS. SIDNEY WERN'S HISTORY OF TRADE UNIONISM, by J. A. HAMILTON | 95 |
| SARATIN'S LIFE OF ST. FRANCIS, by ROBERT STEELE | 96 |
| G. RADFORD'S SHYLOCK AND OTHERS, by E. K. CHAMBERS | 97 |
| DR. BARBER'S BRITISH FAMILY NAMES, by Canon ISAAC TAYLOR | 98 |
| NEW NOVELS, by WILLIAM WALLACE | 99 |
| SOME BOOKS ON ANCIENT HISTORY | 100 |
| NOTES AND NEWS | 101 |
| UNIVERSITY JOTTINGS | 102 |
| ORIGINAL VERSES: "WALTER PATER," by MICHAEL FIELD | 102 |
| CRITICARY: WALTER PATER, by J. S. C.; J. L. O. MOWAT, & Co. | 102 |
| MAGAZINES AND REVIEWS | 103 |
| SELECTED FOREIGN BOOKS | 103 |
| CORRESPONDENCE— Ecclesiastes and the Psalter, by T. Tyler; Captain Carleton's Memoirs, by Charles Dalton; The Nun Chlopin and the Three Priests in the "Canterbury Tales," by Lina Eckenstein | 103 |
| THE OLD TESTAMENT IN BASQUE, by the Rev. WENTWORTH WEBSTER | 104 |
| THE ORIENTAL SEMINARY AT JOHNS HOPKINS | 105 |
| SCIENCE NOTES | 106 |
| "LIBRAIRIE DE L'ART," by COSMO MONKHOUSE | 106 |
| CORRESPONDENCE— Vandalism in Galicia, by E. S. DODSON | 106 |
| NOTES ON ART AND ARCHAEOLOGY | 106 |
| MUSIC PUBLICATIONS, by J. S. SHEDLOCK | 106 |

PORTRAITS.—8,000 Small Engraved Portraits, suitable for extra illustration, from 2s. a dozen. Send list of wants, or call upon SUCKLING & GALLOWAY, 13, Garrick Street, Covent Garden, W.C.
CATALOGUE OF BOOKS, issued bi-monthly, sent free on application.

TYPE-WRITING.

AUTHORS, PUBLISHERS, &c.—Scientific, Literary, and Medical MSS. carefully and promptly typewritten by RAYNE & Co., 40, Norfolk Street, Strand, W.C. Private room for dictation. Highest references. Translations.

THE FLEET STREET TYPEWRITERS

115, FLEET STREET, E.C.
Lowest Charges. Highest Speed.
Every kind of Typewriting Work Done.
Price List:—115, Fleet Street, London.

TYPE-WRITERS.—SECOND-HAND

MACHINES, equal to new. FOR SALE, EXCHANGE, or LENT on HIRE. Machines sold by instalments on Terms to suit purchasers. Use of Machine taught free to hirers or purchasers. Remingtons, Yosts, Hammonds, Caligraph, Burlocks, Fitch, &c., from £8. 318. Copied with accuracy and despatch at lowest rates. Highest references. Illustrated Catalogue free.—N. TAYLOR, Manager, National Type-Writer Exchange, 74, Chancery Lane, London (Holborn end).

CATALOGUES

FOREIGN BOOKS and PERIODICALS

promptly supplied on moderate terms.

CATALOGUES on application.

DULAU & CO., 37, SOHO SQUARE.

BAEDEKER'S & BADDELEY'S

TOURISTS' GUIDE BOOKS.

New fully detailed Catalogue sent post free on application

DULAU & CO., 37, SOHO SQUARE, LONDON, W.

FOREIGN BOOKS AT FOREIGN PRICES.

WILLIAMS & NORGATE,

Importers of Foreign Books,

14, HENRIETTA STREET, COVENT GARDEN,

AND
20, SOUTH FREDERICK STREET, EDINBURGH.

CATALOGUES post free on application.

MESSRS. J. C. DRUMMOND & CO.,

ART REPRODUCERS,

14, HENRIETTA STREET, COVENT GARDEN, W.O.

Are the sole representatives in Great Britain of HERR HANFSTAENGL, of Munich, the well-known Artist in PHOTOGRAPHURE, now patronised by the leading London Art Publishing Firms. A large Collection of Important Plates always on view.

Process Blocks for the purpose of Ordinary Book Illustrations.

Messrs. DRUMMOND & CO. supply the cheapest and best Processes in the market, which are specially adapted to meet the wants of Antiquarians, Archaeologists, and those engaged in the investigation and publication of Parochial and Diocesan Records.

J. C. DRUMMOND & CO. invite attention to their

Improved Rapid Photo-Mechanical Process

For the Reproduction of Works of Art, Original MSS., Designs, Lace Manufactures, Photographs, Views, Book Illustrations, Artistic Advertisements, Catalogues, &c., &c., at a moderate cost.

Specimens and price list on application.

Offices: 14, HENRIETTA STREET COVENT GARDEN, LONDON

ST. BARTHOLOMEW'S HOSPITAL and COLLEGE.

OPEN SCHOLARSHIPS.

Four Scholarships and One Exhibition, respectively worth £150, £75, £75, £50, and £20 each, tenable for one year, will be competed for in September, 1894—viz., One Senior Open Scholarship of the value of £75 will be awarded to the best candidate (if of sufficient merit) in Physics and Chemistry. One Senior Open Scholarship of the value of £75 will be awarded to the best candidate (if of sufficient merit) in Biology and Physiology.

Candidates for these Scholarships must be under twenty-five years of age, and must not have entered to the Medical and Surgical Practice of any London medical school.

One Junior Open Scholarship in Science, value £150, and one Preliminary Scientific Exhibition, value £20, will be awarded to the best candidates under twenty years of age (if of sufficient merit) in Physics, Chemistry, Animal Biology, and Vegetable Biology. The questions for the Scholarship of £150 will be of about the range required for Honours in the London University Preliminary Scientific Examination, and those for the Preliminary Scientific Exhibition will be of about the range of the past questions in that examination. The Jefferson Exhibition (value £20) will be competed for at the same time. The subjects of examination are Latin, Mathematics, and any one of the three following languages—Greek, French, and German.

The Classical subjects are those of the London University Matriculation Examination of June, 1894.

The successful candidates in all these Scholarships will be required to enter to the full course at St. Bartholomew's Hospital in the October succeeding the Examination. The Examination for these Scholarships will be held on September 26th, 1894.

For particulars, application may be made, personally or by letter, to the WARDEN of the College, St. Bartholomew's Hospital, E.C.

MASON COLLEGE, BIRMINGHAM (WITH QUEEN'S FACULTY OF MEDICINE).

FACULTIES OF ARTS AND SCIENCE.

PRINCIPAL: Professor R. S. HEATH, M.A. Cantab., D.Sc. Lond.

SESSION 1894-95.

THE SESSION WILL COMMENCE ON MONDAY, OCTOBER 1.

Complete Courses of Instruction are provided for the various Examinations in Arts and Science and the Preliminary Scientific (M.B.) Examination of the University of London; for Students of Civil, Mechanical, or Electrical Engineering; and for those who desire to obtain an acquaintance with some branch of applied science. Students may, however, attend any class or combination of classes.

There is also a Faculty of Medicine. A Syllabus containing full particulars is published by Messrs. Cornish, New Street, Birmingham. Price 6d.; by post, 7d.

A SYLLABUS of the Faculties of Arts and Science, containing full information as to the various Lecture and Laboratory Courses, Lecture Days and Hours, Fees, Entrance and other Scholarships, Prizes, &c., is published by Messrs. Cornish, New Street, Birmingham. Price 6d.; by post, 7d.

Further information may be obtained on application to
Geo. H. MORTLEY, Secretary and Registrar.

THE VICTORIA UNIVERSITY.

The following EXAMINATIONS will be held at Owens College, Manchester; University College, Liverpool; and Yorkshire College, Leeds, in September—

An ENTRANCE EXAMINATION in ARTS (introductory to the Faculty of Medicine) on MONDAY, SEPTEMBER 24th, and following days.

An ENTRANCE EXAMINATION in ARTS (introductory to the Faculty of Music) on MONDAY, SEPTEMBER 24th, and following days.

A PRELIMINARY EXAMINATION (introductory to the Faculties of Arts, Science, and Law) on MONDAY, SEPTEMBER 24th, and following days.

The Examination Fee (£2), accompanied by a list of the subjects presented, must be sent to the Registrar, from whom conditions of entrance and further particulars can be obtained, on or before September 14th.

Manchester, August, 1894.

BRITISH INSTITUTION SCHOLARSHIP FUND.

At a Meeting of the Trustees held on August 2, SCHOLARSHIPS of £50, tenable for two years, were AWARDED—In Painting, to CHARLES AUGUSTUS BIRCHALL, Royal Academy Schools, and ISAAC SNOWMAN, Royal Academy Schools; in Sculpture, to FRANK JENKINS, Royal Academy Schools; in Black and White, to GEORGE MURRAY, National Art Training School, South Kensington.

THE YORKSHIRE COLLEGE, LEEDS.

APPLICATIONS are invited for a vacant DEMONSTRATORSHIP of PHYSICS. Salary £125, with certain fees. Particulars may be obtained from the SECRETARY, to whom applications must be sent on or before August 31st.

ST. PAUL'S SCHOOL, London.—

FOUNDATION SCHOLARSHIPS. An EXAMINATION for filling up about 20 VACANCIES on the Foundation will be held on the 4th SEPTEMBER NEXT.—For information, apply to the Bursar, St. Paul's School, West Kensington, W.

LONDON SCHOOL OF MEDICINE for

WOMEN, 30, HANDEL STREET, BRUSWICK SQUARE, W.C., and the ROYAL FREE HOSPITAL, prepare for all the Medical Examinations open to Women. Entrance Scholarship, value £30; Stuart Hill Scholarship, £30 a year for four years; Mackay Prizes of £20 each, &c.—Apply to SECRETARY at School.

EDUCATION.—Particulars as to the best

University or Army Tutors and Schools for Boys or Girls, at home or abroad, may be obtained, free of charge, by sending a statement of requirements to R. J. BEYRON, M.A., 8, Lancaster Place, Strand.

MUDIE'S

SELECT

LIBRARY

For the CIRCULATION and SALE of all the BEST ENGLISH, FRENCH, GERMAN, ITALIAN, and SPANISH BOOKS.

TOWN SUBSCRIPTIONS from One Guinea per annum.

LONDON BOOK SOCIETY (for Weekly Exchange of Books at the Houses of Subscribers) from Two Guineas per annum.

COUNTRY SUBSCRIPTIONS from Two Guineas per annum.

N.B.—Two or three friends may unite in One Subscription and thus lessen the cost of carriage.

LIBRARY BOXES GRATIS.

Town and Village Clubs supplied on Liberal Terms

Prospectuses and Monthly Lists of Books gratis and post free.

SALE DEPARTMENT.

All the leading Books of the Past Seasons are on Sale, second-hand at greatly Reduced Prices.

LISTS GRATIS AND POST FREE.

MUDIE'S MANCHESTER LIBRARY,

10 to 12, BARTON ARCADE, MANCHESTER,

Is in daily communication with this Library.

MUDIE'S SELECT LIBRARY, Limited,

30 to 34, NEW OXFORD STREET, LONDON;

241, Brompton Road, S.W.; and 48, Queen Victoria St., E.C

THE

AUTOTYPE COMPANY

Has the honour to announce the Publication of

NINETY-THREE DRAWINGS

BY

ALBERT DURER,

Reproduced in Facsimile from Originals in the British Museum, and accompanied by Descriptive Text by

SIDNEY COLVIN, M.A.,

Keeper of Prints and Drawings, British Museum.

"The British Museum collection, reproduced in this volume, is," says Professor Colvin, "a fairly complete and representative survey of the several phases of Durer's activity as a draughtsman and sketcher during all periods of his career."

The Volume is Imperial folio, half-morocco, Plates Linen-Guarded and Interleaved. Edition 100 Copies.

Price Six Guineas.

The AUTOTYPE FINE-ART CATALOGUE

(New Edition), of 184 pages, with Illustrated Supplement, containing 68 Miniature Photographs of notable Autotypes, post free, ONE SHILLING.

"AUTOTYPE: a Decorative and Educational Art."

NEW PAMPHLET, FREE ON APPLICATION.

THE AUTOTYPE COMPANY,

74, New Oxford Street, London,

AGENCY FOR AMERICAN BOOKS.

G. P. PUTNAM'S SONS, PUBLISHERS

G. and BOOKSELLERS, of 27 and 29 West 23rd Street, New York, and 24, BEDFORD STREET, LONDON, W.C., desire to call the attention of the READING PUBLIC to the excellent facilities presented by their Branch House in London for filling, on the most favourable terms, orders for their own STANDARD PUBLICATIONS, and for ALL AMERICAN BOOKS and PERIODICALS—CATALOGUES sent on application.

RICHARD BENTLEY & SON'S LIST.

NOW READY.
MORE ABOUT GORDON.

By ONE WHO KNEW HIM WELL.
In 1 vol., fcap. 8vo, 2s. 6d.

NOW READY.
NEW NOVELS AT THE LIBRARIES

THIS DAY.
WEDDED TO A GENIUS.

By NEIL CHRISTISON.
In 2 vols., crown 8vo.

NOW READY.
IN a CINQUE PORT: a Story

of Winchelsea. By E. M. HEWITT. In 3 vols., crown 8vo.

"In a Cinque Port' strikes us as a book which has been written with much deliberation. The author seems to have been under the influence of the ancient sea-forsaken Sussex city which he has chosen for the setting of his scenes. He describes lovingly and well, and those who know Winchelsea will take pleasure from the description, apart altogether from the plot and action of the story."—Daily Chronicle.

NOW READY.
AN INTERLOPER. By Frances

MARY PEARD, Author of "The Baroness," &c. In 2 vols., crown 8vo.

"Miss Peard's latest book is also, we think, one of her best. The scene is laid at Poissy, and the sketch of provincial France is quaint and vivid."—Daily News.

NOW READY.
A TROUBLESOME PAIR. By

LESLIE KEITH, Author of "Lisbeth," &c. In 3 vols., crown 8vo.

"The lively record of the difficulties encountered by a retired Indian officer who has undertaken to watch over the fortunes of two young step-sisters, lovely, high-bred, but, alas! also, for the colonel's peace of mind, too high-spirited to submit to the control of a resident chaperon."—Manchester Guardian.

NOW READY.
MRS. ROMNEY. By Rosa N. Carey.

Author of "Nellie's Memories," &c. In 1 vol., small crown 8vo, 2s.

"Miss Carey has the gift of writing naturally and simply, her pathos is true and unforced, and her conversations are sprightly and sharp."—Standard.

A NEW EDITION. In 1 vol., crown 8vo, 6s.
DIANA TEMPEST. By Mary

CHOLMONDELEY, Author of "Sir Charles Danvers," &c.

"Mrs. Wood has certainly an art of novel-writing which no rival possesses in the same degree or kind. It is not, we fancy, a common experience for any one to leave one of these novels unfinished."—Spectator.

BETWEEN ONE AND TWO MILLION COPIES OF
MRS. HENRY WOOD'S NOVELS

have been sold since publication.

Each Novel of this favourite Author can be had separately, well printed on good paper, and neatly bound, price 3s. 6d.

EAST LYNNE. (300th Thousand.)

| | |
|--------------------------------|--------------------------------|
| THE CHANNINGS. | ANNE HEREFORD. |
| MRS. HALLIBURTON'S TROUBLES. | EDINA. |
| THE SHADOW of ASHLIDYAT. | DENE HOLLOW. |
| LORD OAKBURN'S DAUGHTERS. | A LIFE'S SECRET. |
| VERNER'S PRIDE. | COURT NETHER-LEIGH. |
| ROLAND YORKE. | LADY GRACE. |
| JOHNNY LUDLOW (First Series). | BESSY RANE. |
| MILDRED ARKELL. | PARKWATER. |
| ST. MARTIN'S EVE. | THE UNHOLY WISH, &c. |
| TREVLYN HILD. | JOHNNY LUDLOW (Third Series). |
| THE RED COURT FARM. | THE MASTER of GREY-LANDS. |
| GEORGE CANTERBURY'S WILL. | ORVILLE COLLEGE. |
| WITHIN the MAZE. | POMEROY ABBEY. |
| LADY ADELAIDE. | JOHNNY LUDLOW (Fourth Series). |
| ELSTER'S FOLLY. | ADAM GRAINGER. |
| OSWALD GRAY. | JOHNNY LUDLOW (Fifth Series). |
| JOHNNY LUDLOW (Second Series). | |

RICHARD BENTLEY & SON, New Burlington Street
Publishers in Ordinary to Her Majesty the Queen.

Words that have a tale to tell.

ENTIRELY NEW AND REVISED EDITION.

READY, AUG. 27, PART I., price 7d.

DR. BREWER'S DICTIONARY OF PHRASE AND FABLE.

Giving the Derivation, Source, or Origin of Common Phrases, Allusions, and Words that have a Tale to Tell.

"It is now about a quarter of a century since the First Edition of 'Phrase and Fable' was published, and the continuous sale of the book is a proof that it supplies a want very largely felt. In the interval much new information has been unearthed on the subjects treated in the dictionary, many errors of philology have been exposed, and an exactitude has been reached which was almost impossible when the book was first undertaken more than fifty years ago. During this length of time the book, or its manuscript, has been always at the author's elbow, that new matter might be added or laid in store, errors corrected, and suggestions utilised, to render the work more generally useful, and more thoroughly to be depended on. More than one-third of this Enlarged Edition will consist of entirely new matter. Some 350 extra pages have been added, and all that has been retained of previous editions has been subjected to the severest scrutiny."—EXTRACT FROM THE AUTHOR'S PREFACE.

CASELL & COMPANY, LIMITED,
LUDGATE HILL, LONDON;
And all Booksellers.

MR. T. FISHER UNWIN'S NEW BOOKS.

The "New" Pseudonym.

The Silver Christ.

By OUIDA.

Paper, 1s. 6d.; cloth, 2s. [Ready.]

The Anarchist Peril.

By FELIX DUBOIS.

Translated and Enlarged, with the Author's permission, by RALPH DERECHÉF.

With a Chapter on "Anarchism in England," by the Translator.

Freely Illustrated from Anarchist Propaganda.
Crown 8vo, cloth, 5s.

"The book reads more like an original work than a translation.....We have a complete sketch of the history of Anarchism during the past twenty years."—Times.

The English Revolution
of the Twentieth Century.

Edited by HENRY LAZARUS.

Demy 8vo, cloth, 10s. 6d.

"It will set all its readers thinking, and it is eminently readable."—Daily Chronicle.

By George R. Sims.

READY NEXT WEEK.

Dagonet on our Islands.

A Referee Record of Journeys in the Channel Islands, the Isle of Man, the Scilly Isles, the Isle of Wight, and the Isle of Dogs.

8vo, paper, 1s.

NEW NOVEL.

By Mary C. Rowsell.

In 3 vols., crown 8vo.—Now ready at all Libraries.

The Friend of the People.

By MARY C. ROWSELL, Author of "Traitor or Patriot," "Thorn-dyke Manor," "Petronella," &c.

The New Autonym.

Mad Sir Uchtred.

By S. R. CROCKETT,

Author of "The Raiders," &c.

Paper, 1s. 6d.; cloth, 2s.

"Mr. Crockett's English is strong and pure. He has the knack of hitting off a vivid picture in a choice word or two.....Exceedingly well-written."—Daily News.

LONDON:

T. FISHER UNWIN, PATERNOSTER SQUARE, E.C.

SATURDAY, AUGUST 11, 1894.

No. 1162, New Series.

THE EDITOR cannot undertake to return, or to correspond with the writers of, rejected manuscript.

It is particularly requested that all business letters regarding the supply of the paper, &c., may be addressed to the PUBLISHER, and not to the EDITOR.

LITERATURE.

The History of Trade Unionism. By Sidney Webb and Beatrice Webb. (Longmans.)

POLITICAL economy, a science never attractive except to a few somewhat peculiar minds, and now discredited by a passing phrase of random rhetoric, has of late received no contribution so important as this first fruit of the researches of Mr. and Mrs. Sidney Webb. Whatever else one may think of the authors, of their subject, or of their work, there can be no doubt that it was high time the history of Trade Unionism was written. The task could have fallen into no better hands, and, toilsome as it was, it has been admirably performed. The records of labour movements are in themselves obscure and perishing, and this inquiry was made only just in time. A few years hence there would have been almost insuperable difficulty in securing the original facts of many once widespread struggles. As it is, Mr. and Mrs. Webb have constantly found that the rules, regulations, and reports of various unions, and even newspapers and pamphlets, survive only in single copies. They have toiled through the papers in the offices of trade unions, visited almost every important town in England, conferred with aged unionists, and made the most diligent inquiry for defunct publications. Thus, and thus alone, have they obtained their materials; but the harvest has been abundant.

The mass of facts and figures which they have collected in detail has been digested and analysed with a thorough command of its important and its unimportant features; and so completely has the work been done that only careful reading reveals the extent of the toil underlying this work, learned as it is on the surface. For the present, the authors have confined themselves to a history of the process by which trade unionism has attained its present magnitude and importance. In a future volume they propose to discuss problems, to draw conclusions, and no doubt to preach causes. They have shrewdly foreseen that their preaching will then be with authority: they will be no mere speculators or dreamers, but solid historians, reasoning from the past to the future in the most orthodox academic style. Though it is easy to anticipate their conclusions, and perhaps impossible to agree with them, it is also impossible, be future dissent what it may, to withhold one's admiration now of their solid knowledge, of their breadth and grasp of the subject, and of the sense of historical articulation and the prevalent impartiality which characterise this book.

They write alike for their adherents and their foes, and they have made their book an almost final record of the subject which it treats. Its utility is increased by an excellent bibliography, a copious index, and a clear map of the distribution of trade unionism in England and Wales, county by county. Personal interest is given to the book by its numerous biographies in miniature of the chief trade union leaders, whose personalities and even names, but for these notes, must soon have been forgotten for want of a brief record.

In spite of a variety of ill-founded claims and false attributions, there appears to be no evidence on which modern trade unions can be connected in any way with societies existing in the middle ages. They are the product of the industrial revolutions of the last century, necessitated by the helplessness of isolated labourers in the presence of organised capital. Their aim is not that of the old trade guilds: it is sectional, and at once aggressive and defensive. In Mr. and Mrs. Webb's eyes their aim ought to be, and perhaps is, to maintain among workmen a decent standard of life by collectively bargaining with the body of employers, and ultimately controlling them through state departments. It is the unionist workman's duty never to accept work at less than the minimum wage by which that standard of life can be maintained. Better than this, starvation: for less than this is treachery. This seems to be all their teaching here; beyond this no moral is at present sought to be drawn.

"Our researches were no sooner fairly in hand than we began to discover that the effects of trade unionism upon the conditions of labour and upon industrial organisation and progress are so governed by the infinite technical variety of our productive processes that they vary from industry to industry and even from trade to trade, and the economic moral varies with them. . . . All analysis of the economic effects of trade union action we reserve for a subsequent volume . . . and in that volume the most exacting seeker for economic morals will be more than satisfied; for there will be almost as many economic morals drawn as societies described."

The activity of the small and obscure trade unions of the last century was directed mainly to procuring the interference of Parliament in their particular troubles. They hoped to obtain by petitions to a higher power some remedy for grievances which they found themselves powerless to heal. That interference was frequently given in favour of a single trade or even of a single locality. It was a semi-mediaeval view of the relation of government to labour; right or wrong it satisfied a non-industrial age. But with the end of the eighteenth century was completed a serious change in the attitude of parliament. It refused to interfere any longer: it embraced a new dogma of the sanctity of industrial freedom; it consolidated and strengthened the law against combination. Unintentionally parliament created the trade union cause. This change of attitude for the first time "brought all trades into line, and for the first time produced what can properly be called a trade union movement." Workmen found that they must now help themselves, and if they would help themselves they must combine as a class. Necessarily the first point of attack, as soon as the period of mere riot and repression was over and the constitutional and peaceful movement had begun, was the law against combination. Yet even here the workmen could not yet fight their own battle. Help came to them at first from outside of their class. It was to a master tailor, Francis Place, and to a retired Indian medical officer, Joseph Hume, that the trade unions owed the great blows against the combination laws, which were struck in 1824 and 1825.

Then followed a period of wild and even revolutionary theory. It was the day of Robert Owen, of the propaganda of the Charter. The trade unions had learnt neither their strength nor their weakness; they could not yet distinguish between practical aims and impossible dreams. Their numbers fluctuated with extraordinary rapidity, the working classes at one time crowding into new unions, at others falling away disheartened and leaving their newborn societies to dwindle and die. For a time they endeavoured to consolidate the trade unions, and dreamt of a national association of labour:

"The distinctive connotation of the term trade union was the ideal of complete solidarity of all wage earners in a single 'universal' organisation. It is the attempt on the part of the trade union leaders to form not only national societies of particular trades, but also to include all manual workers in one comprehensive organisation, that constitutes the New Unionism of 1829-34. . . . The records of the rise and fall of the 'New Unionism' of 1830-34 leave us conscious of a vast enlargement in the ideas of the workers, without any corresponding alteration in their tactics in the field. In council they are idealists, dreaming of a new heaven and a new earth, humanitarians, educationists, socialists, moralists; in battle they are still the struggling, half-emancipated serfs of 1825, armed only with the rude weapon of the strike and the boycott, sometimes feared and hated by the propertied classes, sometimes merely despised, always oppressed and miserably poor. We find, too, that they are actually less successful with the old weapons now that they wield them with new and wider ideas. They get beaten in a rising market instead of as hitherto only in a falling one; and we shall soon see that they did not recover their lost advantage until they again concentrated their efforts on narrower and more manageable aims."

Adversity and disillusion taught them this lesson, and both came in abundance in 1845-48. Little by little they gave up their dreams of co-operative workshops and agricultural communities. They abandoned their vast ambitions and their aggressive agitation. A series of painstaking, shrewd, practical men built up the huge "amalgamated" societies, whose accumulated hundreds of thousands of pounds, whose permanent organisation and wide and generous benefits, gave them a stable and powerful position. Their stability commanded at once the awe and admiration of their members. To their officers it became almost a fetish. They learnt to keep with caution that influence which they had hardly won by years of moderation and thrift. The members became an aristocracy of skilled workmen; the leaders constituted a clique of hard-working politicians. Newton, Allan, Applegarth, and their friends, centralised and consolidated their unions, and made them an effective political force. It was the work of years, and its fruits came suddenly and in abundance.

With startling rapidity "the Junta" found themselves transformed from agitators little removed from criminals into respectable politicians, whose demands were conceded, whose Bills were passed, and whose support was courted and prized.

"In 1867 the officials of the unions were regarded as pothouse agitators, 'unscrupulous men, leading a half-idle life, fattening on the contributions of their dupes,' and maintaining by violence and murder a system of terrorism, which was destructive, not only of the industry of the nation, but also of the prosperity and independence of character of the unfortunate working men, who were their victims. The Unionist workman, tramping with his card in search of employment, was regarded by the constable and the magistrate as something between a criminal vagrant and a revolutionist. In 1875 the officials of the great societies found themselves elected to the local School Boards and even to the House of Commons, pressed by the government to accept seats on Royal Commissions, and respectfully listened to in the lobby."

But for this great success the trade union leaders had to pay a still greater price. They lost the leadership of the workmen as a whole; their great societies ceased to be representative of the associations of working men. Mr. Broadhurst and his friends took their economic theories, their ideals of life, and their political sympathies, from their new friends, the middle-class politicians. In the bad times of the next few years they had nothing better to offer to the working classes than a bill for the codification of the law. Even a Whig candidate for parliament could have promised more. The amalgamated societies approximated more closely to insurance companies than to strike clubs. London, their great field, ceased to be the chief home of unionist activity. The Parliamentary Committee of the Trades Union Congress seemed to have scarcely more to do with workmen than the economic section of the British Association. Bad times, which severed the mass of working men from their old leaders, prepared the soil for new seed. Soon persons with vague views came upon the scene, land nationalisers and single tax men. They found the working classes eager to hear some new gospel to take the place of the Old Unionism, which was doing their masses so little good. They had learnt that the Old Unionism would not help them to strike; it was chary of taking them as members; and it could not revive trade. In this hour of despair, thanks to the incessant activity of a small knot of able men, hierophants of a crowd of fanatics and faddists, Socialism made itself heard. Mr. Hyndman planted; the Fabian Society watered. Revolutionary Socialism became constitutional, and in ceasing to be revolutionary began to be formidable. It captured the working classes. Messrs. Tillett, Mann, and Burns made the great discovery that a belligerent union does not need strike funds: mere money can be got by appeals to a sentimental public. Why spend laborious years in accumulating weekly levies upon members, since the Dock Strike of 1889 has shewn that the middle class can be tapped for the funds required? A sympathetic cardinal is worth more than a crowd of methodical secretaries. Since then the Socialism of 1885 has made great strides. True, the responsibility of office has sobered some of its votaries; but such has been its success that those who preach it may well stand amazed at their own moderation. The control of others' capital without the labour of saving it, the regulation of others' workshops and counting houses by the officials of a working-class democracy, the progressive taxation of persons of property for the elevation of the proletariat, are objects that may well seem now almost within their grasp. Since they sat at the feet of Karl Marx this is the general nature of the New Unionist aspirations. The voice is the voice of the British workman, but the doctrine was "made in Bavaria." The authors of this book point out that the workman who lives in his own house is too much tied to one spot to be a thoroughly militant unionist; if he owns a bit of land or the complete necessities of an industrial process, his ownership interferes with that fluidity of labour, rigorously detached from the smallest capitalist interest, which is essential to that sharp antagonism of labour to capital which the New Unionism requires. Accordingly, they discourage endeavours to improve the position of the individual by means of building societies, allotments, or land purchase by state aid. These are middle-class notions of improving the condition of the people. In another volume they promise to discuss the future; and for the present we can only speculate by what steps they propose to approach the collectivist goal. But it is clear that those steps must be taken at the expense of the middle classes. The theories and ideals of the Old Unionism of 1874 are superseded now, or Mr. and Mrs. Webb are much mistaken. Ten years ago the middle classes lost their brief opportunity of binding to themselves that artisan aristocracy which then controlled the trade union world. How much further, then, is the collectivist movement to go? Is it to be hoped, or indeed wished, that the middle classes may contrive to resist it any longer? Will a revival of trade again divert working-class aspirations towards individualist prosperity, and away from collectivist uniformity? Can middle-class economics hope to recapture the trade unions? On these questions everyone will soon have to make up his mind for himself, and the sooner the better. But, at any rate, he will find plenty of material in this history, and must use it either for forming an opinion or for justifying a preconception according to the idiosyncrasy of his understanding.

J. A. HAMILTON.

SABATIER'S LIFE OF SAINT FRANCIS.

Vie de S. François d'Assise. Par Paul Sabatier. (Paris: Fischbacher.)

Life of St. Francis of Assisi. By Paul Sabatier. Translated by Louise Seymour Houghton. (Hodder & Stoughton.)

To discover the man in the saint held up for our veneration is always a difficult and usually a thankless task. But when the result of the process wins the praise of men who look upon things from such different standpoints as do Tolstoi and Leo XIII., we must acknowledge a more than common success.

Of M. Sabatier's qualifications for his task we need not speak: an easy style, love for his subject, knowledge of the period, of the places in which his hero lived, and of the manuscripts in which his story lies hid—all these are evidenced in this octavo of some 500 pages. If the result is not the final life of St. Francis, it will have to be seriously considered by anyone who writes on the subject.

The book consists of the story of St. Francis, an introductory critical study of the materials, and appendices dealing with the evidence as to the Stigmata, &c. The documents are unusually abundant, and are classified by our author under five heads: the works of St. Francis himself, his biographies, the official documents, the chronicles of the order, and other writings. The sources on which M. Sabatier chiefly relies are the writings of St. Francis, the biographies of Thomas de Celano, and that of the Three Companions, and the Speculum perfectionis status fratrum minorum. For his MSS. he has gone to the great collection at Assisi, though others are cited on occasion.

It is, we think, with his treatment of the works attributed to St. Francis that we feel most disappointment. There are, scattered over the great libraries of Europe, fragments of letters, &c., bearing his name; and the reader has, we think, some ground for expecting an account of them, and the application of our author's critical canon, the fleur d'amour, to the question of their authenticity. It is true that Ehrle and Müller (among others) have already written on the question, but the scale on which M. Sabatier has treated other parts of the subject would have warranted greater space being devoted to this one. We trust we shall not be accused of insular pride when we say that French scholars, with very brilliant exceptions, do not seem to have discovered the British Museum MS. Room, and that no searcher into any subject demanding a study of MSS. can afford to leave it unvisited.

The critical study of the biographies is much more satisfactory, and will be of great value to the English student. It seems to us, however, that in his estimate of the first Life of Thomas de Celano, M. Sabatier has relied too much on the very inferior text of the Bollandists; and that, if he had consulted Harl. 47, one of the best MSS. of this life (and not of the second, as he says, at p. lxxiv. on the authority of Ehrle), he might have modified his views as to the connexion between the first and second Lives. This MS. dates from about 1300, and a casual example shows its value: the Bollandists (p. 699, Acta S.S., Oct. ij.) read "inter creaturas," a side-note says, "forte interdum," Harl. 47 reads "etiam," restoring sense to the passage. It is divided into three books, and into chapters with rubricated headings. The first runs from f. 13^a to 29^b, treating of the life and deeds of St. Francis; the second, 29^b to 37^a, of the last two years of his life, and his death; the third, 37^a to 43^a, of his canonisation and miracles. Another MS. which M. Sabatier would, no doubt, have gladly made use of, is Cleop. B. II. of the Speculum, written at the end of the fourteenth century, and containing 124 chapters. It preserves many things omitted from the printed copy with which we compared it, some of great interest. Thus, in the first chapter, speaking of the three rules of St. Francis, it tells us that the second rule, which was lost, was shorter than that confirmed by Innocent (in direct opposition to M. Sabatier's view), and that it was made on account of the vision of the host.

The main body of the work opens with an account of the little mediæval town in which St. Francis was born, and where he spent so much of his life. This chapter, and that on "The Church in 1209," should be read by everyone engaged in the study of the period. The little town, its wars and revolutions, the triumph of the bourgeoisie, the return of the nobles, and, ten years after, the renunciation of feudal rights, and the enfranchisement of the rural population; all are described. Topics of interest to the theological student—the rise of the Vaudois, the Everlasting Gospel and its influence on St. Francis, the heresy of the Cathari—are discussed luminously, if briefly; and M. Sabatier's references are fairly full, so that the student, if disposed, may follow the matter further.

We quote from M. Sabatier's description of the Italy and the men of the time:

"Let us imagine the Italy of the early thirteenth century, with its divisions, its state of permanent war, the country depopulated, the fields uncultivated save in the narrow belt which the garrisons of the towns could protect; every city, from the greatest to the least, spending its time in watching its neighbour to seize the favourable moment to sack it; the sieges ending in unheard-of atrocities, and, after that, famine, quickly followed by the plague, completing the work of destruction.

"How many difficulties do we find when we wish to describe the headlong outbursts of the century, its poetic inspirations, its amorous and chaste visions, standing out on a background of coarseness, wretchedness, corruption, and madness.

"Men in those days had every vice but vulgarity, or every virtue save moderation—they were brigands or saints. Life was rough enough to kill all the feeble, so strong minds had an energy unknown to-day. At each instant one had to guard against a thousand dangers, to take resolutions on the spot at the risk of life. Open Fra Salimbene's Chronicle, and you will be affrighted to see that what occupies the largest space there is the account of the annual expeditions of Parma against its neighbours or of those against it. What would this Chronicle have been if it had been written by a warrior instead of by an enlightened monk, a lover of music, an unwearied traveller, an ardent mystic. And this is not all: these wars between city and city are complicated by civil wars, plots are periodically woven, the conspirators are massacred if they are discovered, or massacre and exile if they triumph. Add to all this the great struggles of the papacy against the empire, the heretics, and the infidels, and one can understand the difficulty of describing such a time."

The story gives us an impression of a real man, consistent with himself and with his surroundings. His life-work was of the first importance—he saved Italy to the Church, and the Church from itself; the growth of pre-Raphaelite art may be traced to his movement—yet he was but a natural product of the good and the bad of his time, no miracle without due and sufficient cause, and his work lay before him prepared to his hand. We follow Francis Bernardino as the gay young profligate (in no bad sense of the words), as the man who abandons all things for the love of Dame Poverty, as the preacher whom the common people hear gladly, and the light of a band of dear companions. He conquers the tacit opposition of the Church (M. Sabatier compares its attitude to that of the Anglican episcopate towards the Salvation Army) by meekness and humble perseverance, and is saved from heresy by his pious obedience to the powers that be. We follow him as the order grows, and as the Cardinal Hugolini, the Machiavelli of M. Sabatier's story, afterwards Gregory IX., comes on the scene; and we see the continual pressure applied, moderating the "unpractical" views of Francis, and driving him at last from the direction of the order he had called into being into honourable retirement, leaving Brother Helias to develop the plans of the Church in his name. We admire, as we read, the art with which the author has emphasised the relations of St. Francis and the early Franciscans, with the band of holy women who had followed his example and had left all; and we feel that this, surely, is truer than the after-legends of monastic rigours. Nor is the story without its lighter humour: the holy brother whom the city went out to meet, and whom they found playing at see-saw with the children till they left him in disgust, the innocent contest between the friar who would earn his living and the cardinal who wished to entertain him—these form a relief without disturbing the harmony of the story.

All this is more than a biography: it is a work of art, and the worthy Strasbourgeois may feel proud of the work dedicated to them. It recalls to us the reading of the Vie de Jésus; and if it leaves us with, perhaps, the doubt that followed that reading, the compliment is the greater to the author. The world is richer for a human saint, whose miracles are treated sanely (M. Sabatier accepts the early accounts of the Stigmata), and whose mendicancy is that of the labourer who, having earned his day's food and shelter, takes it from what quarter God sends it.

Certain problems in the early history of the Franciscans remain to be studied. M. Sabatier's conjecture as to Brother Helias seems tenable; but the chapter on the Friars and Science will, we fear, do little to help the student seeking for the history of the movement which changed a body of ignorant mendicants into the teachers of Europe in such short time. Nor has the story laid emphasis on the feeling which caused the Peterborough Chronicle to write under date 1224, "O dolor et plusquam dolor! O pestis truculenta, fratres minores venerunt in Angliam." The picture on p. 41 of the changes of sect in English villages shows the danger of generalising from the particular, since M. Sabatier had no doubt some instance in his mind. One last reproach, the author has issued this book without an index. It is clearly printed, and in such instances as we have tested remarkably free from misprints. We congratulate M. Sabatier on his work.

ROBERT STEELE.

Shylock and Others. Eight Studies by G. H. Radford. (Fisher Unwin.)

SOME ten years ago Mr. George Radford published a study of that prince of humourists, Falstaff, in the first series of Obiter Dicta; and it was matter for regret to many, besides Mr. Birrell himself, that no contribution from that "other hand" adorned the second volume of those delightful papers. And now Mr. Radford comes into the field as an essayist on his own account, flitting butterfly-like over the banks of literature, and sipping the sweets of all the centuries. In three of the eight studies, Shakspeare is again the theme, and of these more anon; the diverse subjects of the rest show them to be no part of a pedantic design, but rather the momentary dictates of a roaming fancy. Socrates and his ironical effort to save the state, Coleridge and his boyish dreams of Pantisocracy and Aspheterism, Johnson's unspeakable tragedy of "Irene," the Arthur of Tennyson and the Arthur of Malory, the green-wood myth of Robin Hood: these are the enchanters that have beguiled Mr. Radford from the musty folios of the law, and on them all he gossips pleasantly and briefly, with a saving gift of dry humour which at times reminds one of Mr. Birrell's own. "Study" perhaps is hardly the word: he does not attempt to instruct or illumine; he is content to entertain; he is the causeur, not the scholar. And if the humour occasionally appears thin or forced, it is the fault of the mode: you cannot keep on the surface of deep things without some queer feats of levitation; the motions of a cork are agile, but not invariably dignified.

Of the Shakspeare papers one deals with Shylock; two are respectively entitled "The Sources of Hamlet," and "Hamlet's Madness." Let us take Shylock first. "The Merchant of Venice" is naturally a play with a peculiar interest for the legal mind. The technicalities of the great fourth act afford M. Radford a wide scope for strictly professional criticism.

"Imagine," he says, "Mary Anderson, primed with lines written for her (alas, it is difficult to imagine who could write them!), having borrowed Mr. Lockwood's wig and gown, sweeping into the Lord Justice's Court, gently taking the case of the injured defendant out of the hands of the benign Chief, who looks on amazed, but quiescent, while the extortionate plaintiff is not only non-suited, but committed for trial at the Old Bailey—imagine all this, and you have a modern counterpart of the glorious day's work of the breezy Portia."

M. Radford thinks that the situation diverted the Elizabethan stage-goer because it was so very improbable. I venture to maintain that no one who was not nicely versed in the tricks and quillets of the law would ever feel that it was improbable. Stage law is always irregular, and dramatically it never makes a ha'porth of difference. Set aside the fact that Portia is a girl masquerading as a man, and what is the situation. You have a worthy nobleman presiding in his own local court. Theoretically he is, of course, the fount of justice, and no doubt he plays the part with all becoming dignity. But when it is a matter of interpreting the common law or a complicated statute, he not unnaturally calls in the assistance of an expert, a legal assessor, who practically decides the case. To the lay mind there is nothing in the least improbable in that. It is analogous to the use of any worthy and highly respected Chairman of Quarter Sessions, who, if any difficult point arises, will lean over and take the law from the justices' clerk. Then, again, Mr. Radford thinks that a city audience must have been "highly amused by the wildly improbable character of Antonio," "the Christian merchant who had scruples about usury, and lent out his money gratis." "They knew the Christian merchant, but the Christian merchant with these scruples was entirely new to them, and no doubt delighted them hugely." Well, this is very elegant fooling, but it is not a criticism of the play. "The Merchant of Venice" is a tragi-comedy, not a farce. If Shakspeare had meant his audience to laugh at Antonio he would not have made him a serious and pathetic character. I cannot but think that Mr. Radford has allowed his high spirits to run away with him. He reminds me of the American humourist who burlesqued the Arthur legends. It is a pity; for there is so much good fun in Shakspeare that it is unnecessary to introduce it in an illegitimate way.

The two papers on "Hamlet" are conceived in a more sober vein. The information of that on "The Sources of Hamlet" is, indeed, incomplete. Mr. Radford discourses of Saxo Grammaticus, and of Belleforest, and of the English "Historie of Hamblet." And he tells us that Shakspeare's masterpiece was probably based upon an earlier play by "an unknown author, whose name has perished." But he does not mention the extremely probable and ingenious identification of this "unknown author" with the author of "The Spanish Tragedy," Thomas Kyd, a theory which has been elaborately worked out, for example, by Sarrazin in his Kyd und Sein Kreis and in his Anglia papers on the development of the Hamlet-Saga. Nor does he inquire whether any portions of this lost play remain to us, either embedded in the so-called first quarto edition, or obscured in the curiously transfigured German version. Yet it is precisely in these points that the interest of Hamlet scholars at present rests.

Upon the vexed question of Hamlet's madness, Mr. Radford delivers himself with excellent common sense. After a careful review of the evidence, as it might be put before the jury, were Hamlet arraigned for the murder of Polonius and insanity pleaded as a defence, he concludes that the plea can by no means be sustained. Hamlet "said he would feign madness, and he did so, and after the murder he stated, quite consistently with his previous statement, that he was sane"; and, again, "We may fairly say that only those supposed Hamlet to be mad whom he wished to have that opinion, and that of these he failed to convince the king." Mr. Radford's position seems to me unassailable, so far as the strictly legal point of view goes. Hamlet was not mad in any sense which a court of law could take into cognisance. But, after all, that is not quite a final solution of the problem. For the rigid dividing-line between sanity and insanity is little more than a legal fiction, existing for the purposes of commissions de lunatico inquirendo. Actually, the normal shades by infinite degrees into the abnormal: there is a vast shadowy borderland of unstrung nerves and exalted imagination, whose devious geography the most skilful alienist can never map out; and into this dark realm who shall say how far Hamlet's perturbed spirit had wandered?

EDMUND K. CHAMBERS.

British Family Names: their Origin and Meaning. By Henry Barber. (Elliot Stock.)

NEARLY three years ago, as Dr. Barber informs us in a charmingly ingenuous Introduction, he wrote a magazine article "in order to draw attention to the subject" of surnames. At some subsequent period "he met with, for the first time," Mr. Lower's Patronymica Britannica. Finding this standard work "deficient in precise information and investigation," he has compiled a volume which, when Mr. Lower's guidance is not followed, is deficient not only in precise information and investigation, but in other qualities equally desirable. Dr. Barber's acquaintance with the literature of his subject is not extensive. If he had "met with" Mr. Bardsley's excellent handbook on English Surnames, or even with the brief article on "Names" in the new edition of Chambers's Cyclopaedia, the "many years labour" which he has devoted to the present work would not have been so entirely wasted as is now the case, or, at all events, he might have avoided some of the gross ineptitudes which disfigure every page.

The elaborate lists of Icelandic, Frisian, Anglo-Saxon, and Domesday names which Dr. Barber has compiled must be used with caution. Thus, among Old Norse names he includes Abraham, Petrus, and Stephanus, which are in no sense Icelandic, being included in the Index to the Landnåma-bók merely as the names of certain Armenian bishops who visited Iceland. Again, in his list of Domesday tenants we have such curious entries as Taini, Camerarius, Capellanus, Dispensator, Pictavensis, Hispaniensis, Mauritanienensis, Aldreman, and Chiping, which are certainly not personal names, Anglo-Saxon or Norman, but descriptive titles. But these Icelandic, Frisian, or Anglo-Saxon names are of little or no value for the explanation of modern English surnames. Dr. Barber seems to be unaware that the Norman Conquest brought about a revolution in personal nomenclature which was completed before the end of the twelfth century. This is clearly shown by such documents as the Boldon Book or the Liber Vitae, important sources of information with which he seems to be still unacquainted. In the Boldon Book, which was compiled in 1183, the tenants usually have Norman names, such as William, Robert, Walter, or Ralph, while the fathers of these men mostly bear old English names, like Osbert or Turkil. This fundamental change in the system of nomenclature is even more conspicuous in the Liber Vitae, where the earlier entries are exclusively of the Anglian type, like Bernulf or Cynbert. These gradually disappear, being replaced in the thirteenth century by William, Robert, Reginald, Richard, John, and similar Norman names. This revolution having been completed before the general introduction of surnames, it is vain to attempt to explain them from Anglo-Saxon or Icelandic sources. It is in such later documents as the Hundred Rolls, the Poll Book of 1379, or in the lists of trades given in accounts of pageants and plays, that we have to seek for the origin of our surnames, which are largely derived from trades or occupations, many of which are no longer pursued, or pursued under other designations.

As a rule, Dr. Barber, with strange perversity, misses the signification of trade-names. Take, for instance, those referring to the manufacture of cloth or the preparation of leather, such as the Kempster who combed or carded the wool, the Fuller or Tucker (le Tukere) who fulled the cloth, the Walker (le Walkere) who trod it in the fulling vat, the Lister (le Listere) who dyed it, the Tozer who teased or touselled it, and the Mercer who sold it. He derives Kempster from Kempston, a local name in Norfolk, Lister from the town of Leicester, Fuller is the French personal name Fouiller, Tucker is Dutch, German, or Flemish, Tozer is referred to Tosard, a Domesday tenant, Walker to the O.N. Valgardr, while Mercer is the Flemish Meerschaert. He is as unfortunate with other trade-names. Skinner and Barker, names from the leather trade, are derived from the Icelandic names Skinni and Børkr, while Nailor (le Naylere), who made nails, is from the O.N. Njáll. From local names in Normandy and elsewhere he derives a number of obvious trade-names. Orfeur (le Orfeure), who worked in gold, is from the village of Orvaux, Cartwright (le Cartwright) from Caüterets, Plowright from Plougouvert, Barber from St. Barbe, and Nurse (le Noreyse) from Noyers. Cheswright (le Cheswright) is from Chesworth in Derbyshire, Omer, or Homer, a maker of helmets, is explained from a local name in Devon, Messenger from Messingham in Lincolnshire, while Napper (le Napere), a house servant whose business was with the napery, or table linen, came from Nappa, an obscure Yorkshire hamlet with half a dozen cottages. Carver (le Karver) is from the Icelandic Kálfr, and Carter (le Carter) from Köttr, an Icelandic nickname; Hillyer (le Hiliere), who roofed or tiled houses, is the Danish Hilleraad, and Reeder (le Redere), who thatched them, is the O.N. Hreidarr; Fanner, who winnowed grain with a fan, is from the Dutch Fano; Pinder (le Pendere), who kept the village pound, is a German name; Firminger, the cheesemonger, is Flemish; and Ferrier, who shod horses, is either Flemish or Danish. Flowers (le Flouer), who made arrows, is from the local name Fleurus; and Fletcher (le Flecher), who feathered them, is the Flemish Vleeschauer. With other classes of names the explanations are no less preposterous. Scott (le Scot) is from the O.N. skatti, a ghost; Wales (le Waleys), the Welshman, is from Wales, a village near Sheffield; Norris (le Norris), the Northman, is a French name; Roose (John le Rouse, or "red John") is from a local name in Cornwall; while Neve (le Neve), the nephew, is Dutch; and Shakspeare, Braksphear, and Winspear are referred to the village names Skegby, Braceby, and Winceby. Dr. Barber prefers to go to Danish, Flemish, Icelandic, and other outlandish sources, for such names as Lane, Wood, Green, Hall, and Yates, which are explained by numberless entries in records, such as Robert in the Lane, John at the Wode, William by the Grene, John at the Hall, or Johanna by the Yate. Quain and Quail, respectively corruptions of McIan, the son of John, and of McPhail, the son of Paul, are said to be French or Danish; while Kissick, Knill, Quinn, and Quay, which have been identified as corruptions of McIsaac, McNiel, McCoinn, and McKay, are all derived from local names.

With such absurdities bristling on every page, it need hardly be said that the book is not only useless, but positively misleading. Dr. Barber has sinned not wholly from ignorance, but largely from perversity, as in most cases he would have been safe if he had not deliberately preferred his own fanciful or impossible conjectures to the rational and generally sound explanations of Mr. Lower, whose deficient information he professes to correct.

ISAAC TAYLOR.

NEW NOVELS.

A Troublesome Pair. By Leslie Keith. In 3 vols. (Bentley.)

Aaron the Jew. By B. L. Farjeon. In 3 vols. (Hutchinson.)

All in a Man's Keeping. By Meg Dyan. In 2 vols. (W. H. Allen.)

The Thing that Hath Been. By A. H. Gilkes. (Longmans.)

Bachelor to the Rescue. By Florence Patton-Bethune. (Remington.)

Red and White Heather. By Robert Buchanan. (Chatto & Windus.)

A Camsterie Nacket. By Jessie M. E. Saxby. (Olipphant, Anderson & Ferrier.)

From the Frontier. By Frederick Boyle. (Chapman & Hall.)

The Businesses of a Busy Man. By R. S. Warren Bell. (Leadenhall Press.)

A Troublesome Pair is one of the half-dozen thoroughly good novels that have been published in the course of the present year. It is carefully written from the first page of the first volume to the last page of the third; the characters in it are not too numerous, and they live and move naturally. It stands, in fact, midway between a typical work of Mr. Norris and a typical work of John Oliver Hobbes; and its "cynicism" is no more pronounced than may be inferred from this allusion to a very fashionable marriage:

"It was noted that the bride looked very handsome, and was the best 'turned out' of the season. Her trousseau, to a petticoat, was described in the papers devoted to the interests of the boudoir. The bridegroom's claims to notice were also set forth with all respectful civility. Nobody thought of comparing him to a satyr, except one young bridesmaid, shivering and looking wretchedly woe-begone in her pink draperies."

Nor is it to the disadvantage of the story that the "troublesome pair" who give it its title are the conventional young folk who fall out and make it up for three volumes, and who are of the first importance in their own eyes only. Their main business is to bring out the character—the strong sense, the kindness, the Aurelian composure even under the terrible responsibility of having to bear with two marriageable girls—of brother 'Sephus, and to prevent too much attention from being paid to the tragedy of Mary Challoner. Not for long has a loveless marriage been so well managed in fiction as it has been in A Troublesome Pair. Mary Paston marries the Rev. Charles Challoner in the belief that he is not only a great preacher but a good man. She discovers that he is neither, but only a selfish, sensuous humbug, who has a bad temper and uses coarse language, and is in thought unfaithful to her. She is too womanly not to take to cynicism as a support in her trouble. But she is also too strong to attempt any risky experiment in the way of emancipation. She is content to do her duty according to her lights, and to conceal her difficulties as well as she can from the critical dissection of anxious brother 'Sephus. She is not without a certain dismal reward. She improves her wretched husband to some extent: at all events, she so contrives matters that he has it not upon his conscience that he has murdered his uncle, Bruce Challoner, who is even worse than himself. All the characters in A Troublesome Pair, however, are well drawn, and all the incidents are excellently managed. Even the somewhat comic-operaish Juliet and Romeo—Esther and her Blake—are welcome as a relief. No recent writer has made such an advance as Leslie Keith has done in the writing of this story.

There are far too many set speeches in Aaron the Jew. All the good folk in it address each other, at all hours of the day and night, in what, in the journalistic slang of the day, are known as leaderettes. Most of them, too, live in a world of explanations and apologies. Yet the story Mr. Farjeon has to tell is pleasant and simple; Dickensians might even say it is idyllic. Given a woman who is compelled to part with her illegitimate child in order that she may marry, not the man who has seduced her, but the man who has already made honourable love to her; given, also, a man whose child is dead and whose wife will die if she is made aware of the fact; and it is easy to conceive of a new version of the old "substitution" incident. Aaron Cohen, who thus deceives his wife to save her life, is a model Jew, with, however, a portentous capacity for making speeches, and for listening to addresses made chiefly about himself by his most intimate friend; and the chief object of these three volumes is to illustrate his innumerable excellences as a man, an employer, and a tribalist. But misfortunes come upon him. He is ruined. His adopted daughter, by way, no doubt, of proving the eternal truth of heredity, proves "camstraity," although in reality the worst thing she does is to marry a man who does not belong to what appears to be her "set." But the real mother of the child, now herself a widow, turns up in the nick of time, drives away Cohen's chief tormentor, who turns out to be her own seducer, and makes all the good people fairly happy. Mr. Farjeon could have managed all this, and have at the same time accomplished his chief object—that of grappling with some of the social problems of the time—in one volume. He has chosen, however, to be a victim to the three-volume system; and as a consequence, in spite of excellent intentions, and even much excellent writing, Aaron the Jew is a weariness of the flesh.

It is bad policy for any man, but especially for one belonging to the order of "detrimentals," to marry an Afghan woman and become to all intents and purposes an Afghan, while yet half in love with an English girl. So finds Dick Urquhart, who, at the commencement of the first volume of All in a Man's Keeping, is hopelessly enamoured of Rose Yorke. Rose's gown, as even her critical mother allows, is "effective" at the full-dress ball given in honour of the commander-in-chief at the end of the cold season in Peshawur, and she is warmly affectionate. But that mother, who knows from experience that "they are dangerous guides the feelings," and admits that "all the men who are worth loving are poor, and wild, and head-over-ears in debt," has made up her mind that her daughter can never endure poverty, and therefore must marry John Elliott. Dick meanwhile is practically ruined; and after kissing Rose, very much to the peril of her gown, he leaves the British army and places himself and his sword at the disposal of an Afghan Khan. He becomes first the adopted son and then the son-in-law of the Khan. Zorayda, his wife, is quite as pretty and affectionate as Rose, and has a good deal more stability of character. But Dick is troubled with a rival named Afzul, who is indirectly the cause of the death of his (and Zorayda's) baby, and whom, although a murderer in intent, he somehow does not permit himself to knock on the head. On the contrary, Afzul drives Dick back to England, and far too literally into the arms of Mrs. Elliott, a portrait of whom has been discovered by Zorayda. Dick, who is very weak indeed, indulges in a very pronounced flirtation with Rose, and only succeeds in tearing himself from her when he discovers that he loves Zorayda very much more than he has ever loved anybody else. He returns to Afghanistan, to find the Khan alive but Zorayda dead of love, Rose's portrait, and a broken heart. As Afzul is still in the land of the vindictive, it may be hoped he will perform the work of poetical justice without shrinking on Urquhart, who has had two loves in his keeping, and has marred both. Dick's story is a most unsatisfactory one, but it is not badly told.

The "purpose" of The Thing that Hath Been is a trifle too obvious; and the author has yet to learn the art, if not of condensation, at all events of avoiding digression. But it is a strong and in every way remarkable book; and, in spite of its evidently satirical, and therefore exaggerated, delineations, it is essentially true to the public school-life with which it deals almost exclusively. It is pleasant, too, to come across an author whose characters are really unconventional, and not simply conventionalities capable of fin de siècle talk. John Martin—whom Dr. Pinches, forgetful of the odium theologium, introduces into his school to secure the thorough teaching of mathematics—and his mother are two uncompromising creatures, quite incapable of securing a living wage in a society subjugated by middle-class ideals. Still, it is impossible not to revel in their Utopia of courage and sincerity, and not to enjoy the very broad hint given by Mrs. Martin (while still Miss Sims) to one of her employers that he is the worse for liquor, or the simplicity with which Martin tells his head master in effect that he cannot alter his nature even to retain his situation. Mr. Gilkes does not load his story with too many characters. The most of them are teachers; and all of them, but more especially Binning, Glynde, and Macnamara, are remarkably well drawn. Martin's farcical marriage is the sole blot upon The Thing that Hath Been: it suggests a doubt as to whether Mr. Gilkes is really so terribly in earnest after all.

Readers of Bachelor to the Rescue ought to be very grateful to its author for having given them such a delightfully modern woman as Mrs. Lena Salomons. She has pretty pink-pointed nails and large tawny-brown eyes, somewhat almond-shaped. Her figure is lithe, supple, fully developed, and rich in vitality. She smokes cigarettes and drinks brandy and soda. She has a great knack of getting rid of inconvenient husbands, either by driving them to divorce and death or by murdering them outright. She stabs a half-hearted lover with a breakfast-knife. She eats ravenously an unsavoury piece of cold pork lumped between two hunches of bread. Finally she goes mad, and when trying to murder her rival, Bachelor—who is a dog, not a man—finishes her career with his teeth. There is a fair amount of incident, of course, in a story the leading character in which is such a person as Lena. But she dominates everything and everybody. In other words, Bachelor to the Rescue is a readable but not specially well-written story of the melodramatic sort.

Red and White Heather will certainly not add to the reputation of its author, though it is not devoid of that cleverness which it is impossible to dissociate from Mr. Robert Buchanan, even when he is writing at railway speed. One has a suspicion that he has taken advantage of story-writing to have a hit at some folk he does not like. Was not "A Highland Princess" written mainly for the purpose of satirising "a Professor of Moral Philosophy in Aberdeen, one Glenfinlas, who wrote a good deal in the magazines about poets and poetry, and was said to have the trick of discovering unknown merit and announcing it to the world," and who is further described as "a fat, red-faced man, with big hands and feet, and a flow of language that was fairly astounding, though what the man was driving at it was hard to tell?" Undoubtedly Glenfinlas spoils "A Highland Princess," which, but for him, might have been a more than passable tragedy of a man's ambition and a woman's heartlessness. There is, however, a good deal of natural, though roughish and alcoholic humour in the "Legend of the Mysterious Piper," and "Miss Jean's Love Story" relates with very considerable power the troubles of a young woman who falls in love with the man that her father hates. Of the verse in this volume it is enough to say that it flows smoothly, but has little of the peculiar "strength" which one is in the habit of associating with Mr. Buchanan.

A Camsterie Nacket is a story which belongs to the Annie Swannish school of fiction, and presents us with life in a Shetland manse, and with a good deal—though even that is qualified—of Shetland dialect. The plot is so simple that it looks as if it had been evolved out of the consciousness of a girl in her teens. A worthy but intellectually weakish minister takes into his household, as an adopted son, the orphan child of a drowned fisherman, intending to have him educated for the church to which he himself belongs. His autocratic housekeeper is opposed to this step, and declares the adopted son to be a "camsterie nacket"—in other words, a rebellious urchin. This view turns out to be not very wide of the mark. The lad prefers the sea to the ministry, and it is only after the gratification of his impulse all but causes his death that he becomes a good boy and does as he is bid. Lowrie has a thin, pleasant love-story, but it is hardly worth smiling at. Beena, the housekeeper, is the character that gives A Camsterie Nacket any life—apart from simplicity and wholesomeness—that it can be said to possess.

Mr. Frederick Boyle has not the special gifts of a Rider Haggard, a Gilbert Parker, or a Conan Doyle. The stories he has published at intervals during the past few years undoubtedly lack distinction, but they do not lack reality; and the bulk of those which appear in From the Frontier are better put together, and therefore command a stronger interest, than any of his previous performances. Most of the stories which make up the present volume treat either of the Cape or of India. Mr. Boyle has, however, tried his hand, and not without success, at stories, such as "Scandalous" and "A Clandestine Correspondence," the fun of which constitutes their sole attraction. The central incidents of "Scandalous," the masquerading of a girl, although for a good object, in men's clothes—is no novelty; but it is worked out cleverly and with perfect delicacy. Of the other stories—and those the more characteristic of their author—the most interesting is "Albertyne's Wooing." The cajoling of an austere moral adventurer into a filibustering expedition in South Africa of which he disapproves is achieved cleverly and with a certain amount of quiet humour. Poetical justice, too, is fully rendered at the close of the story; for Albertyne marries the girl but for whom he would never have joined the expedition, while her unscrupulous and inconvenient father is killed by those natives whom he despises.

There is a good deal of Jeromish fun in The Businesses of a Busy Man, but it lacks finish. Too often, also, it degenerates into sheer Ally Sloperism, especially when the writer trots out the inanities of Biddlewig, Barnacle, Banweed, and Mrs. McBullock, who is "Scotch to the backbone and beyond it," and who "wants to know whether I have a 'bawbee' for a villain of a bagpipe-man who comes and makes a horrible row in this street every evening." There is only the faintest suspicion of a method in Mr. Bell's madness; for although his hero undertakes most of the "businesses" that he plays at expressly to retain the affections of the young woman he is engaged to, he does not marry her after all. The character of the sketches may almost be inferred from their titles, such as "On Growing a Beard," "On Joining the Volunteers," and "On Going for a Trial Honeymoon." Mr. Bell is seen at his best in "On Interviewing a Prize-fighter." The contrast between the prize-fighter of fact and the prize-fighter of the newspapers is brought out very smartly and without undue extravagance. It seems to prove that with care Mr. Bell may develop into a humorist of the old rather than of the new type.

WILLIAM WALLACE.

SOME BOOKS ON ANCIENT HISTORY.

Christianity and the Roman Government: a Study in Imperial Administration. By E. G. Hardy. (Longmans.) This is an attempt to give, by means of the clue furnished in an article of Dr. Mommsen's (Historische Zeitschrift, 1890) a "historical résumé of the relations between Christianity and the Roman Government during the first two centuries." Mr. Hardy wishes to correct certain views advocated in his edition of Pliny's correspondence with Trajan. In particular, he is now convinced that Pliny's action against the Christians had nothing to do with their being a collegium illicitum. "Pliny would have enforced his own edict without any need to consult the emperor; Trajan would certainly have shown no forbearance, toleration, or indulgence to the Christians, if he had regarded them as members of a collegium or hetaeria." The fact is that the Roman government saw in Christianity an "aggressive monotheism," and that the people saw in it an agency which threatened the existing life and morality. The feeling of the people led to breaches of the peace, and the feeling of the government rather deprived the Christians of protection and made them responsible for attacks directed against them. Nero's so-called persecution did not, as Schiller suggests, fall on Jews, but on Christians. But this "first contact between the Roman government and Christianity," though it was "purely accidental," yet led to important consequences. The trials then held gave the authorities, if not proof of crime, yet information of a state of mind in Christians which might well be thought dangerous. "The charge of incendiarism developed into a general charge of disaffection to the government, resulting from a mischievous and morose superstition." This was a matter for police supervision; and Mommsen shows that repressive measures of the Roman state in the sphere of religious policy "belong for the most part to the departments of administration, not to the judicial interpretation or enforcement of law, and not even to imperial edicts." Coercitio, with its regular rules, dealt with the Christian trouble when and where circumstances drew attention to it. No new policy in the matter was introduced, as Prof. Ramsay thinks, between A.D. 64 and A.D. 95. The same rules held good and were exercised when need arose. Nor again did either Trajan or M. Aurelius lay down any new policy. Christianity was not to them a practical danger. Here again Mr. Hardy differs from Prof. Ramsay, who holds that Christianity was already a body with a formidable and "wide-reaching organisation." It could hardly have been so till the close of the second century; but, when the Catholic Church did get its organisation, then "began the real struggle between the empire and Christianity." Before that time there were police measures, but no real religious persecution. Mr. Hardy does well to quote his authorities in full, but Serenus Granianus is apparently called Silvanus in error on p. 143.

"UNIVERSITY TUTORIAL SERIES."—A History of Greece, 371–323 B.C. By A. H. Allcroft. (Olive.) Greek history from 371 to 323 B.C. presents neither a cheerful picture nor an attractive unity of subject. In Greece we have to see one act of political folly succeed another, and to trace a melancholy story of humiliation. Abroad, we are dragged from country to country at the will of a great conqueror, and we leave his gigantic empire with the sense that trouble is hanging over it. But Mr. Allcroft has dealt successfully with a not very grateful topic, and written a survey of the period which is perhaps as full and instructive as it could be made within a very narrow limit of size. It may be strongly recommended for school-use or for pass examinations. A useful summary of the literary history ends the volume; but the best part, on the whole, seems to be the account of Alexander's conquests and character. The statement should not be allowed to stand in future editions that the Tyrannio who arranged Appellicon's library was a freedman of Cicero.

Hérodote, Historien des Guerres Médiques. Par A. Hauvette. (Paris: Hachette.) The credit of Herodotus has suffered from so many attacks, that it was high time that some one should bring all the charges into one focus. It is said that even the diamond may be dissipated by the focussed rays of the sun, but somehow the good faith and general credibility of Herodotus resist the fiercest light which has yet been made to beat upon them. Such is M. Hauvette's opinion, and it is a view likely to find many sympathisers in this country. No one, of course—certainly not M. Hauvette—would claim that Herodotus is invariably right. He could not have been so, even if all the facts for him to use had been certain. The modern school of history, straining after accuracy of detail, has shown the impossibility of being perfectly accurate. No one can handle large masses of facts without a certain percentage of errors, and the facts were not all certain for Herodotus. There were different versions. It is probably easier to know the truth about Marlborough than it was about Themistokles, and yet we do not find universal agreement as to the facts of Marlborough's life. We are grateful to M. Hauvette for the fresh grounds he gives us for clinging to our old friend Herodotus. His very full and fair summary of ancient and modern literature on the subject of the Persian Wars shows how weak and how mutually contradictory those charges are which have been made against the good faith or the capacity of the historian. "On ne lui reconnait volontiers qu'un incomparable génie de conteur," but there is more in him than that. The arguments against him will usually not hold water; and, though we very often cannot absolutely demonstrate his accuracy, yet we fall back confidently on our personal impression of the writer's character—no such bad test after all. In justification of this point of view, M. Hauvette goes exhaustively over the material and the theories. He begins with what data we have for Herodotus' biography; traces his journeys; conjectures (and here we do not feel that we have more than a conjecture) that the subject grew on Herodotus' hands; rejects the theories of Kirchoff and Bauer as to what it was that Herodotus read aloud at Athens; maintains (with considerable probability) that the great isotopie was not put together until the author was settled at Thurii; and insists that it is a finished work, and was not broken off by death or discouragement. Then comes the great question of the historian's credibility; and here M. Hauvette offers a firm front against attacks, ancient or modern. Ktesias cannot be safely trusted, and his dealings with Herodotus only show "de mesquines rivalités de métier." The De Malignitate Herodoti—a genuine work of Plutarch—proves that, while Herodotus told the facts as they seemed likely to him, Plutarch was busy trying to fit them to his own ideal of a heroic age. Nor have modern critics been more successful in finding firm ground for their attempts to shake Herodotus' credit. Niebuhr, Nitzsch, Adam, Wecklein, Delbruck, Sayce, or Trautwein—they all of them, as handled in these pages, remind us of the fable of the viper and the file. Up to this point, we are moving among generalities; but in the second part of the study before us, we find a minute analysis of the wars, and point after point of the story, as told by others as well as by Herodotus, is accepted or rejected on solid grounds. But on the whole M. Hauvette shows best on the negative side, if it can be called negative work to answer destructive criticism and rehabilitate an old authority. He is clear and convincing as to what unsound sources Herodotus did not use, he is perhaps less satisfactory as to what authorities he did base himself on. But his remarks on the twin charges that Herodotus did not understand politics or military affairs are particularly judicious and well balanced.

NOTES AND NEWS.

PROF. MAX MÜLLER is preparing for the press a new edition, in four volumes, of his Chips from a German Workshop, which has long been out of print. The first volume will contain "Recent Essays," the second "Biographical Essays," the third "Essays on Language and Literature," and the fourth "Essays on the Sciences of Language, of Thought, and of Mythology."

We understand that the Hon. George Curzon is hastening on the publication of his new book, entitled Problems of the Far East, which was originally announced to appear in October. Its issue may now be expected within the next fortnight. It will contain a detailed description of Korea, and also a discussion of the rivalry between China and Japan.

MR. JOHN MURRAY will publish in the autumn a volume of Speeches on the Eastern Question, by the late Lord Stratheden and Campbell.

DR. FENNELL, editor of the "Stanford Dictionary of Anglicised Words and Phrases," has issued the prospectus of a National Dictionary of English Language and Literature, in three volumes of about 1000 pages each, to be issued in monthly parts. It is intended to include all words and phrase-words found in English literature between 1360 A.D. and the present day. The work is to be based on indexes of selected authors, including Chaucer, Caxton, Elyot, North, Phil. Holland, Bacon, Pope, Johnson, Burke, Thackeray, Macaulay, and Ruskin. At the same time, quotations from hundreds of other authors will be used, many thousands having been already collected, including large numbers dated earlier than the earliest given in any dictionary. Dates of authorship and exact references will be given.

MR. DAVID SCHLOSS, whose work as an investigator in relation to labour questions, especially in regard to the sweating system and profit sharing, is well known, is about to publish, with Messrs. Williams & Norgate, a second edition of his Methods of Industrial Remuneration.

MESSRS. CASSELL & Co. will shortly issue in serial form, an entirely new and revised edition of Dr. Brewer's Dictionary of Phrase and Fable. The first part, to appear at the end of this month, will contain a portrait of the author, who is in his eighty-fifth year, and his autograph preface to the new edition reproduced in facsimile.

MR. J. A. STEUART has finished the revision of a new story upon which he has been engaged for a considerable time. It is a romance of adventure, the scene being laid partly in Scotland and partly in Arabia. It will be published next month by Messrs. Sampson Low, under the title of In the Day of Battle. The first edition will be in three volumes; but probably, to suit the exigencies of the libraries, a one-volume edition will also be issued almost at the same time.

A NEW novel, in one volume, by Mrs. Mona Caird, entitled, The Daughters of Danaus, will be published towards the end of September, by Messrs. Bliss, Sands & Foster. It is described as a direct attack upon the marriage system in its present form.

MR. JOSEPH HOCKING has just finished a novel dealing with the questions of cynicism and pessimism, and tracing their natural outcome in life. The title he has chosen for it is All Men are Liars. Messrs. Ward, Lock & Bowden have purchased the serial rights, and have also arranged with the author for its publication in book form.

MESSRS. F. V. WHITE & Co. will publish, this month, two novels in three volumes: A Mayfair Tragedy, by Mrs. Alexander Fraser, and A Choice of Evils by Mrs. Alexander; also a one-volume story by Mr. Hume Nisbet, entitled A Desert Bride, illustrated by the author.

CECIL CLARKE will publish very shortly, through Mr. Elliot Stock, a novel entitled An Artist's Fate.

THE demand for Olive Schreiner's The Story of an African Farm increases. Messrs. Hutchinson have just gone to press with another edition of 5000 copies, completing the 78th thousand.

MISS BEATRICE HARRADEN's last book, In Varying Moods, has already reached a seventh edition. We believe that its success in America has been no less conspicuous.

MESSRS. OLIPHANT, ANDERSON & FERRIER have in the press for early issue cheap editions of After Touch of Wedded Hands, by Hannah B. Mackenzie; and of Seventy Times Seven, by Adeline Sergeant.

MR. VANDER HAEGHEN, librarian of the Bibliothèque de l'Université d'État at Ghent, has issued an interesting first draft, in print, of a projected Bibliography of the works of Erasmus, in three parts, quarto. The number of entries was already immense. A few could be added from the St. Paul's School Library. The verified editions of the De octo orationis partium (partly written by Erasmus) are said to now number 267.

UNIVERSITY JOTTINGS.

AT Edinburgh University, last week, the honorary degree of LL.D. was conferred upon Prof. Kielhorn of Göttingen, and Prof. Diodati Lioy of Naples.

MR. THOMAS RALEIGH, university reader in English law at Oxford, has been elected the first occupant of the Quain chair of law at University College, London. The appointment is for a term of two years.

MR. FREDERICK M. SIMPSON, who gained the Royal Academy travelling studentship in 1884, has been appointed to the newly founded chair of architecture at University College, Liverpool.

THE following is the text of the Latin letter presented by Dr. J. E. Sandys, on behalf of Cambridge, to the University of Halle, on the occasion of its bicentenary:—

"Quod annos ducentos ab origine vestra feliciter exactos ludis secularibus celebraturi, nos quoque legatis ad vos mittendis gaudii vestri participes esse voluistis, gratias propterea vobis omnibus et agimus et habemus maximas. Iuvat Universitatis vestrae fastos iam inde a principio evolvere, et annalium vestrorum inter primordia professorum par conspicuum contemplari, qui vestra in urbe libertatis asylum olim invenerunt; e quibus alter, iuris prudentiam professus, primus omnium inter populares vestros patrio in sermone praelectiones habuit Academicas; alter theologiae docendae deditus, et generis humani amore insignis, vestram pietatis monumentis in perpetuum duraturis exornavit. Iuvat deinde circa nomen professoris illius vestri paulisper morari, qui disciplina mathematica cum philosophiae studiis coniuncta, non modo 'philosophiam rationalem' sed etiam 'elementa mathematicos universae' tractavit. Iuvat denique Universitate in eadem nomen idem a professore altero denuo nobilitatem agnoscere, qui, prolegomenis suis ad Homerum prope centum abhinc annos in lucem editis, philologorum studia novis stimulis magnopere incitavit, quique in vita sua universa disciplinae philologicae et naturam et dignitatem egregie demonstravit. Longum est professorum vestrorum illustrium nomina omnia percensere. Ornant etiam nunc Universitatem vestram nomina insignia, quae non modo per Europam totam sed etiam trans aequor Atlanticum nota sunt. Laetatur Universitatem tot nominibus splendidis tam diu illustratam monumentis duobus, et Gymnasio et Templo Academico, dedicandis saeculorum duorum memoriam esse celebraturam. Aedificium alterum, liberalitate privata conditum, una saltem ex parte Wolfii illius vestri verba denuo confirmabit, cui iuventutis educandae finis erat 'cultura et corporis et animi ducens ad perfectionem humanitatis.' Alterum, pecunia publica et munificentia regia in castello vestro vetere instauratum, iuventuti Academicae virtutis viam cotidie ostendit. De virtute autem, iuventutis vestrae ante oculos in templo illo proposita, licet nobis hodie verba usurpare, quae olim ab uno e professoribus vestris de veritate dicta sunt; vestra enim in arce virtus non minus quam 'veritas adhuc in medio posita est; qui potest, ascendat; qui audet, rapiat; et applaudamus.' Valet, et sacris vestris saecularibus prospere peractis Universitatis vestrae gloriam veterem etiam in posterum per saecula plurima ilibatam conservate."

THE University of Halle, on the occasion of its bicentenary festival, has conferred the following degrees: that of D.D. on Prof. Armitage Robinson; and that of Ph.D. upon Prof. Victor Horsley, of London; Mr. F. G. Kenyon and Mr. H. L. D. Ward, both of the British Museum; Mr. G. A. Grierson, philological secretary of the Asiatic Society of Bengal; and Prof. W. W. Skeat, of Cambridge.

WE observe that Christ Church, Oxford, offers two scholarships of £50 each, tenable for one year, to selected candidates for the Indian Civil Service. Preference will be given to those who are not already members of the university; and there will be no other examination than that of the Civil Service Commissioners.

DURING last year, the Bodleian Library purchased a few fifteenth century prints from the special catalogue issued by Rosenthal, of Munich. Among them is a sheet of five small coloured woodcuts—the Visitation of the Virgin, the Virgin (crowned) and Child, the Virgin and Child in glory, St. Katherine with sword and wheel, and a monstrosity. These were obviously meant to be cut off and used separately, and Schreiber states that they were employed chiefly for the illustration of calendars. Their place of origin is probably Augsburg, and their date about 1490. The remaining prints were a block-printed Munich indulgence of 1482, attributed to Conrad Dieckmut; and a single page of prayers "pro exilibus animabus," illustrated with a coloured woodcut of an angel lifting souls out of the flames, the printing of which is attributed to Kunne von Dudderstadt of Memmingen.

The University of Harvard has conferred the degree of LL.D. upon Mr. John Fiske.

ORIGINAL VERSE.

WALTER PATER.

(July 30, 1894)

THE freshness of the light, its secrecy,
Spices, or honey from sweet-smelling bower,
The harmony of time, love's trembling hour
Struck on thee with a new felicity.
Standing, a child, by a red hawthorn-tree,
Its perishing, small petals' flame had power
To fill with masses of soft, ruddy flower
A certain roadside in thy memory:
And haply when the tragic clouds of night
Were slowly wrapping round thee, in the cold
Of which men always die, a sense renewed
Of the things sweet to touch and breathe and sight,
That thou didst touch and breathe and see of old
Stole on thee with the warmth of gratitude.

MICHAEL FIELD.

OBITUARY.

WALTER PATER.

IT is with extreme regret that we record the death of Mr. Walter Pater, which took place at Oxford on July 30. He had been suffering from rheumatism, complicated with pleurisy; and though he seemed to be recovering, he passed away, very suddenly, in a fainting fit, at his rooms in Brasenose. He had not quite completed his fifty-fifth year.

Walter Horatio Pater was born in London in 1839, and educated at the King's School, Canterbury. In 1858 he matriculated at Oxford as a commoner of Queen's, among his contemporaries being Mr. Swinburne and the late J. A. Symonds. It does not appear that he tried for honours in Moderations; but he obtained a second class in the Final Classical School in 1862. In those days fellowships were easier to win than now; and after waiting for two years Pater was elected to a fellowship at Brasenose, which he held to the day of his death. He also filled continuously such college offices as those of lecturer, tutor, and dean; but he never took any active part in the affairs of the university. For some time, indeed, he lived in London, only going down to Oxford to perform his duties; and it must be admitted that his was a somewhat incongruous figure in a college whose chief distinction is to have been so often "head of the river."

Pater's first book, Studies in the History of the Renaissance, was published in 1873, and has since passed through three editions. After an interval of twelve years, this was followed by Marius the Epicurean, which remains his masterpiece. Imaginary Portraits appeared in 1887, and Appreciations (consisting mostly of reprinted articles) in 1889. Only last year he brought out a series of five lectures on Plato and Platonism. He also contributed to Mr. Humphry Ward's "English Poets," and wrote occasionally in the magazines.

The quantity of Pater's work is not large; but it is sufficient, in both matter and manner, to give him a distinct place in the history of the later Victorian epoch. To the temperament of a poet, he added the learning of a scholar and a profound knowledge of all the arts. His sympathetic personality coloured everything that he wrote. Whether dealing with Greek philosophy, with Italian art, or with German enlightenment, it is always the author himself that speaks as the representative of aesthetic culture. If the passion for the beautiful tempted him occasionally into extravagance—as when he seemed to adopt the Cyrenaic paradox, that life consists in the realisation of exquisite moments of sensation—this youthful ardour was redeemed by the philosophic simplicity of his mature years. One of the strongest features in his character was his sense of duty, which was shown alike in his relations to his sisters, to his friends, and to his pupils. This same conscientiousness prevented him from producing much, and constrained him to polish to an excessive degree everything that he sent to the press. His high-water mark as a writer is attained in some imaginative sketches of the life of a little child, which we may assume to be at least in part autobiographical, and which he never reprinted. J. S. C.

J. L. G. MOWAT.

WE have also to record the death, on August 7, under very sad circumstances, of Mr. J. L. G. Mowat, of Pembroke College, Oxford. He was born in 1846, his father being a Wesleyan minister at Frome; and he was educated at Kingswood School, near Bath, and at the Wesleyan College, Taunton. But, as his birth-place happened to be St. Helier's, in Jersey, he was eligible for a Channel Island scholarship at Exeter College, Oxford, where he matriculated in 1863. He obtained a first class in moderations, and a second class in the final classical school in 1869, among his contemporaries being Canon Driver and Prof. Rhys. In 1871, he was elected to a fellowship at Pembroke, where he filled the offices of lecturer, bursar, and librarian, being for some years also bursar of Lincoln. He succeeded his friend, Prof. Chandler, as curator of the Bodleian Library, in 1889; and he was a representative of the university on the city council. His published works consist of two botanical glossaries, contributed to the mediaeval series of "Anecdota Oxoniensia." They are entitled, respectively, Sinonoma Bartholomei (1882) and Alphita (1887). He also printed for private circulation, in 100 copies, A Walk along the Teufelsmauer and Pfahlgraben (1885); and in 1892 he issued a pamphlet, entitled Notes on the Oxfordshire Domesday, which contains a most painstaking and useful analysis of all the facts and names relating to the county.

ANOTHER sad death during the past week is that of Prof. John Dobie, which was caused by a railway accident in the north of Scotland. Prof. Dobie, who had been a Presbyterian chaplain on the Indian establishment, was appointed to the chair of Hebrew and Oriental languages at Edinburgh less than two years ago. He had won his reputation by a journey in Southern Arabia, undertaken for the purpose of examining Himyaritic inscriptions and the literature of the Jews of Yemen.

MAGAZINES AND REVIEWS.

THE Expositor for August contains some popular and yet critical notes on the two opposing narratives of the reign of Joash by Archdeacon Farrar. Dr. Beet continues his lucid summary of New Testament teaching on the Second Coming, and Dr. Bruce his thoroughly honest series of papers on St. Paul's conception of the Christian life. Mr. Watson is outside the field of critical theology, when he preaches eloquently on "devotion to a person the dynamic of religions"; and Dr. Bruce could easily sift the chaff from the grain. Dr. A. Roberts discusses the meaning of "power on the head" in 1 Cor. xi. 10. Prof. G. A. Smith reviews Budde's German translation of Kuenen's Essays and Dissertations; but he does not make it clear whether he thinks Baethgen one of those orthodox critics who are "as scientific as Kuenen himself" to whom he refers, in spite of the strong theological animus of certain portions of the work reviewed by Kuenen on pp. 449-64. Kuenen's final opinion on the great question of the religious development of the Israelites we can never know. The new critical basis for a reconstruction of his work on the religion of Israel he had not quite completed when called away by death. That as an historian he would ever have adopted the theory of a special divine guidance and revelation may be doubted; but that he would have identified himself with the principle of an absolutely "geradlinige Entwicklung" may with more confidence be denied. The German phrase quoted by Prof. G. A. Smith is itself a quotation from Kuenen's opponent, Baethgen, and (though tolerated) was not endorsed by Kuenen himself. The reviewer's praise of Kuenen is all the more generous because of his theological dissent from that great critic. Some particulars of the eulogy are, however, of doubtful accuracy, nor is there anything corresponding to them in the very fine eulogy of Kuenen given by Prof. Budde, the editor, in his preface. Prof. G. A. Smith's remaining notices (of Beuzinger's "Hebrew Archaeology," and other works) are equally interesting, and less open to criticism.

SELECTED FOREIGN BOOKS.

GENERAL LITERATURE.

- BACKHAUS, W. E. Vom rechten Staate. Braunschweig: Limbach. 2 M. 50 Pf.
EYSENHART, F. Mittheilungen aus der Stadtbibliothek zu Hamburg. Hamburg: Herold. 2 M. 40 Pf.
KANDT, M. Ueb. die Entwicklung der australischen Eisenbahnpolitik. Berlin: Maroth. 4 M. 50 Pf.
KORNACK, G. Heissisches Buchdruckerbuch, enth. Nachweis aller bisher bekannt gewordenen Buchdruckerien des jetz. Reg.-Bez. Cassel u. d. Kreises Biedenkopf. Marburg: Elwert. 12 M.
MARCEL, Etudes sur l'ameublement ancien et moderne. Paris: Juliot. 300 fr.
PITON, C. Marly-le-Roi. Paris: Cerf. 3 fr.
POCHER, Jacques. Le Pays des Camisards. Paris: Hennuyer. 5 fr.
REVUE de métrique et de versification. T. I. No. 1. Paris: Cerf. 1 fr. 50 c.
VANDERHAEGH, H. Poëma italicum quod inscribitur la storia della Bianca e la Bruna. Erlangen: Junge. 1 M.
VINOGRADSKY, A. Histoire de l'imprimerie à Lyon de l'origine jusqu'à nos jours. Lyon: Sirey. 4 M. 50 c.
ZOLA, Emile. Londres. Paris: Charpentier. 3 fr. 50 c.
ZSCHICH, F. Ugo Foscolo's Brief an Goethe, Mailand, d. 15. Jan. 1802. Hamburg: Herold. 2 M. 50 Pf.

THEOLOGY.

- STEVERNAGEL, C. Der Rahmen d. Deuteronomiums. Halle: Krause. 1 M.

HISTORY, LAW, ETC.

- ACTA BORUSSICA. (IV.) 1. Bd. Akten v. 1701 bis Ende 1714, bearb. v. G. Schmoller u. O. Krauske. Berlin: Parey. 21 M.
KLEINSCHMIT, M. Kritische Untersuchungen zur Geschichte v. Sybaris. Hamburg: Herold. 2 M. 50 Pf.
MITTELSCHNIG, A. Aus dem Stadtarchiv v. Köln. Köln: Du Mont-Schauberg. 25. Hft. 5 M.
NICOLE, Jules. Le livre du préfet, ou l'édit de l'Empereur Léon le Sage sur les corporations de Constantinople. Paris: Fischbacher. 3 fr.
OFFENHEIM, L. Die Objekte des Verbrechens. Basel: Schwabe. 10 M.
RITTE, Karl der Grosse u. die Sachsen. 1. Abth. Die Kriege m. den Sachsen. Dessau: Kahle. 1 M. 50 Pf.
SEPET, Marius. Napoléon: son caractère, son génie, son rôle historique. Paris: Didier. 2 fr. 50 c.

PHYSICAL SCIENCE AND PHILOSOPHY.

- BEITRÄGE zur Anthropologie u. Urgeschichte Bayerns. 11. Bd. München: Bassermann. 24 M.
HARTZ, H. Gesammelte Werke. 3. Bd. Die Prinzipien der Mechanik. Mit e. Vorworte von H. v. Helmholtz. Leipzig: Barth. 10 M.
KLEIBER, A. Qualitative u. quantitative bacteriologische Untersuchungen d. Zürichseewassers. Zürich: Spiedel. 2 M. 50 Pf.
MARTIN, F. La Perception extérieure et la Science positive. Paris: Alcan. 5 fr.
REHMKE, E. Lehrbuch der allgemeinen Psychologie. Hamburg: Voss. 10 M.
RESULTATE, wissenschaftliche, der v. N. M. Przewalski nach Central-Asien unternommenen Reisen. Zoolog. Thl. 1. Bd. Säugethiere. Bearb. v. E. Büchner. 5. Lfg. St. Petersburg: Eggers. 15 M.
SCHMALHAUSEN, J. Ueb. devonische Pflanzen aus dem Donetz-Becken. St. Petersburg: Eggers. 3 M.
SIEBERT, O. Die Metaphysik u. Ethik d. Pseudo-Dionysius Areopagita. Jena: Pöhlke. 1 M.
TITTEL, E. Die natürlichen Veränderungen Helgolands u. die Quellen üb. dieselben. Leipzig: Fock. 2 M. 50 Pf.
UHLMOHN, O. Schleiermachers Entwurf z. Kritik der bisherigen Sittenlehre. Leipzig: Fock. 1 M. 50 Pf.

PHILOLOGY, ETC.

- SCHMIDT, A. M. A. Zum Sprachgebrauche d. Livius in den Büchern I., II., XXI. u. XXII. 1. Thl. Leipzig: Fock. 1 M.
SCHULTZE, M. Grammatik der hindustanischen Sprache. Hindi u. Urdu, in ind., arab. u. latein. Schrift. Leipzig: Scholtze. 2 M. 40 Pf.
SERTIS, G. Ilios et Iliade. Paris: Bouillon. 5 fr.
WUSTMANN, R. Verba perfectiva, namentlich im Heliand. Leipzig: Grunow. 2 M.

CORRESPONDENCE.

ECCLESIASTES AND THE PSALTER.

London: July, 1894.

Recently I have been making some preparation for the issue of a new edition of my commentary on Ecclesiastes. As a considerable time is not unlikely to elapse before this new edition can be sent to the press, I may, by way of anticipation, communicate to the readers of the ACADEMY certain results at which I have arrived, and which seem to me not without interest and importance.

No one, so far as I am aware, has seen the true relation between some things contained in Ecclesiastes and the utterances of the Psalmists, or at any rate a portion of these utterances. To mention particularly one example, evidence may be adduced, having, as I venture to think, the force pretty nearly of demonstration, to show not only that the author of the fourth and fifth chapters of Ecclesiastes was well acquainted with the seventy-third Psalm, but also that sentiments expressed by the Psalmist are controverted. In saying what I have just said, I by no means wish to deny that an analogy between the subject-matter of this particular Psalm and of Ecclesiastes has been previously perceived. Indeed, it could scarcely be overlooked. Thus, in his Bampton Lectures, Prof. Cheyne says of the Psalm in question, "It reminds us of Koheleth in that it deals with a grave moral problem; but whereas the wise man leaves the difficulty almost where he found it, the Psalmist discovers for it a deep religious solution" (p. 148). And Delitzsch in his commentary on Ecclesiastes remarks a resemblance in diction between Ps. lxxiii. 17, and Ecc. v. 1 (iv. 17 Heb.). This resemblance might easily have led to a recognition of the true relation between the two writers. The verses cited are thus translated in the Authorised version: "Until I went into the sanctuary of God [then] understood I their end" (Ps. lxxiii. 17). "Keep thy foot when thou goest to the house of God, and be more ready to hear than to give the sacrifice of fools; for they consider not that they do evil" (Ecc. v. 1).

The mention of "going to the house of God" here in Ecclesiastes is by itself very difficult of explanation, but becomes intelligible if there is an allusion to what had been previously said by the Psalmist. That the "going into the sanctuary of God" spoken of in the Psalm is metaphorical has been repeatedly maintained; and the use in the Hebrew of a plural form for "sanctuary" at least agrees with this view, the plural being the more abstract. In Ecclesiastes, however, the parallel expression is in the singular; but it has long seemed to me clear that the meaning is, "He who treats of the moral administration of the world comes, as it were, into the presence of God, and should therefore speak with caution and deliberation." If it be asked, does the writer of Ecclesiastes mean that the pious utterances of the Psalmist are "the sacrifice of fools"? it may be replied that it is not perhaps necessary to go so far as to make this inference, even though a profound difference of view be recognised.

One principal reason why the connexion between Ecclesiastes and the seventy-third Psalm has not been perceived is to be found, no doubt, in the considerable number of new details which are introduced in Ecclesiastes. While in Ecc. iv. 1 there is an important allusion to the Psalm—to be spoken of directly—the discussion in iv. 2-16 is mainly divergent, though still occupied with the great subject of the moral government of the world. The oppressors in the Psalm "speak wickedly [concerning] oppression (עָוָרָה); they speak loftily (lit. from on high). They set their mouth against (or in) the heavens," &c. "And they say, How doth God know? and is there knowledge in the Most High?" (verses 8, 9, 11). Here the "height" of the oppressors is to be particularly observed, and also their expressed opinion that God regards not their doings. With this in view the analogy in Ecc. v. 8 is scarcely other than decisive:

"If thou seest the oppression (עָוָרָה) of the poor, and violent perverting of judgment and justice in a province, marvel not at the matter; for [he that is] higher than the highest regardeth; and [there be] higher than they."

Or we may render perhaps somewhat better—

"If thou seest in a country the oppression of the poor and the perversion of right and justice, wonder not at the matter, for One higher than the high observeth, and there are powers high above them."

The remarkable transition, also, in Ecc. v. 9, sqq., is easily accounted for if the writer has in view the wealth of the oppressors as described by the Psalmist.

Moreover, it is well worthy of notice that Ecclesiastes furnishes us with an approximate solution of Psalm lxxiii. 10, which has been regarded as one of the most difficult places in the Old Testament. The A. V. translates, "Therefore his people return hither; and waters of a full [cup] are wrung out to them." In the light furnished by Ecc. iv. 1, and, without resorting to conjectural emendation, we may render—

"Therefore his people (i.e., the officers of the oppressor) smite again, and waters in abundance (i.e., the tears of the oppressed, Ecc. iv. 1) are wrung out from them (or, in their case, Sept. ἐν αἵματι)."

If lamo is taken as referring back to the smiters, we shall then have "and waters in abundance are wrung out by them."

What is said in Ecc. v. of the vanity of dreams (verses 3, 7) was probably suggested by Ps. lxxiii. 20, but in the comparison of a "multitude of words" to vain dreams we ought, perhaps, to recognise that the author of Ecclesiastes had no great sympathy with the pious elevation above mundane things displayed by the Psalmist. Certainly, however, we should be cautious in asserting that anything to be found in the discussion from Ecc. i. 2 to xii. 8 expresses the deliberate judgment of the author of Ecclesiastes. Some things are manifestly contradictory to others. As I have said elsewhere, the discussion is, as it were, enclosed and shut in by the utterance, "Vanity of vanities, said Koheleth, vanity of vanities; all is vanity," found alike at its commencement and its close. All is intended to lead up to the exhortations given in the last three verses of the Book.

That the attention of the author of Ecclesiastes would be attracted by such compositions as Psalms xxxvii. and xlix. is in every way probable. But, so far as I am aware, there is not in either case evidence at all comparable with that concerning Ps. lxxiii. Prof. Cheyne has called Ps. xlix. 12 (13) "a poetic anticipation of Ecc. iii. 18, 19." It would be perhaps better to call the verses in Ecclesiastes a reminiscence of the Psalm. And with some probability a similar remark might be made concerning Ecc. ii. 14 sqq. compared with Ps. xlix 10 (11), though an objection might possibly be urged on the ground that the matter in question is in no way recondite or remote from common observation.

THOMAS TYLER.

CAPTAIN CARLETON'S MEMOIRS.

Union Club, London: July 28, 1894.

Without wishing to make any remarks upon the authorship of the above Memoirs—which vexed question was so fully and ably thrashed out in the ACADEMY by Mr. Dobie, in 1893—I am able to furnish a few additional landmarks in the military career of Captain George Carleton, which have, somehow, escaped the scrutiny of his detractors.

Referring to Carleton's statement that he received a commission in Colonel Tufton's regiment of foot prior to the Revolution, Colonel Parnell, in his exhaustive review on Carleton's Life and Memoirs in the English Historical Review for 1691 (p. 114) says: "On searching the commission books at the War Office, it has been found that no such officer ever was in this regiment." The same writer points out, as a curious coincidence, that a certain "Villar" Carleton was appointed ensign in Colonel Tufton's regiment, January 1, 1688-9, and served with the same regiment (now the 15th) in Scotland.

Colonel Parnell surmises that this "Villar" Carleton was cousin to the mysterious George, and possibly furnished the account of the campaign in Scotland, as given in the Memoirs.

Now for a discovery—"Viller" (not Villar) Carleton, who was appointed ensign to the colonel's company in Tufton's regiment, January 1, 1687-8* (not January 1, 1688-9) was none other than George Villiers Carleton, who was afterwards captain in Brigadier Tiffin's regiment of foot, and was cashiered in May, 1700, as is well known. Before giving conclusive proof that Captain Carleton—the Proteus of the seventeenth century—bore two Christian names, I must add two missing links to Colonel Parnell's splendid chain of evidence. On March 1, 1689-90, — Carleton was appointed lieutenant to Major Tankred in Sir James Leslie's (late Tufton's) regiment of foot (War Office Commission Book, 1258). This commission undoubtedly refers to our friend Villiers Carleton, who was promoted lieutenant in the ordinary course. Two years later he was appointed captain in Tiffin's regiment of foot. Here is the entry as it stands in Military Entry Book No. 2 (Home Office Series), at the Record Office:—

"Com. to Villiers Carleton, Esq., to be Capt. of the company of which Capt. David Rindes was late Capt. in the regiment of foot commanded by Zacharia Tiffin, dated at Whitehall, 21 March, 1691."

The above three commissions prove that Villiers Carleton entered the British Army on January 1, 1688, and attained the rank of captain in Tiffin's Inniskilling regiment in March, 1692, which tallies, with a few slight discrepancies, with George Carleton's account of himself in his Memoirs. And the MS. Army List for 1694 (Add. MS. 17,918), contains, in the list of Colonel Tiffin's regiment of foot, the name of "Captain George Villars Carleton, March 21, 1691." This entry identifies Villiers Carleton with the redoubtable Captain George Carleton of Tiffin's Regiment, whose services were dispensed with in 1700. Facts are stubborn things. On the principle that the devil is not as black as he has been painted, I believe that Captain George Villiers Carleton was not such a consummate liar as has been represented.

As regards Carleton's nationality, I have to add this solitary proof to Lord Eliot's statement about Carleton being descended [?] related to] from an officer of this name, who served at the siege of Derry. In a list of Londonderry officers (then in England) who received two months' pay to enable them to return to Ireland (July, 1691) occurs the name of Captain Cornelius Carleton. (Vide Pay Lists of the Army in Ireland, 1689-99, vol. 773, fol. 124).

CHARLES DALTON.

THE NUN CHAPLAIN AND THE THREE PRIESTS IN THE "CANTERBURY TALES."

London: Aug. 7, 1894.

May I claim a short space with reference to the lines of Chaucer, commented on by Dr. Furnivall in the ACADEMY of last week?

"Another Nonne also with hir had she
That was hir Chapelleyne, and Prestes thre."

Both Dr. Furnivall and Prof. Skeat seem to think that the chaplain is a man.

That the chaplain in the larger nunneries was a man is established beyond a doubt by references found in connexion with St. Mary, Winchester (Dugdale, Monasticon, 2. 451),

* In vol. ii. of my English Army Lists and Commission Registers, p. 147, Carleton's Christian name has been wrongly given as "Oiller," instead of "Viller."

Shaftesbury (ibid., 2. 472), Romsay (ibid., 2. 506), &c. But that the chaplain could be a woman, a member of the convent, in fact, "another nun," is proved by the following references.

The small Benedictine nunnery, Easeburn (Sussex Archaeolog. Soc., vol. ix., p. 15), was visited by the Bishop of Chichester, and injunctions were sent in 1478, in which the prioress is directed "that every week, beginning with the eldest except the sub-prioress, she shall select for herself in due course and in turns one of her nuns as chaplain (capellanissam) for divine service and to wait upon her."

Again, in connexion with Campsey (Jessopp, Visitations in the Diocese of Norfolk, 1492-1532, p. 297), reference is made to the capellana; again (ibid., year 1520, p. 192), the prioress of Flixton is accused of having no chaplain, but of sleeping alone, she is directed to appoint one. Among the nuns of Barking pensioned at the Dissolution (Dugdale, Monasticon, i. 436), is the chaplain (capellan.) Mathea Fabyan.

These references, I think, suffice as to the question of the woman being a chaplain.

About the ladies having three priests in their train there can be no difficulty: the Abbe of St. Mary, Winchester, at the time of the Dissolution contained twenty-six priests (Dugdale, 2. 451).

The fact that Chaucer mentions only three priests would point to the fact that the nunnery to which this prioress belonged was a small one; but, considering that the expression "another nun" is used, we are led to suppose that the prioress in this case is not the lady superior of a convent, but prioress to a lady abbess, and that "the prioress' tale" is, therefore, "the first nun's tale."

LINA ECKENSTEIN.

WITH regard to Chaucer's Nun's Chaplain, Mr. J. D. Matthew also calls our attention to two entries, in the Camden Society's Norwich Visitation, of a nun-chaplain. In the Priory of Redlingfield (1514) Domina Johanna Deyne deposes that "Priorissa nou mutavit capellanam a tempore praefectionis," &c. And in Flixton Nunnery (1520), "Priorissa non habet sororem in capellanam, sed sola cubat ad placitum in cubiculo extra dormitorium," &c. The Chancellor enjoins that she shall always have a sister "loco capellanae," especially when she sleeps out of the dormitory.

SCIENCE.

THE OLD TESTAMENT IN BASQUE.

"ANECDOTA OXONIENSIA."—The Earliest Translation of the Old Testament into the Basque Language (a Fragment). Edited by Llewelyn Thomas. With a Facsimile. (Oxford: Clarendon Press.)

THE translation here first printed is that of the Book of Genesis, and part of Exodus to cap. xxii. 6, into Labourdin Basque, made by Pierre d'Urte, of St. Jean de Luz, Minister of the Gospel, about 1700. The publication is a credit to all that are concerned in it. It has been a labour of love. Thanks are due first of all to the Earl of Macclesfield for so generously allowing his Basque MS. to be printed. Then special praise must be given to the Vice-Principal of Jesus College for his unstinting labour, and for the way in which he has done his work as editor, and directed the publication of the volume, so that it is almost a model of how a unique MS. should be reproduced by the press. In every particular of importance the reader is in the position of one who has the original before him; and this is what scholars really need. Prof. Vinson has added a most useful appendix on the forms of the Basque verb employed by Pierre d'Urte. The whole of the difficulty, as well as almost all the interest, of Escuara, lies in its verbal forms: it is these which give the language its significance to the philologist; and the value of this appendix is increased by the unexpected use which d'Urte makes of the familiar (the tu) forms, both masculine and feminine, comparatively rare elsewhere, of the Basque verb. This result outweighs for the linguist all the disadvantages of the translation having been made from a Geneva Protestant version, instead of from the Vulgate, or from the original Hebrew. The other appendix, a list, compiled by Mr. Dodgson, of the translations of the Bible, or of parts of it, into Basque, is taken from Prof. Vinson's Essai d'une Bibliographie de la Langue Basque, and is useful as a direction to the only materials for comparison with d'Urte's work. Mr. Dodgson might have gone a little beyond this limit, and have mentioned the Gospels for the year printed, since the preparation of Prof. Vinson's volume, in the Bulletin Catholique du Diocèse de Bayonne, from Advent 1888 to the close of the ecclesiastical year in 1889.

Mr. Llewelyn Thomas, in his Preface, tells us all that can be discovered about these Basque MSS. preserved in Lord Macclesfield's library at Shirburn Castle (they comprise also a Grammar and a fragment of a Latin-Basque Dictionary); and of the life of their author. It is singular to notice how, from the first notice that we have of them down to the present editor and the scholars who have assisted him, these Basque MSS. are associated with the names of Welshmen—a fortuitous forecast of the ethnological interest of the relations between Basque and Kelt. It is very strange that so little is known of Pierre d'Urte. It seems odd that one of the earlier possessors of these documents should not have jotted down on fly-leaf, or on margin, some word of information about the writer, who must have been known to some of them. Yet so it is. All the information that we have of this rara avis, a Basque Protestant minister, is what he tells us himself in the title to the Grammar; the little that can be gleaned of his family from the registers of S. Jean de Luz; one entry of payment to him, his wife, and child, among the succours given to the Huguenots in 1706; and a contribution of the Lord's Prayer in Basque to Chamberlayne's Oratio Dominica, published at Amsterdam in 1715. All this is carefully recorded by Mr. Thomas. The only hope, and it is but a slight one, of gaining further information lies in a possible mention of him in the MSS. of Larramendi, now unfortunately mislaid in some library at Madrid.

Mr. Thomas, in his Preface, gives also all aid to his readers to enable them to characterise, and to estimate, this translation of Pierre d'Urte. He successfully defends it from adverse criticism. It is evident that the MS. was never fully prepared for publication; and considering the little help that the author could have had from any Basque Grammar or Dictionary beyond his own, the version in its ease and simplicity is highly commendable as one intended primarily to be understood of the people. Only one word is doubtfully said to be obsolete, oçar or ozar, "dog"; and even that is good Labourdin Basque, and is found, with its compounds, in M. Van Bys' dictionary, and in M. Luchaire's collections. The use of the word chahal, "calf," for behi, "cow," is a proof among other words, as Mr. Thomas well observes, that d'Urte was a townsman, and not familiar with country life; and also, in Genesis xxxii. 15, berrogoji chahal gazte, hamar çegen gazte, "forty young calves (kine), ten young bulls," is a proof that d'Urte translated from the Genevan French, the word "young" being found neither in the Vulgate nor in de Saci's French version.

It is too much to ask of Mr. Thomas, who has given so much time, labour, and expense to this volume; but we hope that his example will stir up some other scholar, with Lord Macclesfield's permission, to publish the Grammar in the same manner as the present volume. For the Dictionary, perhaps an extract of all the words, or forms, not to be found in Larramendi, Chaho, Van Eys, or Aizquibel's dictionaries might be sufficient. The present publication does honour both to the county of Oxford in the noble owner of the MSS., and to the Press and University for its production.

WENTWORTH WEBSTER.

THE ORIENTAL SEMINARY AT JOHNS HOPKINS.

WE quote from the Johns Hopkins University Circulars (July, 1894), the following report on the work of the Oriental Seminary during the last session:

"Fifteen courses were given in the various departments of Oriental research during the past year, special attention being paid to the study of the Old Testament and the cuneiform inscriptions bearing upon it. Dr. Cyrus Adler, Associate in Semitic, resigned after the Christmas recess to devote his entire time to his duties as Librarian of the Smithsonian Institution, his lectures on the history of Assyria and Babylonia being continued by Dr. C. Johnston.

"To the study of the Old Testament seven hours weekly were devoted through the year. Prof. Haupt gave a critical interpretation of the Book of Leviticus, special stress being laid on an accurate rendering of the legal style of the book into modern English. A translation of some specimen chapters of the book, prepared by Dr. D. G. Stevens, Fellow in Semitic, is given in the present number of the University Circulars. Prof. Haupt also conducted two courses in Elementary Hebrew, interpreting the opening chapters of the Pentateuch. A class met weekly throughout the year to read at sight selected portions of the historical and poetical Books of the Old Testament, under the guidance of Dr. Johnston. The advanced students handed in bi-weekly to Prof. Haupt written exercises, containing idiomatic Hebrew expressions translated from English. Instruction in post-Biblical Hebrew was given during the first half-year by Dr. Adler, the Talmudic tract, Babâ Bathrá, being studied with special reference to its bearing on the Canon of the Old Testament. Prof. Haupt gave a course of lectures weekly during the first half-year, discussing the principal problems of the textual criticism of the Old Testament. During the second half-year he gave a course of lectures on Hexateuchal Analysis, besides delivering a general lecture on 'The Genesis of the Bible' in Levering Hall, February 27.

"Under the direction of Prof. Haupt, the Assyrian Seminary met two hours weekly through the year, studying selected bilingual texts in the fourth volume of Sir Henry Rawlinson's Cuneiform Inscriptions, as well as the vocabularies in the second volume of that work and in Haupt's Keilschrift-texte. This work was supplemented by occasional exercises in Cuneiform Prose Composition, the members of the class rendering dictated Hebrew sentences into cuneiform. Dr. Johnston met the third year students of Assyrian two hours weekly, interpreting bilingual hymns and psalms during the first half-year, and selected Babylonian historical texts during the second half-year. Dr. Adler gave a series of lectures on 'The History of Assyria and Babylonia, with special reference to its bearing on the History of Israel and the Old Testament'; after Dr. Adler's resignation this course was continued by Dr. Johnston.

"In Arabic, an elementary course was given by Dr. Johnston, Seein's Arabic Grammar and the Beyrout Chrestomathy serving as text-books. Dr. Johnston also met the more advanced students in Arabic weekly during the first half-year, interpreting selected portions of the Majma' el-adab. Prof. Haupt conducted bi-weekly exercises in Arabic Prose Composition through the year.

"Three parts of the new polychromatic edition of the Old Testament, published under the editorial direction of Prof. Haupt, were issued by the Johns Hopkins Press at the end of the session. They contain critical editions of the Book of Leviticus, with notes by S. R. Driver and H. A. White, of Oxford; Joshua, by Prof. W. H. Bennett, of London; and Samuel, by Prof. K. Budde of Strassburg, the critical notes on Samuel being translated by the Rev. Dr. B. W. Bacon, of Oswego, New York. Jeremiah by Prof. Cornill, of Königsberg (English translation of the notes by Dr. C. Johnston) and Ezekiel by Prof. Toy, of Cambridge, Mass., are in the press. The second volume of the Contributions to Assyriology and Comparative Semitic Grammar, published with the co-operation of the Johns Hopkins University and edited by Prof. Haupt in conjunction with Prof. Delitzsch, of Breslau, a volume of 645 pages royal octavo, was completed, Part 5 (containing papers by Friedrich Delitzsch, C. F. Lehmann, Bruno Meissner, and S. Arthur Strong) appearing at the beginning of the session.

"A lecture by Prof. Haupt on 'The Book of Ecclesiastes,' delivered before the Oriental Club of Philadelphia, appeared in the Philadelphia Oriental Studies.

"Prof. Haupt read four papers on 'Transitive and Intransitive Verbs in Semitic,' 'The Origin of the Pentateuch,' 'The Rivers of Paradise,' and on 'Two Passages of the Chaldean Flood Tablet,' before the American Oriental Society at its meeting in New York, April 6-8. He also presented two communications to the University Philological Association on April 20 on 'The Possessive Suffix of the First Person Singular in Assyrian,' and on 'The Cuneiform Name of Lapis-lazuli.' Dr. Johnston read three papers before the University Philological Association on 'The Suffix-Pronoun of the Second Person Feminine Plural' (Nov. 17, 1893); 'Assyrian Medicine' (Feb. 16, 1894); and 'The Epistolary Literature of the Assyrians' (April 20). Dr. D. G. Stevens read a paper on 'The Songs of the Return' before the University Philological Association (March 16). Abstracts of all these communications may be found in the American Oriental Society's Proceedings, April, 1894, and in the present number of the University Circulars.

"The Assistant and the Fellow in the department received the degree of Ph.D. at the end of the session. The title of Dr. Johnston's thesis was 'The Epistolary Literature of the Assyrians,' his principal subject being Assyrian, and his subordinate subjects Hebrew and Greek. Dr. Stevens' thesis is entitled 'The Songs of the Return (Psalms 120-134),' his principal subject being Hebrew, and his subsidiary subjects Assyrian and Greek. The thesis on 'Paronomasia in the Old Testament' by Dr. I. M. Casanowicz, who received the degree of Ph.D. at the end of the session 1891-2, appeared in the Journal of Biblical Literature, Vol. XIII."

SCIENCE NOTES.

PROF. PRESTWICH has been elected a foreign member of the Regia Accademia dei Lincei, in recognition of his services to geology and palaeontology.

AT the last meeting of the Chemical Society, a paper was read on a specimen of old Scotch iron, which had been found on the site of the Fasagh bloomeries, on the north-east shore of Loch Marce, Rosshire—the neighbourhood where the manufacture of iron in Scotland appears to have had its rise nearly three centuries ago. Full particulars of the mechanical characters, determined by Prof. Unwin in the engineering laboratory of the Central Institution, were given, as well as the details of the chemical analysis. According to a report by Mr. Ames, the art-metal worker, the metal was of excellent quality, resembling the famous Swedish iron used by the English smiths of the seventeenth and eighteenth centuries.

THE August number of Natural Science (Macmillans) contains a special supplement on "Taxidermy as a Fine Art," which is based upon Dr. R. W. Shufeldt's report to the Smithsonian Institution, and is illustrated with a series of eight photographic plates from the same source. Dr. J. Walter Gregory writes upon "The Evolution of the Thames," arguing—in opposition to the views of Prof. Prestwich—that the main outlines of the river-system were determined long before Pleistocene times. One of his arguments is drawn from the distribution of Sarsen stones: it appears that the stones forming Wayland Smith's cave, and also the Blowing Stone, have been brought from a distance. Mr. E. S. Goodrich describes the exhibition cases that have recently been arranged in the Oxford University Museum by Prof. Ray Lankester. One of them contains the remains of the Dodo, together with the corresponding parts of pigeons, to illustrate the affinities between them. Mr. C. Davies Sherborne has compiled a most useful bibliography of books of reference in the natural sciences, classified for the most part according to subjects. It fills altogether twelve pages. Finally, we must mention an interesting notice of the late Brian Houghton Hodgson.

FINE ART.

"LIBRAIRIE DE L'ART."

L'Art. Deuxième Série. Tome, 1^{er}.

Les Artistes Célèbres—Antonio Canal, dit le Canaletto. Par Adrien Monreau.

Bibliothèque d'Éducation Artistique. Troisième Série—Documents décoratifs Japonais. Tirés de la Collection C. Gillot. Nos. 1-8.

Bibliothèque des Écoles de Dessin. Dessins de Maîtres Anciens et Modernes. Livraisons I-VI.

WE gladly welcome the completion of the first volume of the series of L'Art in its new form. As the title-page very properly reminds us, this is the twentieth year of the life of this popular serial, and the present volume is the fifty-sixth of the enterprise. Though it has changed its period of issue from weekly to fortnightly, and has now altered its size, there are few periodicals which have lasted so long with so little modification in the spirit with which they are conducted. Though giving the first place to painting and sculpture, it has always recognised the claims of other arts, including music and the drama; and, while publishing many interesting documents and promoting discussion with regard to the "old masters," its pages have ever been full of the spirit of current art. If it has a fault, it is the width of its scope, the almost bewildering variety of the objects of its interest.

In the present volume, true to its old traditions, we have articles connected with Andrea Pisano and Leonardo da Vinci, Mlle. Gabrielle Niel and Edmund Yon, unpublished letters of Raffet and François Bouvin, articles on old musical instruments and Japanese engravings, on the water-colour societies of England as well of France—for L'Art has always been liberal in its recognition of the English school. Amongst its contributors will be found—now as always—such men of note and standing as Emile Michel, Alphonse Wauters, and Henri Havard; and we are glad to say that the names of its editor, Emile Molinier, and his old colleague, Paul Leroy, whose ready and vivacious pen has done much service to the good ship of L'Art, are not wanting in the last "Table des Matières."

L'Art, the mother of many books, counts among her progeny none more worthy than the series of "Les Artistes Célèbres," of which the last-begotten, M. Adrien Monreau's careful monograph on Canaletto, has lately reached us. Brightly written, well ordered, richly illustrated, this volume takes its place in the admirable series which contains the Rembrandt of Emile Michel, the Phidias of Maxime Collignon, the Watteau of G. Dargenty, and the Turner of P. G. Hamerton, to mention no more.

The catholicity which marks this series of already more than fifty volumes, concerned with artists of all times and schools and nearly every shade of importance, from Donatello to Charlet, is equally displayed in that collection of facsimiles of original drawings which, under the title of "Dessins des Maîtres Anciens et Modernes," is now being issued in parts, each containing eight large folio reproductions, for the modest sum of two francs. They are, perhaps, a trifle miscellaneous and kaleidoscopic, changing from Albert Dürer to Fragonard, and from Andrea del Sarto to Herkomer, with a suddenness rather startling; but there can be no doubt of the rich and varied interest of the serial, as a whole.

More concentrated in its appeal are the excellent facsimiles of flowers, plants, fishes, and animals from Japanese designs in the possession of M. C. Gillot. These "Documents Décoratifs," if wisely used, should be of much use in artistic education.

COSMO MONKHOUSE.

CORRESPONDENCE.

VANDALISM IN GALICIA.

Yria, Galicia: July 30, 1894.

ABOUT a year ago, some peasants found near Noya, which stands at the head of one of the lovely fjords of the west coast of Galicia, a large gold necklace, consisting of a wire and beads strung upon it. The finders sold it to a silversmith in the place. He, in his turn, sold some of the beads to another silversmith at Santiago de Compostela, where the keeper of the archives assigned them to the "Celtic epoch." He has kept five of the beads, all of the same shape. Another bead, also of the same shape, is preserved by a chemist at Noya. Some of the beads which, to the annoyance of every archaeologist, have been melted down, were of two other forms. The silversmith at Noya shows his visitors the wedge of rather pale gold, which he made from the wire and about fifteen of the beads. He would probably have gained more, had he sold the entire object just as it was found to some museum, such as that of Cluny, where the Gothic crowns from Toledo are kept.

Not long ago—as I am informed by Mr. Henry Burbury, manager of the Heavystone or Wolfram Ore Mines near Noya—another peasant found in a mámoa (as prehistoric mounds are called in Galicia and Portugal), a roll of man uscript, which, from his description, must have been of papyrus. It was so big that he had to carry it home on his shoulders. But there, after showing it to a few friends, he made his kitchen-fire of it.

E. S. DODGSON.

NOTES ON ART AND ARCHAEOLOGY.

THE recollections of Mr. Rudolf Lehmann will be published by Messrs. Smith, Elder & Co. in the autumn, under the title of An Artist's Reminiscences. The volume will be divided into two parts: the first will contain an account of his career up to his settlement in London in 1866, and the second will deal with the famous people whose portraits he has painted. At present Mr. Lehmann is engaged upon a portrait of the late Sir Andrew Clark for the Royal College of Physicians.

THE exhibition gallery of prints and drawings at the British Museum will be closed from August 9 to September 8; the students' room will also be closed from August 13 to the same date.

A SMALL committee of experts has been appointed to examine the historical frescoes in the Houses of Parliament (some of which are in a deplorable condition), and to suggest means of averting their total disappearance.

A SERIES of six of the smaller cartoons of the late Ford Madox Brown, representing scenes in the life of St. Oswald, have recently been placed in the South Kensington Museum.

THE Photographic Society of Great Britain has been authorised to use the prefix of "Royal."

MR. JAMES GLAISHER, as chairman of the Palestine Exploration Fund, reports as follows concerning the excavations now being conducted at Jerusalem:

"The spot chosen for the commencement of these researches lies to the south of the city, outside the walls, close to the English cemetery. It was hoped that here traces of the ancient wall might be met with, and there are already indications that this hope will not be disappointed. Mr. Bliss reports that having sunk a shaft at a point a little south-east of the cemetery, on contour line 2469, and driven a tunnel from it in a north-easterly direction, he came, at a distance of 48ft., 'upon a finely worked rock-scarp.' This was traced, following its various angles and working both to the right and the left, for about 140ft., and is thought by Mr. Bliss to mark 'the veritable exterior line of fortifications of ancient Jerusalem.' It is, of course, too early to be sure whether this supposition is correct. Our latest intelligence is up to July 19, and it is hoped that further information may be received shortly.

"To the north of the city, not far from the church of St. Stephen's, the owner of some ground has, in digging the foundations of a house, discovered a very beautiful mosaic pavement. Mr. Bliss describes it as 'a splendid piece of work, measuring about 21ft. by 13ft. . . . Within a beautiful border . . . is a vine with branches on which hang clusters of grapes, and among the branches are numerous birds—peacocks, ducks, storks, an eagle, a partridge, a parrot in a cage, &c. It is almost perfectly preserved, and near the eastern end is an Armenian inscription to the effect that the place was in memory of all those Armenians whose names the Lord knows.' Underneath is a cavern in which were found bones, lamps, and glass vases. Photographs of the mosaic are in the office of the Fund."

MUSIC.

MUSIC PUBLICATIONS.

"RICHARD WAGNER'S PROSE WORKS." Translated by William Ashton Ellis. Vol. 2. Opera and Drama. (Kegan Paul & Co.)

THE translator is in good spirits, for in the preface he writes that his work is advancing at a more rapid rate than he had hoped or promised. And this preface, by the way, is of considerable interest.

Wagner commenced with the idea of writing an article entitled "Das Wesen der Oper"; the article grew to a pamphlet, and the pamphlet to a book. The author himself in a letter to Uhlig has given a very succinct and characteristic account of it. He writes thus:—

"The first part is the shortest and easiest, perhaps also the most entertaining; the second goes deeper, and the third is a piece of work which goes right to the bottom. The whole will be a book of 400 to 500 pages."

In the first part he traces the evolution of the opera; but he was, perhaps, in too much of a hurry to refute the errors of the opera-writers of the eighteenth and nineteenth centuries, and certainly failed to render full justice to the period of the Renaissance. There are many hard sayings in the book, many bitter remarks, especially concerning his contemporaries; but Wagner felt strongly, and therefore spoke strongly. He was thoroughly in earnest; he did not wish for peace, but rather division. One by one the great masters are weighed in the balances and found wanting: Gluck lacked courage; Mozart, reflection; and Weber, if sincere, only stammered. Wagner cannot be serious about Rossini, who, "in righteous expiation of his sins, became a fish-purveyor and a church-composer"; he sets down Meyerbeer's "specific musical capacity at zero." And then, when he comes to Beethoven, he speaks of that composer's error, yet one "all-puissant," since through it was unveiled the inexhaustible power of music. Beethoven was not content to make her "what she really is—an act of expression." How extraordinary, how presumptuous such words must have sounded when first uttered by Wagner! Who was he thus to sit in judgment on men who had all achieved fame, and some fortune? He had written three operas, little known and admired only by a few friends. But Wagner was creator as well as critic, and produced a series of works which have slowly, but surely, won for him respect, admiration, and even reverence. "Tristan" and "Parsifal," the one telling of earthly, the other of heavenly love, justify his bold language, and fully atone for any spirit of bitterness shown. It was possible, and that not so very long ago, to laugh at Wagner, to declare his works dry, and for the most part incomprehensible; but no one does that now. Critics whose words carry any weight all extol his genius, though some affect regret at the lines on which he worked.

Op ra and Drama gives us an honest picture of the man's thoughts and feelings; and the involved style of some of the writing shows that it was the outcome of a long, and one may say, painful struggle. Wagner writes to Uhlig:—

"You can have no idea of the trouble I am giving myself, to call forth a whole understanding in those who now understand but half; yes, even my foes, who either do not or will not understand at all as yet; even then I fain would bring to understanding; and lastly, I rejoice for the mere reason that I am always coming to a better understanding myself."

And, though it has been said before, it is important to remember that Wagner did not expound his theories and then write works to exemplify them, but those theories were born of the artist's attempts to realise his dreams and aspirations. Had Wagner, from fear lest the world should think him arrogant, attempted to stifle the voice that spoke within him, he would have turned out a respectable though probably dull music-maker. But he was no Loadicean.

Opera and Drama is certainly not light reading. Mr. Ellis in his preface tells us that "the difficulty of many passages in the third part (the most obtruse of all) consists in their intense condensation of thought"; and then again, he knows that "even at 'Wahnfried' a few of the pages are considered doubtful of interpretation." But, in spite of all difficulties, the book is fascinating. The admirable summary should first be read, so as to catch its general drift, and then the work itself should be gone through in a fairly rapid manner before it is studied. If the reader pores over every difficult sentence he may lose the thread of the argument, and in some cases not even succeed in solving the difficulties which present themselves.

Surely no impartial person can read this volume without coming to the conclusion that Wagner held exaggerated views, and that he lacked tolerance—but then these thoughts are common to genius. It was exaggerated to say that "the aim of opera has ever been, and still is to-day, confined to music." He could so easily have said "for the most part," but then each culprit among his contemporaries would have shielded himself behind that saving clause. And so in a similar spirit Wagner wrote:—"The understanding is thus, from first to last, the human faculty which the modern poet wishes to address." His defence of "Stabreim" is laboured, and one may quote against him his own words in reference to the melody in Beethoven's Choral Symphony:—"But the march of evolution of all things human is no returning to the old, but a constant stepping forward; every turning back shows itself no natural, but an artificial movement."

There are, perhaps, few who could find time, or would have the patience, to read Opera and Drama through from beginning to end; there is a shorter and pleasanter way of studying Wagner's art-theories, and that is by listening to his music-dramas. But there are many self-contained passages and pithy sentences, which will interest the reader. Let us quote two of the latter:—

"Only for the history of music in general, is Mozart of so strikingly weighty moment: in no wise for the history of opera in particular, as a specific genre of art."

And again:—

"The topmost flower of that Drama which sprang directly from Romance, we have in the plays of Shakespeare; in the farthest removal from this Drama, we find its diametrical opposite in the 'Tragédie' of Racine."

Now that "Parsifal" is acknowledged to be one of the wonder works of art, the following passage has special interest. Wagner is comparing the Greek and the Christian Mythos. For the Greek death was not only a natural but an ethical necessity, whereas dying is the sole content of the art which issued from the Christian myth. Hence, we are told that the object of all Christian art, "the conscious stripping-off the physical body" could only be "limned, described, but never represented, and, least of all, in Drama." But what once seemed impossible to Wagner, he, in course of time, achieved.

A few words, in conclusion, about the translation. In face of the many difficulties which presented themselves—of the character of which some of the foot-notes give a good idea—it would be unjust to pick out a blot here and there, especially as to the choice of words. Rather would we ask all who are unable to read the work in the original, to thank Mr. Ellis for his patience, his perseverance, and his conscientiousness. Will he pardon us one little grumble? Was it necessary to have so many nouns printed with a capital?

J. S. SHEDLOCK.

IMPORTANT WORK ON THE HISTORY OF THE NOVEL.

A GUIDE TO BRITISH & AMERICAN NOVELS.

BEING A COMPREHENSIVE MANUAL TO BRITISH AND AMERICAN FICTION FROM THE EARLIEST PERIOD TO THE END OF 1893.

BY PERCY RUSSELL,

Author of "The Author's Manual," &c.
Crown 8vo, cloth, 300 pp., price 3s. 6d. net; by post, 3s. 10d.

THE GUIDE CONTAINS A COMPLETE HISTORY OF THE NOVEL, LIVING NOVELISTS, AND NOVELISTS OF THE PAST.

BY THE SAME AUTHOR. THE AUTHOR'S MANUAL.

WITH PREFATORY REMARKS

BY MR. GLADSTONE.

Seventh and Cheap Edition. With New Preface, 304 pp., crown 8vo, cloth, price 3s. 6d. net; by post, 3s. 10d. With Portrait.

"...Mr. Russell's book is a very complete manual and guide for journalist and author. It is not a merely practical work—it is literary and appreciative of literature in its best sense. . . . We have little else but praise for the volume."—Westminster Review.

LONDON: DIGBY, LONG & CO., PUBLISHERS,
18, BOUVERIE STREET, FLEET STREET, E.C.

IMPORTANT.—PRINTING AND PUBLISHING

NEWSPAPERS, MAGAZINES, BOOKS, &c.—KING, SELL & RAILTON, Limited, high-class Printers and Publishers, 22, Gough Square, 4, Bolt Court, Fleet Street, E.C. have specially-built Rotary and other fast Machines for printing illustrated or other Journals, and specially-built Machines for fast folding and covering 16 or 32 page Journals at one operation.

Facilities upon the premises for Editorial Offices, free. Advertising and Publishing Departments conducted.

Telephone 2739. Telegraph, "Africanism, London."

Take with you on Vacation

A TABLET

OF

VINOLIA SOAP

Price 4d.

ESTABLISHED 1851.

BIRKBECK BANK,
Southampton Buildings, Chancery Lane, London.

TWO-AND-A-HALF per CENT. INTEREST allowed on DEPOSITS repayable on demand.
TWO per CENT. on CURRENT ACCOUNTS, on the minimum monthly balances, when not drawn below £100.
STOCKS, SHARES, and ANNUITIES purchased and sold.

SAVINGS DEPARTMENT.

For the encouragement of Thrift the Bank receives small sums on deposit, and allows Interest monthly on each completed £1

BIRKBECK BUILDING SOCIETY.

HOW TO PURCHASE A HOUSE
FOR TWO GUINEAS PER MONTH.

BIRKBECK FREEHOLD LAND SOCIETY.

HOW TO PURCHASE A PLOT OF LAND
FOR FIVE SHILLINGS PER MONTH.

The BIRKBECK ALMANACK, with full particulars, post free
FRANCIS RAVENSCROFT, Manager.

To H.R.H. the PRINCE OF WALES.

BRAND & CO'S A1 SAUCE,

SOUPS, PRESERVED PROVISIONS

and

POTTED MEATS, and YORK and GAME

PIES. Also,

ESSENCE of BEEF, BEEF TEA,

TURTLE SOUP, and JELLY, and other

SPECIALITIES for INVALIDS.

CAUTION—BEWARE OF IMITATIONS.

SOLE ADDRESS—

11, LITTLE STANHOPE STREET,
MAYFAIR, W.

LONSDALE PRINTING WORKS,

LONSDALE BUILDINGS, 27, CHANCERY LANE.

ALEXANDER & SHEPHEARD.

PRINTERS AND PUBLISHERS.

BOOKS, PAMPHLETS, MAGAZINES,

NEWSPAPERS AND PERIODICALS,

And all General and Commercial Work.

Every description of Printing—large or small.

Printers of THE ACADEMY Newspaper.

Authors advised with as to Printing and Publishing.
Estimates and all information furnished.
Contracts entered into.

HURST & BLACKETT'S PUBLICATIONS.

BOOKS FOR THE COUNTRY AND SEASIDE.

HURST & BLACKETT'S THREE-AND-SIXPENNY SERIES.

Crown 8vo, uniformly bound, bevelled boards, each 3s. 6d.

THUNDERBOLT. (An Australian Bushranging Story.) By the Rev. J. MIDDLETON MACDONALD, Bengal Chaplain.

The AWAKENING of MARY FENWICK
By BEATRICE WHITBY.

TWO ENGLISH GIRLS. By MABEL HART.
HIS LITTLE MOTHER. By the AUTHOR of "JOHN HALIFAX, GENTLEMAN."

MISTRESS BEATRICE COPE. By M. E.
LE CLERC.

A MARCH in the RANKS. By JESSIE
FOTHERGILL.

NINETTE. By the AUTHOR of "VERA," "BLUE ROSES," &c.

A CROOKED PATH. By Mrs. ALEXANDER.

ONE REASON WHY. By BEATRICE WHITBY.

MAHME NOUSIE. By G. MANVILLE FENN.

THE IDES of MARCH. By G. M. ROBINS.

PART of the PROPERTY. By BEATRICE WHITBY.

CASPAR BROOKE'S DAUGHTER. By ADELINE SERGEANT.

JANET: a Novel. By Mrs. OLIPHANT.

A RAINBOW at NIGHT. By the Author of "MISTRESS BEATRICE COPE."

IN the SUNTIME of her YOUTH. By BEATRICE WHITBY.

MISS BOUVERIE. By Mrs. MOLESWORTH.

FROM HARVEST to HAYTIME. By the AUTHOR of "TWO ENGLISH GIRLS."

THE WINNING of MAY. By the AUTHOR of "DR. EDITH ROMNEY."

SIR ANTHONY. By ADELINE SERGEANT.

EDNA LYALL'S NOVELS.

Each in One Volume, crown 8vo, 6s.

TO RIGHT THE WRONG.

DONOVAN.
WE TWO.

IN THE GOLDEN DAYS.
KNIGHT-ERRANT.

WON BY WAITING.
A HARDY NORSEMAN.

Each Work Complete in 1 vol., price 5s., Illustrated by Sir J. E. MILLAIS, Sir JOHN GILBERT, HOLMAN HUNT, JOHN LEECH, BIRKET FOSTER, LASLETT POTT, JOHN TENNIEL, E. J. POYNTER, F. SANDYS, &c.

HURST & BLACKETT'S STANDARD LIBRARY

Of Cheap Editions of Popular Modern Works.

BY THE AUTHOR OF "JOHN HALIFAX."

John Halifax, Gentleman.
A Woman's Thoughts about Women.
A Life for a Life.
Nothing New.
The Woman's Kingdom.
Mistress and Maid.

Christian's Mistake.
A Noble Life.
Hannah.
The Unkind Word.
A Brave Lady.
Studies from Life.
Young Mrs. Jardine.

BY THE AUTHOR OF "SAM SLICK."

Nature and Human Nature.
Wise Saws and Modern Instances.
The Old Judge; or, Life in a Colony.
Traits of American Humour.
The Americans at Home.

BY ELIOT WARBURTON.

The Crescent and the Cross. | Darien.

BY F. W. ROBINSON.

Grandmother's Money. | No Church.

BY JULIA KAVANAGH.

Nathalie. | Adele.

BY AMELIA B. EDWARDS.

Barbara's History. | Lord Brackenbury.

BY MRS. OLIPHANT.

Adam Graeme.
Laird of Norlaw.
Agnes.
Life of Irving.

A Rose in June.
Phoebe, Junior.
It was a Lover and his Lass.

BY DR. GEORGE MACDONALD.

David Elginbrod.
Robert Falconer.

Alec Forbes.
Sir Gibbie.

BY JOHN CORDY JEAFFRESON.

The Real Lord Byron. | A Book about Doctors.

BY VARIOUS AUTHORS.

Through the Long Night. By Mrs. E. LYNN LINTON.
Margaret and her Bridesmaids.
The Valley of a Hundred Fires.
Lost and Saved. By the Hon. Mrs. NORTON.
St. Olave's. By the Author of "Janita's Cross."
My Little Lady. By E. F. POYNTER.
Les Misérables. By VICTOR HUGO.
Annals of an Eventful Life. By Dr. DASENT.
Life of Marie Antoinette. By Prof. C. D. YONGE.
Sir Bernard Burke's Family Romance.
Freer's Life of Jeanne D'Albret.
Burke's Romance of the Forum.
Dixon's New America.
Leigh Hunt's Old Court Suburb.
Cardinal Wiseman's Popes.
The Englishwoman in Italy. By Mrs. GRETTON.

LONDON: HURST & BLACKETT, LIMITED, 13, GREAT MARLBOROUGH STREET, W.

THE ACADEMY.

A WEEKLY REVIEW OF LITERATURE, SCIENCE, AND ART.

No. 1163.
[New Issue.]

SATURDAY, AUGUST 18, 1894.

PRICE 3d.
[Registered as a Newspaper.]

TABLE OF CONTENTS

| | PAOR |
|---|------|
| HELEN, LADY DUFFERIN, by T. HUTCHINSON . . . | 111 |
| THE GROUSE, by the Rev. M. G. WATKINS . . . | 113 |
| A FRENCH HISTORY OF SUSSEX, by the Rev. C. J. ROBINSON . . . | 113 |
| TWO BOOKS ON THE WELSH LANGUAGE, by ERNEST RHYS . . . | 114 |
| NEW NOVELS, by J. B. ALLEN . . . | 115 |
| CURRENT THEOLOGY . . . | 116 |
| NOTES AND NEWS . . . | 117 |
| UNIVERSITY JOTTINGS . . . | 118 |
| TRANSLATION: FROM THE "PRIMAVERA OF RODRIGUES LOBO," by EDGAR PRESTON . . . | 118 |
| MAGAZINES AND REVIEWS . . . | 118 |
| SELECTED FOREIGN BOOKS . . . | 118 |
| CORRESPONDENCE— | |
| Notes on Some Ogham Inscriptions in Ireland, I., by B. A. S. MACALISTER; "God Bless the Cow!" by Dr. FURNIVALL; Honorary Degrees at Halle, by Prof. SKEAT | 118 |
| WORTHINGTON SMITH ON PRIMITIVE MAN, by F. W. RUDLER . . . | 120 |
| PHILOLOGY NOTES . . . | 121 |
| REPORTS OF SOCIETIES . . . | 121 |
| SMITH'S HISTORICAL GEOGRAPHY OF THE HOLY LAND, by Prof. SAYCE . . . | 121 |
| IN MEMORIAM: PROF. BRUNN, by Prof. PERCY GARDNER . . . | 122 |
| NOTES ON ART AND ARCHAEOLOGY . . . | 122 |

TYPE-WRITING.

AUTHORS, PUBLISHERS, &c.—
Scientific, Literary, and Medical MSS. carefully and promptly typewritten by RAYNE & CO., 40, Norfolk Street, Strand, W.C. Private room for dictation. Highest references. Translations.

THE FLEET STREET TYPEWRITERS

115, FLEET STREET, E.C.
Lowest Charges. Highest Speed.
Every kind of Typewriting Work Done.
Price List—115, Fleet Street, London.

TYPE-WRITERS.—SECOND-HAND

MACHINES, equal to new. FOR SALE, EXCHANGE, or LENT ON HIRE. Machines sold by instalments on Terms to suit purchasers. Use of Machine taught free to buyers or purchasers. Remingtons, Yosts, Hammonds, Caligraphs, Barlocks, Fitch, &c., from 25s. MS. Copied with accuracy and despatch at lowest rates. Highest references. Illustrated Catalogue free.—N. TAYLOR, Manager, National Type-Writer Exchange, 74, Chancery Lane, London (Holborn end).

CATALOGUES

FOREIGN BOOKS AND PERIODICALS
promptly supplied on moderate terms.
CATALOGUES on application.

DULAU & CO., 37, SOHO SQUARE.

BAEDEKER'S & BADDELEY'S

TOURISTS' GUIDE BOOKS.

New fully detailed Catalogue sent post free on application
DULAU & CO., 37, SOHO SQUARE, LONDON, W.

FOREIGN BOOKS AT FOREIGN PRICES.

WILLIAMS & NORGATE,

Importers of Foreign Books,

14, HENRIETTA STREET, COVENT GARDEN,

AND
20, SOUTH FREDERICK STREET, EDINBURGH.

CATALOGUES post free on application.

TH. WOHLLEBEN,

FOREIGN BOOKSELLER,

45, GREAT RUSSELL STREET

(Opposite the British Museum),

Supplies all FOREIGN BOOKS and PERIODICALS at the most moderate prices.

Catalogues on application.

AGENCY FOR AMERICAN BOOKS.

G. P. PUTNAM'S SONS, PUBLISHERS

G. and BOOKSELLERS, of 27 and 29 West 23rd Street, New York, and 24, BEDFORD STREET, LONDON, W.C., desire to call the attention of the READING PUBLIC to the excellent facilities presented by their Branch House in London for filling, on the most favourable terms, orders for their own STANDARD PUBLICATIONS, and for ALL AMERICAN BOOKS and PERIODICALS—CATALOGUES sent on application.

IMPORTANT.—PRINTING AND PUBLISHING

NEWSPAPERS, MAGAZINES, BOOKS,

&c.—KING, SELL & RAILTON, Limited, high-class Printers and Publishers, 12, Ough Square, 4, Bolt Court, Fleet Street, E.C. have specially-built Rotary and other fast Machines for printing Illustrated or other Journals, and specially-built Machines for fast folding and covering 16 or 32 page Journals at one operation.

Facilities upon the premises for Editorial Offices, free. Advertising and Publishing Departments conducted.

Telephone 2759. Telegraph, "Africanism, London.

MASON COLLEGE, BIRMINGHAM

(WITH QUEEN'S FACULTY OF MEDICINE).

FACULTIES OF ARTS AND SCIENCE.

PRINCIPAL: Professor R. S. HEATH, M.A. Cantab., D.Sc. Lond.

SESSION 1894-95.

THE SESSION WILL COMMENCE ON MONDAY, OCTOBER 1.

Complete Courses of Instruction are provided for the various Examinations in Arts and Science and the Preliminary Scientific (M.B.) Examination of the University of London; for Students of Civil, Mechanical, or Electrical Engineering; and for those who desire to obtain an acquaintance with some branch of applied science. Students may, however, attend any class or combination of classes.

There is also a Faculty of Medicine. A Syllabus containing full particulars is published by Messrs. Cornish, New Street, Birmingham. Price 6d.; by post, 7d.

A SYLLABUS of the Faculties of Arts and Science, containing full information as to the various Lecture and Laboratory Courses, Lecture Days and Hours, Fees, Entrance and other Scholarships, Prizes, &c., is published by Messrs. Cornish, New Street, Birmingham. Price 6d.; by post, 8d.

Further information may be obtained on application to
Geo. H. MOSELEY, Secretary and Registrar.

THE VICTORIA UNIVERSITY.

The following EXAMINATIONS will be held at Owens College, Manchester; University College, Liverpool; and Yorkshire College, Leeds, in September:—

An ENTRANCE EXAMINATION in ARTS (introductory to the Faculty of Medicine) on MONDAY, SEPTEMBER 24th, and following days.

An ENTRANCE EXAMINATION in ARTS (introductory to the Faculty of Music) on MONDAY, SEPTEMBER 24th, and following days.

A PRELIMINARY EXAMINATION introductory to the Faculties of Arts, Science, and Law on MONDAY, SEPTEMBER 24th, and following days.

The Examination Fee (£2), accompanied by a list of the subjects presented, must be sent to the REGISTRAR, from whom conditions of entrance and further particulars can be obtained, on or before September 14th.

Manchester, August, 1894.

VICTORIA UNIVERSITY.

THE YORKSHIRE COLLEGE, LEEDS.

The Sixty-fourth Session of the Medical Department and the Twenty-first Session of the Department of Science, Technology, and Arts begin OCTOBER 8th.

The Classes prepare for Professions, Commerce, and University Degrees in Arts, Science, and Medicine. The Physical, Chemical, Biological, Engineering, and Leather Industries Laboratories, and the Weaver Sheds, Dye-house, and Printing Rooms will be open daily for Practical Work.

The following Prospectuses may be had free from the REGISTRAR:—

1. For Regular Day Students.
2. For Occasional and Evening Students.
3. Classes in Agriculture.
4. For Medical Students.

A Hall of Residence for College Students has been established.

CITY OF BIRMINGHAM MUNICIPAL TECHNICAL SCHOOL.

The Corporation of Birmingham require the services of a PRINCIPAL, to undertake the General Control of the Day and Evening Teaching in the New School (now in course of erection). The salary has been fixed at £500 per annum, and the Principal will be required to enter upon his duties on the 1st January next, and to devote his whole time to the appointment, under the direction of the Technical School Committee.

Applications, accompanied by copies of testimonials, must be sent on or before the 1st September next, to the undersigned, from whom further particulars can be obtained on application being made by letter.

GEORGE MELLOR, Secretary Municipal Technical School.
Paradise Street, Birmingham.

THE UNIVERSITY OF ST. ANDREWS

GRANTS THE

DIPLOMA and TITLE of L.L.A. to WOMEN.

The Subjects of Examination may be selected from any seven out of thirty different subjects, the standard being the same as that for the M.A. Degree. The centres of examination are St. Andrews, Aberdeen, Bedford, Belfast, Birmingham, Bristol, Cardiff, Cheltenham, Cork, Dublin, Dundee, Edinburgh, Inverness, Leeds, Leicester, Liverpool, London, Loughborough, Manchester, Newcastle-on-Tyne, Paisley, Truro, &c.

For Prospectus, &c., apply to the SECRETARY, L.L.A. Scheme, the University, St. Andrews, N.B.

UNIVERSITY COLLEGE, LONDON.

LECTURES ON ZOOLOGY.

The General COURSE OF LECTURES ON ZOOLOGY, by Professor W. F. R. WELDON, F.R.S., will COMMENCE on WEDNESDAY, OCTOBER 3rd, at 1 p.m.

LONDON SCHOOL OF MEDICINE for WOMEN, 30, HANDEL STREET, BARNSWICK SQUARE, W.C., and the ROYAL FREE HOSPITAL, prepare for all the Medical Examinations open to Women. Entrance Scholarship, value £30; Stuart Mill Scholarship, £30 a year for four years; Mackay Prizes of £20 each, &c.—Apply to SECRETARY at School.

EDUCATION.—Particulars as to the best

University or Army Tutors and Schools for Boys or Girls, at home or abroad, may be obtained, free of charge, by sending a statement of requirements to H. J. DEYON, M.A., 8, Lancaster Place, Strand.

WELSH INTERMEDIATE EDUCATION ACT, 1889.

MONTGOMERY COUNTY SCHEME.

The County Governing Body are prepared to appoint:—

A HEAD MASTER for the COUNTY INTERMEDIATE SCHOOL (Mixed) at MACHYNILETH, Montgomeryshire, at a salary of £160 per annum, with a Capitation payment of £1 10s. for each scholar.

A HEAD MASTER for the COUNTY INTERMEDIATE SCHOOL (Boys) at LLANDIDLOES, Montgomeryshire, at a salary of £160 per annum, with a Capitation payment of £2 for each boy.

A HEAD MISTRESS for the COUNTY INTERMEDIATE SCHOOL (Girls) at LLANDIDLOES, at a salary of £110 per annum, with a Capitation payment of £1 10s. for each girl.

The Schools are expected to be shortly opened—Machynlleth with about 30 scholars, and Llandidloes with about 30 boys and 15 girls.

A Head Master must have taken a Degree in the United Kingdom or in the British Possessions. A Head Mistress must have taken a Degree, or passed such University Examination as would, in case of a man, have qualified for a Degree, and also have been trained as a Teacher.

Copies of the Scheme, giving full particulars, may be obtained from the undersigned, price Sixpence.

Applications, stating age and qualifications, and accompanied by thirty copies of Testimonials, must be sent in addressed "Clerk of the County Council, Welshpool," and marked "For County Governing Body," not later than 8th September next, and applicants are requested to state which of the subjects to be taught in the schools they can themselves teach. A good knowledge of Welsh is in every case indispensable.

Geo. D. HARRISON,
Clerk to the County Council, Welshpool.

ST. BARTHOLOMEW'S HOSPITAL and COLLEGE.

OPEN SCHOLARSHIPS.

Four Scholarships and One Exhibition, respectively worth £150, £75, £75, £50, and £20 each, tenable for one year, will be competed for in September, 1894—viz., One Senior Open Scholarship of the value of £75 will be awarded to the best candidate (if of sufficient merit) in Physics and Chemistry. One Senior Open Scholarship of the value of £75 will be awarded to the best candidate (if of sufficient merit) in Biology and Physiology.

Candidates for these Scholarships must be under twenty-five years of age, and must not have entered to the Medical and Surgical Practice of any London medical school.

One Junior Open Scholarship in Science, value £50, and one Preliminary Scientific Exhibition, value £20, will be awarded to the best candidates under twenty years of age (if of sufficient merit) in Physics, Chemistry, Animal Biology, and Vegetable Biology. The questions for the Scholarship of £150 will be of about the range required for Honours in the London University Preliminary Scientific Examination, and those for the Preliminary Scientific Exhibition will be of about the range of the pass questions in that examination. The Jefferson Exhibition (value £20) will be competed for at the same time. The subjects of examination are Latin, Mathematics, and any one of the three following languages—Greek, French, and German.

The Classical subjects are those of the London University Matriculation Examination of June, 1894.

The successful candidates in all these Scholarships will be required to enter to the full course at St. Bartholomew's Hospital in the October succeeding the Examination. The Examination for these Scholarships will be held on September 20th, 1894.

For particulars, application may be made, personally or by letter, to the WARDEN of the COLLEGE, St. Bartholomew's Hospital, E.C.

THE DURHAM COLLEGE OF SCIENCE

NEWCASTLE-UPON-TYNE.

The College represents the Faculties of Science and Engineering in the University of Durham, and is open to Students of either sex.

In addition to the Departments of Pure Science, complete Courses of Instruction are provided in Agriculture, Engineering, Naval Architecture, and Mining. There are also Departments of Literature, Classics, History, Modern Languages, Fine Art, &c.

THE SESSION commences SEPTEMBER 24th, 1894.

Full particulars will be found in the College Calendar, price 1s. Prospectuses will be forwarded on application free.

H. F. STOCKDALE, Secretary.

THE YORKSHIRE COLLEGE, LEEDS.

APPLICATIONS are invited for a vacant DEMONSTRATORSHIP OF PHYSICS. Salary £125, with certain fees. Particulars may be obtained from the SECRETARY, to whom applications must be sent on or before August 31st.

ST. PAUL'S SCHOOL, London.—

FOUNDATION SCHOLARSHIPS. An EXAMINATION for filling up about 20 VACANCIES on the Foundation will be held on the 4th SEPTEMBER NEXT.—For information, apply to the BURSAR, St. Paul's School, West Kensington, W.

Just published, crown 8vo, 3s. 6d.

THE DIVIDED IRISH: an Historical

Sketch. By the Hon. A. S. G. CANNING, Author of "Words on Existing Religions," &c.

"The book is one which every one should read who wants to understand Irish political movements"—Schoolman.

"We can heartily recommend a perusal of this work."—Public Opinion

London: W. H. ALLEN & Co., Limited, 13, Waterloo Place.

POPULAR EDITION, WITH PORTRAIT.

Large 4to, price 6d.

JOSEPH MAZZINI: a Memoir by E. A. V.,

with two Essays by MAZZINI: "THOUGHTS on DEMOCRACY" and "THE DUTIES of MAN."

"E. A. V.'s Memoir of Mazzini is, we are glad to see, now issued at sixpence, so that it can be procured and read by everyone interested in the development and growth of Democracy."—Pall Mall Gazette.

London: ALEXANDER & SHERBURN, Furnival Street, E.C.

RICHARD BENTLEY & SON'S LIST.

New Novels Now Ready.

NOW READY.

AN INTERLOPER. By Frances MARY PEARD, Author of "The Baroness," &c. In 2 vols., crown 8vo.

"We rejoice in this thoroughly right-minded novel, which will strengthen instead of weaken, like so many in these days, the fearless sense of right."—Guardian.

"Makes decidedly good reading."—Observer.

NOW READY.

WEDDED TO A GENIUS.

By NEIL CHRISTISON.

In 2 vols., crown 8vo.

NOW READY.

IN a CINQUE PORT: a Story of Winchelsea. By E. M. HEWITT. In 3 vols., crown 8vo.

"A graceful and suggestive story. The old-world glories and present autumnal grace of Winchelsea are brought vividly before the reader. Every page is indicative of a cultured mind and a certain nobleness of purpose."—Athenaeum.

NOW READY.

A TROUBLESOME PAIR. By LESLIE KEITH, Author of "Lisbeth," &c. In 3 vols., crown 8vo.

SOME SIX-SHILLING EDITIONS

OR

STANDARD WORKS for the LIBRARY

THE LIFE of MARY, QUEEN of SCOTS. From the French of M. MIGNET. By ANDREW SCOBLE. With 2 Portraits. Crown 8vo, 6s.

THE LIFE of OLIVER CROMWELL. From the French of M. GUIZOT. By ANDREW SCOBLE. Crown 8vo, with 4 Portraits, 6s.

THE LIFE of LORD WOLSELEY. By CHARLES RATHBONE LOW, F.R.G.S. In 1 vol., crown 8vo, with a Portrait, 6s.

THE LIFE of the REV. RICHARD HARRIS BARHAM, Author of "The Ingoldby Legends." By his Son, the Rev. RICHARD H. DALTON BARHAM. In 1 vol., crown 8vo, with Portraits, 6s.

MY LIFE. By Thomas Sidney Cooper, R.A. In crown 8vo, with Portrait, 6s.

THE AUTOBIOGRAPHY of a SEAMAN: THOMAS, TENTH EARL of DUNDONALD. Popular Edition. With Portraits, Charts, and 9 Illustrations on Wood. Crown 8vo, 6s.

THE LIFE of THEODORE EDWARD HOOK. By the Rev. RICHARD H. DALTON BARHAM. A New Edition. Crown 8vo, 6s.

THE LIVES of STATESMEN: Burke and Chatham. By JOHN TIMBS, F.S.A. Crown 8vo, with Portraits, 6s.

THE LIVES of WITS and HUMORISTS: Swift, Foote, Steele, Goldsmith, the Colmans, Sheridan, Porson, Sydney Smith, Theodore Hook, &c. By JOHN TIMBS, F.S.A. In 2 vols., crown 8vo, with Portraits, 12s.

RICHARD BENTLEY & SON, New Burlington Street
Publishers in Ordinary to Her Majesty the Queen.

EDWARD STANFORD'S LIST.

New Tourist Catalogue sent post free on application.

Just ready, SIXTH and CHEAPER EDITION, Revised.

THE PHYSICAL GEOLOGY and GEOGRAPHY of GREAT BRITAIN: a Manual of British Geology. By the late Sir ANDREW C. RAMSAY, LL.D., F.R.S. Edited by HORACE E. WOODWARD, F.G.S., of the Geological Survey. With a Geological Map printed in Colours, and numerous Illustrations. Post 8vo, cloth, 10s. 6d.

REISSUE OF STANFORD'S COMPENDIUM OF GEOGRAPHY and TRAVEL. REVISED, and in GREAT PART REWRITTEN.

AUSTRALASIA. Vol. I. Australia and NEW ZEALAND. By ALFRED RUSSEL WALLACE, LL.D., D.C.L., F.R.S. With numerous Maps and Illustrations. Large crown 8vo, cloth, 15s.

STANFORD'S TWO-SHILLING SERIES OF TOURIST GUIDES.

Feap. 8vo, cloth, with Maps, &c.

BEDFORDSHIRE.
BERKSHIRE.
CAMBRIDGESHIRE.
CHANNEL ISLANDS.
CORNWALL.
DERBYSHIRE.
DEVON, NORTH.
DEVON, SOUTH.
DORSETSHIRE.
ENGLISH LAKES.
GLOUCESTERSHIRE.
HAMPSHIRE.
HERTFORDSHIRE.

KENT.
LONDON (ROUND).
NORFOLK.
SOMERSETSHIRE.
SUFFOLK.
SURREY.
SUSSEX.
WARWICKSHIRE.
WILTSHIRE.
WORCESTER.
WYKE (The).
YORKSHIRE, EAST and NORTH.
YORKSHIRE, WEST.

"For the pedestrian, horseman, and bicyclist a handy pocket guide is almost indispensable. Mr. Stanford has estimated the situation correctly, and, as far as we can judge, has made most creditable provision. Nothing can be more convenient than the volumes of this little two-shilling county series; the type, though closely printed, is clear, and they are nearly as light and twice as portable as a fairly filled cigar-case."—Saturday Review.

JENKINSON'S PRACTICAL GUIDES.

Feap. 8vo, cloth, with Maps, &c.

THE ENGLISH LAKES. Ninth Edition. With 8 Maps. 6s.
THE ISLE of WIGHT. Fifth Edition. With 2 Maps. 2s. 6d.
NORTH WALES. Fourth Edition. With 2 Maps. 6s. 6d.
NORTH WALES. (Smaller Guide.) With 3 Maps. 8s. 6d.
THE ISLE of MAN. Third Edition. With Map. 5s.
CARLISLE, THE ROMAN WALL, &c. With Map. 5s.

"The special merit of these handbooks is their trustworthiness. Mr. Jenkinson has visited every place described, and travelled by every route suggested, and has throughout viewed things as a practical guide should view them. His directions to the pedestrian are so minute and clear that it is hardly possible to go wrong, and his advice as to what to see and what to avoid is always worth attention."—Academy.

LONDON: EDWARD STANFORD,
26 AND 27, COCKSPUR STREET, CHARING CROSS, S.W.
Geographer to Her Majesty the Queen.

NOW READY.

THE STRAND MAGAZINE

For AUGUST.

(EDITED BY GEORGE NEWNES.)

CONTAINING:—

FAVOURITE BOOKS of CHILDHOOD. By Frances H. Low
THE DYNAMITER'S SWEETHEART. By Grant Allen.
OSTRICH FARMING in SOUTH AFRICA. By Charles W. Carey.

BANK of ENGLAND NOTES. By Gilbert Guerdon.
WONDERLAND in AMERICA. By Mrs. Fenwick Miller.
ENGINE-DRIVERS and their WORK.—I. By Alfred T. Story.

ILLUSTRATED INTERVIEW with Sir DONALD CURRIE
By Harry How.

SOME HISTORIC CRADLES. By Sheila E. Braine.
MARTIN HEWITT, INVESTIGATOR.—VI. The Stanway
Cameo Mystery. By Arthur Morrison.

THE CROISSEY YEW. From the French of Maurice Saint-Aguet.

PORTRAITS of CELEBRITIES at DIFFERENT TIMES of their LIVES: Sir Donald Currie, K.C.M.G., M.P.;
the late President Carnot; Lord Justice Davey; Robert Abel.

SYDNEY HOLT, B.A. By Martin Miller.
ZIG-ZAGS at the ZOO.—XXVI. Zig-Zag Final. By Arthur Morrison and J. A. Shepherd.

FROM BEHIND the SPEAKER'S CHAIR.—XVII. By Henry W. Lucy.

112 pages, with 129 Illustrations. Price 6d., post free, 9d.

ALSO READY.

THE PICTURE MAGAZINE

For AUGUST,

CONTAINING:—

REPRODUCTIONS of HUMOROUS FINE
ART PHOTOGRAPHS,

By A. G. Tagliaferro and J. H. Gear. Also

PORTRAITS of TWENTY-SEVEN ATHLETES,

And some 200 other Pictures. Price 6d., post free 8d.

GEORGE NEWNES, LTD., LONDON, W.C.

F. V. WHITE & CO.'S

RECENT PUBLICATIONS.

I.

JOHN STRANGE WINTER'S

New One-Volume Novel.

A SEVENTH CHILD

By the Author of
"The Soul of the Bishop,"
"Aunt Johnnie," "Only Human,"
"The Other Man's Wife," "My Geoff,"
"Red Coats," &c. (Second Edition.)
Cloth, 2s. 6d.

[At all Booksellers and Bookstalls.]

"Inventive fertility and constructive ingenuity are the chief characteristics of John Strange Winter's new novel... From first to last Nancy Keynard's quaint experiences are brightly and convincingly recounted."—DAILY TELEGRAPH.

II.

Mrs. ALEXANDER FRASER'S New Novel.

A MAYFAIR TRAGEDY. By the Author of "Daughters of Belshazzar," "A Modern Bride, groom," "The New Duchess," "She Came Between," &c.

3 vols., 15s. [At all Libraries.]

III.

New Edition of FLORENCE WARDEN'S Novel.

MY CHILD and I: a Woman's

Story. By the Author of "A Young Wife's Trial," "A Wild Woofing," "A Witch of the Hills," "A Scarborough Romance,"
&c. Cloth, 2s. 6d. [At all Booksellers and Bookstalls.]

IV.

New Edition of Mrs. LOVETT CAMERON'S Novel.

A TRAGIC BLUNDER. By the Author of "Jack's Secret," "A Sister's Sin," "Weak Woman,"

"In a Grass Country," &c. Cloth, 2s. 6d. [At all Booksellers and Bookstalls.]

V.

New Edition of Mrs. ALEXANDER'S Novel.

A WOMAN'S HEART. By the Author of "For His Sake," "Found Wanting," "Blind Fate,"

"By Woman's Wit," &c. In picture boards, 2s. [At all Booksellers and Bookstalls.]

VI.

New Edition of FLORENCE WARDEN'S Novel.

A YOUNG WIFE'S TRIAL; or,

Ralph Ryder of Brent. By the Author of "My Child and I,"
"A Woman's Face," "A Wilful Ward," "Grave Lady Jane," &c.
In picture boards, 2s. [At all Booksellers and Bookstalls.]

VII.

New Edition of Mrs. ROBERT JOCELYN'S Novel.

ONLY a HORSE-DEALER. By the Author of "The M.F.H.'s Daughter," "A Big Stake," "The Cotton Hunt Mystery," "For One Season Only," &c. (Third Edition.) In picture boards, 2s. [At all Booksellers and Bookstalls.]

VIII.

"RITA'S" New One-Volume Novel.

NAUGHTY MRS. GORDON: a

Romance of Society. By the Author of "Sheba," "The Countess Pharamond," "The Laird of Cockpen," "The Man in Possession," &c. In paper covers, 1s.; cloth, 1s. 6d. [At all Booksellers and Bookstalls.]

"The character drawing is very good... It is a pretty story and, like all 'Rita's' work, cannot be laid down when once begun."

"The story is smartly told."—Glasgow Herald. [Winter's Weekly.]

IX.

Mrs. ALEXANDER'S New Novel.

A CHOICE of EVILS. By the Author of "Found Wanting," "The Woofing o't," "Mona's Choice," "A Life Interest," &c. 3 vols., 15s. [Immediately.]

SERIAL TALES by Mrs. HENGERFORD (Author of "Molly
Bawn") and DARLEY DALE (Author of "The Village Blacksmith") are continued in the AUGUST NUMBER of "BELGRAVIA," price 1s.

[At all Newsagents, Booksellers, &c.]

SERIAL TALES by Mrs. LOVETT CAMERON and ANNIE THOMAS (Mrs. Pender Cudlip) are continued in the AUGUST NUMBER of "LONDON SOCIETY," price 1s. [At all Newsagents, Booksellers, &c.]

F. V. WHITE & CO.,
14, BEDFORD STREET, STRAND, W.C.

SATURDAY, AUGUST 18, 1894.

No. 1163, New Series.

THE EDITOR cannot undertake to return, or to correspond with the writers of, rejected manuscript.

It is particularly requested that all business letters regarding the supply of the paper, &c., may be addressed to the PUBLISHER, and not to the EDITOR.

LITERATURE.

Songs, Poems, and Verses, by Helen, Lady Dufferin. Edited, with a Memoir, &c., by her son, the Marquess of Dufferin and Ava. (John Murray.)

"A FOND desire to preserve the memory of those we love from oblivion is an almost universal sentiment, whether we build the tomb of Mausolus or carve the name of Rosalind on the forest trees in Arden." So begins the all too brief story of the life of Helen, Lady Dufferin, with which, in a happy hour, her son, the Marquess of Dufferin and Ava, was moved to illustrate and adorn the Songs, Poems, and occasional Verses of his mother, now for the first time—thanks to his pious diligence—rescued from a fugitive and precarious existence, and domiciled within the stable limits of this handsome volume.

Already during the lifetime of his widowed mother and erewhile sole guardian, had Lord Dufferin given proof of his desire to immortalise her name by erecting at the family seat of Clandeboyne, in the County Down, on a hill overlooking a lovely view of land and sea, a memorial tower of stone (fit emblem of her steadfast affections!) designed to hold the precious benedictory prayer which, on his coming of age, she had breathed out of a full heart over the child "beloved and longed-for, her joy and crown." Thus, though the volume now before us had never been projected, or though some obstacle had intervened to hinder its successful completion, yet had the world not wanted a brave witness to the mother's single-hearted devotion or the fervent gratitude of the son. But now, well-nigh thirty years after the death of her who was "Beauty, truth, and rarity, Grace in all simplicity"

incarnate—mindful how, sooner or later, "sad mortality o'ersways" every work of men's hands: mindful, too, of the proud boast of the poet—

"Not marble, nor the gilded monuments
Of princes, shall outlive the powerful rime—"

the builder of Helen's Tower has been led to collect and give to the world the ballad-poetry and other literary remains of his gifted mother, in the sure confidence that the book of her verses, once published, will be unanimously accorded a niche in the literature of the century, and thus become a "κτῆμα ἐς αἰὶν, an indestructible witness to the existence and individuality" of their adorable author.

Many of these pages sparkle and coruscate native wit, while others glow with the mellow light of a kindly humour; but neither in humour nor in wit will the distinctive note of Lady Dufferin's verse be found to consist. Beneath a sunny surface, of which the rippling laughter—like the wavelets raised by a ruffling breeze upon the water—serves but to hide the ungauged depths below, there lies (within her heart) a living, surging well-spring of sadness, which ever and anon forces its way upwards, finding expression in numbers of a melodious plangency. Herein the poetess shows herself a true daughter of the Celt. Love, trembling under the cold shadow of Fear; Happiness, dashed by the haunting presence of "veiled Melancholy"—such are the themes of her finest poetry, of the lines addressed from time to time to her son. In them she sings indeed of Joy; but it is of the "Joy, whose hand is ever at his lips, bidding adieu." And, as the mainspring and prime source of her Joy is in the satisfaction of her ardent affections—in the lavishing of her love on husband, son, and friends—even so for her Fear means the dreadful thought that "Time will come and take her love away"; and to her

"This thought is as a death, which cannot choose
But weep to have that which it fears to lose."

So much concerning the subject-matter of her verse. With regard to its artistic merits we gladly leave it to others to ply, if they will, the critical weights and scales, to set beauties in the balance against defects, and assign the authoress her proper rank in the hierarchy of the poets. One distinction even the most reluctant critic must perforce accord to her ballad-poetry—that of a universal popularity; and we may feel assured that no writer of verse has ever gained a world-wide reputation without some rare gift or fine achievement that, in due measure, answered to it. But, in truth, the most cursory acquaintance with her poetry suffices to show that Lady Dufferin was a born Singer, of music, emotion, and imagination all compact; and that the few pieces she has left behind her are but the natural overflow from the fountain of poetry ever welling up within her—the spontaneous and unlaboured product of a rich poetic soil which, had circumstances favoured its systematic cultivation, would assuredly have yielded a noble and abundant harvest.

The history of the Sheridans illustrates in a remarkable manner the uninterrupted regularity with which the same physical or intellectual traits are sometimes transmitted from parent to child through several successive generations. Up to the close of the sixteenth century the family had been one of affluence and importance in Ireland, possessing castles and lands in the County Cavan, of which, however, shortly before the death of Elizabeth, they had been deprived through oscheatal to the Crown. With Denis* Sheridan, son of Donald, who was born about the year 1600, the literary traditions of the Sheridans begin. He abjured the Roman Catholic faith and became an enthusiastic disciple of Bedell, Bishop of Kilmore, from whom he received holy orders in the Church of Ireland, and under whose supervision he translated the Authorised Version of the Scriptures into Irish. Of the sons of Denis, William, the eldest, succeeded Bedell in the See of Kilmore; another, Patrick, became Bishop of Cloyne; while Thomas, the third, became Privy Councillor and Secretary to the Government of Ireland under James II., from whom he received the honour of knighthood. In 1677 Sir Thomas brought out a work (recently republished), entitled The Rise and Power of Parliaments; and when, in 1688, he followed James into exile, he wrote a history of his times (now in the Royal Library at Windsor), which has won high praise both from Macaulay and from Sir James Mackintosh. Of the Bishops of Kilmore and Cloyne, the sole literary remains that have come down to us are sundry sermons and two volumes of discourses, now under the protection of that great power which is called Oblivion.

* Denis's sister Sarah was the grandmother of the gallant Sarsfield, Earl of Lucan, who, by his daring surprise of the English ammunition train, and his repulse of a desperate attempt to storm the walls, forced William III. to raise the siege of Limerick in 1690.

In Dr. Thomas Sheridan, son of Denis's fourth son James, the less commanding but more lovable qualities of the Sheridan stock first declare themselves. Eminent both as a teacher and as a scholar—he had adopted the profession of a schoolmaster—Thomas Sheridan was universally beloved for his lively wit and sweet gaiety, his kindness, simplicity, and utter ignorance of the world. Upon the gloomy soul of that hapless Titan, Dean Swift, in particular, the airy insouciance and mild, gracious tempor of the good Dominie invariably shed magic influence, exorcising, for the time, the evil spirit which so cruelly preyed upon him.

"Sheridan," writes Lord Dufferin, "used to pass months in Swift's house in Dublin, and Swift, in turn, was a continual guest at Quilcalgh, a country house which, with a small estate, had come into Sheridan's possession."

According to Lord Cork, "not a day passed that Thomas Sheridan did not make a rebus, an anagram, or a madrigal." An excellent example of his skill as a writer of vers d'occasion is the Description of Delville, Dr. Delany's villa at Glasnevin, outside Dublin (a place associated as closely as Quilcalgh with the memory of Swift), which the reader will find in Mr. Locker Lampson's Lyra Elegantiarum. Two metrical translations—one of the "Philoctetes," and the other of the Satires of Juvenal—survive to testify to Dr. Sheridan's excellent scholarship.

Thomas, son of the Dominie, and father of the famous statesman, orator, and playwright, Richard Brinsley Sheridan, was born in 1719, and in early life adopted the stage for a profession, "with the usual results," as Lord Dufferin sententiously observes. Later on, he devoted himself to the improvement of the existing system of education, receiving, in recognition of his efforts, honorary degrees from both Oxford and Cambridge. He wrote a play, and a Life of Swift, and was besides author of a general dictionary, as well as of several works on language and education. His wife, a grand-daughter of Sir Oliver Chamberlaine, was the first of a series of notable women who married into the Sheridan family, and contributed each her own quota to the common heritage of beauty and intellect.

"She was an exceptionally clever woman," writes Lord Dufferin; "and there can be little doubt it was from her that my great grandfather obtained the divine spark which converted the mere talents he may be supposed to have inherited from his father into the genius which made him famous."

Mrs. Sheridan wrote two novels, Sydney Biddulph and Nourjahad, both famous in their day; and two plays, "The Discovery" and "The Dupe."

"The Discovery" was one of Garrick's stock pieces, and Antony Brannville one of his favourite parts. Moore states that while "The Rivals" was running at Covent Garden, Garrick renewed "The Discovery" at Drury-lane, so that two pieces by the mother and the son were being acted at the same moment at the two great London theatres."

Lord Dufferin devotes several pages of his Introduction to a spirited and eloquent vindication of his great grandfather, Richard Brinsley Sheridan, from the petty carplings of that splenetic manikin, Tom Moore, as well as from the misrepresentations and exaggerations of Smyth's Memoir. Of the many splendid gifts of this great genius, of his fascinating manners and handsome countenance, of his brilliant wit and fervid eloquence, of his skill in debate and (last, but not least) his solid statesmanlike abilities, we can here do no more than make the briefest passing mention. Nor, much as we might have wished to do so, can we now pause to expatiate on the admirable talents, and no less admirable virtues, of his beautiful wife, Elizabeth Linley, whose praise Lord Dufferin celebrates in language of pregnant emphasis. Our limits warn us to hasten on to Thomas Sheridan, their son, who, while he inherited his father's intellectual brilliancy along with the charm and sweet disposition of his mother, yet seems to have been wholly indifferent to fame, and would, indeed, to-day be utterly unknown to letters but for the accidental preservation, among the Sheridan Correspondence at Frampton Court, of some fine stanzas from his pen on the loss of the Saldanha frigate in Lough Swilly (printed on pp. 256-260 of this volume). Thomas Sheridan married Caroline Henrietta, daughter of Col. Callander, of Craigforth, whose sister, Fanny, by her marriage with Sir James Graham, of Netherby, became the ancestress of a whole bevy of lovely women—the Duchesses of Leinster and Montrose, Viscountess Grimston, and (the late) Lady Houghton, Ladies Helen Vincent and Cynthia Graham. Mr. and Mrs. Thomas Sheridan enjoyed an enormous social popularity: his fascinating manners and graceful wit, when enhanced with her extraordinary beauty and intelligence, ensuring them a hearty welcome wherever they came. After some years of happy life in England, consumption declared itself in the husband, and the pair migrated to the Cape, where a small appointment had been bestowed on Thomas Sheridan, in the hope that the climate would restore him to health. There he died in 1817, leaving his wife with small means and a family of three daughters and four sons. On her return home, accompanied by her eldest daughter, Helen (the only one of her children she had taken out with her), the king assigned Mrs. Sheridan apartments in Hampton Court Palace, where she lived for the next thirty years, and where Helen Sheridan also lived uninterruptedly (save for a visit or two to Rossie Priory, the residence of Lord Kinnaird) until the event of her marriage, in her eighteenth year, with Commander Price Blackwood, R.N., afterwards fourth Baron Dufferin and Clandeboye.

More than one of their contemporaries have described in flowing language the marvellous beauty and resistless fascinations of the Weird Sisters, as they were called—Helen, Lady Dufferin, the Hon. Caroline Norton, and Georgina, Duchess of Somerset. The duchess, with her violet eyes, dark hair and eyelashes, regular features, and skin of privet-like whiteness, was held to be the most perfectly beautiful of the three women, while Mrs. Norton's "dark burning eyes" and fervid poetic temperament combined to create a more striking impression in society than that produced by either of her sisters. But for sheer force of womanly charm, for an enchanting union of vivacity, sweetness of disposition, and loveliness of face and figure, Lady Dufferin was unanimously pronounced the most remarkable of the three. Her son and biographer thus describes her (p. 35):

"My mother, though her features were less regular than those of her sisters, was equally lovely and attractive. Her figure was divine, the perfection of grace and symmetry, her head being beautifully set upon her shoulders. Her hands and feet were very small, many sculptors having asked to model the former. She had a pure, sweet voice. She sang delightfully, and herself composed many of the tunes to which both her published and her unpublished songs were set. . . . Though she never studied drawing, she had an intuitive aptitude both for figures and for landscape painting. . . . She wrote delightful letters, which she illustrated with the most amusing pen-and-ink scrawls and caricatures. She could not, indeed, put pen to paper without betraying the innocent gaiety of her disposition—a gaiety as tender as it was witty—for her very laughter was a caress. . . . She had mastered French before she was sixteen, as well as acquired some Latin. In after years she wrote in French as readily as in English, and she also mastered German. Her talent for versifying showed itself very early. . . . Before either of them was twenty-one, she and Mrs. Norton were paid £100 by a publisher for a collection of songs they contributed between them. She was also a wonderful reciter of poetry, especially of Shakspeare. As Mercutio, Benedick, Touchstone, and the Clowns, she was inimitable; but Falstaff was the part in which she signally excelled. . . . It was delicious to watch her playful, caressing way in singing or talking to children. [This trait came from her grandmother, Elizabeth Linley.] . . . I never knew anyone who seemed to derive such exquisite enjoyment as she did from the splendours of earth and heaven, from flowers, from the sunshine, or the song of birds. A beautiful view produced in her the same ecstasy as did lovely music. But the chief and dominant characteristic of her nature was her power of loving. . . . In her case, love seemed an inexhaustible force. Her love for her horse, for her dog, for her birds, was a passion; and the affection she lavished on her own mother, on me, on her brothers, sisters, relatives and friends, was as persistent, all-embracing, perennial, and indestructible as the light of the sun."

Many as were the sources of happiness within her reach, there yet fell to the lot of this tender-hearted woman a full share of our common heritage of sorrow. Two brief periods (1825-1831; and again, 1835-1841) of wedded happiness were hers, divided by an interval of four years, during which Captain Blackwood was away with his ship, the Imogene, on foreign service. Thus she had tasted of the bitterness of separation when the dire mischance befell which robbed her of a devoted husband, and left her, in her thirty-fourth year, sole guardian of her only child. With what brave singleness of heart she devoted herself to the task thus devolved upon her; how, for her son's sake, she more than once declined the offer of "a princely home, with all the advantages which wealth and the highest rank in the English peerage could add to the lustre of a beautiful woman's social position"—all this, and a hundred other instances of her noble unselfishness and lofty purity of motive, Lord Dufferin relates with a frank enthusiasm which, while it never oversteps the bounds of modesty and good taste, amply testifies to the delight he feels in paying this tribute of gratitude to her memory. Happily more than one opportunity was afforded him of repaying her, in some slight measure, for the sacrifices she had made on his behalf. Thus when, in December 1865, he received from Sir Charles Wood, the Secretary of State for India, the flattering offer of the Bombay Governorship—a tempting appointment for one who was not yet forty—he unhesitatingly declined it, since it would have involved a separation from his mother, whose weak health could never have stood the climate. And when in 1866, the cruel disease declared itself by which, on the thirteenth of June in the following year, her life was cut short, he was at hand to minister all that the tenderest devotion could afford of comfort and alleviation to her hapless plight, and stayed by her to the end, to receive, with her closing breath, her last whisper of love and benediction.

As we have said so little on the subject of Lady Dufferin's poetry, we must not close without giving our readers a sample of it. Her best verses are perhaps of too sacred and intimate a character to bear quotation; the following lines, however, may be regarded as a fair specimen of her plaintively musical style. They are addressed to her son, and were written in her forty-second year:

"How my heart follows thee where'er thou goest,
With tender searchings of thy distant lot,
Grudging the hours which elsewhere thou bestowest,
Though well I know that I am not forgot!"

"Is there not something wanting to thy being
When thou art glad, and I not at thy side?
As though the sun should shine with no one seeing,
A wasted glory, in a world too wide!"

"Methinks it should be so; for such a feeling
Visits my soul when lonely I remain,
My heart still leans on thine—for aid appealing
To bear its burden, be it joy or pain.

"Dost thou not miss me, when thy gaze enchanted Dwells on the scene which now thy vision bounds?

Methinks it should be so; for I am haunted
By thoughts of thee midst lovely sights and sounds.

"When I am reading, I would have thee near me
To share the brilliant thought, or graceful phrase;

Or if I sing—what matter who may hear me,
If I must miss thy fend, unlearned praise?

"See how thou steal'st the colour and the savor
From out my life when we apart must be!
And yet, thou know'st, 'I thank my God for ever,'

'For all remembrance,' my beloved, 'of thee.'"

T. HUTCHINSON.

"FUR AND FEATHER" SERIES.—The Grouse.
By the Rev. H. A. Macpherson, A. J.
Stuart-Wortley, and G. Saintsbury.
(Longmans.)

ENGLISHMEN may proudly cherish the boast that the grouse is the only bird peculiar to the British Isles. In itself it is beautiful and characteristic; while year by year it pours untold wealth into Scotland, and brings back health and freedom from cares to numberless jaded workers who delight in shooting it. It is closely allied to the Willow Grouse, which is a circum-polar and widely distributed form—indeed, advanced ornithological thinkers deem the grouse but an insular variation of this bird. However that may be, the fashion of grouse-shooting is quite modern. Frank, in his northern tour to catch salmon, says nothing of so common a bird as the moor-fowl. Captain Birt, in the middle of last century, just condescends to notice it. Lairds and their friends shot the bird on their estates with as little ceremony as they would shoot rabbits, until all at once, about 1830, it dawned upon men that the shootings could be let with considerable profit to their purses. Since that time the price of grouse mocks has always shown an upward tendency. For a few years, indeed, grouse disease somewhat daunted sportsmen. But diminution of disease at once brought back general demand. Charles St. John set the example of writing enthusiastically on the many charms of grouse-shooting. Wilson, Grimble, Speedy, Colquhoun, and many more swelled the chorus. Now the love of grouse-shooting is universal. It was time that the literature connected with the sport should be condensed into a volume, and the enterprise of Messrs. Longmans was equal to the occasion.

Grouse are found not merely on the mainland, but also on the outlying islands of Scotland, save that they cannot hold their own in the Shetlands. They are abundant in Derbyshire and Yorkshire, and penetrate into South Wales. Mr. Macpherson writes agreeably of their natural history. He shows that a few imported to Sandringham lead a precarious existence, and the same may be said at present of attempts to naturalise the bird in Sweden and East Friesland. As a pet the grouse is very bold and amusing. Besides damp and old heather, predatory birds, stoats and the like are its enemies. The "hoodie crow" is perhaps the worst of its foes, and does much destruction among the eggs. Two types of plumage may be observed, says Mr. Macpherson, black and red, which are especially noticeable among the cock birds. Most persons who have been on the moors have witnessed the old birds' tricks to lure man from their young.

The shooting of the grouse could not have been entrusted to more capable hands than those of Mr. Stuart-Wortley. His hints are well worth pondering. After an excellent chapter on the journey north—which, good as it is in its references to the many problems connected with housing and feeding the poor of great cities, is hardly in place in an avowedly sporting manual—he takes the two modes of shooting separately, over dogs and by driving. "The science of making a good bag," he says, "is in windy weather entirely a question of the constant study and observation of the wind." Such maxims as this are set off with a scholarly style and an appreciation of Nature which should prove irresistible to his readers, and certainly bring out the nobler aspects of the sport. The following is worth quoting as an illustration:

"It is when the breeze is cool and keen, the heather wet from last night's rain, or glistening from a slight touch of early frost; when the distant range stands like Scroate, toweringly white with snow; when the burns run brown and full, the oats are ripened, and the hill-face is growing redder and more golden, when the river trout are stiff to rise, and the black cock has almost his full tail—then is the time when to follow a brace of good dogs, both you and they in first-rate trim, and to make a bag of grouse is worth the doing."

Such passages, which show how the beauty of Scotland has been assimilated by the sportsman, are frequent in Mr. Stuart-Wortley's contributions to this volume, proving that mere butchery is the last thing the grouse shooter recks of, compared with the many delightful accompaniments of the sport. Grouse driving, both in England and Scotland, is treated in the same appreciative manner. The subject is too technical for these pages, but the fullest details will be found, with diagrams, in The Grouse. As the sportsman who has made the largest bag on record, Mr. Stuart-Wortley is well able to discriminate between the pleasures of shooting grouse over dogs, as of old, or of despatching them more scientifically from mantlets, as pleases the present race of shooters. Undoubtedly more shooting and more difficult shots are obtained in the latter method. Whether the poetry of the sport is so subtly enjoyed by driving grouse is another question. Sentiment, it seems, then gives way to excitement.

Mr. Saintsbury is quite at home with the cookery of the grouse. Probably all Englishmen prefer the bird simply roasted with an accompaniment of French beans and some red wine; but here, as ever, de gustibus, and Mr. Saintsbury is faithful to the maxim, and shows that he has the making of a distinguished chef. It is whispered that there are benighted regions of Scotland where grouse is served with melted butter. Mentor here pours out the vials of astonishment and horror on the cook and the cook's master who could perpetrate such a bêtise. Soup à la Meg Merrilies sounds commendable, while cold grouse accompanying salad and grouse pies would not have displeased Apicius. Soyer is probably correct in his dictum that "art cannot improve grouse." Probably a good Scotch appetite is the best sauce; and they who have first shot the birds on windy hill and winding moor are the last persons to care for queuelles, kromeskis, croquettes, salpicons, or bouchées of grouse. Hints, however, for these and other recondite forms of cookery will be found in Mr. Saintsbury's pleasant chapter.

The illustrations form a principal attraction in the "Fur and Feather" Series. In The Grouse they are due to the skilful pencils of Mr. Stuart-Wortley and Mr. A. Thorburn. The vignette of the stricken grouse is touching in its fidelity to nature; while the landscapes in "Old Grouse on the Tops" and "The Loch before Dark" are so beautiful and so full of the witchery of Scotland that they strongly tempt a stay-at-home man to throw down his books and be off by the evening mail to the North. The whole book is a treat to the naturalist as well as the sportsman. No lodge in Scotland can possibly be without it. It will at once settle those endless questions which always arise there on the habits of the grouse and the best way to shoot and to eat it.

M. G. WATKINS.

A FRENCH HISTORY OF SUSSEX.

West Grinstead et Les Caryl: Étude Historique et Religieuse sur le Conté de Sussex en Angleterre. Par Max de Trenqualéon. In 2 vols. (Paris: Torrè; London: Burns & Oates.)

THIS work, from its unique character, may almost be described as a literary curiosity. Two volumes, containing over nine hundred pages of letterpress, are devoted to describing in French the history of part of an English county and the fortunes of an English family. We know of nothing like this in the range of topographical literature. There are, indeed, some few important British families—the Courtenays, the Grants, and the Montmorencys, for example—whose annals have been written in the French language; but we do not know of a single instance of a foreigner taking in hand to delineate the physical features and historical antiquities of even a fragment of old England. M. de Trenqualéon and his friend M. Dénis may, therefore, be congratulated upon having achieved a work hitherto unattempted. And the achievement has certainly not been unsuccessful. The authors, of course, have found much difficulty in English names and titles, and present them sometimes to our notice in eccentric disguises; but we are prepared for blunders in this department, and only complain that there is want of consistency in them, which is suggestive of carelessness or ineradicable defect of vision.

The main objects of the book are—primarily and emphatically—to draw attention to the continuity of the Roman Catholic faith in Sussex; and, secondly, to make public the history of the Caryll family and the letters of various members of it which are now deposited in the British Museum. It is asserted that

"dans le district de West Grinstead autrefois paroisse catholique et maintenant simple mission, la Religion Catholique avait toujours existé parce que des prêtres fidèles, protégés par une puissante famille, aiment conservé son culte."

The powerful family is, we presume, the house of Norfolk, under whose auspices much has been done of late years not only at Arundel but also in other parts of Sussex and the adjoining counties—"the West Grinstead mission" comprehending all the country between the towns of Lewes, Dorking, and Havant. But it is in West Grinstead itself and its immediate neighbourhood that the old faith has its stronghold, and perhaps the most prominent feature in the Wealden landscape at the present day is the tall spire which rises above the Carthusian monastery at Cowfold.

M. de Trenqualéon begins at the beginning. We have Sussex before the Roman Conquest—a region almost inaccessible (owing to its vast forests) from any quarter except the seaboard. Then follows an account of the conversion of the South Saxons to Christianity. Bosham, Selsey, and Chichester—the three successive centres of the new religion—are adequately treated, and all the early bishops of the diocese are noticed at some length. Large space is given to the history of the baronial family of Braose, with their castles at Bramber and Knepr, and their endowment of churches and religious houses. What the Church in Sussex owed to the influence of this powerful family is traced with much clearness; and, although the information is not drawn from any new sources, but in the main from Dallaway's well-known history, the mode of treatment is novel and calculated to excite interest, nor is there any trace of religious bitterness in the language employed. Dallaway, of course, is not always to be trusted; and M. de Trenqualéon does not seem to have fallen in with Prebendary Stephens's far more accurate histories of the diocese, or he has perhaps found it too difficult to adjust their presentment of facts to his own point of view. The French writer's object is, as we have said, to show that the continuity of the old faith in Sussex was not broken by "the schism of Henry VIII.": while one purpose of the English writer is to show that the new faith is essentially the old faith, divested only of certain objectionable accretions.

The chapter devoted to an account of the parishes within the West Grinstead Mission is interesting and entertaining. The writer is charmed with the country villages and their ancient churches and quaint buildings, rich in memories of the past. He has even a good word to say of Worthing—the dullest of watering-places:

"Moins brillante que Brighton, moins sévère que Chichester, cette ville est peuplée de familles qui demandent au voisinage de la mer des loisirs agréables, un air salubre, une vie tranquille et confortable, une compagnie distinguée."

Generally, his remarks are the result of careful observation, but now and then we are surprised and amused by the errors into which the writer falls. Thus, he speaks with enthusiasm of the "superb church" of Horsham, "avec sa haute flèche de pierre qui domine l'horizon." But the peculiarity of the spire is that it is of wood and not of stone, and is covered with the oaken tiles known locally by the name of "shingles." Is it possible that M. de Trenqualéon is acquainted with only one meaning of this word: namely, that connected with the sea-beach?

The whole of the second volume, and a small portion of the first, is occupied with a history of the Caryll family and a translation of their letters. The author confesses that the pedigree has puzzled him—"car il y a neuf John Caryll's tour à tour chefs de la même famille"—and that he has consulted in vain the genealogical works of "Burke, Cook (?), Collins, and others." Had he come across Mr. Elwes's history of The Castles of Western Sussex, he would there have found the Caryll pedigree set forth in great fulness. The family rose to some local importance at the close of the fifteenth century, its fortunes having been largely augmented by John Caryll of Warnham, who was king's serjeant in 1514. His grandson, Sir John Caryll, was knighted by Queen Elizabeth, and contributed £100 towards the defence of his county against the Armada. There can be no doubt that he was an adherent of the Reformed faith; but two generations later we find John Caryll of Warnham compounding for his estates by payment of the largest sum levied on any Sussex landowner, and his descendants became strong supporters of the Roman Catholic interests in the county. The eldest son followed James II. into exile, and was created a titular peer by the grateful monarch. In this barren and unrecognised honour he was succeeded by his nephew, another John Caryll, who lived chiefly at West Grinstead and Lady Holt Parks—both in the county of Sussex. Pope was an occasional visitor at both houses, and it was at the former that the incident occurred which suggested to the poet "The Rape of the Lock." John Caryll, before acceding to Pope's request for a return of the letters he had received from him, made copies of them, and these are what M. de Trenqualéon has translated. Of course they are in their French dress as charming as ever, though they disclose the fact that the poet was a terrible self-plagiarist, and made his seemingly artless and spontaneous expressions serve his purpose with more correspondents than one.

It would be as easy as it would be ungracious to point out the numerous errors of detail into which M. de Trenqualéon has fallen—they are indeed abundant. We prefer rather to dwell upon the originality of his literary enterprise, and the service he has rendered in making his countrymen better acquainted with rural England, its charms and its historical memories.

CHARLES J. ROBINSON.

TWO BOOKS ON THE WELSH LANGUAGE.

Picture of Wales during the Tudor Period.

By J. Birkbeck Nevins, M.D. (Liverpool: Howell.)

Welsh Orthography. (Carnarvon: Welsh National Press.)

THERE is a closer connexion than at first appears between Dr. Nevins's picture of Tudor Wales and the interesting report on Welsh Orthography here coupled with it. It was the golden memory of Salesbury and Bishop Morgan, celebrated at St. Asaph last year, that suggested to Dr. Birkbeck Nevins his short study in Welsh history. His little work is thus in some sort a tribute to the first famous Welsh Bible of 1588; and, considerations of religion apart, the purely secular value of the Bible, as a prop of national literature and language, has been even more marked in Wales than in England, which is saying a great deal. The Welsh Bible, and the Welsh Bardic tradition with its Cynghanedd and other severities of prosody (and Welsh prosody, we may be reminded here, is the most complex and intricate in the world), have together acted as the guardians of Welsh orthography in a remarkable degree. The very evils of the Bardic practice of verse, as we shall see, helped to keep Welsh words intact; and for the Bible, whose art of prose had no such factitious restraints, one can hardly say enough in praise of its literary uses and influence.

But to turn to its translators, Bishop Morgan of St. Asaph is so typical a figure, that one could wish to sketch his history in some detail. But a few words must suffice here. Like so many others of his countrymen who have done great things for their native Wales, he was the son of a small farmer, very poor, living at Penmachno, near Llanrwst. According to a passage quoted by Dr. Nevins from Sir John Wynn's History of the Gwydir Family, he and his family were "hereditary bondsmen and servants of the Gwydir family, and he was brought up in learning (as a boy) at Gwydir"—a curious testimony to the lingering serfdom of Wales at that period. From Gwydir young Morgan was, fortunately, sent on by his patrons to Cambridge as a sizar. Dr. Hughes, yet another potential Bishop of St. Asaph, gave him the idea of translating the Bible into Welsh. He set to work on the Old Testament forthwith, following up Salesbury's historical New Testament, which appeared in 1567. The great difference between the two translators and their style lies in Morgan's superior knowledge of colloquial and idiomatic Welsh. Indeed, one cannot regret that a characteristic translator's quarrel over a disputed Hebrew root prevented Salesbury and his collaborator, Bishop Davies, from completing the Old Testament too, which thus fell into Morgan's hands.

Some of Morgan's journeys to and from his Welsh vicarages, when his work compelled him to Lambeth, might afford much curious matter for unconventional history. In fact, his life presents a delightful alternation of scholarship and adventure. He is now on the road, in the convoy of a company of drovers, his precious MS.

secreted in his travelling cloak; and now the guest of Gabriel Goodman, Dean of Westminster, while his Bible is being printed in "Paule's-square." Many pleasant glimpses of these things are to be had in Dr. Nevins's pages; and if their total effect is rather that of a preliminary sketch than of a completed picture of men and events in Tudor Wales, the sketch is more suggestive perhaps as it stands.

Again, if Dr. Nevins lays rather much stress upon the attenuated condition of the Welsh vernacular, before it was revived by the stimulus of Morgan's Bible, he only follows the ecclesiastical historians in this. "Morgan," he says, "found it a congeries of dialects and spellings, and left it a language"; which is a striking, if a rather highly coloured, way of putting it. His enthusiasm may seem to colour his statement, too, of the continuing effects, during the past three centuries, of Morgan's work; but no one who knows Wales intimately can doubt that he is correct in the main. In that period, the folk and place-lore, the abounding traditions, the endless wealth of poetic and heroic association, have little by little been exchanged away—with some gain to religion, but with a melancholy loss to the national sentiment and imagination—for names imported from biblical history. Thus it comes, no doubt, that Salems and Bethesdas abound in Wales, but the graves of Dafydd ap Gwilym and Owain Glyndwr are unknown.

In philology, as we have said, the Welsh Bible was, fortunately, only a safeguard. In the report of the Society for Utilising the Welsh Language, now before us, which seeks to establish a reasonable working standard of Welsh orthography, both Salesbury and Morgan are cited in the summary of literary instances, as well as Taliesin and Aneurin. Generally, one finds the usual forms confirmed; and often the old spelling of Morgan's Bible of 1588, or even of the Black Book of Carmarthen, dating three centuries further back, remains the same. The council have steadily avoided innovations. There is no question at all, they tell us, of a "new orthography"; and they consistently prefer "traditional, national, and phonetic modes of spelling" to those based on individual or foreign example. Of individual would-be reformers, whose efforts they have had to counteract, the most notable is Dr. Owen Pughe, whose masterpiece—his great dictionary—is sadly marred by his over-ingenuity and passion for reform. To Dr. Pughe, they remind us, is due in great part "the orthographical chaos which embitters the existence of the modern Welsh printer." He turned i's into y's, t's into d's, and so forth, with immense diligence, and with such effect that it will take several generations of lexicographers to put right what he so ingeniously put wrong.

In some few instances, possibly, we might like to question the form of word used or recommended in the report. There is Taliesin for example, which they give us instead of Taliesin; many of us cannot fail to stumble over that extra s! Dafydd ap Gwilym becomes now Dafydd ap Gwilym, under their rule and guidance; and much doctrine lies in that simple change from b to p, which has good warranty for it. Old habit, we are glad to see, however, is too much for even these word-doctors, for on p. 22 they slip in the narrow space of seven lines from D. ap G. to D. ab G. Such slips may do something to comfort the inept layman in his infirmity.

It is significant, we might add in conclusion, that this handbook of Welsh orthography is issued by the Welsh National Press, which is doing work that it would be hard to over-estimate for the cause of Welsh language and literature. Two of its magazines, Cymru and Cymru'r Plant, in particular, which are edited by one of the committee who prepared the present report (Mr. Owen M. Edwards, of Lincoln College, Oxford), are performing month by month admirable service, not only in maintaining the literary standards of Salesbury and Morgan, but in restoring, too, something of that national lore and poetic and historic tradition which of past years have been allowed to go by default.

ERNEST RHYS.

NEW NOVELS.

A Precious Scamp. By Henry Cresswell. In 3 vols. (Hutchinson.)

Victims of Fashion. By A. M. Grange. In 2 vols. (Bentley.)

A Baireuth Pilgrimage. By Edith E. Cuthell. In 2 vols. (Sampson Low.)

Miss Precocity. By Charles C. T. James. In 2 vols. (Bliss, Sands & Foster.)

Major Joshua. By Francis Forster. (Longmans.)

Keith Kavanagh. By E. B. Hodge. (Digby, Long & Co.)

A Bachelor's Bridal. By Mrs. Lovett Cameron. (White.)

Mad or Married? By Hugh Coleman Davidson. (Drane.)

READERS of A Precious Scamp will, perhaps, find difficulty in satisfying themselves as to which of two characters in the book Mr. Cresswell meant his title to refer to. Mr. Fred Yardley, finding that the splendid city business bequeathed to him by his father is, owing to his own incompetence, fast dwindling away, commissions Harry Bethel, his confidential clerk, to open for him an account in a fictitious name at a Paris bank, and to deposit therein all the remittances that come to hand in London previous to the bankruptcy that now looms in the near distance. He hopes in this way not only to provide himself with a private fund which will render him comfortable when the crash comes, but also to reduce to beggary his mother and sisters, whose annual charges upon the business, under the terms of their father's will, have long been viewed by this admirable son and brother as an intolerable nuisance and a gross piece of injustice. Unfortunately for the success of one at least of his plans, he meets his match in Harry Bethel, who contrives to appropriate the whole of the spoil and get clear away with it, while his luckless employer suffers five years penal servitude for fraudulent bankruptcy. Here we have two undoubted scamps. The prominence given to Harry Bethel's career throughout the book inclines one to the belief that it is he who is designated by its title; but, as the man's motive was to enrich not himself but his brother, it is hardly in human nature not to feel a sneaking satisfaction that the shrewder and cleverer, and, above all, the more generous-hearted, of the rogues secured the booty and escaped, in preference to a man whose ignorance and conceit ensured from the first the ultimate downfall of his business, to say nothing of other unamiable traits of character. The details of the story are told by Mr. Cresswell with marvellously graphic power, though they are not of a nature to please a very large number of readers. Those who do not regard the minutiae of mercantile life as a topic of absorbing interest will find it hard to peruse two introductory volumes unrelieved by any element of romance. However, there is enough of romance in the third volume to make up for previous shortcomings, and if the tale does not end exactly as everyone would wish, it certainly cannot be said that poetic justice is not meted out to the various characters. Mr. Cresswell's style is crisp and effective, full of satire and dry humour; and these qualities alone make the book worth reading.

Although the plot of Victims of Fashion is far from being original, the story exhibits many novelties of conception, and is throughout a masterly satire upon the meannesses, the ignoble aims and rivalries, and the insincerities of fashionable life. Aurelia Wilmer and her brother, Horace N. Wilmer, two wealthy young Americans, come over to England, in pursuance of a desire expressed by their father on his death-bed, with the object of launching themselves upon London society. They secure for the sister the chaperonage of a titled lady, who agrees for a consideration to introduce them to circles of the highest distinction; and being a handsome and fairly accomplished pair they rapidly spring into notice and might have achieved complete success, but for the untimely disclosure—made by Miss Sadie Jinks, a young compatriot—that they are by birth illegitimate, and, moreover, possess a pronounced strain of black blood. Even as it is, Horace has secured the hand of Lady Margaret Brockle, a middle-aged heiress; and, in the absence of the Yankee girl and her inconvenient testimony, Aurelia might have been united to Viscount Castlerack. There is an amusing deus ex machina in the shape of Joscelyn Crawford, a homely-bred Yankee and former lover of Aurelia, who rescues the latter from her predicaments at the last. Mr. Grange writes with a good deal of spirit and humour, and has produced an excellent book.

It is not given to all of us to be rapturous worshippers at music's shrine; and still more select is that, no doubt, pure and apostolical part of the religion whose chief prophet is Wagner. It is only the latter division who are likely to peruse with much patience the pages of A Baireuth Pilgrimage. Mrs.

Urmston, a fashionable English widow, has a young heiress, Lady Betty Braintree, left in her charge, and, in order to keep her out of the way of the ineligible Captain Jack Hammond, consents to accompany the girl, who is a musical enthusiast, to a Wagnerian festival at Bairoth. Here Jack Hammond very naturally turns up, and, though belonging to the class who are unable to tell "God Save the Queen" from "Yankee Doodle," devoutly attends the performances in the train of his divinity, and entirely upsets the plans and calculations of her chaperone. The latter, meanwhile, allows herself to indulge in some highly sentimental maundering with Halmar Yri, a Norwegian violinist, and in a rapturous moment, at the conclusion of the last operatic performance, is betrayed into an avowal of her passion, only to be confronted on leaving the building with the spectacle of his blowsy little German fiancé, who has unexpectedly arrived on the scene with her mother in search of him. This is rather a neat anticlimax, and is the only really amusing incident of the book, though scarcely entertaining enough to compensate for chapter after chapter of exaggerated laudation of the composer, who, we are told somewhere, is "Shakspeare, Beethoven, Plato, Raphael, all in one." The writer has a tolerable fund of mild pleasantries of the kind dear to young ladies; on the other hand, an analysis in extenso, accompanied by a running fire of admiring comments, of three entire music-dramas, together with sufficient topographical description to constitute a tolerably complete guide to Bairoth and its neighbourhood, is not likely to give universal satisfaction as the main subject-matter of a two-volume novel.

Miss Precocity cannot be regarded seriously as a novel. It is a laborious attempt to carry a piece of extravagance through a story of some five hundred or more pages, and though there is a large class of sweetly simple-minded persons who will declare the whole narrative to be a delightful and a charming one, it is, as a work of art, preposterous. Miss Dorothea Marston has had a spendthrift and dissipated father, whose intemperate habits have brought him to the grave. From the first dawn of her intelligence the child has been associated with squalor and poverty, with debt, duns, and drunkenness; she has had no associates but the gutter-children, and no education except of the most elementary kind. Yet when her father dies at the moment of succeeding to a baronetcy, and by his will directs that his daughter Dorothy, though not yet nine years old, shall succeed at once to the management of the family mansion and estate, and be treated in all respects as a responsible person, we are asked to believe that this extraordinary little specimen of humanity steps forward into her new position, not only uncontaminated by the vicious influences that have always surrounded her, but completely equipped with a savoir faire and a readiness of speech and address not always possessed even by elderly matrons to the manner born. The author evidently feels the absurdity of the position, when he tries to introduce some childlike elements into the character of his heroine—if she can be dignified with such a title—and makes the situation more ridiculous still by portraying elementary love passages between this child of nine and a shock-headed little scamp, son of the vicar of the parish. The early surroundings of Dorothy remind one at once of Becky Sharpe's childish experiences, and tempt one to compare with Mr. James's performance the treatment which Thackeray would have accorded to the subject. The subsidiary characters of the story afford no better indications of creative power on the part of the writer.

Major Joshua Robinson, who gives his name to Francis Forster's novel, is a study in Epicureanism—as the word is popularly understood—not by any means badly conceived and delineated. For the rest, Major Joshua depends upon an idea rather strange and fantastic, not to say improbable. Mrs. Fenwick is a woman who has devotedly loved a heartless husband, who, though not leaving her in poverty, abandoned her and went away to spend the rest of his life voluptuously in Paris. The deserted woman, conscious of her own disinterested devotion and the misery that has resulted to her, and recognising with amazement the happiness apparently enjoyed by her husband, concludes that the only true happiness must consist in self-gratification, and proceeds to act upon this theory in the education of her two daughters, teaching them no elements of religion or morality, but simply instilling into them the easy art of living to please themselves in everything. So far as one can accept with credulity the result, as depicted by the author, of ten or twelve years of this strange method of education, the story seems worked out with considerable skill and a due regard for dramatic effect.

What is a "remittancer"? Readers of Keith Kavanagh are informed that it is an Australian name given to a good-for-nothing emigrant from the Old Country, who fails to succeed in his new sphere of labour, and depends upon remittances from home for his means of living. Of this sort is Keith Kavanagh, younger son of a good old English family, an extravagant sot, who has further ruined his prospects by a marriage with a woman of doubtful fame and a drunkard. To rid him of her influence, the family send him to Australia, where he deliberately goes through a form of marriage with the daughter of a wealthy landowner, and, when the original wife follows him up and appears upon the scene, he apparently gets rid of the obnoxious intruder by poison. That a creature like this should live to succeed to the family estates in England is hardly a satisfactory conclusion.

A Bachelor's Bridal is well written, and contains some fresh incidents. A London solicitor has unwittingly found favour in the eyes of the ward of one of his country clients. To escape the avaricious schemes of her guardian, the young lady flies to London, and by appearing in his chambers late at night compromises her reputation to such an extent that the lawyer feels himself bound in honour to marry her. Immediately after the ceremony the young wife is despatched into the country to lead a solitary life in a mansion her husband has provided for her, a proceeding utterly inexplicable to the doting bride. The interest is sustained throughout, but the ending is unnecessarily tragic.

The scene of Mad or Married? is laid in the Isle of Man. A good deal of constructive ingenuity is displayed in the details of the story; but as the plot involves the occurrence of certain phenomena of clairvoyance, the possibility of which is not yet amenable to proof, it scarcely falls within the range of our criticism.

JOHN BARROW ALLEN.

CURRENT THEOLOGY.

The New Bible and Its Uses. By Joseph Henry Crooker. (Boston: George H. Ellis.) This is a valuable work, which deserves the attention of teachers, though it may be too outspoken to be suitable for ordinary Church readers. For while there is possibly a pretty general agreement upon most of the points here so lucidly treated, yet there are, as yet, very few, even among fairly educated teachers, who could bring themselves to accept Mr. Crooker's statement of results of New Testament study without much qualification. On Old Testament matters the case is happily different. It will be generally admitted that Mr. Crooker is not only well-informed, but puts results in a very moderate and popular way. The author is, however, always worth listening to, and not easily to be refuted. That the new Bible is better than the old, and that its new uses are of the utmost importance for those who are at all in sympathy with modern thought, is undeniable. The criticism applied to the views of Prof. Wendt (now of Jena) and Prof. Briggs (of Union Seminary, New York) is a specially interesting feature of the work. Had the latter only been referred to, the book would have been accused of provincialism. But Wendt's original and instructive book on the Teaching of Jesus has become so thoroughly naturalised in all the countries where critical theology exists, that simply to have criticised it with insight should commend Mr. Crooker's little book to the respect of scholars. The closing sentence of the work runs as follows:—

"Our chief anxiety should be to use the Bible for increase of inner life, never as a cloud to darken the dayspring, and never as an authority to stop inquiry; but as an aid to our own spirit to make more audible and persuasive the voice of the living God, in whom we, as well as Isaiah and Paul, live, move, and have our being."

There is a very inadequate appendix on Contradictions in the Gospels, which will, we hope, be enlarged in the second edition. On such subjects it is important to make new views as easily intelligible as possible, which cannot be done in a few pages.

Individual- und Gemeindepalmen. Ein Beitrag zur Erklärung des Psalters. Von Lic. Dr. Georg Beer. (Marburg: Elwert.) The impulse to the composition of this thoughtful work proceeded, the author tells us, from his teacher, Prof. Dillmann, who, but a few days before these lines were written, passed away. We may then ascribe to Dillmann the credit of having so taught his pupil as not to check the free exercise of the critical faculty. The work consists of two parts, a general and a special. In the former such preliminary questions are considered as the use of the Psalter in the public and private worship of the post-Exilic Jews and the early Christians, the origin and composition of the Psalter, and the age of the several Psalms, beginning with the latest of the larger collections (Books IV. and V., i.e., Ps. xc.-cl.), and within each collection grouping those Psalms which in style and subject resemble each other. There is also an interesting study of the impulses which produce lyric poetry in general, and of the poetical style of the Psalms in particular, and a descriptive survey of the views which have been held as to the speaker of the Psalms. This first part, however, was completed after the second part. It supplies, indeed, its basis; but, as it stands, it presupposes the special results of the sequel. Hence a different pagination is given to the respective parts. The book is freshly written, and refers to all the most important recent works on the Psalter. It is marked by a willingness to give as much credit as possible to each of the author's predecessors, mentioning with special frequency Smend, Cheyne, and Baethgen. Evidently there is much more agreement among careful critics of the Psalter than many English writers and theological reviewers are aware. It may be that Smend was originally somewhat incautious in his exposition of the theory with which his own name is so honourably connected; it is at any rate unbecoming for critics who came after him and owe so much to him to make the most of this incaution. And earnest as some writers still are in maintaining a pre-Exilic and even Davidic element in the Psalter, yet no one has as yet been able to give truly critical arguments of much cogency in support of the pre-Exilic or Davidic character of any particular passage. Many interesting suggestions might be quoted from this new critic, who sees more clearly and expresses himself with more terseness than some otherwise meritorious Biblical scholars. It may be noticed that he adopts Wellhausen's correction—שִׁירוֹת for שִׁירוֹת in Am. viii. 3. This tends to show that there was a special class of female singers in the pre-Exilic temples, and Neh. vii. 44 (= Ezra ii. 41) suggests that there were also male singers; but the probability still remains that, in refinement, the singing in the pre-Exilic temple of Jerusalem fell behind that in the houses of the rich and noble: conservatism needed the wholesome shock of the catastrophe of the Captivity. Among the Psalms which are best illustrated by our author may be mentioned Psalms xc. (p. 41), li. (pp. 48-50), and cx. (p. 79). Psalm xc., it is shown, can at earliest have been composed in the last decade of the Persian rule. In Psalm li. the speaker is said to be the "servant of Jehovah" (see 2 Isaiah). The "blood" in li. 16 is the "blood-guiltiness" which rests on Israel. It would have been well, however, to refer on this point to the studies of Psalm li. in Cheyne's Aids to the Study of Criticism (1892), which have, it is true, been overlooked by some scholars, but which on certain points are fuller than the comments in the German and English works referred to by Dr. Beer.

August Kayser's Theologie des Alten Testaments. Zweite Auflage, neu bearbeitet von Lic. Karl Marti. (Strasbourg: Friedrich Bull). To most of those who knew and appreciated on its first appearance the late Prof. Kayser's able work on "The Pre-Exilic Book of Israel's Origins and its Expansions," the same writer's posthumous "Old Testament Theology" was probably a disappointment. No doubt, had the author lived, he would have given the manuscript of his lectures on this important subject many a correction and improvement. Would he have approved of the recast which the work has received from the hand of a young Swiss scholar, Karl Marti? The question is one which only those can answer who knew Kayser personally. From a student's point of view, all that is important is that the same historical spirit and the same conciseness and simplicity which distinguished the original work should characterise the new edition. So far as the present writer can judge from a first examination, these expectations are fully realised. That the individuality of the editor should be strongly visible is only natural. Queries will be noted here and there by the careful reader, who would gladly have heard the editor at greater length on disputable points (e.g., on his grammatical interpretation of a phrase in Isa. xlii. 6, at p. 151). In two important respects the book marks an advance even on Smend's recent admirable work: viz., in the full use made of archaeology, and in the inclusion of post-Maccabaean writings. In the treatment of the prophetic literature, Karl Marti is "advanced"; nor can we blame him. Even at the risk of error and inconsistency, it is absolutely necessary to begin to adapt our treatment of the Old Testament religious ideas to the new results of the criticism of the prophets. More has been done, and more is being done, in the higher criticism of the prophets than is at all convenient for easing-loving theologians. Criticism of details would be premature, but we may express surprise that the accomplished editor should confine his references on Egyptian religion to Renouf's excellent but imperfectly critical Hibbert Lectures.

A FIFTH edition of Prof. Driver's Introduction to the Old Testament Literature (Edinburgh: T. & T. Clark) has reached us. Besides such minor corrections as could be introduced into the stereotype plates, it contains an appendix of twenty pages, in which many recent books and articles are referred to under the headings of the several Books, and a good deal of very useful supplementary information is given. There are, probably, few omissions of importance in the bibliography. Hackmann's Die Zukunftserwartung des Jesaja (1893), Beer's Individual- und Gemeindepsalmen, and Koster's Het Herstel van Israël in het Perzisch Tijdvak, the two latter of which appeared in the spring of the present year, may require to be added; the last in particular cannot safely be passed over by students of the post-Exilic period of Jewish literature and history. For criticism there was, of course, not much space in so condensed an appendix. B. W. Bacon's works on the analysis of the Hexateuch are much referred to, nor can Prof. Sayce complain of insufficient attention. It is strange, however, that a public which shows so keen a desire for instruction should not ask for a complete translation of Kuenen's Onderzoek. The signs of progress in the present edition of the Introduction towards a somewhat firmer and more complete criticism of the Old Testament intensify our regret that the acknowledged master of a firm but cautious criticism should be still practically unknown to the mass of even well-educated students.

NOTES AND NEWS.

A BIOGRAPHY of the late Sir Samuel Baker is being prepared by his executors, Mr. T. Douglas Murray and Mr. Silva White. Mr. Murray will be indebted to any one holding letters from Sir Samuel, if they will communicate with him at the address of his publishers—Messrs. Macmillan & Co., Bedford-street, Strand.

THE volume on Archery in the "Badminton Library" will be published in the course of next month. It is written by Mr. C. J. Longman and Col. H. Walrond; and will also include contributions from Miss Legh, Viscount Dillon, Major C. Hawkins Fisher, the Rev.

Eyre W. Hussey, &c. Like the other volumes of the series, it will be abundantly illustrated.

MR. JOHN MURRAY announces for publication in the autumn a volume of Roman Gossip, by Mrs. Minto Elliot, dealing with such subjects as Pio Nono, Cardinal Antonelli, Il Re Galantuomo, Garibaldi, and the Roman Buonapartes.

THE second volume of Social England, edited by Mr. H. D. Traill, will be published by Messrs. Cassell & Co. on September 1, and will be issued simultaneously in America. The book will contain the history of the period from the accession of Edward I. to the death of Henry VII., and amongst the contributors will be:—C. Raymond Beazley, the Rev. H. E. D. Blakiston, W. Laird Clowes, W. J. Corbett, Dr. C. Creighton, E. Gordon Duff, Owen M. Edwards, C. R. L. Fletcher, Hubert Hall, A. H. Hassall, H. Frank Heath, Reginald Hughes, the Rev. W. H. Hutton, Prof. F. W. Maitland, C. Oman, Reginald L. Poole, W. S. Rockstro, A. L. Smith, R. Steele, and Prof. J. E. Symes.

ARRANGEMENTS have just been completed for an English edition of the late Prof. Dillmann's writings, Messrs. T. & T. Clark, of Edinburgh, having secured the right of translation. His commentary on Genesis will probably be the first to appear.

AMONG the volumes of verse which Messrs. Elkin Mathews & John Lane have in the press, for publication in the autumn, is Songs from Vagabondia, by two authors, Mr. Bliss Carman and Mr. Richard Hovey, who will not sign or otherwise distinguish their several contributions. The book will have illustrations by Mr. Thomas Meteyard.

THE experiment of publishing an important novel in one-volume form, which was started with Mr. Hall Caine's The Manxman—of which we hear that more than one thousand copies were taken by Mr. Mudie within five days—has now been followed with Mr. R. D. Blackmore's Perlycross. But, in this latter case, we understand that a small edition in three volumes—which had been printed before the question reached its crisis—will also be issued simultaneously.

MESSRS. HURST & BLACKETT will publish next month a single volume story, entitled In a New World, by Mrs. Hans Blackwood, a connexion of the Marquis of Dufferin and Ava. It is the lady's first venture in literature.

MESSRS. WARD, LOOK & BOWDEN will publish immediately a volume of short stories by Miss Nora Vynne, entitled Honey of Aloes.

Rab Bethune's Double; or, Life's Long Battle Won, by Mr. Edward Garrett, will be issued shortly by Messrs. Oliphant, Anderson & Ferrier, with six illustrations of border scenes, etched on copper by Haswell Donaldson.

UNDER the title The Pilgrim's Progress as John Bunyan wrote it, Mr. Elliot Stock will shortly re-issue his facsimile of the first edition, with a new introduction by Dr. John Brown of Bedford.

The Experiences of Loveday Brooke, Lady Detective, by C. L. Pirakis, has been translated into Danish by Dr. M. Laursen, and will be published at Copenhagen next month.

MESSRS. OLIPHANT, ANDERSON & FERRIER will publish in a few weeks a library edition of My Ducats and my Daughter, by P. Hay Hunter and Walter Whyte.

THE two new volumes in the series of "Les Grands Ecrivains Français" are Froissart by Mme. James Darmesteter (Mary Robinson), and Diderot by M. Joseph Reinach.

MESSRS. CASSELL & Co. have made arrangements for the re-issue of "Treasure Island"

A few paces further on, at the cross-roads, is the site of an erased killeen, which local tradition asserts was at one time used for the interment of unbaptized children. I could not obtain definite evidence that the stone originally came from the killeen; but I was told that not long ago two stones were standing within it, as well as a gigantic whitethorn which overhung the road and interfered with traffic to such an extent that it was cut down. Nothing now remains in the killeen but a slab of slate, roughly circular, and presenting no features of interest. I was unable to find any other portions of the Ogham stone; but as the time at my disposal was too limited to allow me to make more than a desultory search, it is possible that more may turn up at a future date.

While the inscription is too fragmentary to add anything to our knowledge in the philological side of Ogham study, it is of some importance topographically, as it adds one to the list of the Oghams of a district in which this class of memorial is very sparsely represented. The only other Wexford Ogham comes from the neighbourhood—a fragment found on Hook Head, bearing the name Socam(ni). Except this, nothing Oghamic has been found on the east side of the Barrow nearer than the Hacketstown fragment and the interesting inscription at Castletimon, co. Wicklow.

II.—DONARD, CO. WICKLOW.

This is a very remarkable monument, standing on the farm known as Old Milla, south-west of Donard. As I failed utterly to find it on my first visit to Donard, in September last, and could only elicit the vaguest indications of its whereabouts from the inhabitants, it may be of advantage to give more explicit directions for finding it than are to be found in print, especially as it has been passed over in silence by the Ordnance Survey. The visitor should keep to the road which lies between the old church and the post-office. Soon after leaving these landmarks the road narrows suddenly, and, after passing through one or two gates, leads by a small farmhouse and over a foot-bridge into some fields, where it becomes lost. Another farmhouse, however, will be seen almost immediately behind the first, and at some little distance from it: the stone will be found at the back of this house, on the brow of a hill overlooking a wide valley.

The only notices I can find in print of this stone are the following:

"This stone was discovered by Dr. S. Ferguson in 1872 at Denard, co. Wicklow. The legend, if read retroversely, yields 'INIQUI.' Another (incomplete) memorial, from the same locality, with some twenty-five other Ogam inscriptions, is deposited in the Museum of the Royal Irish Academy, Dublin."—(Brash, Og. Mon., p. 324.)

"If we . . . descend on Donard . . . we are again in a well-marked Ogham district. . . . In the stone fences about Donard fragments of Ogham monuments are numerous, and the names of the farmers who broke them up are remembered. A short mile from the village on the south-west stands the Ogham-inscribed pillar, called the Piper's Stone. The common tradition of profane dancers and musicians being turned into stone exists here as in most other districts abounding in stone monuments. The Piper's Stone is excessively rugged, and its legend most difficult to decipher. It shows the χ character, and seems to read INIER."—(Ferguson, Ogh. Inscr., p. 69.)

These notices had long perplexed me greatly. It was not easy to see how Mr. Brash or his informant should have missed such a conspicuous character as χ ; it was still more difficult to understand how he fitted the eight scores necessary for QU into its place. Moreover, Sir Samuel Ferguson makes no reference to the reading being "retroverse," which he would hardly have omitted to do had such actually been the case.

In order to make my farther remarks clear, reference to the annexed diagram will be necessary. The stone is a block of clay-slate, square in section, but tapering. Its height is fifty inches, its cross dimensions twenty and twenty-four inches respectively. The diagram is intended to explain the nomenclature which I shall adopt in speaking of the various edges of the stone. The square represents the top of the stone (which is not horizontal, but slightly oblique); the vertical edges will be denoted by the single letters placed at the angles at which they terminate—viz., a, b, c, d; the horizontal edges by the pairs of letters placed at the angles between which they lie, thus a b, b c, &c.

The inscription seems to begin at the bottom of edge a, and runs up to the top. Whether any of it is now underground I cannot say; it is possible that it is so, for a low boundary mound passes close by the stone and conceals the inscribed angle for a few inches. The exposed part of the angle bears the following inscription:

The IA are perfectly clear and distinct, the first point of the I being close to the ground line. Then comes a space of $6\frac{1}{2}$ inches, which at first sight seems absolutely blank; on closer inspection, however, faint traces of two scores above the line can be discerned, and possibly even a third: there is room for five, and I have no doubt that the letter was Q. Then comes INI, perfectly clear; then a space of 6 inches, filled by an indeterminate letter and two vowel points. The most minute examination of the indeterminate letter failed to establish anything further than that one of its members is an oblique line below the stem, sloping upwards; and, therefore, the letter must either be $\frac{V}{\Lambda}$ (*y) or \bar{X} (p). Were it not for the extreme rarity of the letter I should be inclined to say that it is p. There is no question about the concluding I.

But this is not all. While examining the stone I noticed a well-marked M, followed by an A, on the edge ab. A little closer examination was necessary to find the Q; but every score of these letters is also traceable, although somewhat confused with the wide "grain" of the stone, in the direction of which they lie. The first three letters of the patronymic are also on the same edge. They are very indistinct, but appear to me to be MAB or MOB, though I do not like to assert positively that either is correct. The remainder of the inscription is, I fear, hopelessly lost; but there is evidence in a few scattered notches and scores that it ran in a very unusual manner—around the edges b c and c d, and some short way down the angle d.

Such is my reading of the Donard inscription, and I have put it on record in hopes that some other student of Ogham writing may be induced to visit the stone before long and verify it. How much of the inscription on the first angle is the proper name of the person commemorated I do not know: I suspect that there are one or more other words associated with it.*

* I have adopted Lord Southesk's ingenious suggestion of y as a convenient transliteration for this letter; though with the reservation, with which I think he will agree, that y hardly expresses the guttural sound of the letter with sufficient force to make it more than an approximate equivalent.

It is now easy to see how the variant readings already published arose. There are two apparently blank spaces in the inscription: Mr. Brash took the upper blank as the end of the writing, and failed to see the vowel-points which follow it: moreover, he misread the initial IA, making it IU. Reading the result downwards, this gives INIQUI. Sir Samuel Ferguson was misled by the lower blank, and regarded it as the beginning of the inscription; he accordingly failed to see the vowel points which precede it.† Apparently the continuation of the inscription on the remaining angles has not been noticed before.

The neighbourhood of Donard is rich in prehistoric remains. The Ogham stone itself seems to form one member of a group, for there is another stone standing thirty inches from it of about the same height, but irregular in outline and without any marking upon it. Some little distance from it in the opposite direction is another stone, also uninscribed. There is a fine cromlech a few paces from the right-hand side of the road to Dunlavin, not far from the last cottage on the hill at the entrance to Donard; while, if we take the road which leaves the village on the north, we first cross Hell Kettle Bridge, near which is a stone bearing thirteen cup-markings, and then, after walking through the magnificent scenery of Hollywood Glen, we reach the farm of Aughtgraney, in the grounds of which is a stone circle of great interest: one of the stones bears, running over its top, a deep semi-circular channel $18\frac{1}{2}$ inches in radius, at the centre of which is a cup-marking. Earthworks abound; one, called Ball Moat, behind the old church, is particularly fine. To the ecclesiologist, too, the place is not without interest; for though little (beyond a stone bearing an incised floriated cross) is to be seen in the church itself, it is full of associations with St. Palladius and St. Patrick.

I may add that though I kept a sharp look out, I was not fortunate enough to find any fragments of Oghams built into the stone walls in the neighbourhood.

R. A. S. MACALISTER.

"GOD BLESS THE COW!"

Hereford: August 8, 1894.

Though I came here to find Depositions as to Child Marriages, I cannot trace any; for the Depositions do not begin till 1625, or thereabouts, and most of them I have examined lie between 1668 and 1682, while there are some later. But plenty of them throw light on the social life of their time, though the curiously abusive libels and the odd immorality cases are not printable here. One instance of superstition, however, may be given: the belief that women of ill life, and great swearers, had demoniac powers of hurting their neighbours and their cattle; and that, if these women were made to ask God to bless the sick animals, they would get well.

* It is just possible that in the three concluding letters of the first angle we have (at last) a genuine instance of poi = qui fult. Should this be so, the next word must of course be maq, not maqi, and the patronymic must begin with i. The initial ia suggests a preceding l; but whether any letters are underground is a question which must remain open till the advent of a visitor armed with a trowel.

† The singular symmetry of this inscription will no doubt appeal to those ingenious scholars who "solve" Oghams as though they were agony-column cryptograms. I hope no one will ever call serious attention to the fact that this inscription yields something resembling the Latin word iniqui, whether it is read forwards or backwards!

In the libel case of Smith and Carpenter, depositions are made on September 13, 1682, to show that the testimony of Wm. Waters's wife against Carpenter is unworthy of credit.

1. Anna Sayce, the wife of James Sayce, of Dilwyn, Herefordshire, deposes

"that she knows the articulate Susan Haynes, now the wife of Wm. Waters, and saith that she is a woman of very little credit or reputacion amongst her neighbours; and doth see much abuse her neighbours, and disturbe their quiet, that they will scarce suffer her to come near them; that she is a great swearer, and is accounted a hard-hearted wicked woman; and this deponent hath heard one Margery Hodges say, that she, having a Cow very sick, did send for the aforesaid Susan Haynes, and forced her to say 'God bless the Cow!' and hereupon the said Cow recovered and was well within some few howers after. And in case any person or beast do fall sick on a suddaine, who is knowne to the said Susan's mother, it is usual to send for her, and to force her to say, God bless such person or beast; and the whole neighbourhood doe generally beleve the said Susan and her mother and sisters very ill persons, and such as are able, by their curseing, swearing, and other ill practices, to doe persons hurt; and especially one Henry Wetton, of Dilwyn aforesaid, being sick in his bedd, was perswaded that he could not recover, nor depart out of this life and be eased of his paine, untill the aforesaid Susan and her mother and sister were sent for to blesse him and to pray for him. Whereupon, one Richard Philipps, a Cunstale, was sent for them—as this deponent hath been told—and brought them unto the aforesaid Henry, and made them desire that god would either restore him to his health, or release him out of his pain and sickness by death; and the next day following, the said Henry dyed. . . ."

2. The said Richard Philipps, "Cunstale of Dilwyn for many years," then deposes, among other things,

"that the said Susan [Waters, born Haynes] is accounted an hard-hearted wicked woman; and the neighbours doe generally beleve that, by some ill practices, she and her mother and sisters, doe hurt their [the neighbours'] cattle, servants and children, and doe usually force them [the Hayneses] to come and say 'God bless their Cattle,' when they are sick; and thereupon they usually recover; soe that it is conceived by most people that they have some devilish power to doe hurt, and this deponent hath received warrants from the Justices of peace to bring them before them upon such matters; and they have ordered this deponent to search the mother of the said Susan, about her neck and breast; and in her neck this deponent found a tit with a hole through it. And this deponent did once carry the said Susan and her mother and sister unto Elizabeth, the daughter of Henry Wetton—who lay sick, and was tormented with great prickings and paines about her breast and heart—and caused them to say severally 'God bless the said Elizabeth,' and made them kneel upon their knees, and pray for her. Whereupon, the said Elizabeth said that she immediately found ease, and soe by degrees recovered her strength and health againe. And afterwards the said Henry Wetton himself being sick, and conceiving that they had done him hurt, desired this deponent to bring the said Susan and her mother and sister to him; which this deponent did, and heard the said Henry tell them that he had done them noe wrong, and desired them to pray to God for him, that God would be pleased to ease or release his paines, or take him to his mercy; and this deponent caused them to say the same upon their knees; and the said Henry departed this life upon the next day after. And this deponent alsoe saith that the said Susan and her mother and sisters are such swearing, curseing and wicked people that the neighbours are in fear of them. . . ."

F. J. FURNIVALL.

HONORARY DEGREES AT HALLE.

Cambridge: Aug. 11, 1894.

I observe a note in the last number of the ACADEMY that the honorary degree of Ph.D.

has been "conferred, at Halle, upon Prof. W. W. Skeat, of Cambridge." I have seen the same statement made in some of the penny daily papers, but I paid no attention to it, knowing that they frequently deal in fiction. But now that it is gravely repeated in a literary journal, please allow me to say that there is certainly a mistake somewhere. I have never been at Halle at any time, nor have I ever received any communication from that university, either in the present year or in any other.

WALTER W. SKEAT.

[We confess that we took our information from a Reuter's telegram in the Times. Mr. G. A. Grierson writes to us that the information is correct, so far as concerns himself.—ED. ACADEMY.]

SCIENCE.

Man, the Primeval Savage; His Haunts and Relics from the Hill-tops of Bedfordshire to Blackwall. By Worthington G. Smith. (Edward Stanford.)

IF observers like Mr. Worthington Smith were widely scattered over the country, it would soon become an easy matter to prepare a complete archaeological map of our island. He represents, in fact, the best type of local observer—full of enthusiasm, yet patient to a degree in the prosecution of research; accurate in observation, even to minutest details; fully alive to the value of quantitative work; and, above all, the master of a skilful pencil, ever ready to pourtray with fidelity whatever relics he may unearth. When Mr. Smith resided in the north-east of London, he startled us by the number of palaeolithic implements which he brought to light in his neighbourhood. His first discovery at Stoke Newington in 1878 was rapidly followed by others; and in the course of a few years he was able to demonstrate the existence of a "palaeolithic floor"—or dwelling surface of the early stone-using men—beneath a coating of contorted drift, over a tract of many miles in extent on both sides of the River Lea.

Although the work before us describes in detail these and other discoveries in Middlesex and Essex, the interest of the volume rather centres in the record of Mr. Smith's remarkable researches near Dunstable. When the author removed thither in 1885, his friends predicted that, although the locality was rather unpromising, he would surely bring to light whatever prehistoric relics might be hidden in the neighbourhood. Nor were they disappointed. In the present work Mr. Smith describes his discoveries, step by step as they were made; and his descriptions may be commended to the attention of the young collector as a most useful lesson in the method of research.

Two distinct series of flint tools have been found near Dunstable. In one series, presenting forms closely resembling those of the familiar implements of Thames valley drifts, the surface of the flint has usually an ochreous appearance. These flints have been taken from the clays and brick-earths which cap the high chalk hills, and may, perhaps, be correlated with the plateau implements which have recently been the subject of so much dispute. Mr. Smith, however, sees no reason to believe that even the oldest of his implements are as old as the glacial period. He has never found them either in or under boulder-clay, or in any inter-glacial deposits; and hence, so far as his area is concerned, he is naturally led to conclude that man was neither pre-glacial nor inter-glacial, but strictly post-glacial. Such a conclusion, however, need not vitiate the results of observations elsewhere, and Mr. Smith is careful to point out "that the pre-glacial or post-glacial age of man is only of local significance."

Another set of implements, probably not so old as the ochreous flints, occurs beneath the upper consorted drift, and seems to lie undisturbed on the original platform of their manufacture. These implements, always sharp-edged and sometimes beautifully worked, are referred to the well-known "Le Moustier type." In many cases Mr. Smith has been able, with remarkable skill and patience, to fit the flakes of flint to certain tools, thus replacing some of the original fragments, and demonstrating the existence of a working-place of the old flint-using folk. More than 500 flakes have been so replaced, though no large collection has been built together like Mr. Spurrell's famous find at Crayford.

One of the most interesting parts of Mr. Smith's volume is his dissertation on Forgeries. The author narrates in detail some of the artifices of the modern fabricator; and to many collectors his curious story will probably come as a surprise. Some of us, however, believe that we know on this dark subject more than it is expedient to disclose; but the information cannot be too widely circulated, that a considerable trade has of late years been carried on in false flint implements. The art has made such advance that the implements made by the famous "Flint Jack," and regarded in his day as marvels of skill, appear, when compared with the refined fabrications of to-day, to be mere clumsy counterfeits. One peculiarly smart fellow, who has turned out work of a very high order, is probably carrying on, through his agents in various pits, a brisk trade with unsuspecting collectors.

While the chief value of this volume is focussed in the account of Mr. Smith's own discoveries, it should be explained that the work is something more than a merely personal record. In the early part the reader finds a general sketch of our knowledge of primeval man, derived from various sources, at home and abroad, and illustrated with some useful engravings. The illustrations, by the way, form throughout a very interesting feature in the book: the author's skill as a draughtsman having stood him in such good stead that he has brightened his pages with upwards of 240 illustrations, besides an excellent archaeological map.

The weakest part of the book, to our thinking, is the second chapter, wherein Mr. Smith, departing from his usual method, gives play to a little imagination, and draws, in words, a rather fancy picture of his primeval folk. Some of the details, of a decidedly repulsive character, might well have been omitted; and perhaps the solid details of the book may stand in some danger of being neglected by certain readers for the sake of this sensational chapter. In saying this, however, let it be understood that for the bulk of the volume, which gives the result of Mr. Worthington Smith's own steady labour, we have nothing but unstinted praise. The author is especially to be congratulated on having, by patient observation and constructive skill, demonstrated the existence of a buried land-surface, whereon our rude forefathers chipped their flints and fashioned their tools—in brief, a fossil workshop of primeval man.

F. W. RUDLER.

PHILOLOGY NOTES.

PROF. JAMES DARMESTER is engaged upon a new and greatly improved translation of the Vendidad, for the "Sacred Books of the East." The second volume of Prof. Thibaut's translation of the Vedānta-Sūtras, in the same series, is now entirely printed, and only waits for the index. Prof. Jacobi's translation of two Jaina texts, the Uttarādhyayana and the Sutrā-kritāṅga, is likewise in type, and will be published in the autumn.

PROF. KARL BEZOLD, of Heidelberg, the founder and editor of the Zeitschrift für Assyriologie, has now projected another serial, to be called Semitistische Studien, for the publication of texts other than cuneiform. The first part will contain fragments of the Mugrib of Ibn Sa'id, printed by Dr. Vollers from the autograph MS. at Cairo. The second and third parts will be the metrical discourse composed by Sergius of Adhorbaijan, recording the life of Rabban Hormizd, the foundation of his monastery at Al-Kosh, and the disputes which took place in the seventh century between the Jacobite monks of Mar Mattai and Daira dhe Bezkin. This text—which will be edited by Dr. E. A. Wallis Budge, of the British Museum—is important for lexicographical purposes, as it contains many rare Syriac words, with inter-linear glosses.

WE quote the following appeal from the last number of the Babylonian and Oriental Record:

"Many who peruse this journal do not know its history, or how, by adopting the most economical methods consistent with efficiency, its promoters have yet been able, for nearly seven years, to present its varied and sometimes unique contents to the public. The subscription list proper is so limited that the work requires to be subsidised at the close of every volume. One of the consulting committee has most generously 'financed' the Record since its inception; but this individual liberality, at least to the same extent, can no longer be drawn upon. In these circumstances, we confidently appeal to our subscribers and readers to help us. All that is required is about £30 (in addition to the subscriptions), to defray the necessary annual expenses of the magazine; and we venture to think that—rather than see the only periodical in England which is devoted to the special branches treated in its pages disappear—some friends will intervene with donations or guarantees. Any such aid will be thankfully received and acknowledged by either of us: Terrien de Lacouperie (director), 136, Bishop's-road, Walham Green; Hugh M. Mackenzie (editor), 22, Sisters-avenue, Lavender Hill."

WE learn from the Pauline that a special prize has been awarded by the governors of St. Paul's School for Assyrian to C. R. Thompson, who had made a copy of several hitherto untranslated cuneiform inscriptions in the British Museum, accompanied with transliterations into the Romaic (? Roman) character and English versions. He had also furnished an introduction, discussing the affinities of Assyrian with Hebrew, and a vocabulary. In former days, if we remember aright, St. Paul's used to encourage the study of Hebrew, which has now become almost a monopoly of Merchant Taylors.

REPORTS OF SOCIETIES.

ANGLICO-RUSSIAN.—(Tuesday, August 7.)

MR. E. A. CAZALET, president, in the chair.—MR. H. Havelock read a paper on "Dostoevski," whose morbid nature he compared to that of Dr. Samuel Johnson, and in whose works he discovered analogy with Charles Dickens and Victor Hugo. He expressed the original idea that Dostoevski had learnt Toryism in Siberia, where he had at the same time contracted epilepsy. With all his craving for ghastly delineations of character and the undercurrent of Socialism which runs through his novels, Dostoevski showed deep sympathy with the sufferings of his fellow-countrymen, which really was the secret of his success and the mainspring of his popularity. He understood that the normal condition of the majority of Russians was a permanent state of weakness and suffering of one kind and another, caused by their own inherent shortcomings, by the injustice of the authorities, or by circumstances peculiar to their history, genius, and institutions. The revolting and not unfrequently puerile details, which reveal the spiritual and physical existence of convicts in the prisons of Siberia, are taken from life and copied with photographic accuracy in The Letters from the Dead House. Dostoevski had a large heart; his broad sympathy and Christian love, embracing all nations, deserve the gratitude and consideration, not only of orthodox Russians, but of all peoples and creeds.

FINE ART.

The Historical Geography of the Holy Land, especially in relation to the History of Israel and of the Early Church. By George Adam Smith, D.D. (Hodder & Stoughton.)

PROF. SMITH's new book is written with all his customary charm of style. The pictures of geography and history which he has set before us are filled in with the pen of a master. There is not a dull or unprofitable page from the beginning to the end of the volume. If Prof. Smith does not possess the measured eloquence of Dean Stanley, he has at all events that Keltic vividness of imagination which gives fire and life to all that it touches.

Prof. Smith has prepared himself for his work by travelling through the country he has undertaken to describe. It is one of the countries of the world which appeal to the mind and the imagination as well as to the outward eye. Palestine has been the scene of some of the most momentous events in the history of civilised man, and the picturesqueness of nature is thus quickened by the human interest attaching to it. It is next to impossible to write upon its geography without being at the same time an historian and an archaeologist.

The newest and best information has been laid under contribution. Even Dr. W. Max Müller's recent work on the notices of Europe and Asia in the Egyptian inscriptions is referred to here and there. But I wish that Prof. Smith had always exercised a little more independent judgment in dealing with his authorities: he is too apt, like so many of his northern colleagues, to regard the word of a German professor as final. "Critical" objections to the historical character of an Old Testament narrative are now and then placed somewhat needlessly before the reader, and we are left in doubt as to whether the author assents to them or not.

The question as to the position of Kirjath-Sepher and the meaning of its name illustrates what I mean by this overtrustfulness in other people's assertions. As I have pointed out in the Quarterly Statement of the Palestine Exploration Fund (January, 1893), the little information given as to the site of the city in the Old Testament seems to exclude its identification with Dhāheriyeh, where, moreover, Prof. Petrie found no remains of early date. The name Debir more naturally signifies "Sanctuary," as in 1 Kings vi. 5, than "Back"; and the Septuagint, with its πόλις γραμμάτων (which Prof. Smith, by a slip of the pen, renders "city of scribes") has given a more correct rendering of Kirjath-Sepher than Moore and his German followers. In fact, the only reason for rejecting the reading of both the Masoretic and Septuagint texts, and for changing sepher "book" into sephār "border," was to get rid of the reference to the use of writing in pre-Mosaic Canaan. The Tel el-Amarna tablets have shown us how utterly wrong such an attempt must be.

The real origin and signification of the name have recently been discovered by Dr. W. Max Müller. A re-examination of the Egyptian papyrus called "The Travels of a Mohar," which belongs to the age of the Israelitish Exodus, has brought to light a curious fact. The writer of the papyrus associates together the two towns of southern Palestine, Kirjath-eneb and Beth-Thupar, the latter of which would appear in Hebrew as Beth-Sopher, "House of the Scribe," and the determinative of "writing" is accordingly attached to the name in the hieroglyphic document. As Dr. Max Müller remarks, the writer has transposed the two terms Kirjath "city" and Beth "house," so that Beth-Sopher must be the Kirjath-Sepher of Scripture, which is similarly conjoined with Anab or (Beth)-eneb. It turns out, therefore, that the Masoretic and Septuagint texts, though perfectly correct in the view they take of the general meaning of the name of the ancient city, have punctuated it wrongly; and that, instead of Kirjath-Sepher or "Book-town," we ought to read Kirjath-Sopher or "Scribes' town."

Prof. Smith is fully justified in rejecting my view that the Philistines were a sort of Egyptian outpost. The fact that Ramses III. claims to have captured Gaza seems to show that it was hostile to Egypt after its occupation by the Philistine invaders. At least, that appears to be the most natural conclusion to draw, since it is almost certain that the city had been occupied by the Philistine invaders before the Syrian campaign of the Egyptian Pharaoh.

I must also withdraw my acceptance of the etymology proposed by Prof. Ebers for the name of Caphor. My discovery of the hieroglyphic form of the name at Kom Ombo last winter proves that it cannot be a compound of Kaft and the Egyptian ur "great," whatever else it may be. But the hieroglyphic spelling equally shows that Dr. W. Max Müller is incorrect in making it another form of Kaft. Nor can he be right in making Kaft a part of Asia Minor, in spite of the ingenuity of the arguments with which the opinion is supported. The Decree of Kanopos states categorically that Kaft was Phœnicia, and the Egyptian scribes of the Ptolemaic era were more likely to have known the meaning of the name than a German scholar of to-day.

The maps which accompany Prof. Smith's book have been based upon those of the Palestine Survey, and it is, therefore, needless to say that they are excellent. In fact, the whole volume is got up thoroughly well. When, however, a new edition of it is called for, as must be the case before long, I would suggest that it be published in a smaller and therefore handier form for the use of travellers in the Holy Land. At present it is too bulky for the ordinary tourist, whose luggage is usually of a limited description. Another suggestion would be a slight modification of the note on p. 40. The Anglican "bishop in Jerusalem" will probably object to be bracketed with those "Protestant" bodies between whom and himself there has been but little theological sympathy.

A. H. SAYCE.

IN MEMORIAM.

PROF. BRUNN.

I HAVE not observed in the ACADEMY or elsewhere in England any obituary notice of Prof. Brunn, of Munich, who died on July 23, after a severe illness of fourteen days.

Prof. Brunn's name is perhaps less widely known in this country than it ought to be; but so eminent a man should not pass away without some notice among us also.

The fame of Heinrich Ritter von Brunn stands distinctly above that of all European scholars of the present century in that department of classical archaeology which he had made his own. As a fine judge of style in ancient sculpture and painting he stood for many years alone; and his admirable eye and wonderfully constructive judgment have perhaps done more to bring system into our knowledge of ancient art than has been accomplished by any writer since the time of Winckelmann.

Brunn belongs not to the new period in which Athens is the focus of archaeological study, but to the period when the Istituto di Corrispondenza Archeologica, at Rome, was the international centre. When in 1856 Emil Braun died, it was considered on all sides that his place in Rome as the great authority on ancient art could most worthily be filled by his friend and pupil Brunn, who was summoned from Bonn, where he was then teaching, and who became, with Henzen, joint secretary of the Institute. Brunn had already, in the year 1853, published the first part of his Geschichte der Griechischen Künstler, a work of admirable genius and insight, which, even now, is in some ways not superseded. Then followed a series of brilliant discoveries and identifications, which marked Brunn's activity at Rome, and his Professoriat at Munich. These were too many to be here mentioned, and they are detailed in the histories of Greek sculpture; for it is the notable feature of Brunn's discoveries that they abide with us, and have become part of the framework of our knowledge of ancient art. Perhaps the most striking instance of his insight was his bringing together of the hitherto dispersed works of the Pergamene school of sculpture: in fact, he sketched the character of that school in such admirable outline that subsequent discoveries have done little more than fill in light and shade. In the same way, at a time when scarcely any works of archaic Attic art were known, Brunn, with marvellous insight, discerned its character with great success. In delineating the history of ancient painting, Brunn worked with a hand almost as masterly; but most unfortunately an exaggerated notion of the influence of archaic revival in vase-painting diminished the value of his results. Whenever a mass of fresh material was offered to archaeological investigation, light was sure to come from Brunn; and if he was not always right, he was a man whose errors were often more instructive than the sound views of duller men. In 1893 appeared the first part of what was to have been a great history of Greek art. It must remain a torso; but it is safe to say that any such history written in the future must be in great measure founded on Brunn. For the last thirty years Munich under Brunn has been a great school of classical archaeology, and many of the ablest of the younger archaeologists owe much to him as a teacher. Certainly his methods were not free from danger: to talk about style in art without thorough grasp of the facts is fatally easy. The bow of Brunn in the hands of weaker men has often sent arrows wide of the target. But his own work is stamped by the safest of all marks: over and over again have his bold constructions been confirmed by subsequent excavation.

Many years ago I had the privilege of hearing several lectures of the master and of long conversations with him, and he left on my mind the impression that he was the most admirable teacher I had ever heard. His doctrine was set forth in a flow of perfectly turned speech, with never a word amiss, and never a remark out of its proper connexion, while every point was made clear by reference to cast and photograph. And he laid open his knowledge to the inquirer like a book: one had only to turn the pages. He was indeed a noble figure in archaeology, an incarnation of the Hellenic spirit; and he died full of years and honours, after celebrating the fiftieth anniversary of his doctorate.

PERCY GARDNER.

NOTES ON ART AND ARCHAEOLOGY.

MR. HEINEMANN announces a revised and enlarged edition of the English translation of Emile Michel's work on Rembrandt, which was published last winter. The mode of publication is in monthly parts, the first to appear on August 25. This edition, when completed, will contain 42 photogravures, 34 coloured reproductions of paintings and chalk drawings, and 250 illustrations in the text.

MR. L. LESSER has presented to the National Gallery a small picture by Lenain—a group, consisting of a peasant woman surrounded by children, apparently portraits. The Earl of Northbrook has lent, for temporary exhibition, his picture of the Virgin and Child, by Sebastian del Piombo, which was at Burlington House last winter.

MISS ELEANOR LOUISE MERCER, of Sheffield, has been awarded the Princess of Wales's scholarship at South Kensington, for excellence in design; and also a prize of £21, given by the Duke of Norfolk for a model of a silver cup. We may add that she is the niece of Mr. W. Mercer, who is well known to readers of the ACADEMY for his life-long devotion to the history of Italian art.

THE statue of Sydenham, unveiled by Lord Salisbury at Oxford last week, is the work of Mr. Pinker, who also did the John Hunter statue given by the Queen to the University. The head of the statue was modelled partly from the portrait by Mrs. Mary Beale in the Royal College of Physicians (a description of the sittings for which is given in Walpole's Lives of Artists) and partly from the portrait by Sir Peter Lely at Oxford.

SOME interest has been aroused by the assumed existence of a Watteau, a religious picture, not mentioned by M. de Goncourt in his Catalogue. The work in question—attributed, it seems, in a certain inventory, to an inferior painter, Jeurat—decorates a side altar in the Church of St. Médard. It represents St. Geneviève, in the costume of a French paysanne or fermière of the period, guarding her sheep; and the scene would appear to be the most important of the hills in the outskirts of Paris—the Mont Valérien that towers above Suresnes. Notre Dame is seen in the distance. The treatment of the foliage is said to be of unusual vigour and modernness, while the figure of the young patron saint of the French capital is asserted to resemble strongly the type of young Frenchwoman to be found in the rare domestic pictures of an artist devoted more particularly to the chronicle of the fête-galante. The picture, which is on canvas, has undergone some deterioration; but its interest can hardly be questioned, nor does there seem any sufficient reason to deny its attribution to Watteau himself. It is worth while, perhaps, to remind our readers that this, if Watteau's, is not an absolutely solitary instance of his occupation with religious subjects. There exist indifferent engravings after at least one or two religious pictures attributed to him; and there is also the story—pretty well authenticated—of one Hécart, a native of Watteau's birthplace, who avers that he had seen "chez le Chanoine Lejuste," what he calls "a marvel"—a picture by Watteau of the little St. John the Baptist seeking to awake the Infant Christ. This composition, M. Edmond de Goncourt declares, was destroyed in 1793, during the bombardment of Valenciennes.

FROM the report of the library committee on the recent loan exhibition of pictures at the Guildhall, we learn that the total number of visitors was just 300,000, of whom 17,530 took advantage of the opening on Sundays. The amount received from the sale of catalogues (£964) was almost sufficient to cover all the expenses.

AT a recent meeting of the Académie des Inscriptions, M. Naville (who holds the position of "correspondent") gave an account of his excavations last winter of the great temple of Deir el Behari, under the auspices of the Egypt Exploration Fund. At the same meeting M. Clermont Ganneau described a bas-relief from the Hauran, of the Roman period, representing a gigantomachia, which he traced back to Egyptian influence, and in which he found the origin of St. George and the Dragon.

THE New York Nation for August 2 contains a report, by Mr. Edward Capps, of the excavations recently conducted at Eretria by the American School of Athens. Unfortunately, the time was too short to finish the work on the theatre, originally begun in 1891; and most of the results are negative in character. The most important discovery was that of the foundations of a temple of Dionysos, which had evidently been destroyed by fire, in close proximity to the theatre. It appears that the Greek Archaeological Society has now undertaken the work of excavating ancient tombs that exist in large numbers in the neighbourhood of Eretria.

MR. MURRAY'S LIST.

With Portrait, crown 8vo, 12s.

SECOND EDITION OF

SONGS, POEMS, AND VERSES.

By HELEN, LADY DUFFERIN (COUNTESS OF GIFFORD).

Edited, with a Memoir, and some Account of the Sheridan Family, by her Son,
The MARQUESS OF DUFFERIN and AVA.

"With the exception of one work.....no literature has passed through our hands this year in so charming a garment.....
But if the exterior of the book is charming, the contents are infinitely more so."—Daily Chronicle.

"We have rarely met with a more touching and charming tribute from a mother to a son than is herein contained."
Westminster Gazette.

8vo, 12s.

THE PEASANT STATE.

AN ACCOUNT OF BULGARIA IN 1894, DERIVED FROM A RECENT VISIT TO THE COUNTRY.

By EDWARD DICEY, C.B.

"A most valuable contribution to our knowledge of the political, social, and agrarian condition of the Bulgarians."
Daily Telegraph.

"A book which will be widely read, and which is attractive both in manner and matter."—Morning Post.
"We must content ourselves, however, with drawing attention in general terms to this very welcome volume, in which are combined the good sense of the intelligent observer and the picturesque description of the general writer."—Globe.

Crown 8vo, 9s.

HANDBOOK FOR SCOTLAND.

A New Edition, thoroughly Revised and in great part Rewritten, with special detailed information for Pedestrians, and entirely New Maps. Printed on specially light paper.

"In spite of enterprise devoted to the production of guide-books in the past fifteen years, Murray's handbooks still maintain their place as facile principes, and of all this guide to Scotland is the high-water mark of guide-book excellence for tourists of intelligence."—Observer.

JOHN MURRAY, ALBEMARLE STREET.

NOW READY, A NEW VOLUME OF

THE SAGA LIBRARY. By William Morris, with the assistance of EIRIKR MAGNUSSON. Crown 8vo, Roxburghe, each volume 7s. 6d.

CONTENTS OF THE VOLUMES NOW ISSUED.

Vol. I., 48 and 228 pp.: 1. STORY OF HOWARD THE HUNT; 2. STORY OF THE BANDED MEN; 3. THE STORY OF HEN THORIR. 1890

Vol. II., 48 and 410 pp.: Eyrbyggja Saga, 1 vol. 1891

Vol. III., map and 410 pp.: Snorri Sturleson's HEIMSKRINGLA; or, the History of the Kings of Norway. Vol. I. 1892

Vol. IV., 484 pp.: Snorri Sturleson's Heimskringla. Vol. II. The Story of Olaf the Holy. 1894

Two more Volumes complete the "Heimskringla."

A FEW COPIES remain of THE SAGA LIBRARY, on LARGE PAPER,
Vols. I.-IV., royal 8vo, half-bound green morocco, £1 11s. 6d. per volume.

LONDON: 15, Piccadilly, August, 1894.

BERNARD QUARITCH.

| | | | | | | |
|---|----------------|-----|-----|-----|-----|------------|
| NATIONAL For Mutual Life Assurance. | Invested Funds | ... | ... | ... | ... | £4,700,000 |
| | Paid in Claims | ... | ... | ... | ... | £9,000,000 |

Death Duties provided for by Life Assurance.

PROVIDENT INSTITUTION.

PROFITS.—The whole are divided amongst the Assured. Already divided, £4,600,000.

At the division in 1892 there were nearly eight hundred Policies in respect of which not only were the Premiums entirely extinguished, but also Annuities were granted or Cash Bonuses paid, whilst in the case of many Policies the original sums assured are now more than doubled by the Bonus Additions. Applications for Agencies invited.

48, Gracechurch Street, London, E.C.

ARTHUR SMITHER, Actuary and Secretary.

NEW WORK BY DR. MACLAREN.

Crown 8vo, cloth boards, price 6s., post free.

THE WEARIED CHRIST, and other
Sermons. By Rev. ALEXANDER MACLAREN, D.D.
"They are fully up to his old level, and are still unrivalled in their own manner."—British Weekly.

London: ALEXANDER & SHEPHEARD, Farnival Street, E.C.

To H.R.H. the PRINCE OF WALES.

BRAND & CO.'S AI SAUCE,

SOUPS, PRESERVED PROVISIONS

and

POTTED MEATS, and YORK and GAME

PIES. Also,

ESSENCE of BEEF, BEEF TEA,

TURTLE SOUP, and JELLY, and other

SPECIALITIES for INVALIDS.

CAUTION—BEWARE OF IMITATIONS.

SOLE ADDRESS—

11, LITTLE STANHOPE STREET,
MAYFAIR, W.

Take with you on Vacation

A TABLET

OF

VINOLIA SOAP

Price 4d.

ESTABLISHED 1851.

BIRKBECK BANK,

Southampton Buildings, Chancery Lane, London.

TWO-AND-A-HALF per CENT. INTEREST allowed on DEPOSITS

repayable on demand.

TWO per CENT. on CURRENT ACCOUNTS, on the minimum

monthly balances, when not drawn below £100.

STOCKS, SHARES, and ANNUITIES purchased and sold.

SAVINGS DEPARTMENT.

For the encouragement of Thrift the Bank receives small sums on deposit, and allows Interest monthly on each completed £1

BIRKBECK BUILDING SOCIETY.

HOW TO PURCHASE A HOUSE

FOR TWO GUINEAS PER MONTH.

BIRKBECK FREEHOLD LAND SOCIETY.

HOW TO PURCHASE A PLOT OF LAND

FOR FIVE SHILLINGS PER MONTH.

The BIRKBECK ALMANACK, with full particulars, post free

FRANCIS RAVENSCROFT, Manager.

IMPORTANT WORK ON THE HISTORY OF THE NOVEL.

A GUIDE TO

BRITISH & AMERICAN NOVELS.

BEING A COMPREHENSIVE MANUAL TO BRITISH AND AMERICAN FICTION FROM THE EARLIEST PERIOD
TO THE END OF 1893.

BY PERCY RUSSELL,

Author of "The Author's Manual," &c.

Crown 8vo, cloth, 300 pp., price 3s. 6d. net; by post, 3s. 10d.

THE GUIDE CONTAINS A COMPLETE HISTORY OF THE NOVEL, LIVING NOVELISTS, AND NOVELISTS OF THE PAST.

BY THE SAME AUTHOR.

THE AUTHOR'S MANUAL.

WITH PREPARATORY REMARKS

BY MR. GLADSTONE.

Seventh and Cheap Edition. With New Preface, 304 pp., crown 8vo, cloth, price 3s. 6d. net; by post, 3s. 10d. With Portrait.

"Mr. Russell's book is a very complete manual and guide for journalists and authors. It is not a merely practical work—it is literary and appreciative of literature in its best sense..... We have little else but praise for the volume."—Westminster Review.

LONDON: DIGBY, LONG & CO., PUBLISHERS
18, BOUVERIE STREET, FLEET STREET, E.C.OLD SHIRTS RE-FITTED, Fine Irish Linen, 2s.;
or very best Irish Linen, returned free, ready to wear, 2s. 6d. Sample Shirt, for Dress and ordinary wear, any size, post free, 2s. 9d., 3s. 9d., 4s. 9d., 5s. 9d., or 6s. 9d. Twilled Night Shirts, 2s. 11d., 3s. 9d., 4s. 9d., or 5s. 9d. LINEN COLLARS and CUFFS. Best 4-fold Collars, 4s. 6d. and 5s. 6d. doz.; made exact to pattern, 2s. 9d. half-doz., post free. Napkins, 2s. 6d. per doz.; Dinner

Napkins, 4s. 6d. per dozen; Table

Cloths, 2 yards square, 2s. 9d. each,

2½ yards by 3 yards, 5s. 6d.; Kitchen Table Cloths, 10½d. each; real

Irish Linen Sheet, fully bleached, 2 yards wide, 1s. 11d. per yard;

and Linen Diaper, 8½d. per yard; Nursery Diaper, 4½d. per yard;

Surplice Linen, 7½d. per yard; Glass Cloths, 3s. 6d. dozen. LINEN

HUCKABACK TOWELS, 3s. 6d. per dozen; Damask Towels, 6s. 6d.

per dozen; Turkish Bath Towels, 1s. each; Twilled Linen Pillow

Cases, from 1s. 1d. each. IRISH CAMBRIC HANDKERCHIEFS.—

Children's, 1s. 2d.; Ladies', 2s. 3d.; Gent's, 3s. 6d. Hemstitched—

Ladies', 2s. 3d.; Gent's, 4s. 11d. per dozen. Better qualities equally cheap. Price Lists and Patterns of all kinds of Linen Goods and Hosiery sent to any part of the world, post free. Monograms, Crests,

Coats of Arms, Initials, &c., woven and embroidered. Samples and Illustrated Price Lists sent free to any part of the world.

B. & E. M'HUGH & CO., Limited, BELFAST

Now ready, large crown 8vo, nearly 800 pp., cloth, 6s., post free

HISTORY

OF THE

FREE CHURCHES OF ENGLAND

FROM THE REFORMATION TO 1851.

By HERBERT S. SKELTON.

With a Continuation to 1891, by CHAS. S. MIAL.

"Evidently the result of most laborious research and remarkable skill in the arrangement of facts..... a useful work of reference and an interesting memorial of men and events that have left their mark on our national history."

"A monument of painstaking and skillful work, which no one probably could have undertaken with so many advantages as Mr. Mial, or have accomplished with greater success."

"The leading members of all denominations will do well to get hold of this publication."—South Wales Daily News.

LONDON: ALEXANDER & SHEPHEARD,
21 AND 22 FARNIVAL STREET, E.C.

WORKS BY DR. MACLAREN.

Crown 8vo, cloth boards, price 6s., post free.

PAUL'S PRAYERS, and other Sermons.

"As striking and suggestive as any Dr. MacLaren has published.... The book is full of helpful thoughts."

Christian World.

Uniform with the above, price 6s., post free.

THE HOLY OF HOLIES; a Series of Sermons on the 14th, 15th, and 16th Chapters of the Gospel by John.

"Every sermon glows with unction, and shows intense power."—Methodist Recorder.

LONDON: ALEXANDER & SHEPHEARD, Publishers,
21 AND 22, FARNIVAL STREET, E.C.; and all Booksellers.

LONSDALE PRINTING WORKS,

LONSDALE BUILDINGS, 27, CHANCERY LANE.

ALEXANDER & SHEPHEARD.

PRINTERS AND PUBLISHERS.

BOOKS, PAMPHLETS, MAGAZINES,

NEWSPAPERS AND PERIODICALS,

And all General and Commercial Work.

Every description of Printing—large or small.

Printers of THE ACADEMY Newspaper.

Authors advised with as to Printing and Publishing.
Estimates and all information furnished.
Contracts entered into.

MESSRS. LONGMANS & CO.'S LIST.

DEALS SPECIALLY WITH THE KOREAN QUESTION.

Will be published on August 20, in 1 vol., 8vo, price ONE GUINEA.

With Two Maps, Twenty-one Full-page Illustrations, and Twenty-nine Illustrations in the Text.

PROBLEMS OF THE FAR EAST. JAPAN—KOREA—CHINA.

By the Hon. GEORGE N. CURZON, M.P.,

Fellow of All Souls College, Oxford; Author of "Russia in Central Asia," and "Persia."

THE FUR AND FEATHER SERIES.

Edited by A. E. T. WATSON.

THE GROUSE. NATURAL HISTORY. By the Rev. H. A. MACPHERSON.

—SHOOTING. By A. J. STUART-WORTLEY.—COOKERY. By GEORGE SAINTSBURY. With 18 Illustrations by A. J. Stuart-Wortley and A. Thorburn. Various Diagrams in the Text. Crown 8vo, 5s. [Just published.]

"It is difficult to know which to admire most—the excellent letterpress or the admirable illustrations."—Observer.

THE PARTRIDGE. By the SAME AUTHORS. With 12 Illustrations and numerous Diagrams. Crown 8vo, 5s.

NEW BOOK BY MRS. WALFORD.

PLOUGHED, and other Stories. By L. B. WALFORD, Author of "Mr. Smith," "One Good Guest," &c. Crown 8vo, 6s.

PAPERS and ADDRESSES. By Lord BRASSEY, K.C.B., D.C.L.

NAVAL and MARITIME. 2 vols., crown 8vo, 10s.

WORK and WAGES. 1 vol., crown 8vo, 5s.

NEW BOOK BY MAY KENDALL.

SONGS from DREAMLAND. By MAY KENDALL, Author of "Dreams to Sell," &c. Fcap. 8vo, 6s. net.

"Without affectations, trusting entirely to the force of the humour and the pathos really felt."—Sketch.

DAVID'S LOOM: a Story of Rochdale Life in the Early Years of the Nineteenth Century. By JOHN TRAFFORD CLEGG (Th' Owd Weighver), Author of "Heart Strings," "Pieces in the Rochdale Dialect," &c. Crown 8vo, 6s.

"A thrilling story..... The narrative never flags in interest from the opening to the concluding pages."—Daily Telegraph.

CLIMBING in the BRITISH ISLES. By W. P. HASKETT SMITH,

Member of the Alpine Club. Vol. I. "ENGLAND." With 23 Illustrations by Ellis Carr, Member of the Alpine Club, and 5 Plans. Fcap. 8vo, 3s. 6d.

* Vol. II. "WALES," and Vol. III. "SCOTLAND," are in preparation.

"A very practical little book on mountaineering."—Times.

"A really admirable little volume..... Even to those who know the Lake mountains and are not climbers the book is interesting."—Mr. JAMES PAIN in the Illustrated London News.

AN ENGLISH GRAMMAR and ANALYSIS, for STUDENTS and YOUNG TEACHERS. By G. STEEL, Inter. B.Sc., Lecturer on Science and Method under the School Board for London. Crown 8vo, 3s. 6d.

THE SILVER LIBRARY.—Two New Volumes.

SEAS and LANDS. By Sir EDWIN ARNOLD, K.C.I.E., Author of "The Light of the World," &c. With 71 Illustrations. Crown 8vo, price 3s. 6d.

A SHADOW of DANTE: being an Essay towards studying Himself, his World, and his Pilgrimage. By MARIA FRANCESCA ROSSETTI. With Illustrations by Dante Gabriel Rossetti. Crown 8vo, 3s. 6d.

LONGMANS' SERIES OF BOOKS FOR GIRLS.

Crown 8vo, price 2s. 6d. each.

THE ATELIER du LYS; or, An Art Student in the Reign of Terror.

BY THE SAME AUTHOR.

MADemoiselle MORI: a Tale of Modern Rome.

A CHILD of the REVOLUTION. With Illustrations by C. J. Staniland.

THAT CHILD. With Illustrations by Oordon Browne.

HESTER'S VENTURE.

UNDER a CLOUD.

IN the OLDEN TIME: a Tale of the Peasant War in Germany.

THE FIDDLER of LUGAU. With Illustrations by W. Ralston.

THE YOUNGER SISTER.

ATHERSTONE PRIORY. By L. N. COMYN

THE THIRD MISS ST. QUENTIN. By Mrs. MOLESWORTH.

THE STORY of a SPRING MORNING, &c. By Mrs. MOLESWORTH. Illustrated.

NEIGHBOURS. By Mrs. MOLESWORTH. Illustrated.

VERY YOUNG, and QUITE ANOTHER STORY. Two Stories. By JEAN INGELow.

KEITH DERAMORE. By the Author of "Miss Molly."

SIDNEY. By MARGARET DELAND.

LAST WORDS to GIRLS on LIFE at SCHOOL and after SCHOOL. By Mrs. W. GREY.

LONDON: LONGMANS, GREEN & CO.
NEW YORK: 15 EAST 16TH STREET.

MUDIE'S SELECT LIBRARY,
For the CIRCULATION and SALE of all the BEST ENGLISH, FRENCH, GERMAN, ITALIAN, and SPANISH BOOKS.

TOWN SUBSCRIPTIONS from One Guinea per annum.
LONDON BOOK SOCIETY (for Weekly Exchange of Books at the Houses of Subscribers) from Two Guineas per annum.
COUNTRY SUBSCRIPTIONS from Two Guineas per annum.
N.B.—Two or three friends may unite in One Subscription and thus lessen the cost of carriage.

LIBRARY BOXES GRATIS.

Town and Village Clubs supplied on Liberal Terms
Prospectuses and Monthly Lists of Books gratis and post free.

SALE DEPARTMENT.

All the leading Books of the Past Seasons are on Sale, second-hand at greatly Reduced Prices.

LISTS GRATIS AND POST FREE.

MUDIE'S MANCHESTER LIBRARY,
10 to 12, BARTON ARCADE, MANCHESTER,
Is in daily communication with this Library.

MUDIE'S SELECT LIBRARY, Limited,
30 to 34, NEW OXFORD STREET, LONDON;
241, Brompton Road, S.W.; and 48, Queen Victoria St., E.C.

THE AUTOTYPE COMPANY

Has the honour to announce the Publication of

NINETY-THREE DRAWINGS
BY

ALBERT DURER,

Reproduced in Facsimile from Originals in the British Museum, and accompanied by Descriptive Text by

SIDNEY COLVIN, M.A.,

Keeper of Prints and Drawings, British Museum.

"The British Museum collection, reproduced in this volume, is," says Professor Colvin, "a fairly complete and representative survey of the several phases of Durer's activity as a draughtsman and sketcher during all periods of his career."

The Volume is Imperial folio, half-morocco, Plates Linen-Guarded and Interleaved. Edition 100 Copies.

Price Six Guineas.

The AUTOTYPE FINE-ART CATALOGUE
(New Edition), of 184 pages, with Illustrated Supplement, containing 68 Miniature Photographs of notable Autotypes, post free, ONE SHILLING.

"AUTOTYPE: a Decorative and Educational Art."
NEW PAMPHLET, FREE ON APPLICATION.

THE AUTOTYPE COMPANY,
74, New Oxford Street, London,

MESSRS. J. C. DRUMMOND & CO.,
ART REPRODUCERS,

14, HENRIETTA STREET, COVENT GARDEN, W.O.

Are the sole representatives in Great Britain of

HERR HANFSTAENGL of Munich,

the well-known Artist in PHOTOGRAPHURE, now patronised by the leading London Art Publishing Firms. A large Collection of Important Plates always on view.

Process Blocks for the purpose of Ordinary Book Illustrations.

Messrs. DRUMMOND & CO. supply the cheapest and best Processes in the market, which are specially adapted to meet the wants of Antiquarians, Archaeologists, and those engaged in the investigation and publication of Parochial and Diocesan Records.

J. C. DRUMMOND & CO. invite attention to their

Improved Rapid Photo-Mechanical Process
For the Reproduction of Works of Art, Original MSS., Designs, Lace Manufactures, Photographs, Views, Book Illustrations, Artistic Advertisements, Catalogues, &c., &c., at a moderate cost.

Specimens and price list on application.

Offices: 14, HENRIETTA STREET COVENT GARDEN, LONDON

THE ACADEMY.

A WEEKLY REVIEW OF LITERATURE, SCIENCE, AND ART.

No. 1164.
[New Issue.]

SATURDAY, AUGUST 25, 1894.

PRICE 3d.
[Registered as a Newspaper.]

TABLE OF CONTENTS

PAGE

| | |
|--|-----|
| WILFRED WARD'S WITNESSES TO THE UNSEREN, I., by the Rev. JOHN OWEN | 127 |
| HALL CAINE'S THE MANXMAN, by H. TATTERSALL | 128 |
| SALA'S REMINISCENCES, by F. HAWKINS | 129 |
| GARNIER'S HISTORY OF THE LANDED INTEREST, by R. SEYMOUR LONG | 130 |
| NEW NOVELS, by G. BARNETT SMITH | 131 |
| SOME VOLUMES OF VERSE, by NORMAN GALE | 132 |
| NOTES AND NEWS | 133 |
| ORIGINAL VERSE: "FREEDOM," by MICHAEL FIELD | 133 |
| MAGAZINES AND REVIEWS | 133 |
| SELECTED FOREIGN BOOKS | 134 |
| CORRESPONDENCE— | |
| William Browne, of Tavistock, by Gordon Goodwin; On an Ancient Method of computing Losses in War, by Whitley Stokes; The Ogham X at Denard, by the Earl of Southesk; Honorary Degrees at Halle, by Prof. Skeat | 134 |
| SOME BOTANICAL BOOKS | 135 |
| HIEROGLYPHS IN CRETE | 135 |
| SCIENCE NOTES | 136 |
| UTMANN'S FOTTEICELLI, by MAURICE HEWLETT | 137 |
| CORRESPONDENCE— | |
| The Wadi Lulu, by Cope Whitehouse | 138 |
| NOTES ON ART AND ARCHAEOLOGY | 139 |
| STAGE NOTES | 139 |

SLEEPING PARTNERSHIP.—An opportunity occurs for any one with £2,000 to £3,000 to JOIN a PUBLISHING BUSINESS, producing Books in constant demand.—Address Books, care of Mr. H. A. Moncrieff, 19, Ladbroke Hill, E.C.

AN experienced WRITER is willing to READ AUTHORS' MSS. Novels, one guinea; Articles, Sketches, &c., at moderate rates. Letters only.—C. K., 2, 43, Self's Advertising Offices, London.

NEW WORK in preparation by W. RUSSELL, Author of "An Invalid's Twelve Years' Experience," "MAN: his Peculiarities, Weakness, Diseases, Degeneration, and Remedies."

TYPE-WRITING.

AUTHORS, PUBLISHERS, &c.—Scientific, Literary, and Medical MSS. carefully and promptly typewritten by RAYNE & CO., 40, Norfolk Street, Strand, W.C. Private room for dictation. Highest references. Translations.

THE FLEET STREET TYPEWRITERS
115, FLEET STREET, E.C.
Lowest Charges. Highest Speed.
Every kind of Typewriting Work Done.
Price List—115, Fleet Street, London.

TYPE-WRITERS.—SECOND-HAND
MACHINES, equal to new, FOR SALE, EXCHANGE, or LENT ON HIRE. Machines sold by Instalments on Terms to suit purchasers. Use of Machine taught free to hirers or purchasers. Kensington, Vests, Hammonds, Caligraph, Barlocks, Fitch, &c., from 45. MS. Copied with accuracy and despatch at lowest rates. Highest references. Illustrated Catalogue free.—N. TAYLOR, Manager, National Type-Writer Exchange, 74, Chancery Lane, London (Holborn end).

CATALOGUES

FOREIGN BOOKS AND PERIODICALS
promptly supplied on moderate terms.
CATALOGUES on application.
DULAU & CO., 37, SOHO SQUARE.

BAEDEKER'S & BADDELEY'S
TOURISTS' GUIDE BOOKS.
New fully detailed Catalogue sent post free on application.
DULAU & CO., 37, SOHO SQUARE, LONDON, W.

FOREIGN BOOKS AT FOREIGN PRICES.

WILLIAMS & NORGATE,
Importers of Foreign Books,
11, HENRIETTA STREET, COVENT GARDEN,
AND
20, SOUTH FREDERICK STREET, EDINBURGH.
CATALOGUES post free on application.

TH. WOHLLEBEN,
FOREIGN BOOKSELLER,
45, GREAT RUSSELL STREET
(Opposite the British Museum),
Supplies all FOREIGN BOOKS and PERIODICALS at the most moderate prices.
Catalogues on application.

AGENCY FOR AMERICAN BOOKS.
G. P. PUTNAM'S SONS, PUBLISHERS
and BOOKSELLERS, of 27 and 29 West 23rd Street, New York, and 24, BEDFORD STREET, LONDON, W.C., desire to call the attention of the READING PUBLIC to the excellent facilities presented by their Branch House in London for filling, on the most favourable terms, orders for their own STANDARD PUBLICATIONS, and for ALL AMERICAN BOOKS and PERIODICALS.—CATALOGUES sent on application.

ST. BARTHOLOMEW'S HOSPITAL and COLLEGE.

OPEN SCHOLARSHIPS.

Four Scholarships and One Exhibition, respectively worth £150, £75, £75, £50, and £20 each. One Senior Open Scholarship of the value of £75 will be awarded to the best candidate (if of sufficient merit) in Physics and Chemistry. One Senior Open Scholarship of the value of £75 will be awarded to the best candidate (if of sufficient merit) in Biology and Physiology.

Candidates for these Scholarships must be under twenty-five years of age, and must not have entered to the Medical and Surgical Practice of any London medical school.

One Junior Open Scholarship in Science, value £150, and one Preliminary Scientific Exhibition, value £50, will be awarded to the best candidates under twenty years of age (if of sufficient merit) in Physics, Chemistry, Animal Biology, and Vegetable Biology. The questions for the Scholarship of £150 will be of about the range required for Honours in the London University Preliminary Scientific Examination, and those for the Preliminary Scientific Exhibition will be of about the Exhibition (value £20) will be completed for at the same time. The subjects of examination are Latin, Mathematics, and any one of the three following languages—Greek, French, and German.

The Classical subjects are those of the London University Matriculation Examination of June, 1894.

The successful candidates in all these Scholarships will be required to enter to the full course at St. Bartholomew's Hospital in the October succeeding the Examination. The Examination for these Scholarships will be held on September 26th, 1894.

For particulars, application may be made, personally or by letter, to the WARDEN of the College, St. Bartholomew's Hospital, E.C.

WELSH INTERMEDIATE EDUCATION ACT, 1893.

MONTGOMERY COUNTY SCHEME.

The County Governing Body are prepared to appoint—

A HEAD MASTER for the COUNTY INTERMEDIATE SCHOOL (Mixed) at MACHYNILETH, Montgomeryshire, at a salary of £100 per annum, with a Capitation payment of £1 10s. for each scholar.

A HEAD MASTER for the COUNTY INTERMEDIATE SCHOOL (Boys) at LLANILLOEN, Montgomeryshire, at a salary of £100 per annum, with a Capitation payment of £2 for each boy.

A HEAD MISTRESS for the COUNTY INTERMEDIATE SCHOOL (Girls) at LLANILLOEN, at a salary of £100 per annum, with a Capitation payment of £1 10s. for each girl.

The Schools are expected to be shortly opened—Machynlleth with about 30 scholars, and Llanilloen with about 30 boys and 15 girls.

A Head Master must have taken a Degree in the United Kingdom or in the British Possessions. A Head Mistress must have taken a Degree, or passed such University Examination as would, in case of a man, have qualified for a Degree, and also have been trained as a Teacher.

Copies of the Scheme, giving full particulars, may be obtained from the undersigned, price Sixpence.

Applications, stating age and qualifications, and accompanied by thirty copies of Testimonials, must be sent in addressed "Clerk of the County Council, Welshpool, and marked "For County Governing Body," not later than 31st September next, and applicants are requested to state which of the subjects to be taught in the schools they can themselves teach. A good knowledge of Welsh is in every case indispensable.

Geo. D. HARRISON,
Clerk to the County Council, Welshpool.

UNIVERSITY COLLEGE of SOUTH WALES and MONMOUTHSHIRE, CARDIFF.

The TWELFTH SESSION will begin on MONDAY, October 8th, 1894. For information about the Entrance Scholarship and Exhibition Examination in September send for the College Prospectus, which gives full information in regard to the Faculties of Arts, Science, and Medicine, the Departments of Engineering and Mining, and the Departments for the Training of Teachers in Elementary and Secondary Schools, apply to

IVOR JAMES, Registrar.

University College, Cardiff, August 15th, 1894.

DEPARTMENT of SCIENCE and ART, NATIONAL ART TRAINING SCHOOL, South Kensington, S.W.

Principal—JOHN C. L. SPARKES, Esq.
The ANNUAL SESSION, 1894-95, will commence on WEDNESDAY, October 3rd. Art Classes in connection with the Training School are open to the Public on payment of fees. The Classes for Men and Women Students meet separately.

The Studies comprise Ornament and the Figure, with a view to their ultimate use in Design and Composition, and include the study of Plants and Flowers, the Painting of Still Life, and the Drawing and Painting of Ornament and of the Figure.

Candidates for admission who have not passed any Examination of the Department in Freshland Drawing must pass the Admission Examination in that subject.

This Examination will be held at the School on October 2nd and 9th, at 11.45 a.m. and 6.45 p.m. on both days, and on subsequent Tuesdays at frequent intervals during the Session.

Application for further information may be made in writing to the SECRETARY, Department of Science and Art, S.W., or, on and after October 3rd, personally, to the REGISTRAR, at the School, Exhibition Road, S.W.

By order of the Lords of the Committee of Council on Education.

VICTORIA UNIVERSITY.

THE YORKSHIRE COLLEGE, LEEDS.

The Sixty-fourth Session of the Medical Department and the Twenty-first Session of the Department of Science, Technology, and Arts begin OCTOBER 8th.

The Classes prepare for Professions, Commerce, and University Degrees in Arts, Science, and Medicine. The Physical, Chemical, Biological, Engineering, and Leather Industries Laboratories, and the Weaving Sheds, Day-house, and Printing Rooms will be open daily for Practical Work.

The following Prospectuses may be had free from the REGISTRAR:—

1. For Regular Day Students.
2. For Occasional and Evening Students.
3. Classes in Agriculture.
4. For Medical Students.

A Hall of Residence for College Students has been established.

THE DURHAM COLLEGE of SCIENCE NEWCASTLE-UPON-TYNE.

The College represents the Faculties of Science and Engineering in the University of Durham, and is open to Students of either sex.

In addition to the Departments of Pure Science, complete Courses of Instruction are provided in Agriculture, Engineering, Naval Architecture, and Mining. There are also Departments of Literature, Classics, History, Modern Languages, Fine Art, &c.

A House of Residence for Women Students is attached to the College.

The SESSION commences SEPTEMBER 24th, 1894.

Full particulars will be found in the College Calendar, price 1s. Prospectuses will be forwarded on application free.

H. F. STOCKDALE, Secretary.

THE CAMBRIDGE TRAINING COLLEGE for WOMEN TEACHERS.

Principal—Miss E. P. HUGHES, late of Newnham College.

The Students attend the Cambridge University Lectures on Teaching, and have ample opportunity for teaching in various schools in Cambridge.

The object of the College is to give a professional training to educated women who intend to teach. In addition to the course of training, it offers the advantages of a college life, and one year's residence in Cambridge.

Students are admitted in January and in September. Full particulars may be obtained by application to the PRINCIPAL.

UNIVERSITY COLLEGE, LONDON.

LECTURES ON ZOOLOGY.

The General Course of LECTURES on ZOOLOGY, by Professor W. F. R. WELDON, F.R.S., will COMMENCE on WEDNESDAY, October 3rd, at 1 p.m.

LONDON SCHOOL of MEDICINE for WOMEN.

30, HARSHILL STREET, BRUNSWICK SQUARE, W.C., and the ROYAL FREE HOSPITAL, prepare for all the Medical Examinations open to Women. Entrance Scholarship, value £50. Saint Mill Scholarship, £20 a year for four years; Mackay Prizes of £25 each, &c.—Apply to SECRETARY at School.

TECHNICAL CLASSES for GENTLEMEN.

WOMEN, with instruction in Housewifery and the Care of Children. Boudiers, weekly handouts, and day-students received.—Address MISS E. C. SHARLAND, S. Andrew's, Wulford, Herts.

EDINBURGH.—SUPERIOR BOARD

offered for STUDENT in professional gentleman's family; large house; good locality. Highest references.—No. 598, Robertson & Scott, Hanover Street, Edinburgh.

EDUCATION.—Particulars as to the best

University or Army Tutors and Schools for Boys or Girls, at home or abroad, may be obtained, free of charge, by sending a statement of requirements to R. J. BELVOIR, M.A., 8, Lancaster Place, Strand.

BRITISH MUSEUM.

The READING ROOMS will be CLOSED from SATURDAY, SEPTEMBER 1st, to WEDNESDAY, SEPTEMBER 6th, inclusive.

E. MACPHER THOMPSON,
Principal Librarian and Secretary.

British Museum, 21st August, 1894.

IMPORTANT.—PRINTING and PUBLISHING NEWSPAPERS, MAGAZINES, BOOKS,

&c.—KING, SELL & RAILTON, Limited, high-class Printers and Publishers, 12, Gough Square, 4, Bolt Court, Fleet Street, E.C. have specially-built Rotary and other fast Machines for printing illustrated or other Journals, and specially-built Machines for fast folding and covering 16 or 32 page Journals at one operation.

Facilities upon the premises for Editorial Offices, free. Advertising and Publishing Departments conducted.

Telephone 2759. Telegraph, "Africanism, London.

CORNHURY PARK, near CHARLBURY, OXON.
One mile from Charlbury Station on the Oxford and Worcester Section, G.W.R.

Important Sale of the accordingly Choice and Valuable Contents of the above Mansion, included in which will be the Fine and Valuable Collection of 120 Massive OIL PAINTINGS, principally by the Old Masters, embracing many specimens of the Flemish, French, and Italian Schools, including examples from Rubens, Jordaens, Eyt, Rembrandt, Murillo, Bassano, Guido, Molinari, Cuyt, Panini, Lebrun, Teniers, Velasquez, Castelli, Wouwermans, Jereveldt, Hackart, De Heem, and many others.

The AUCTIONEERS beg respectfully to call attention to the Valuable Collection of PICTURES in this Sale, amongst which will be found a Series of Twelve powerfully Painted Works, representing "The Twelve Apostles," by Jordaens.

The whole will be on view on the Friday and Saturday previous to the Sale, between the hours of 10 and 4, on presentation of Catalogue (price 3d. each), obtainable at the Offices of the Auctioneers, Ascott, near Wallingford, and Frewin Court, Corn Market Street, Oxford.

N.B.—The Sale of the Oil Paintings will take place on Friday, September 7th.

RICHARD BENTLEY & SON'S LIST.

Just ready, price One Shilling.

THE TEMPLE BAR MAGAZINE.

CONTENTS for SEPTEMBER, 1894.

- I. THE ADVENTURESS. Chaps. IX.-XII.
- II. THE OLD CEMETERY at QUIBERON.
- III. POET, PARSON, and PAMPHLETEER.
- IV. THE DESMOND'S WAKE.
- V. LOUISA MARCHIONESS of WATERFORD.
- VI. THE DAFFODILS.
- VII. MADAME CHARLES REYBAUD.
- VIII. THE COLONEL'S STORY.
- IX. AT SET of SUN.
- X. AN AFTERNOON CALL.
- XI. HEINRICH HOFFMANN'S HISTORY.
- XII. ALEXANDER LORD PITSLIGO.
- XIII. CLIFF'S END FARM.
- XIV. "AT PUERI LUDENTES, REX ERIS, AIUNT—."

The HISTORY of the HONOURABLE ARTILLERY COMPANY of LONDON.

Including also a brief History of the American Branch of the Regiment founded at Boston in 1638. By Colonel G. A. RAIKES, F.S.A. 2 vols., with Portraits, Coloured Illustrations, and Maps, demy 8vo, 31s. 6d. each.

THE ANCIENT VELLUM BOOK of the COMPANY.

Being the Roll of Members from 1611 to 1682. Edited, with Notes and Illustrations, by Colonel RAIKES, F.S.A. Demy 8vo, 21s.

THE ROYAL CHARTER of INCORPORATION GRANTED by HENRY VIII., also the Royal Warrants, 1632-1889, and the Orders in Council relating to the Government of the Company. Edited by Colonel RAIKES, F.S.A. Demy 8vo, 7s. 6d.

New Novels Now Ready.

READY ON MONDAY NEXT.

THE ADVENTURESS.

By MRS. ANNIE EDWARDES, Author of "A Girted Girl," &c. In 1 vol., crown 8vo, 6s.

NOW READY.

WEDDED TO A GENIUS.

By NEIL CHRISTISON.

In 2 vols., crown 8vo. "An interesting study in psychology."—Athenaeum.

NOW READY.

AN INTERLOPER. By Frances

MARY PEARD, Author of "The Baroness," &c. In 2 vols., crown 8vo.

"A graceful and charming writer. Miss Peard's touch remains gentle even when raising the corner of the veil that conceals the depths of the heart. Her stories have the freshness and delicate colouring of the finished pastel."—Morning Post. "Miss Peard's latest book is also, we think, one of her best. The scene is laid at Poissy, and the sketch of provincial France is quaint and vivid."—Daily News.

NOW READY.

IN a CINQUE PORT: a Story

of Winchelsea. By E. M. HEWITT. In 8 vols., crown 8vo.

"The author seems to have been under the influence of the ancient, sea-forsaken Sussex city which he has chosen for the setting of his scenes. He describes lovingly and well, and those who know Winchelsea will take pleasure from the description, apart altogether from the plot and action of the story."—Daily Chronicle.

NOW READY.

A TROUBLESOME PAIR. By

LESLIE KEITH, Author of "Lisbeth," &c. In 3 vols., crown 8vo.

"The lively record of the difficulties encountered by a retired Indian officer who has undertaken to watch over the fortunes of two young step-sisters, lovely, high-bred, but, alas! also, for the colonel's peace of mind, too high-spirited to submit to the control of a resident chaperon."—Manchester Guardian.

A NEW EDITION. In 1 vol., crown 8vo, cloth, 6s.

DIANA TEMPEST. By Mary

HOLMONDELEY, Author of "Sir Charles Danvers," &c. "Diana Tempest" is a book to be read. It is more—it is a book to be kept and read again, for its characters will not pass into limbo with this year's fashions. It will stand in the front ranks of fiction for some time to come."—St. James's Gazette.

NOW READY.

MRS. ROMNEY. By Rosa N. Carey,

Author of "Nellie's Memories," &c. In 1 vol., small crown 8vo, 2s. "Miss Carey has the gift of writing naturally and simply, her pathos is true and unforced, and her conversations are sprightly and sharp."—Standard.

RICHARD BENTLEY & SON, New Burlington Street
Publishers in Ordinary to Her Majesty the Queen.

ALISON McLEAN'S SUCCESSFUL WORK.

In crown 8vo, cloth gilt, bevelled boards, 3s. 6d.

QUIET STORIES

FROM AN

OLD WOMAN'S GARDEN

By ALISON McLEAN.

WITH PHOTOGRAVURE FRONT BY H. R. STEER.

"It is seldom that so wholesome and refreshing an enjoyment is afforded to the contemporary novel reader as that which may be derived from the perusal of 'Quiet Stories.'"—Daily Telegraph.

"This little book is simply a gem. A few 'old summer pictures of the quiet hills, and human life as quiet at their feet,' make it up; but there is a world of art in the crystal clearness and perfect diction with which they are drawn."—Liverpool Mercury.

London: FREDERICK WARNE & CO.

IMPORTANT WORK ON THE HISTORY OF THE NOVEL.

A GUIDE TO BRITISH & AMERICAN NOVELS.

BEING A COMPREHENSIVE MANUAL TO BRITISH AND AMERICAN FICTION FROM THE EARLIEST PERIOD TO THE END OF 1893.

BY PERCY RUSSELL,

Author of "The Author's Manual," &c. Crown 8vo, cloth, 300 pp., price 3s. 6d. net; by post, 3s. 10d.

THE GUIDE CONTAINS A COMPLETE HISTORY OF THE NOVEL, LIVING NOVELISTS, AND NOVELISTS OF THE PAST.

BY THE SAME AUTHOR.

THE AUTHOR'S MANUAL.

WITH PRELIMINARY REMARKS

BY MR. GLADSTONE.

Seventh and Cheap Edition. With New Preface, 304 pp., crown 8vo, cloth, price 3s. 6d. net; by post, 3s. 10d. With Portrait.

"Mr. Russell's book is a very complete manual and guide for journalist and author. It is not a merely practical work—it is literary and appreciative of literature in its best sense. We have little else but praise for the volume."—Westminster Review.

LONDON: DIGBY, LONG & CO., PUBLISHERS, 15, BOUVERIE STREET, FLEET STREET, E.C.

THE

AUTOTYPE COMPANY

Has the honour to announce the Publication of

NINETY-THREE DRAWINGS

BY

ALBERT DURER,

Reproduced in Facsimile from Originals in the British Museum, and accompanied by Descriptive Text by

SIDNEY COLVIN, M.A.,

Keeper of Prints and Drawings, British Museum.

"The British Museum collection, reproduced in this volume, is," says Professor Colvin, "a fairly complete and representative survey of the several phases of Durer's activity as a draughtsman and sketcher during all periods of his career."

The Volume is Imperial folio, half-morocco, Plates Linen-Guarded and Interleaved. Edition 100 Copies.

Price Six Guineas.

THE AUTOTYPE FINE-ART CATALOGUE (New Edition), of 184 pages, with Illustrated Supplement, containing 68 Miniature Photographs of notable Autotypes, post free, ONE SHILLING.

"AUTOTYPE: a Decorative and Educational Art."

NEW PAMPHLET, FREE ON APPLICATION.

THE AUTOTYPE COMPANY,

74, New Oxford Street, London,

MR. WM. HEINEMANN'S LIST.

Now ready, Part I., price 2s. 6d. net.

A REVISED AND ENLARGED EDITION OF

REMBRANDT:

His Life, his Work, and his Time.

By ÉMILE MICHEL,

Member of the Institute of France.

Translated by FLORENCE SIMMONDS.

Edited and Prefaced by FREDERICK WEDMORE.

With 76 Full-page Plates, and 250 Text Illustrations.

. To be completed in 16 Monthly Parts.

"THE NOVEL OF THE TIME."

THE MANXMAN:

By HALL CAINE.

In 1 vol., price 6s.

MR. EDMUND GOSSE in the ST. JAMES'S GAZETTE.—"The fulness of the texture in this last novel, the brilliancy of the successive episodes, the gravity and intensity of the sentiment, the art with which the ever-deepening central tragedy is relieved by what is picturesque and what is comic—all this has only to be seriously considered to be highly appreciated. 'The Manxman' is a contribution to literature, and the most fastidious critic would give in exchange for it a wilderness of that deciduous trash which our publishers call fiction."

"Q" in the SPEAKER.—"But this is amazing. If he can only keep this up, he will have written one of the finest novels—English or foreign—of his time."

SCOTSMAN.—"It is the most powerful story that has been written in the present generation."

STANDARD.—"A singularly powerful and picturesque piece of work, extraordinarily dramatic."

BY THE SAME AUTHOR, 2s. 6d. each.

THE BONDMAN. | THE SCAPEGOAT.

CAPT'N DAVY'S HONEYMOON.

AT ALL LIBRARIES.

A VICTIM OF GOOD LUCK.

By W. E. NORRIS.

Author of "The Countess Radna," &c.

In 2 vols., crown 8vo, 12s.

THE POTTER'S THUMB.

By FLORA ANNIE STEEL,

Author of "From the Five Rivers,"

In 3 vols. Second Edition.

TIMES.—"Mrs. Steel has quickly risen to a front rank among our Anglo-Indian novelists. It is in the painting of native life that Mrs. Steel's merit distinctively resides. She opens to her readers the generally sealed book of the Hindu mind, and she is quick to seize upon certain grotesque and not altogether satisfactory results of grafting Western civilization and Western vulgarity upon the stately thought and manners of the East. Mrs. Steel's books are full of instruction and amusement, and no one who would understand somewhat more of this transition period of India than what he can learn from official optimists should delay to make acquaintance with them."

A NEW ONE-VOLUME NOVEL.

THE JUSTIFICATION OF ANDREW LEBRUN.

By FRANK BARRETT.

In 1 vol., crown 8vo, 6s.

THE PIONEER SERIES

OF ORIGINAL ONE-VOLUME NOVELS.

Post 8vo, in ornamental paper covers, 2s. 6d. net; uniformly bound in cloth, 3s. net.

THE NEW VOLUME.

THE WINGS OF ICARUS. By

LAURENCE ALMA TADEMA.

Previously published.

JOANNA TRAILL, SPINSTER.

By ANNIE E. HOLDSWORTH.

W. COURTNEY in the Daily Telegraph.—"The character of the spinster is admirably drawn throughout, with a sympathy and insight which reveal no small measure of artistic gift. Miss Truitt's story is both powerful and pathetic. One of the chief merits of the book is its easy and thoroughly vitalized style, which rises at one or two points to unusual strength and dignity."

GEORGE MANDEVILLE'S HUSBAND.

By C. E. RAIMOND.

Daily Chronicle.—"So vivid indeed is our sympathy with Rosina, the daughter of George Mandeville, a beautifully-drawn and touching figure, that we cannot but wish that the author had found some means of letting her live, though her death is doubtless the artistic culmination of the tragedy-comedy. The closing scenes are strongly realised and poignantly pathetic. One of the chief merits of the book is its easy and thoroughly vitalized style, which rises at one or two points to unusual strength and dignity."

LONDON:

WM. HEINEMANN, 21, BEDFORD STREET, W.C.

SATURDAY, AUGUST 25, 1894.

No. 1164, New Series.

THE EDITOR cannot undertake to return, or to correspond with the writers of, rejected manuscript.

It is particularly requested that all business letters regarding the supply of the paper, &c., may be addressed to the PUBLISHER, and not to the EDITOR.

LITERATURE.

Witnesses to the Unseen. By Wilfrid Ward. (Macmillans)

(First Notice.)

THE main part of a surgical operation does not consist in the severance, the "solution of continuity," but in the subsequent tying-up of blood-vessels and nerves. If the series of needed ligatures be imperfect, the operation has been badly done, and the consequent gaps and discharges betray simultaneously the place and nature of what should have been a healing constructive process. This rule, which holds good of physical, is also true of intellectual and spiritual dichotomies. In an age like our own, when the general condition of most thinking men is one of intellectual or spiritual disruption—when the scalpel is applied so vigorously to older creeds and traditional dogmas, and new conjunctions are attempted to be made, no phenomena are more frequently met with than defective ligatures. The knife has done its work well; and so far as the severance is the cause of new reorganisation and health, nothing could be more satisfactory, only that the after results—the sequelæ—are not what we hoped to see. So far from healing "by the first intention," the desired reunion consists of an imperfect section, while often the severed edges will not even meet—at least not continuously. These defects in intellectual or spiritual surgery are mostly manifested in the form of controversial treatises, wherein the writer recounts what he has gone through either by his own hand or by that of others, gravely assumes that the operation has been successful, but so recounts his experiences as to betray to the critical eyes of others their unsatisfactory result.

We have a magnificent specimen of these imperfect intellectual sections in this book of Mr. Wilfrid Ward. It is the best example we have recently seen of the arguments that might be employed in the Roman-Anglican controversy. Given a supposed cure in which Protestantism is alleged, like a diseased limb, to be severed from a healthy body, leaving an assumed tendency and claim to a complete Romanist cure, it is required to institute a critical investigation into the operation in order to determine whether the closure is really so entire as it claims to be, or whether the connected edges do not reveal moral gaps and puckers proving that their reunion is of a very imperfect kind.

The book consists of a number of essays all of which lead up to and imply the most interesting of all: viz., the last which is entitled, "The Wish to Believe." In form this is not so much an essay as a philosophical dialogue conducted by several friends, the onus ratiocinandi (I must not say probandi) of which is chiefly borne by Walton and Darlington, who might be respectively characterised as (1) a recent convert to Romanism, and (2) an able and philosophical agnostic with the negative constituents of his non-creed unduly developed. Obviously the men are types, or "Wardian Ideals," of the two most progressive thought energies of our day—rival champions in the great struggle of the intellectual and spiritual Armageddon which is being quietly fought out not only in England, but in every other part of aggressively enlightened Christendom. Darlington's position is described in terms which I must claim space to quote:

"When an undergraduate at Muriel College, Oxford . . . he had constantly heard those around him speak of the absurdity of expecting certainly on questions connected with another world, when all the arguments producible in favour of religious belief had by many of the very greatest minds been long since weighed in the balance and found wanting. . . . Who am I, thought he, that I should pretend to be positive as to the conclusiveness of arguments which Hume and Gibbon, Huxley and Spencer have felt to be inconclusive? Questions as to the immortality of the soul, the Divine origin of Christianity, and the like, should, he thought, be left alone by a sensible, rational man; the controversies in their regard might indeed have an historical interest, but no more. Dispassionate judges held them to be incapable of solution, and the idea of certainty in their regard had only arisen from the passionate craving, which exists in some minds, to have definite knowledge and grounds for hope as to the future, which in days when emotion was strong, and reason not very circumspect, led many to catch at any theory, however insufficiently proved, that professed to satisfy their desire. Some great intellects of mystical and ideal tendencies were led by this same desire to create systems of belief which should answer to the need of their own hearts, and should at the same time serve as a sanction for their moral code. To aid them in their endeavour, they had invoked these myths and traditions of the past which, in a more or less confused way, express the anticipations, hopes, and fears of nations in the course of their history, and the speculations of the popular mind; and out of these raw materials of emotion, desire, and tradition, supported by a certain measure of plausible argument a priori, they constructed their several religious theories" (pp. 157-158).

I have quoted the passage somewhat at length—not that its context is wholly exhausted—because I regard it as one of the crucial passages of the book. Darlington is the chosen agnostic of our time—the typical thinker who represents its most characteristic "Unfaith"—the polemical nine-pin set up in order to attest by its speeches and utter overthrow the skill of Mr. Ward at theological skittles. But with all due deference to the author's metaphysical acumen, he lacks the faculty of philosophical discrimination. To take an example, which indeed constitutes the πρότον ψεύδος of his book, he fails to perceive the profound difference between dogmatic negation and skeptical suspense—between absolute denial, and enquiring or perhaps merely tentative doubt. He shares the mischievous perversion of rudimentary philosophy so common in our time which orthodox theologians utilise in one direction, and unscrupulous agnostics in another, by means of which skepticism is confounded with negation, and the position of a negative dogmatist is assumed to differ fundamentally from that of a theological or scientific infallibilist. But this is by no means the only example of a want of philosophical discrimination which greatly undermines his reasoning. To take one more illustration from many similar ones. He tells us, à propos of the phrase that "the idea of religious certainly was utterly incompatible with exact thought," that the phrase "magnificently condemns as unworthy of notice many arguments which require for their reputation considerably greater power of exact thought than is possessed by him who disdainfully discusses them." The remark is just and well timed, but there is a finer discrimination which Mr. Ward has neglected, and that is the meaning of "exact" when applied to thought. Too often, as here by Mr. Ward, "exact" implies what is demonstrable objectively, as e.g. $2 + 2 = 4$, or "two parallel lines cannot enclose a space." But, taking it as an attribute of thought, its connotation is largely individualistic. Thus, it means vivacious, consistent, homogeneous, sincere, absolutely truthful subjectively. To take an example: "The belief in an infallible church is an imperative necessity for a Christian." Here, no doubt, the thought is "exact" to the intellect of a Cardinal Newman or Mr. Wilfrid Ward, but it is not exact in the sense of being an unusual proposition demonstrable objectively. Examples of a similar verbal haziness or want of perspicuity meet us throughout the book. Oftentimes they seem the outcome and unconscious indication of a mental haze to which thinkers who compel the Pegasus of metaphysics to do the drudgery of Romanist proselytism seem especially liable; but they are often examples of verbal juggling consciously employed ad majorem gloriam Dei by unscrupulous advocates in the same holy cause.

The result of Mr. Ward's ratiocination may be described as creating and inducing on the emotional side of Christian thought which Newman's Grammar of Assent tried to effect on its intellectual side: in other words, it tries to establish by such sentimental pleas as "the wish to believe" a condition of thought which makes the transition of a thoughtful pietistic Protestant, from his standpoint of intellectual and religious independence to that of some authoritative faith such as Romanism, not insuperably difficult. Readers who would see how the controversy is brought to a final issue may refer, if they will, to some of the pages towards the end, when Walton (probably Mr. Wilfrid Ward himself) is awarded an approximate victory over his rationalistic and semi-pietistic foe Mr. Darlington. We must not, however, suppose that Walton is a champion easily overthrown. Like his father before him, only grant Mr. Ward a few premises so specious and plausible, so sincere and innocent, so pietistic and spiritual, that a thoughtful Christian knows not how to dare to refuse them, and one is inveigled so unexpectedly and completely that his deliverance seems only possible at the cost of his consistency. Happily most men possess a kind of Categorical Imperative which is capable of determining an issue—supposing the Reason should not be equal to the task—in the teeth of all opposing reasons and probabilities. Especially is this the case with the Unseen regarded as a condition of existence (1) of a future world, (2) of Deity, (3) of some state of retribution.

Under these circumstances it seems a pity that Mr. Wilfrid Ward did not recast his essays, all of which had with one exception been already published, so far as to give a clearer answer to the question: What are the witnesses to the Unseen? Such an answer would necessarily have involved in its discussion the further issue: What is the value of the evidence in itself, in relation to the particular witness, and in the testimony proffered by him. The whole case might in this way assume—of course in an immeasurably improved form—some such external aspect and title as that of Sherlock's Trial of the Witnesses. We might well consider it as a celebrated cause which has repeatedly been brought forward to the scrutiny and verdict of thoughtful theologians. We might further describe Mr. Ward as a jealous advocate for the Unseen, and his book as representing in a typical form the latest rehearing of the trial. Mr. Ward holds a brief which has been transmitted to him by the philosophical theologians who have on previous occasions been engaged in the case, and especially by his celebrated father. That he has adduced wholly new witnesses on behalf of his client, we should hardly be justified in saying. New evidence, in a cause which has for so many centuries been before the intellect and spiritual discrimination of reasoning humanity, we could not expect. Nor can we say that he has manipulated the evidence, recently put forth by his father and his colleagues of the Ideal School, in so novel a manner as to have imparted to it corroborated strength. The cause—with all its engrossing interest for humanity—remains somewhat like comparing issues infinitely great with such as are infinitesimally small and jejune—such long-enduring pleadings as Jarndyce v. Jarndyce or Peebles against Plainstones, or any similar puzzlement of the legal intellect. The cause is not now more important than heretofore. The witnesses are not different, their number is not greater. The individual value of specific testimonies, the cumulative amount of the whole, is not more than it was wont to be. Revelation, Duty, Conscience, the witness of each and all, collectively and separately, of the various spiritual forces by which civilised and Christianised humanity is environed on every side: all these Categorical Imperatives testify as they were wont. The admitted progress of philosophical speculation and scientific inquiry is not more overpowering than it used to be. Nor, on the whole, is it less. Of the alternatives I incline hesitatingly to the theory that, as the world grows older, the scope of general knowledge more extended, and the ingenuousness of scientific men becomes greater and more explicit, the aggregate incidence or stress of testimony on behalf of the Unseen is more clearly seen and more candidly acknowledged. We have now little or nothing of that wholly negative dogma which asserts virtually that, because the evidence is invisible, it cannot exist. Such an unphilosophical extension of the individual man as the measure of all things—to quote the early Greek thinkers—is forbidden by our most enlightened thought. The mystery in which all seen things are involved is now recognised philosophically as involving all unseen things as well. The scientist, if he be wise, no longer initiates his scheme of thought by running a tilt against the clause of the Nicene Creed which unifies in a common conspectus all sensible and conceivable creations—"all things Visible and Invisible." At last he recognises the supreme distinction between dogmatic negation and true skepticism—namely, the position of doubting inquiry and the recognition, pace Mr. Ward, of probability as a sufficient basis of scientific and philosophical belief in all purely speculative subjects.

JOHN OWEN.

The Manxman. By Hall Caine. (Heinemann.)

THE author of The Deemster and The Scapegoat has for some time occupied a distinct position among our leading novelists. From the moment when Mr. Hall Caine entered the lists of fiction with the Shadow of a Crime, it became clear that he was a writer of bold conception and artistic power. He has now produced a work of rare merit and striking originality: a work which is all the more remarkable because, in regard to certain fundamentals, it marks a new departure in its author's aims. It marks the change from the ideal to the real, from that method of treatment which assumes for its main point of view life's possibilities to that which chiefly concerns itself with life's actualities. In The Deemster we had a stirring tale of the "Little Nation" in historic setting: a story of the "Purple Island" of former days as viewed through a glorified vista of legend and romance. With The Manxman it is different. The scene is once again laid in the Isle of Man; but it is the Man of our own time, with its crowds of trippers, its promenades, its bands and dancing saloons. Not that these things trouble us greatly, or that they add much to the realism of the narrative. That realism is deeper than any mere externals: it lies in the motives and actions of the persons concerned. Of these the central figures are three in number—Philip Christian, his bastard cousin Pete Quilliam, and Kate Cregeen. The plot is perhaps the simplest in its character, and yet the broadest in its possibilities, that Mr. Hall Caine has devised. Philip and Pete, devoted friends from boyhood, both love Kate, who is the daughter of Caesar Cregeen, a miller, innkeeper, and Methodist preacher. Pete is a rough, manly, ignorant islander, who, repelled by Caesar's reproaches of his poverty, goes off to Kimberley, to "make his fortune," and so prove himself worthy of the girl's hand. On his departure she is left by Pete in the guardianship of Philip:

"It is a familiar duty in the Isle of Man, and he who discharges it is known by a familiar name. They call him the Dooiney Molla—literally, the 'man-praiser'; and his primary function is that of an informal, unmercenary, purely friendly and philanthropic match-maker, introduced by the young man to persuade the parents of the young woman that he is a splendid fellow, with substantial possessions or magnificent prospects, and entirely fit to marry her. But he has a secondary function, less frequent, though scarcely less familiar; and it is that of lover by proxy, or intended husband by deputy, with duties of moral guardianship over the girl while the man himself is 'off at the herrings,' or away 'at the mackerel,' or abroad on wider voyages."

Philip belongs to a higher social station than Kate or Pete. His character is more refined, and his prospects are more ambitious than those of his rough-spun cousin. His conscientious attempts to discharge the duties of guardianship over Kate to which he is pledged only make him the more aware of his own affection for her; and, as for the girl herself, she discovers that the fancy she had indulged for Pete speedily flickers away before a deep and lasting passion for Philip. A report comes from Kimberley that Pete is dead. Apparently nothing now stands between Philip and Kate except the worldly ambitions of the former, who by this time is rising rapidly in his profession of a Manx advocate. Love conquers, and the two become finally pledged. The scene of culmination, where the lovers take their first fatal draught of the "wine of life," is a striking piece of writing: bold, free, and unconventional, but true as life itself. No more pregnant utterance in relation to the complicated tragedy of sex has ever been delivered than the reflection with which this fateful chapter closes:

"When a good woman falls from honour, is it merely that she is a victim of momentary intoxication, of stress of passion, of the fever of instinct? No. It is mainly that she is a slave of the sweetest, tenderest, most spiritual and pathetic of all human fallacies—the fallacy that by giving herself to the man she loves she attaches him to herself for ever. This is the real betrayer of nearly all good women that are betrayed. It lies at the root of tens of thousands of the cases that make up the merciless story of man's sin and woman's weakness. Alas! it is only the woman who clings the closer. The impulse of the man is to draw apart. He must conquer it, or she is lost. Such is the old cruel difference and inequality of man and woman as nature made them—the old trick, the old tragedy."

The report of Pete's death proves to have been false; and he returns, a rich man, to claim Kate for his wife. Philip is still climbing the ladder meanwhile, and finds that the social gulf between Kate and himself grows wider and wider. Then comes the crux of the whole story. Shall he renounce the world, or shall he yield to ambition and trample conscience underfoot? A last passionate but fruitless appeal is made by Kate, and very subtle is the insight by which the final weapon she thought to conquer with is made to prove her bane. The die is now cast; Kate thinks to redeem her forfeited honour by the marriage into which circumstances force her with the unsuspecting Pete. But that is only another false step: the child which is born is not her husband's; it is her lover's. Hence the tragedy of two lives becomes also the tragedy of a third, and complications ensue which result in the most engrossing developments. Philip becomes Deemster; he is on a fair way to be made Governor of the island; his career is a brilliant success. Regarded by his countrymen as the first Manxman of his time; loved and trusted beyond measure by the friend he has wronged most deeply, he knows himself for a whited sepulchre: he has gained the world and lost his own soul. Step by step he is led into deeper self-deception and self-abasement. Bitter, indeed, has proved the fruit of the tree of knowledge for both himself and Kate, who shares his sufferings with her own until the climax is attained and the work of self-redemption accomplished. What that climax consists in must be left to the reader, with the confident assurance that, when he has once taken up the book, he will be loth to lay it down until he has reached the close of one of the most enthralling novels of our time.

The relations between Philip and Pete throughout the tragic evolution of the story are depicted with a masterly hand. The trials of the latter are borne with the noblest devotion and disregard of self. Nothing could be more touching than his pathetically fatuous attempts, after his wife's flight, to "keep her name sweet" before all. And it is further proof of the author's constructive skill that, while feeling most deeply for Pete, our sympathies are none the less keenly evoked for Philip, whose friendship with the former is sustained to the end. Kate is undoubtedly Mr. Hall Caine's strongest heroine, the most complex, lifelike, and fascinating woman he has given us. It would be difficult to say in what precise degree she may be held to have relation with that perennial question of sexual ethics which, in its modern aspect, is the literary craze of the hour. But she certainly serves to show that that question is not quite the one-sided affair which many of its exponents would have us believe. It is a stroke of truthful interpretation by which, with all her essential purity, she is made to bear her full share of responsibility for that fatal fall which provides the motif of the book.

It is plain that Mr. Hall Caine's conception of the novelist's vocation is a serious and lofty one. He is no mere purveyor of literary confections. The world which he discovers to us is no gaudy variety show, with puppets dressed up for the passing amusement of an idle crowd; it is a world of hard problems, in solving which poor mortals often beat their heads against the bars of fate and necessity. But it is also a world of rippling sunshine, of song-birds, of dancing seas and purple hills. No writer has a finer appreciation for the beneficencies of Nature, or a keener perception for its transient moods of weird gloom. Hence his pages are studded with charming vignettes of natural scenery. Then, too, not only have we searching illumination of the nooks and crannies of humanity, delicate exposures of life's "little ironies" and sarcasms; but we have also abundant episodes of blithesome humour, of native wit and racy repartee, which serve at once to vivify character and to enliven the tragic force of the narrative.

With some readers the question may conceivably arise, whether the author has not somewhat overstrained the claims of poetic justice in the long-drawn punishment he metes out to his suffering heroes and heroine. Is there not here a lack of artistic restraint? Is it true that one lapse from virtue may entail such dread consequences? Do the scorpions of fate lash their victims with such absolutely relentless severity? For my part, the answer must be in the author's favour. I acknowledge that the reader's feelings are strained to a high degree. But a writer who would be true to his mission must be true to life, he must deal with human nature as he finds it. In this aspect of The Manxman there is, doubtless, much that will repel those who regard the domain of fiction as confined to an apotheosis of the commonplace. But the novelist who "lays up his account with Nature" must go deeper than this, and in the projection of an ethical treatment of the problems of existence his methods must be seen to be justified by the results produced. Certain conditions being given, certain consequences must follow. In The Manxman the consequences seem to me no more than the adequate results of their antecedent conditions; and, tried by this test, the suffering depicted is simply an expansion of the old and universal truth, "Be sure thy sins will find thee out."

The characterisation of the book as a whole is unusually effective. Aunt Nan is a beautiful figure; Nancy and Grannie are as fine in their way; Caesar Cregeen, the self-seeking Methodist fanatic, is a distinct creation, though one is impelled to hope that he may hardly be regarded as the representative type of a Manx religious. The local colouring is excellent. Present-day life in the "little island" is portrayed with vigour, knowledge, and faithfulness. The Manx laws, dialect, folklore, customs, superstitions, and racial peculiarities; the struggles and grievances of the fishermen; the social caste and exclusiveness of insular officialdom—all are vividly mirrored with sympathetic skill. No less noticeable is the style of the work—pure, strong, and rich; many of the scenes are examples of really splendid writing. The Manxman is indubitably the finest book that Mr. Hall Caine has yet produced. It is a noble contribution to the enrichment of English fiction and the advancement of its author's fame.

HIRAM TATTERSALL.

Things I have Seen and People I have Known.
By George Augustus Sala. In 2 vols.
(Cassells.)

MR. SALA is in the happy position of one whose recollections and experiences can hardly fail to arouse keen interest. He has had a long and varied career as a journalist, and for many years has occupied a place in the first rank of a profession to which the great bulk of the literary power of our time has been devoted. Few can doubt that his writings in the Daily Telegraph, whether as leading articles or descriptive letters, have been at least an important factor in the success of that paper. It may prevent some misapprehension if we state that the present volumes are not to be taken for the autobiography which he has promised to give us, and which, we are pleased to learn, is likely to appear before another twelvemonth has elapsed. In his own words, they are only a collection of essays and sketches on the manners of his time, and reminiscences of the many different sorts of persons he has met. Now and then it has been inevitable that he should talk about himself; but he has "done his best to present his own individuality only in the form of a peg on which objects of real interest might be suspended." His real life-history, he adds, is reserved for the autobiography already mentioned.

Perhaps no author of such a work as that under notice has ever suffered more from an over abundance of material. To show this, we have only to quote the following glance backwards that he takes in his preface:

"It is something to be able to tell the present generation that I have seen Louis Philippe while he was still King of the French; that I have seen Soult, Thiers, Guizot, and Lamartine; that I have witnessed three revolutions in the French capital; that I followed Garibaldi in his campaign in the Tyrol; that I have heard Daniel O'Connell deliver a speech at the London Tavern; that I knew Lord Palmerston; that I knew the first Lord Brougham; that I was in the Franco-Mexican War and at the storming of Puebla; that I spent thirteen months in America when she was in the midst of war; that I was personally acquainted with Abraham Lincoln, with Seward, with Staunton, with Charles Sumner, with Bancroft (the historian), with Longfellow and with Bayard Taylor, with Grant and with MacClellan, with Horace Greeley, Raphael Semmes, and Jefferson Davis. I have conversed at Algiers with the Emperor Napoleon III.; I have been patted on the head by the great Duke of Wellington; I lived in Cuba when there were negro slaves there, and in Russia when there were millions of white serfs in the dominions of the Tsar. I can remember to have seen the Tsar Nicholas himself at Ascot races; I attended the funeral of the assassinated Alexander II. and the coronation of Alexander III.; I was in Constantinople when the first Turkish Constitution was proclaimed from the steps of the Old Seraglio, and I can hear now the unanimous shouts of 'Amin' from the Moslem troops present. From the organ loft of St. George's Chapel, Windsor, I have witnessed the funerals of the Duchess of Kent, of the Prince Consort, of the King of Hanover, and of the Duke of Clarence. From the same coign of vantage I have watched the nuptials of the Prince of Wales and the Princess Alexandra of Denmark, of the Duke of Connaught, and of the Duke of Albany. I saw the coronation procession of Her Majesty Queen Victoria, and I was in Westminster Abbey at the royal Jubilee service, and in St. Paul's Cathedral at the thanksgiving service for the recovery from sickness of the Prince of Wales; and I beheld the second funeral of Napoleon the Great. I have seen twelve murderers hanged, including Rush and the Mannings. I have eaten the turtle of twenty-five Lord Mayors; and I was at the farewell banquet given to Charles Dickens prior to his second visit to America. Dickens and Thackeray were the friends of my youth, my editors in my maturity. I have been round the world, and seen things and people in California and the Sandwich Islands, in Australia and New Zealand, in India and Ceylon. I have seen Macready, Charles Kean, Tyrone Power, the elder Farren, Charles Mathews, Mme. Vestris, Mrs. Glover, Mrs. Nesbitt, Rachel, Déjazet, Frédéric Lamaitre act. I have heard Pasta, Malibran, Grisi, Persiani, Rubini, Tamburini, Lablache sing; and have seen Taglioni, Fanny Ellsler, Cerrito, and Duvernay dance. I have watched for more than half a century the transformation of the British metropolis, and the wonderful changes which have come over the manners of the English people."

It would be strange indeed if a clever writer with a record like this could not give us a delightful collection of reminiscences.

Mr. Sala has made a good use of his opportunity. His style is marked by much of its old graphic force, and the attractiveness of his matter has not been discounted to any large extent by his familiar "Echoes of the Week." Not a few readers will turn at the outset to his impressions of Thackeray and Dickens, with whom, it will have been seen, he was intimately acquainted. Of the former he writes:

"From the bottom of my heart I contend that he was not a cynic. I mean that he entertained no morose nor contemptuous views and tenets touching human nature. The real cynic has the qualities of the surly dog: he snarls, he is capacious, he is surly, curish, ill-conditioned. Bishop Berkeley speaks of 'cynical content in dirt and beggary.' Thackeray, on the contrary, loved light and culture and luxury. I have heard him say that he liked to go to his bed-chamber at night with a wax taper and a silver candlestick. That was merely a frank way of saying that he preferred the elegancies of life to squalor and ugliness. He has been unjustly termed a cynic, because he could not help being a satirist; but although he was a master of irony, and on occasion could use the scalpel with effect as terrible as ever it had been used by Juvenal, by Dryden, or by Pope, I never heard him say one unkindly thing of human weakness or frailty or misfortune. Like Fontenelle, he might have averred on his death-bed that he had never uttered the slightest word against the smallest virtue."

One essential difference between Thackeray and Dickens is thus noted:

"The author of Vanity Fair was a master of anecdote, persiflage, and repartee; he was a varied and fluent linguist; he was a lover and practitioner of art; he was saturated with seventeenth and eighteenth century literature, both French and English; and he could hold his own with such masters of conversation as Abraham Hayward and Richard Monckton Milnes (Lord Houghton), and with such a formidable epigrammatist and wit as Douglas Jerrold. Dickens, on the other hand, seldom talked at length on literature, either of the present or the past. He very rarely said anything about art; and for what is usually termed 'high art' I think that he had that profound contempt which is generally the outcome of lack of learning. Indeed, when I first visited Venice, and wrote for him an article called "A Poodle at the Prow"—my text being a gondola on the Grand Canal and the gondolier's dog—he expressed himself as especially pleased with my production, on the ground that it contained 'no cant about art.' What he liked to talk about was the latest new piece at the theatres, the latest exciting trial or police case, the latest social craze or social swindle, and especially the latest murder and the newest thing in ghosts. He delighted in telling short droll stories, and occasionally indulging in comic similes and drawing waggish parallels. . . . His conversation, I am bound to say, once for all, did not rise above the amusing commonplaces of a very shrewd, clever man of the world, with the heartiest of hatred for shams and humbugs."

Dickens, like his friend Delane, was ardently attached to the principle of impersonality in periodical literature. If the young men whom he gathered round him to write for Household Words—Blanchard Jerrold, Sala, Sydney Blanchard, Moy Thomas, Walter Thornbury, John Hollingshead, James Payn, and the rest—were accused of being imitators of his style, it was partly because, their names not being printed, he interpolated characteristic touches of his own in their articles. Mr. Sala, as may be supposed, is by no means in favour of such secrecy:

"It had two evil consequences to us, 'the young men.' In the first place, when an attractive article appeared in Household Words, which might have been the work either of one of my colleagues or of myself, people used to say that 'Dickens was at his best that week,' whereas in many cases in that particular number he had not written a single line except the weekly instalment of the 'Child's History.' . . . I can say, for one, that I materially suffered from this systematic suppression of my name, for about 1853 or 1854 I purchased at M. Dentu's bookstall, in the Palais Royal, Paris, a work in French purporting to be the 'Nouveaux Contes de Charles Dickens,' translated by M. Amédée Pichot, and among the ten or twelve stories in this collection I recognised translations of my own 'Key of the Street,' and, I think, of another article of my writing. Now this, judged by the present standard of literary ethics, was decidedly unfair to the rising authors who served their Chief with so much enthusiastic loyalty. In the next place, by the strict preservation of the anonymous, Dickens unwittingly retarded, not only the literary, but also the commercial prospects of his staff. I did not repine: . . . still now, in my old age, I cannot be blind to the fact that I began to work with Dickens in 1851, and that when I temporarily severed my connexion with him, about seven years afterwards, I was wholly and entirely unknown to the general public."

Not that the illustrious novelist wished to have any credit except that which rightly belonged to him:

"I do not think that Dickens, who was one of the kindest, the justest, and the most generous of mankind, had the remotest notion that he was putting a bushel over the lights of his staff, that he was keeping them in that obscurity which inevitably meant indigence, while he was attaining, and properly attaining, every year greater fame and greater fortune. It was a mistake on his part; but it was one that was shared by very many of the conductors of magazines and periodicals of his time. Only very few of those magazines and periodicals were of the literary calibre of Household Words."

Considerations of space prevent me from giving more than a brief indication of the scope of Mr. Sala's work. Besides the recollections of Thackeray and Dickens, he speaks, among other things, of Paris fifty years ago, the removal of the remains of Napoleon I. to the Invalides, the early days of the English railway, the American Civil War, experiences in a Mexican sombrero, London life in the past, taverns that have vanished, and old pantomimes, operas, songs, and pictures. On all these subjects he may be heard with equal profit and pleasure.

FREDERICK HAWKINS.

History of the English Landed Interest: its Customs, Laws, and Agriculture. Vol. II. Modern Period. By Russell M. Garnier. (Sonnenschein.)

In the present volume Mr. Garnier continues his earlier work on the same subject, and traces the agrarian history of the eighteenth and nineteenth centuries.

There was certainly much room for a book of this nature. Though of course many of the topics here dealt with have been often treated of by different writers in various connexions, yet the field as a whole has hardly been occupied before, and our author has certainly many qualifications for the task he has set before himself.

As we gather from an incidental allusion, he has himself been a land agent, and his knowledge of the practical and technical details of his subject is amply evidenced in the pages before us. At the same time, he cannot be said to be entirely free from prejudice. He writes throughout in the tone of a decided partisan of the landed aristocracy of England, and has but little liking for those who have sought to curtail their powers and privileges. The words which he applies to the late Prof. Rogers are equally applicable to himself, if for "labourer" in the following passage we substitute "landlord":—"The learned historian holds a brief for the labourer, and cross-examines with all the severity of a special pleader any witness hostile to his cause."

There is a kind of melancholy ring in the chapter in which Mr. Garnier describes "The descent of the landlords from political supremacy." "Where," he mournfully asks, "shall we look for a substitute of that aristocracy of the soil, which it is part and parcel of the Englishman's idiosyncrasy to venerate?"

In spite of this "idiosyncrasy," however, it appears that things are in a bad way with the landed proprietors:

"No one can foretell how long the hereditary right of the peer to legislate, which owes its origin to the ancient claim of the tenant in capite to a seat in the curia regis, will be suffered to continue. The political supremacy of the landlord was wrested from him by the Reform Bills. Most of his powers over the peasant went early in this century. . . . Now his judicial powers are menaced with extinction. . . . Are we soon then to witness his final extinction; an inevitable occurrence, if only our legislators proceed much further with their present policy?"

There is here, it may be noted, the old confusion between the curia regis and the magnum concilium, which a more careful reading of Bishop Stubbs would have enabled the author to avoid. The curia was a judicial body, and never comprised more than a small number of royal officials. It was the concilium, the representative of the ancient Witenagemot, which every tenant in chief had a theoretical right to attend.

The following assertion, too, seems to imply a very questionable theory as to the origin of property in land. "Surely the rights of property are an institution which antedates that of society, and for the defence of which society was created." This appears to indicate an imperfect acquaintance with the researches of Sir Henry Maine and others of the same school, which have made it evident that individual ownership was a comparatively late development out of the earlier system of tribal holding. Though he avows himself a free-trader, Mr. Garnier has a kind of hankering after protection, and looks back with a certain regret upon the Corn Laws.

"It is even yet too soon to pronounce a decided opinion whether the requirements of the community as a whole demand this entire and permanent sacrifice of the English landlord in favour of the foreign agriculturist. We cannot tell what might not have occurred had even slight duties on imported grain been in force when, for example, the Trafalgar Square meetings of the unemployed were taking place, or now that the excess of the labour supply over the demand is prompting men to advocate the diminution by the state of their working hours."

Certainly we cannot tell exactly what might have happened in these cases; but one thing we may be sure of, that dearthness of provisions could only aggravate and not mitigate the social evils of our time. Perhaps it is doing the author an injustice to suppose that he seriously intends to dispute this; but if so, the first sentence of the above quotation is hardly consistent with the last.

Apart, however, from matters of controversy, there is much that is valuable and interesting in this volume. In a chapter entitled "Amateur Farming" we have graphic sketches of several distinguished theoretical and practical agriculturists of the last century. Especially may be mentioned an excellent estimate of the merits and defects of the character and writings of Arthur Young. There is also an interesting account of the agricultural side of George III., or "Farmer George," for whom the writer has clearly a sneaking kindness.

"Let, then, all who are interested in agriculture forget the poor old king's stubborn prosecution of the American War, and other political blunders, for the sake of those benefits he undoubtedly conferred by the force of his example upon farmers. We, for our part, would fain obliterate from our thoughts the sad significance of the padded room at Kew, and remember only the red face beaming with suppressed merriment over the Windsor uniform as, like Alfred of old, its owner turned the piece of roasting meat in the cottage kitchen. We prefer to dwell on his attempts to get rid of tritium repens from the farm, rather than on his efforts to weed the high seas of the French."

In a chapter on "Minerals and Mines" the author has brought to light some interesting facts in the department of mining antiquities. It appears that the claim to exact tithe on minerals had its origin in a curious popular superstition.

"The people ignorantly imagined that the ore was a living organism; and the clergy probably shared this superstition, for we decline to accuse them of dishonestly trading on it. At any rate, they extracted therefrom no little profit to their own pockets. Tithe was only legal on such products of the earth as renewed themselves annually, and this definition was considered by the clergy to include the lead ore in the vein—a delusion which remained universal up to a very late date."

R. SEYMOUR LONG.

NEW NOVELS.

A Hunted Life. By J. Fogerty. In 3 vols. (Hutchinson.)

A Bankrupt Heart. By Florence Marryat. In 3 vols. (White.)

The Boss of Taroomba. By Ernest William Hornung. (Bliss, Sands & Foster.)

Doctor Quodlibet. By the Author of "John Orlebar." (The Leadenhall Press.)

Shallows. By Myra Swan. In 2 vols. (Hurst & Blackett.)

A Daughter of To-day. By Mrs. Edward Cotes (Sara Jeannette Duncan). In 2 vols. (Chatto & Windus.)

Vignettes. By G. E. Hodgson. (Fisher Unwin.)

The Shadows of Life. By Charles Moyer. (Frederick Warne.)

IRISH vendettas have formed the groundwork of many novels; and the latest worker in this field is Mr. J. Fogerty, whose exciting story, A Hunted Life, is just clever enough to make us wish it were cleverer. It is a pity that the author, when planning his work, did not make up his mind what he was going to do with his characters. For example, throughout his first volume by far the most piquant personage is Juanita Morony, a beautiful Spanish-Hibernian maiden. We think there are interesting passages in store between her and James Forbes, and we have just got deeply interested in her, when she suddenly drops out of the narrative, never to be seen or heard of again. It is this failure in construction which is inimical to Mr. Fogerty's success. We can scarcely believe that the writer of A Hunted Life is the same person who wrote that remarkable novel, Lauterdale, nearly twenty years ago. Yet he has plenty of talent, and humour and pathos at his command. The first volume of the story before us is full of smart sayings, and Irish life and character are delineated with real insight. The second and third volumes, with the terrible war waged by the brothers Ryan against their landlord, Mr. Power, and his son—which ends fatally in the latter case—contain several scenes of a powerful and tragic nature; but the general impression left by the novel as a whole is unsatisfactory. We get rather a series of pictures skilfully drawn than a homogeneous work; and for this reason we must still wait for Mr. Fogerty to redeem the promise of his earlier days.

It is impossible to congratulate Miss Marryat on the production of A Bankrupt Heart. Most of the characters are sordid, sensual, and despicable. The book opens with a sketch of the handsome Miss Llewellyn, a Welsh farmer's daughter, ostensibly the housekeeper but really the mistress of the Earl of Ilfracombe. Into her gilded cage of vice at Grosvenor Square falls the bombshell of an announcement that Lord Ilfracombe, who is at Malta, has cast her off in order to marry the daughter of Sir Richard Abinger. To do her justice, Nell Llewellyn seems to have loved the fickle peer deeply, and she now renounces all his offers of a settlement, and then proceeds to throw herself into the Thames. She is long supposed to be dead, but she was taken out of the river alive, and went back to her old home in Wales. Miss Abinger, who became Lady Ilfracombe, had been a fast young person, but she had just managed to save her virtue. However, she had had some discreditable passages with a certain "Jack" Portland, and to her horror she discovers that he is her husband's most intimate friend, and that he is doing his best to ruin him by cheating at cards. Lady Ilfracombe almost compromises herself to get back from Portland certain letters which she had written during their flirtations. Now comes in the Quixotic conduct of Miss Llewellyn. She loves Lord Ilfracombe with every fibre of her being, and finding that he loves his wife, she assists in bringing about a happy understanding between them. Not content with this, when she learns the nature of Portland's hold over Lady Ilfracombe, she promises to marry him—though she absolutely loathes him—on his delivering up to her the packet of letters. Having obtained it she gives it to Lady Ilfracombe amid much shedding of tears, and then she goes and takes poison to avoid marrying Portland. Sir Archibald and Lady Bowman are social harpies worthy of Portland. There is unfortunately not the faintest scintillation of talent in the narrative to redeem its unsavouriness.

Mr. Hornung gives us a clever and exciting Australian bush story in The Boss of Taroomba. The "boss" is not, as might be supposed, a rough, coarse settler, but a magnificent young woman named Naomi Pryse. Her physical beauty and noble disposition quite captivated young Engelhardt, a musical composer, who was driven for a time to pick up his living by tuning bush pianos; and Engelhardt himself was so different from all those by whom Naomi was surrounded that she returned his affection. But there were men on the station who were little better than demons, and the vilest of these was determined to wreak the foulest vengeance on Miss Pryse because she had rejected his overtures. Reinforced by two despicable villains, he made a night attack on the station, and it would have gone hard with Naomi and Engelhardt if they had not anticipated the assault and established a barricade. There are many strong scenes in Mr. Hornung's story.

The author of "John Orlebar" never wrote a better story than Doctor Quodlibet, which is a fine, healthy study of human nature under its nobler aspects. One scarcely knows whether to admire more the goodness of Bishop Quodlibet, with his daily acts of philanthropy; or Dr. Siegersson, who, to shelter the name of the woman he loved, suffered the prison stigma for a crime he had never committed. The nobility of his nature is only equalled by that of Jenny West, the heroine of this little sketch. We feel pity for Jenny's uncle, the Rev. John Meredith, one of those over-scrupulous, unworldly spirits who are left behind in the world's race. The author calls his narrative "a study in ethics"; but we like the extremely human way in which Doctor Quodlibet solved all difficult ethical problems by practical deeds of Christian kindness.

The writer of Shallows is evidently inexperienced in literature, but she possessed the root of the matter. Closer attention to construction, and a larger breadth of canvas, will make a novelist of her. Her present—shall we say her first?—venture in fiction is noticeable for its character studies; and chief of these is the little child Algy. It is difficult to draw children without making them either goody-goody with their wings spread for an angel-flight, or unconscionable prigs. Miss Swan has avoided these extremes, and sketched a child who is really natural. His little sayings are most amusing. When he visits Tattersall's with his father, and sees that "dogs are not admitted," he is so struck with the frequency of this announcement at public places, that he naively remarks, "There don't seem to be many amusements for dogs in London, daddy." But Algy Drummond is also a manly little fellow, and the part he plays in the reconciliation of his father and mother after their long estrangement is very touching. We cannot quite understand a young and happy wife behaving as Mrs. Drummond did, and going off to Homburg with a grass widow and a couple of officers; but as there is a happy issue to all jealousy and misunderstanding between husband and wife, the escapade has no disastrous consequences. The novel reveals considerable promise, but the author wants more grip and less effusiveness.

Sara Jeannette Duncan is an able and a thoughtful writer, but we do not think she has done herself justice in A Daughter of To-day. She has caught certain artificial developments of modern society, especially as affecting the "emancipated" young woman, and she has cleverly reproduced them. We are only speaking of the literary merits of the book, which are not so high as those of Miss Duncan's previous works; but as regards the chief character depicted, the failure is only attributable to the heroine herself, one Elfrida Bell, from the land of the Almighty dollar. It is rather hard to discover what the author is driving at; but at any rate Elfrida is a girl of decided talent, though it is by no means original as regards art, her first love. She drifts into journalism, first in Paris and then in London, but, although she succeeds by great smartness, she is distanced by people inferior in literary ability, such as her friend Janet Cardiff. Elfrida's ideas on art, love, marriage, &c., are crude; and at length—unable to reconcile her theories with life's experience—she commits suicide.

There is a nice touch in some of Mr. Hodgson's Vignettes, but beyond that we cannot go. There is the smallest quantity of matter that we have ever found in a volume of its size and price; but that of course would not matter, if the quality was all right. Here, however, lies our difficulty: Mr. Hodgson occasionally gives utterance to pretty sentiments and poetic thoughts, but some of his sketches are as without end as they might well have been without beginning. We must wait, as Carlyle said, to see what he is like when he writes a real book.

There is a fearsome illustration, portending trouble of some kind, on the back of Mr. Charles Meyer's shilling "shocker," The Shadows of Life. The author states that he has drawn his characters from life, and some of his sketches are undoubtedly exciting. But we hope that detective stories are coming to the end of their reign; it is quite time that the higher class of literature had its turn.

G. BARNETT SMITH.

SOME VOLUMES OF VERSE.

Lallan Songs and German Lyrics. By Ralph Macleod Fullarton (Blackwoods). There is much to welcome in Mr. Fullarton's book. It appears from a preface that some of the translations from Heine and Goethe, which now follow the Lallan Songs, appeared so long ago as 1858 at Cambridge in one of those undergraduate magazines which come and go with such rapidity. We may say at once that we are glad to have these scholarly renderings of foreign masterpieces put within our reach, for indeed they are worth perusing, and worth remembering. Surely all those who know the original of the translation quoted below, will be prepared to acknowledge that the English version is skilled work, a piece of very wise simplicity.

"Once in a dream I wept;
In the grave I saw thee lie;
I woke ere yet the tear
Upon my cheek was dry.

"Again in a dream I wept;
I dreamed thou deserted'st me;
I woke, and a long long time
I wept on bitterly.

"Once more in a dream I wept;
I dreamed thou wast true to me still;
I woke, and have wept ever since,
And never can weep my fill."

Among these translations there are other specimens of Mr. Fullarton's exceptional ability in representing German lyrics in English, which deserve more recognition than we are able to give in the brief space at our disposal. We are tempted to leave the excellence of the second part of this volume by the undoubted beauty of some of the songs in Scots, which represent the author as a creator of melodies. In these poems there is sun and shadow, country dances, and tears. That particular pathos which belongs to the North is beautifully present, and we can say with confidence that it is many a long day since we were so much refreshed and established by a bundle of songs from across the border. There are three Highland reels which delight by their speed. Here is a stanza from the third:

"But there is ane among them a'
Wi' cheek o' wild rose, breist o' snaw,
Her way looks around her fa',
She needs nae mair adornin'.
Blaw me, blaw fu' cannillie,
Safely, pipers, sweetly, pipers;
Annie mine, O dance wi' me
Ae blissfu' nicht to mornin'."

A Little Child's Wreath. By Elizabeth Rachel Chapman. (Elkin Mathews & John Lane.) There is the grief that prevents utterance and the grief that finds a consolation in utterance. It is easy to understand that, in the task of composing a poetical tribute to a child unhappily lost, there resides for many a mother a tonic of the best; but whether it is very wise or very kind to publish 550 copies of this expressed sorrow is a matter over which critics, amateur and professional, are not likely to agree. To us it seems that a grief so sacred should hardly be retailed for three shillings and sixpence. It might be logically objected to this argument that there are some joys too sacred for public celebration in verse. Well, we should not like a gentleman to write for the perusal of all and sundry forty sonnets upon winning his sweetheart, and we cannot help feeling that Mrs. Chapman has exceeded the bounds by issuing this number of poems in memory of her great grief. Of the sonnets themselves there is not a great deal to be said. If there are few flaws, there are few glories. Mrs. Chapman's gift of graphic expression may very easily be mistaken for something finer; but it is a genuine gift, which must not be allowed to pass unregarded by. A power of concentration, too, is very observable. Mrs. Chapman closes each sonnet with the rhymed couplet; and this couplet is, in many instances, weighty with beautiful sense beautifully set forth. Scattered throughout the book there are lovely lines, but we must be allowed to say that we believe the authoress would have produced a better book if she had sung her pain in many metres.

Persephone and Other Poems. By K. McCosh Clark (Sampson Low). It is very pleasant to be able to praise, and we should like to write a few kind lines about Mrs. Clark's volume of verse; but, truth to tell, this would be a difficult task, unless faulty work were allowed to escape censure. We can detect in these two hundred pages no reason for their existence. A certain facility for stringing rhymes is apparent, love of flowers and Nature in all her guises is undoubtedly present; but the power to write down poetry—actual, elated, arresting poetry—is as absent from Persephone and Other Poems as tropical heat is from the North Pole. Under these circumstances it is not surprising to find Mrs. Clark using unbecoming means for ambitious subjects. Is it not something more than a pity to sing the return of Ulysses in stanzas so ordinary as these?

"What beggar at the gate doth stand,
Unkempt, in sorry garments clad,
And, leaning on his staff, with sad,
Grey eye surveys the glutton band?

"Lo! from within fall on his ear
Loud song and strains of lute and lyre;
Scarce bridle he his rising ire
At the rude scoff and ribald jeer.

"He scans the revellers round, as one
Who knows, and yet knows not, the throng
Of faces, and who, absent long
Returns to find some changed, some gone."

Not wishing to be unduly severe, we have searched this book carefully in the hope of finding some poems to commend. It is the fault of the authoress that we are disappointed.

A Lover's Diary: Songs in Sequence. By Gilbert Parker. (Methuen.) It is all very well for Mr. Gilbert Parker to call his diary "Songs in Sequence." In reality this is a sequence of sonnets in the form affected by Shakespeare; and, to our thinking, 147 sonnets make too severe a call upon the chance reader. Only a very great poet can render a sequence of such a length tolerable. We can respect the talent, the enthusiasm, the energy which are inseparable from the production of A Lover's Diary; but we cannot pretend to be much moved by Mr. Gilbert Parker's lyre. Let him give himself to us in prose. We know him for one of that small band of men who possess the right magic for telling a story as it should be told. In verse he loses vitality, though many of his sonnets are resonant and graphic. Sometimes, in common with most of those who handicap themselves by writing sequences of sonnets, Mr. Parker neither knows what to aim at nor what to miss. For instance, such a couplet as the following were better absent:

"My lady, bright benignant star, shine on!
I lift to thee my low Trisagion."

This is no way to rhyme, and one of the three epithets is unfortunate. In the fragment we are about to quote there is a fine image, but why did the author allow the tall and bal to come so close together?

"When you and I have played the little hour,
Have seen the tall subaltern Life to Death
Yield up his sword. . . ."

There is a good thought spoiled by an ugly similarity of sound.

Anthero de Quental: Sixty-four Sonnets Englished by Edgar Prestage. (David Nutt.) In translating these sonnets from the Portuguese, Mr. Prestage set himself a hard task. He makes no claim to a perfection of rendering: he only wishes to arouse an interest in the extraordinary personality of Anthero de Quental. This he will certainly accomplish; but we cannot help regretting that he has printed many of his uncouth lines, for some readers will surely form an incorrect opinion of the original. He should have taken a poet for mate. Though much may be gathered from these poems as to the individuality of their author, we have not found them the most interesting part of this beautiful little book. The autobiography which is included is a most important section, and may be cordially recommended to the attention of all those who are not stupidly insular. NORMAN GALE.

NOTES AND NEWS.

MR. JOHN MURRAY will publish during the autumn Lady Blennerhassett's Life of Talleyrand, translated from the German by Mr. Frederick Clarke.

MESSRS. LONGMANS have in the press a book by the late Canon Liddon, entitled Clerical Life and Work.

FOR the series of "Great Educators," published by Mr. Heinemann, Mr. J. G. Fitch is writing a volume on Dr. Arnold and Matthew Arnold, with special reference to their influence on education.

ENCOURAGED by the reception given to M. K. Waliszewski's The Romance of an Empress (Catherine II. of Russia)—which has passed into a second edition—Mr. Heinemann has made arrangements for the translation of another of the same author's works, Autour d'un Trône, or "Royal Surroundings."

MR. T. FISHER UNWIN will publish in the autumn all the collected stories of John Oliver Hobbes in a single volume, with illustrations by Mr. Aubrey Beardsley.

UNDER the title of The Scottish Songster, Messrs. Oliphant, Anderson & Ferrier announce a sketch of the life of Caroline, Baroness Nairne, author of "The Land of the Leal." It is written by her great grand-niece (Mrs. A. R. Simpson), and will contain a number of portraits, a facsimile of handwriting, and a reproduction of a drawing by Lady Nairne of "The Auld House" at Gask.

THE "Fur and Feather" series will be completed by the addition of three more volumes: The Pheasant, written by Mr. A. J. Stuart-Wortley, the Rev. H. A. Macpherson, and Mr. A. J. Innes Shand; The Hare and the Rabbit, by the Hon. Gerald Lascelles and others; and Wildfowl, by the Hon. Scott-Montagu and others.

It is stated that Mr. J. B. Bury, of Trinity College, Dublin, has undertaken to prepare a new edition of Gibbon's Decline and Fall of the Roman Empire, with introductions, notes, and appendices, showing the results of recent knowledge.

THE next volume in the series of "Heroes of the Nations," published by Messrs. G. P. Putnam's Sons, will be Mr. Strachan Davidson's Cicero, and the Fall of the Roman Republic.

MR. ALEXANDER GARDNER, of Paisley, will publish next month a story by Mr. J. Gordon Phillips, entitled A Highland Freebooter, dealing with the romantic career of James Macpherson—he who "played a spring, an' danced it round, below the gallows tree"—and giving a picture of life and manners in the north of Scotland in the eighteenth century.

MR. ELLIOT STOCK announces for early publication a work entitled The Power of the Will, by H. R. Sharman.

A VOLUME entitled Parables and Sketches, by Mr. Alfred E. Knight, will be issued shortly by Messrs. Oliphant, Anderson & Ferrier, with four illustrations by the author.

MESSRS. OLIPHANT, ANDERSON & FERRIER will also publish shortly a story by Evelyn Everett-Green, entitled Miss Uraca, with four illustrations by Ella Burgess.

MESSRS. PERCY LUND & Co., have in the press a brochure entitled Snap Shot Photography, or the Pleasures of Hand Camera Work, by Mr. Martin J. Harding, illustrated with reproductions from his own photographs.

THE Sunday School Union announce the following for early publication:—The Perfect Home, by the Rev. Dr. J. R. Miller; The Teacher and the Class, containing contributions from Archdeacon Farrar, the Rev. Dr. Stalker, the Rev. Dr. R. F. Horton, and the Rev. W. Douglas Mackenzie; Under the War-Clouds: a Tale of 1870, by E. F. Pollard, a lady who was attached to the nursing staff during the Franco-Prussian War; and, in the "Splendid Lives" series, John Horden, Missionary Bishop: a Life on the Shores of Hudson's Bay, by the Rev. A. R. Buckland, with illustrations.

THE New Review for September will contain a story by Sarah Grand, entitled "The Undefinable"; and reminiscences of Rossetti, by Miss Hall Caine, who knew the poet-painter when she was a child.

A SERIAL story by Mr. G. Manville Fenn, entitled "The Queen's Scarlet; or, by your Right" will be commenced in the number of Chums published next week. A tinted plate of "Wellington's First Encounter with the French," from the picture by Mr. George Joy, will also be given with this number.

THE Rev. W. J. Stavert, rector of Burnsall, in Yorkshire, has printed (in a very limited issue) the register of St. Mary's Chapel at Conistone in his own parish, which goes back to 1567; and also the first part of the parish register of Skipton-in-Craven, from 1592 to 1680. The latter, we may mention, contains entries concerning the Longfellows and the Wadsworths, from whom the American poet was descended.

WE learn from the New York Critic that Mr. Francis P. Harper has acquired the manuscript of Lamb's "Confessions of a Drunkard." It fills eighteen pages and a half, and is bound at the end of a copy of the author's works in two volumes (London, 1818), a presentation set to Lamb's friend Barron Field. Each volume contains Field's book-plate; and the text has been enriched with many explanations and additions, presumably by that gentleman's hand.

MR. JOSEPH JACOBS has reprinted from the Jewish Chronicle a paper which he read last May before the Jewish Historical Society of England, upon "Little St. Hugh of Lincoln." As those who have read the author's Jews of Angevin England will anticipate, he does not content himself with telling again the old story; but he examines it critically, from the point of view of chronicle, ballad, and tradition, and is able to contribute a few fresh suggestions. The contemporary documents of the trial of the Jews for child-murder are not to be found at the Record Office; but Mr. Jacobs has been able to discover some which refer to subsequent proceedings. With the aid of Jewish names thus supplied, and other scattered evidence, he has attempted to piece together an ingenious narrative of the facts, as they may have actually occurred. It is a very pretty piece of historical reconstruction.

THE August number of the British Chess Magazine (Kegan Paul & Co.) contains an interesting document for the early history of chess. It is a MS. in Italian, describing and commenting upon a number of games; and both internal and external evidence seem to concur in assigning it to Polerio, a famous player of the end of the sixteenth century, who left other similar MSS., which have been described by Dr. Van der Linde.

THE name of Mr. Silva White was erroneously given in the last number of the ACADEMY as executor of the late Sir Samuel Baker.

ORIGINAL VERSE.

FREEDOM.

WHEN I would think of what is free,
O timeless one, I think of thee!
Thou hast forgotten how we went together
Across the heather
Where I am left behind;
And I rejoice thy motions are
Swift, indifferent and far:
The birthsprings of the mind
Are for thy roving; and for me
The joy of bringing all these things to mind
We thought together,
Treading the little pathways of the heather.

MICHAEL FIELD.

On the Moors, Yorkshire.

MAGAZINES AND REVIEWS.

THE most important article in the current number of the English Historical Review (Longmans) is "The History of a Cambridgeshire Manor," by Prof. Maitland. The manor in question is that of Wilbarton, which formed part of the ancient estates of the see of Ely, but was surrendered by the bishop to Queen Elizabeth, and now belongs to Mr. Albert Pell. The series of its court and account rolls extend almost continuously from Edward I. to Henry VIII. Prof. Maitland—who is careful not to generalise from a single example—first explains the administrative and economical system of the manor in the thirteenth century, showing how the main features continued practically unmodified for some four hundred years. The only material change is that the agricultural service due from the customary tenants was gradually commuted for a money rent, and this money rent, when once fixed, became permanent. Prof. Maitland also gives evidence to prove how the customary tenants slowly acquired the status of freemen. The phrase of holding "by the rod and at the will of the lord according to the custom of the manor" goes back to the time of Richard II. The other articles are—the story of the conspiracy of Dr. Lopez, in the later years of Elizabeth's reign, by the Rev. Arthur Dimock; a continuation of Mr. M. Oppenheim's elaborate report on the administration of the navy under Charles I., in which he incidentally remarks that the present admiral's flag (St. George's cross on a white ground) dates from 1649; and a sketch of the career of Marshal Catinat, by Lieut.-Col. E. M. Lloyd. Among the original documents we may mention some papers of Holgate, Archbishop of York, in the time of Edward VI., edited from copies in the Bodleian by the Rev. Nicholas Pocock.

SELECTED FOREIGN BOOKS.

GENERAL LITERATURE.

- CHETTEL, H. The Tragedy of Hoffmann. Nach d. Quarto v. 1631 im British Museum, hrsg. v. R. Ackermann. Bsmberg: Uhlenhuth. 1 M. 50 Pf.
LANDSHAM, E. Zur Biographie v. Chr. Thomasius. Bonn: Cohen. 2 M.
LIVET, Ch. L. Dictionnaire de la Langue de Molière comparée avec celle de ses contemporains. Paris: Welter. 30 fr.

THEOLOGY, ETC.

- CORPUS scriptorum ecclesiasticorum latinorum. Vol. XXXI. S. Eucherii Lugdunensis opera omnia. Pars I. Rec. O. Wotke. Leipzig: Freytag. 5 M. 60 Pf.
USNER, H. Acta martyris Anastasi Persae, graece primum edidit H. U. Bonn: Cohen. 2 M.

HISTORY, LAW, ETC.

- BLODIO, H. Die Selbstverwaltung als Rechtsbegriff. Wien: Braumüller. 8 M.
KINDER v. KNOBLOCH, J. Oberbadiisches Geschlechterbuch. 1. Bd. Heidelberg: Winter. 6 M.
KÖHLER, J. Gesammelte Beiträge zum Civil-process. Berlin: Heymann. 12 M.
QUELLEN zur Geschichte der Stadt Hof. Hrsg. v. Ch. Meyer. Hof: Lion. 11 M.

PHYSICAL SCIENCE AND PHILOSOPHY.

- FAITSCH, A. Der Elbelachs. Eine biologisch-anatom. Studie. Prag: Rivoise. 5 M.
LEIMBACH, K. A. Untersuchungen ü. die verschiedenen Moralsysteme. Fuld. 1 M. 80 Pf.
OSTEN SACKEN, C. R. The oxen-born Bees of the Ancients (Buginia). Heidelberg: Hörning. 2 M.
PÄNZIG, O. Pflanzen-Teratologie, systematisch geordnet. 2. B1. Berlin: Friedländer. 20 M.

PHILOLOGY, ETC.

- BOAS, F. Der Eskimo-Dialekt d. Cumberland-Sundes. I. Wien: Holder. 8 M.
KIRTEL, F. A. Kanada-English Dictionary. Basel: Mission-Buchhandlung. 32 M.
KUNZ, F. Realien in Vergils Aeneis. 1. Thl. Kriegswesen u. Privatleben. Leipzig: Fock. 1 M.
ZUMETTES, A. M. De Alexandri Olympiadicae epistularum fontibus et reliquiis. Berlin: Mayer & Müller. 2 M.

CORRESPONDENCE.

WILLIAM BROWNE, OF TAVISTOCK.

Aug. 16, 1891.

While engaged on the pleasant task of editing the poems of William Browne, of Tavistock, for Messrs. Lawrence & Bullen's "Muses' Library," I was fortunate enough to make several small discoveries concerning Browne's life and writings which were handsomely acknowledged by Mr. A. H. Bullen in his introduction to the book.

Perhaps the most important of these finds was the administration act relating to Browne's property, dated November 6, 1645, which affords positive proof: first, that the poet died in the 'poore cell' which, as he tells Sir Benjamin Rudyard, he had chosen for his "sequestration from all business" at Dorking, in Surrey; and secondly, by a comparison of dates, that the William Browne who was buried at Ottery St. Mary on December 1, 1645, could not possibly be the author of "Britannia's Pastorals," as Anthony à Wood surmised (Athenae ii., 366).

Wood's careless conjecture has been repeated as an absolute certainty by many writers on Ottery St. Mary, among others by Mr. F. G. Coleridge in the Transactions of the Exeter Diocesan Architectural Society (i., 52). Without adducing a particle of evidence for such a statement, Mr. Coleridge informs his readers that Browne was "for many years a resident at Ottery," and adds that Robert Southey, when visiting the church, told him that from "internal evidence," as well as from the "fact" of Browne's residence at Ottery, he thought the fine epitaphs in St. Stephen's Chapel, commencing with "Under this monument lyes one" (1617) and "If wealth, wit, beauty, youth, or modest mirth," (1618) were written by him. Archdeacon Cornish, too, in his Short Notes on Ottery St. Mary (p. 34) gives Browne a place in "biographical notices of deceased persons connected with the parish." There is nothing in Browne's writings or in the parish register to connect him with Ottery; I have proved that he cannot be the man buried there in 1645; while to establish the authorship of the epitaphs, it would have to be shown that Browne, who was certainly no professional epitaph-maker, had acquaintance with the persons whose virtues they celebrate.

While on the subject of anonymously-written epitaphs, I may mention that Browne's versicles on "Man" (Poems, ii., 285), which he has also introduced into the first song of the third book of "Britannia's Pastorals" (ib., ii., 44), appear to be a feeble imitation of the poem beginning "Like to the falling of a star," which is found among the poems of both Francis Beaumont and Bishop Henry King, and which in turn bears a striking similarity to the twelve pretty lines engraven on Alderman Humble's monument in St. Saviour's Church, Southwark, commencing, "Like to the damask rose you see."

Nor do I think that Tavistock can claim the honour of being Browne's burial-place. Through the kindness of the vicar, I have satisfied myself that the register is saturated with Brownes, people of low degree, in no way connected with the poet. The man interred there on March 27, 1643, might well be one of these. Were he the poet, it is scarcely likely that his widow would neglect to take out letters of administration until two years after his death, especially as the property left by the poet appears to have been of considerable value. In the unsettled state of the country, anyone interested in the estate of a deceased person would promptly take all necessary measures to get possession of it by application to the proper court. Besides, Browne in his latter days was oftener seen, I suspect, at Horsham in Sussex—an easy distance from Dorking, where too his wife's relatives lived—than at Tavistock; and he might, with far greater show of reason, be identical with the William Browne, "householder," buried at Horsham on September 9, 1642, than with the man interred at Tavistock in the following year.

I believe that Browne was buried where he died, at Dorking, despite the silence of the register. The one entry in the Dorking register which relates remotely to him is that recording the burial of his sister-in-law, Joyce, the wife of Robert Coytmore, and youngest daughter of Sir Thomas Eversfield, Knt., of Den, Horsham. She died at Dorking, probably in Browne's house, on October 24, 1643, after a brief experience of married life, and was buried on the 27th in the chancel, a circumstance noted very conspicuously in the register. Certainly nothing is to be found concerning Browne and his family in the registers of the parishes round Dorking, such as Leigh, where there is a Browne vault, Reigate, and Betchworth, the family seat; nor was he buried in Salisbury Cathedral, near his patrons, the Herberts. The registers of the Temple Church have also been searched for traces of him, as have those of the neighbouring churches of St. Dunstan and St. Bride, Fleet-street.

GORDON GOODWIN.

ON AN ANCIENT METHOD OF COMPUTING LOSSES IN WAR.

Oxford: Aug. 14, 1891.

According to Procopius, when an ancient Persian army set out on an expedition, each soldier, in the presence of the king and his general, threw an arrow into a wicker basket (τάπη, ἄρριχος), which was then sealed up with the royal signet. When the expedition was ended, the baskets were unsealed, and each soldier that returned drew out one of the arrows, the remainder whereof, being counted, showed the number of his comrades that had been killed in battle or taken prisoners. As the Byzantine historians are not always at hand, I will quote the original from Dindorf's edition (Bonn, 1833, pp. 97, 98):

νόμος ἐστὶ Πέρσαις, ἥνικα ἐπὶ τῶν πολεμίων τινὰς στρατεύεσθαι μέλλουσι, τὸν μὲν βασιλεῖα ἐπὶ θρόνῳ τοῦ βασιλείου καθήσθαι, κοφίρους δὲ οἱ πολλοὺς ἐν ταῦτά πη εἶναι, καὶ παρῆναι μὲν τὸν στρατηγὸν, δι' τῆς στρατῶ ἐπὶ τοὺς ἐναντίους ἐξηγησεσθαι ἐπιδοξὸς ἐστὶ, παρῆναι δὲ τὸν στρατὸν τοῦτα ἐς τοῦ βασιλέως τὴν ὕψιν κατ' ἑνὸς ἄνα, καὶ αὐτῶν ἕκαστων βέλος ἐν ἐς τὰς τάπας ῥιπτέιν, μετὰ δὲ αὐτὰς μὲν τῇ βασιλείᾳ σφραγίδι κατασημασμένας φυλάσσεσθαι, ἐπειδὴν δὲ ἐς Πέρσας ἐπαναίῳ τὸ στρατεύμα τοῦτο, τῶν στρατιωτῶν ἕκαστον ἐκ τῶν ἄρριχων ἐν ἀφαιρῆσαι βέλος. ἀριθμοῦντες οὖν τῶν βελῶν ὅσα πρὸς τῶν ἀνδρῶν οὐκ ἀνήρηται, οἷς ἐπὶ αὐτῇ ἡ τιμὴ αὐτῇ, ἀγγέλλουσιν τῷ βασιλεῖ τὸ πλῆθος τῶν οὐκ ἐπανήκοντων στρατιωτῶν, ταῦτη τε ὅσοι ἐν τῇ πολέμῳ τετελευτήκασιν ἐνδὸλοι γίνονται. οὕτω μὲν οὖν Πέρσαις ὁ νόμος ἐκ παλαιῶ ἔχει.

The late Sir Samuel Ferguson, in a prefatory note to his noble poem of "Conary," pointed out the similarity of this Persian practice to the following incident in the ancient Irish romance, "The Destruction of Da Derga's Hostel," of which there is a copy in a MS. of the end of the eleventh, or the beginning of the twelfth, century:

Toscurethar bedg na díbergaig a Tracht Fairbthen 7 doberat cloich cach fir leo do chur chaidr, ar ba sí deochair lasna fianna hī tossuch ether orgain 7 maidm n-imairic. Corthe nochlauntas intan bad maidm n-imairic. Card immorro fochertitis intan bad n-orgain. Carnd rolaiset iarom intan ain uairo ba orgain. . . . Ar díb fáth[h]aib dorig[én]et a carnd .i. ar ba bés carnd la díbrig 7 dano co intais a n-esbada oc Brudin. Cach óen nothicfad slán ádi noberad a cloich asin charnd, co farctais immorro cloch[a] in lochta no maifritis ooci, conid asin rofessatár a n-esbada. Conid ad árnit éolais in tsechaasa conid fer cach cloich fi hi Carnd Leca romarbaít dona díbergaib oc Brudin.

"The marauders started from Tracht Fairbthe,* and they bring a stone for each man to build a cairn, for this was the distinction which the Fianna formerly made between a Massacre and the outbreak of an Onslaught. When it was the outbreak of an Onslaught they used to plant a pillar-stone; but, when it was a Massacre, they used to build a cairn. On that occasion it was a Massacre, so they set up a cairn. . . . For two causes they made the cairn, (first) because it was the custom of marauders (to do so), and (secondly) in order that they might know their losses at the Hostel. Whoever came thence safely would take his stone from the cairn, and the stones of those that were slain were left therein. And hence they would ascertain their losses. And those that know the story relate that for every stone which is (now) in Carn Leca there was one of the marauders slain at the Hostel."—Lebor na hUidre, pp. 86^v-87^a.

At the end of the tale we have:

Imthús immorro na [n]díbergach cach oen terna díb ó Brudin dollotar cosin carnd dendrónsat iséid áidich remideogaid, 7 bertatar cloich cach fir beogáiti leo ass. Conid ed romárbad díb oc Brudin, fer cach cloich fi hi Carnd Leca.

"But, as for the marauders, everyone of them that escaped from the Hostel went to the cairn which they had built on the night before last, and thereout they took a stone for each man of them not mortally wounded. So that this is what was slain of them at the Hostel, a man for every stone in Carn Lecca."—Lebor na hUidre, p. 99^a.

* A strand near Malahide, about nine miles north of Dublin.

The instance just quoted is thus referred to in the Dindsenchas, that curious collection of topographical legends compiled, probably, in the twelfth century. I will quote from the copy in the Irish MS. at Rennes (fo. 99^b 2^o):

dia tu[d]eadar tri meic Conmind meic Conmaic [7]
tri hui Désa oidhei samna do thigh Deirg do gabail Buidno da Derga for Conaire, commus tor[r]ach-tadair hi Sléib Lecca, co n-éabart Lomna Druth friú cloch each fir do fuirmedh isin taleib, ar co fesdaia a lin ae dul 7 co fesdaia a tesbuidie ie tuidecht on togailt sin, 7 faebait cloch each mairb ann.

"When the three sons of Conmenn son of Conmaic and the three grandsons of Désa, marched on Halloween to Derg's house to take Da Derga's Hostel on Conary, they arrived at Slíab Lecca, and Lomna Druth told them to set a stone [a handstone, lige láime, according to the Book of Leinster] for each man of them on the mountain, so that they might know their number when going to, and their losses when coming from, that Destruction; and there for every dead man they leave a stone."

The same tale is told in verse in the Book of Leinster, p. 195^a, ll. 11-26.

In the Dindsenchas of Carn Máil we seem to have another instance of the practice. I quote the oldest copy—that in the Book of Leinster, p. 170^b 17^l:

Luigaid Mál roicuid a Herinn lucht cethri long co hAlbain, co toracht afrithisi dochum Herenn co mórlongas Alban, co tuacastar cath do Ulaib
7 co roemid riam. Cloch dano each fir doriacht don chath la Lugaid, is de dorand in carn, 7 is fair roibá Lugaid oc cur in chatha.

"Lugaid Mál ('Lord') was driven out of Ireland to Scotland with the crews of four ships. But he came again to Ireland with Scotland's great fleet, and gave battle to the Ulstermen and routed them. For each man who came with Lugaid to the battle there was a stone, and thereof was built the cairn (called Carn Máil), and Lugaid was on that cairn while fighting the battle."

So far as I know, the history of the Farquharsons (Clann Ferchair) furnishes the latest instance of the practice in question. According to the New Statistical Account of Scotland, vol. xii., p. 650,

"about seven milca down [the Braemar valley], on the north side of the river Dee, there is a narrow pass between the water and the base of a high hill, and through this pass runs the line of road leading to Aberdeen and also to Fort George, and close by is a large cairn of small stones, which is called Carn na Cuimhne, that is, the cairn of remembrance. Under the feudal (sic) system, when the chieftains on any alarm being given called out their adherents, they had to march through this pass, and on the said cairn each laid down a stone, by which means every successive party could discern the number that had advanced towards the scene of action, and upon their return, by counting the stones thus deposited, it was discovered how many of the men were amissing, or had fallen in the field of battle."

Nearly to the same effect writes Mr. McConnochie in his Deeside, p. 128:

"Carn na Cuimhne was the slogan of the Farquharsons. The story told of this cairn is that when each clansman attended at the muster-ground he brought a stone which he laid down near the cairn. On the return from the expedition to which they had been summoned each survivor removed a stone from the heap, and the stones thus left answered to the number of the slain, and were then added to the cairn."

This, or a similar oral tradition, seems to have been the source of some touching verses in Ionica (London, 1891), p. 49. The deceased author was Mr. Wm. Johnson (afterwards Cory), a fellow of King's, Cambridge, and an Eton master:

"A prince went down the banks of Dee
That widened out from bleak Braemar
To drive the deer that wander free
Amidst the pines of Lochnagar.

"And stepping on beneath the birks
On the roadside he found a spot
Which told of pibrochs, kilts and dirks,
And wars the courtiers had forgot;

"Where with the streams, as each alone
Down to the gathering river runs,
Each on one heap to cast a stone,
Came twice three hundred Farquharsons.

"They raised that pile to keep for ever
The memory of the loyal clan;
Then, grudging not their vain endeavour,
Fell at Culloden to a man.

"And she whose grandsire's uncle slew
Those dwellers on the banks of Dee,
Sighed for those tender hearts and true,
And whispered: Who would die for me?"

Perhaps some Highlander who knows will say (1) whether the Farquharsons who marched to Culloden under Farquharson of Monaltrie erected a cairn? (2) if so, whether this cairn is identified with the Cairn na Cuimhne? and (3) whether there is any other instance of the practice described in this letter?

WHITLEY STOKES.

THE OGHAM X AT DONARD.

Kinnaird Castle, Brechin, N.B.: Aug. 10, 1891.

I have read with much interest Mr. Macalister's remarks on the Ogham inscription at Donard, which, from the INIQI or INIGI of Mr. Brash and Sir Samuel Ferguson, he has developed into IAQINIXOI, assuming the imperfect seventh character to be the Ogham sign X.

In reference to the writer's courteous mention of my attempt to fix the value of that sign, permit me to explain that the doubt he indicates as to my concurrence with him in judging that "Y hardly expresses the guttural sound of the letter," and that it is only an "approximate equivalent," bespeaks on his part some slight misapprehension of my views, which were fully stated in the ACADEMY of March 17, 1894.

To make this clear—the question being important—perhaps I may be allowed to quote a few sentences from the statement referred to:

"The Ogham X," I wrote, "cannot in some cases have the value of EA, but can only represent a consonant . . . possibly G or K passing into semi-vowel sounds, . . . like one of the Runes, which 'had the power of o, sometimes of n, and often of æ or a' (Canon Taylor). . . I am inclined to think that the Ogham sign was a semi-consonant, with a pronunciation variously combining n with c or o, or softening into x. Among modern letters, perhaps x in its various functions is the nearest general equivalent to the Ogham sign X."

It is this last sentence which Mr. Macalister has too exclusively considered; it was merely illustrative, my rendering of the sign is offered in the sentences that go before.

In the Donard inscription, dealing with the same character, Mr. Macalister seems inclined to read it as R, which he tentatively adopts in his diagram. Frankly speaking, I cannot persuade myself that the sign ever signified R. The "Turpili" bilingual legend furnishes the sole reason for such an inscription, yet the letter and the sign there seems to be alterna-

* Farquharson of Invercauld did not, I believe, "go out" in the Forty-five.

tives more probably than equivalents. It has been but little noted that the Ogham alphabet did, at some period, possess an equivalent for R: "A short line drawn parallel to the stem-line represents the consonant r" (O'Donovan Ir. Gram., p. xlviii). Viewing this even as a late and pedantic fancy, it tends to show that the letter thus provided for had no existing representative.

Accepting—in the Donard inscription—Mr. Macalister's IAQINI, may we suppose these letters to be the genitive termination of a proper name, incomplete perhaps at the outset as the stone is partly buried? The X might then begin another word, as at Monataggart—BROINIENAS XOIENAT DRENALUGOS?

In confirmation of the view that X sometimes represents a guttural consonant, compare two Ogham legends found in a cave at Dunloo—MAQI TTAL MAQI FORGOS MAQI MUCCI TOICAC, and DEGO MAQI MUCCI TOICAXI (Brash, Og. Mon., pp. 232-4).

SOUTHESK.

HONORARY DEGREES AT HALLE.

Cambridge: Aug. 18, 1894.

I am glad to find that the ACADEMY is quite right, and that I was in the wrong. The notice that the honorary degree of Doctor of Philosophy was conferred upon me at Halle on August 3 reached me on August 17: a fortnight after the event. It seems probable that some previous communication, intended for me, was lost in the post.

I apologise for the mistake, a natural one under all the circumstances.

WALTER W. SKEAT.

[The name of Mr. F. H. M. Blydes ought to have been included among the Englishmen upon whom the University of Halle conferred the honorary degree of Ph.D. Mr. Blydes was, indeed, the centre of the proceedings. The "Vespæ" was performed in his honour; and he made a large present to the printer at Halle who had carried through his monumental edition of Aristophanes.

We may add that Mr. Blydes has just published Adversaria in Tragicorum Græcorum Fragmenta (423 pp.). It is dedicated to Prof. Robinson Ellis, "studiosissimo et in auctoribus tum Græcis tum Latinis emendandis feliciter versato."

We may further take this opportunity of stating that the University of Königsberg has conferred the honorary degree of Ph.D. upon Prof. Robinson Ellis, who is thus described in the diploma: "summo philologorum Britanniae decori, faustissima Latinorum poetarum censura præcipue Catulli carminum doctis et laboriosis editionibus principi non superato."—ED. ACADEMY.)

SCIENCE.

SOME BOTANICAL BOOKS

FOUR parts have now been issued of Prof. F. W. Oliver's Natural History of Plants, translated from the German of Kerner von Marilaun (Blackie). When completed, this will be a Text-book of Botany such as has never yet appeared in the English language, not only adapted for the general reader, but indispensable also to the scientific botanist who desires to keep abreast of his subject. If the promise of the early numbers be fulfilled, it will deal in the most exhaustive way, not only with the structure of plants, but with all the intricate and difficult questions connected with their physiology. The illustrations are numerous and excellent, and possess the unusual merit of being also original. Each part has also a beautiful coloured frontispiece. The work is intended to be completed in sixteen monthly

* Other copies are in the Book of Ballymote, p. 366^a; the Book of Lecan, p. 463^a; and H. 3.3, p. 21^a.

† MS. tocbaill.

‡ Other copies are in the Rennes MS., fo. 118^a 2; the Book of Ballymote, p. 402^a 6; the Book of Lecan, p. 511^b; and H. 3.3, p. 63^a.

parts, and will be one of the best and cheapest scientific works ever produced in this country.

An Introduction to Structural Botany. By D. H. Scott. (A. & C. Black.) Notwithstanding the numerous existing manuals of botany, this fills a useful place not previously occupied. It has the advantage of not having been written as a text-book for examinees, and is therefore independent of any arbitrary syllabus. Three types—the wall-flower, the white lily, the spruce fir—are taken as representing the three great divisions of flowering plants, Dicotyledons, Monocotyledons, and Gymnosperms; and all the important points of structure and physiology are adequately treated. Many of the illustrations have been drawn specially for the work; others have been selected with discretion. The work ought to be widely used by botanical students.

PROF. F. O. BOWER'S Practical Botany for Beginners (Macmillans) is an abridgment of the elementary portions of his standard Course of Practical Instruction in Botany. It is intended as a guide to beginners in the first steps of their laboratory work, and may be trusted as such. The drawback to its use is the very small number of illustrations, without which the clearest description is often unintelligible to the beginner. This defect will almost compel the student to have also at hand some other more copiously illustrated handbook.

HIEROGLYPHS IN CRETE.

WE quote from the Times the following report of a paper on "A New System of Hieroglyphs and a Pre-Phœnician Script from Crete and the Peloponnese," read by Mr. Arthur J. Evans before the British Association in the section of anthropology:—

"Mr. Evans called attention to the widespread existence of forms of picture-writing among primitive peoples. It stood to reason that analogous systems had once existed within the European area, and some traces might still be perhaps found in such prehistoric relics as the mysterious figures known as the Maraville, carved on a limestone rock in the heart of the Maritime Alps. He himself had found painted pictographic designs of a like nature on a Dalmatian cliff, and in Lapland they might still be said to survive. But evidence of the existence of a fully-developed hieroglyphic system on European soil had been hitherto lacking, though recent discoveries had established the fact that in Asia Minor, the prehistoric remains of which showed such intimate connexion with those of the Greek and Thracian lands, a hieroglyphic system had grown up, independent of the Egyptian, to which the general name of 'Hittite' had been given. The revelations, begun by Dr. Schliemann at Tiryns and Mycenæ and still accumulating every day, had brought to light on the soil of Greece itself a very ancient civilisation, in many respects the equal contemporary of those of Egypt and Babylonia; and they might well ask themselves, 'Was this civilisation wholly dumb? Were the Mycenæans so far below many savage races as to have no written form of inter-communication? Homer at least contained a hint that some form of written symbols was in use. During a journey to Greece in the preceding year, he himself had obtained a clue to the existence of a peculiar kind of seal stones, the chief find-spot of which seemed to be Crete, presenting symbols of a hieroglyphic nature. This spring he had been able to follow up his inquiries by the exploration of the ancient sites of Central and Eastern Crete; and the result of his researches had been to bring to light a series of stones presenting pictographic symbols of the same nature, so that he was now able to put together over seventy symbols belonging to an independent hieroglyphic system. More than this, he had discovered, partly on stones of similar form, partly engraved on prehistoric vases and other materials, a series of linear characters, a certain proportion of which seemed to grow out of the pictorial forms. Both these systems of writing were represented on the diagrams before them. It would be seen that, as in the case of the Egyptian and Hittite symbols, the Cretan hieroglyphs fell into certain distinct classes, such as parts of the human body, arms and implements, animal and vegetable forms, objects relating to maritime life, astronomical and geometrical symbols. Some of them, such as the two crossed arms with expanded palms, belonged to that interesting class of pictographs which is rooted in primitive gesture language. The symbols occurred in groups, and there were traces of a boustrophedon arrangement in the several lines. The comparisons instituted showed some interesting affinities to Hittite forms. Among the tools represented, Mr. Evans was able to recognise the 'template' or 'templet' of a decorative artist, and with the assistance of a model of this symbol; taken in connexion with a design supplied by a Mycenaean gem found in Crete, he was able to reconstruct a Mycenaean painted ceiling analogous to those of Orchomenus and the XVIIIth Dynasty Egyptian tombs of Thebes (circa 1660 B.C.). The linear and more alphabetic series of symbols was shown to fit on to certain signs engraved on the walls of what was apparently a Mycenaean palace at Knossos, and again to two groups of signs on vase handles from Mycenæ. It was thus possible to reconstruct a Mycenaean script of some twenty-four characters, each probably having a syllabic value. It further appeared that a large proportion of these were practically identical with the syllabic signs that survived among the Greeks of Cyprus to a comparatively late date. This Cypriot system threw a light on the phonetic value of the Mycenaean. Resuming the results arrived at, Mr. Evans said that they had now before them two systems of primitive script—one pictographic, the other linear—both, as was shown by the collateral archaeological evidence, belonging to the second millennium before our era and to the days before the Phœnician alphabet had been introduced among the Greeks. The relations of these two forms of script to one another still needed elucidation, and they certainly overlapped one another chronologically. Some pictorial forms, however, of the one class clearly appeared in a linear form in the other, the double axe, for instance, being found in two stages of linearisation—the simpler form identical with the Cypriot character le. On the whole, the pictographic or hieroglyphic series seemed more peculiarly indigenous to Crete, and the linear forms to be Mycenaean in the widest sense. The Eteocretans, or indigenous stock of the island, who preserved their language and nationality in the easternmost district of Crete to the borders of the historic period, certainly used these hieroglyphs. Mr. Evans gave reasons, based on his recent archaeological discoveries in Eastern Crete, for believing—that had long been suspected on historic and linguistic grounds—that the Philistines, who, according to unanimous Hebrew tradition, came from the Mediterranean islands, and who were often actually called Krethi in the Bible, in fact represented this old indigenous Cretan stock, and that they had here the relics and the writing of 'the Philistines at home.' In Egyptian monuments these people, who came from the 'islands of the sea,' were seen bearing tributary vases of forms which recurred on a whole series of engraved gems seen or collected by Mr. Evans in Eastern and Central Crete. Their dress, their peaked shoes, their long hair falling under their arms, all reappeared on Cretan designs representing the inhabitants of the island in Mycenaean times. In view of these facts, Mr. Evans asked whether certain remarkable parallels observable between some of the Cretan photographs and the earliest forms of Phœnician letters might not best explain themselves by this early Cretan colonisation of the Syrian coasts."

In continuation of the above, we quote from the New York Nation the following letter, addressed by Dr. Halbherr to Prof. A. C. Merriam, describing the results of his excavations in Crete, under the auspices of the Archaeological Institute of America:—

"My recent explorations have extended from the heights of Camares, upon the southern slopes of Ida, as far as the mountains of Lassithi toward the provinces of Pediada and Rhizokastron. After the partial examination of the necropolises of Curtes and Camares, I made an important investigation in the necropolis of Erganos, where I searched three beehive tombs of the Mycenaean epoch, one of which was quite intact and completely preserved. It contained the remains of six bodies with all their funeral furniture, consisting of a varied collection of Mycenaean vases, almost unharmed, and in the original position in which they were deposited a thousand years before Christ. These were all gathered after their position had been noted, careful plans were made of the tombs, and the best preserved skulls were deposited in the museum at Candia, where they will serve for the study of the race which spread the Mycenaean culture in Crete. The importance of this discovery is enhanced by the fact that no necropolis here has ever been studied before with scientific accuracy. Now we have the materials from Camares, Curtes, and Erganos for the first essay upon these primitive remains in Crete, and for considerably advancing the question of the Mycenaean culture in the isles of the Mediterranean.

"Besides this, I have discovered two towns hitherto unknown. The one is that to which the necropolis upon the mountains of Erganos belonged, the other a large city situated upon a height between Lyttos and Tnatos. The former was rather poor; the latter has furnished me with some inscriptions, one of which was archaic, and also a good harvest of fragments of fine Mycenaean vases and of archaic Greek pottery with representations in relief. I obtained here also some small prehistoric or Eteocretan stones, bearing new syllabic signs which connect them with the discoveries made recently by Mr. Arthur J. Evans. I too have turned my attention to the study of this prehistoric writing of Crete, and am adding some contribution each day. During the past week I have entered in my list two new signs on two stones discovered at Vorus, near Phaestus.

"We have also explored a grotto near Lebena, where some vases were found similar to those called Theran (often placed about 2000 B.C.), some objects in stone, and a prehistoric habitation. In another grotto situated on the slopes of Ida, a large number of fragments of very ancient pottery have also been gathered."

Finally, we may mention that M. Salomon Reinach has an article on the subject in the current number of L'Anthropologie, in which he claims (not unnaturally) that the discoveries of Mr. Evans confirm his view of the independence of a primitive European civilisation. Incidentally he remarks concerning the anticipations of Prof. Sayce, "que l'on trouve de nos jours à l'avant-garde de toutes les grandes découvertes."

SCIENCE NOTES.

THE date fixed for the meeting of the British Association at Ipswich next year is September 11, with Sir Douglas Galton for president. Liverpool has been chosen as the place of meeting in 1896; and Toronto has been encouraged to give an invitation for the following year. It has also been decided that section D be henceforth called zoology, instead of biology; that a separate section be constituted for botany; and that section I consist of physiology, with experimental pathology and experimental psychology—the last mentioned change to come into operation at the Liverpool meeting.

THE following is a list of the grants of money appropriated to scientific purposes by the general committee:—

"Mathematics and Physics.—Prof. Carey Foster, electrical standards, £25; Mr. G. J. Symons, photographs of meteorological phenomena, £10; Lord Rayleigh, mathematical tables, unexpended balance; Mr. G. J. Symons, earth tremors, £75; Dr. E. Atkinson, abstracts of physical papers, £100; Mr. Howard Fox, reduction of magnetic observations made at Falmouth Observatory, £50; Prof. A. W. Rücker, comparison of magnetic standards, £25; the Rev. R. Harley, calculation of certain integrals, £15; Lord M'Laren, meteorological observations on Ben Nevis, £50; Prof. S. P. Thompson, uniformity of size of pages of Transactions, &c., £5.

"Chemistry.—Sir H. E. Roscoe, wave-length tables of the spectra of the elements, £10; Dr. T. E. Thorpe, action of light upon dyed colours, £5; Prof. H. E. Armstrong, formation of haloids from pure materials, £20; Prof. W. A. Tilden, isomeric naphthalene derivatives, £30; Prof. J. E. Reynolds, electrolytic quantitative analysis, £40.

"Geology.—Prof. E. Hull, erratic blocks, £10; Prof. T. Wiltshire, palaeozoic phyllopora, £5; Prof. J. Geikie, photographs of geological interest £10; Mr. J. Horne, shell-bearing deposits at Clava, &c., £10; Dr. R. H. Traquair, eurypterids of the Pentland Hills, £3; Mr. H. B. Woodward, new sections of Stonesfield slate, £50; Mr. R. H. Tiddeman, exploration of Calf Hole Cave, £10; Prof. T. G. Bonney, investigation of a coral reef by boring and sounding, £10; Sir John Evans, nature and probable age of high-level flint-drifts, £10; Prof. A. H. Green, examination of locality where the cetiosaurus in the Oxford Museum was found, £20.

"Biology.—Dr. P. L. Sclater, table at the Zoological station, Naples, £100; Mr. G. C. Bourne, table at the Biological Laboratory, Plymouth, £20; Prof. W. A. Herdman, zoology, botany, and geology of the Irish Sea, £40; Dr. P. L. Sclater, zoology and botany of the West India Islands, £50; Sir W. H. Flower, index of genera and species of animals, £50.

"Geography.—Mr. E. G. Ravenstein, climatology of Tropical Africa, £5; Mr. H. Seebohm, exploration of Hadramaut, £50.

"Mechanical Science.—Prof. A. B. W. Kennedy, calibration and comparison of measuring instruments, £50.

"Anthropology.—Prof. A. Macalister, anthropometric measurements in schools, £5; Dr. R. Munro, lake village at Glastonbury, £30; Sir J. Evans, exploration of a kitchen-midden at Hastings, £10; Mr. E. W. Brabrook, ethnographical survey, £30.

"Physiology.—Prof. M'Kendrick, physiological applications of the phonograph, £25.

"Prof. R. Meldola—corresponding societies, £30.

"Total, £1093."

FINE ART.

Sandro Botticelli. Von Hermann Ulmann. (Munich.)

HERR ULMANN has done his work well. He has, perhaps, discovered nothing, but he has omitted nothing; he has grouped his facts, he has pondered their significance, he has carefully described everything he has seen, and, on the whole, temperately described it; he has inserted in his text process-plates, no worse, and some better than the generality of such wares; he has added an index (a good index) and a list, nearly complete, of his man's works. In this list he has, with a superfluity of exhaustiveness, given his notion of the authenticity of each piece; and if here he shows himself a Morellian or (even more trenchantly) a Frizzonian, it must be added of him that he has tempered his oracular dispensations with deliberate criticisms—which Signor Frizzoni with his swashing blow is not apt to do. It is not easy to find him tripping in this part of his book. There are, however, to be added a little Saint Barbara at Lucca, a Virgin and Child of Mr. Wayne's, lately at the New Gallery, and a beautiful Simonetta, once Lord Dudley's and sold at Christie's two years ago as a Filippino Lippi—which it transparently was not. But as to his critical decisions upon the genuineness of pictures bearing Sandro's name, that is another affair. I hold him wrong in taking away from Botticelli and giving to a providentially named Botticini the National Gallery Assumption, wrong in giving to Piero di Cosimo the Chantilly Simonetta, and to Sandro the girl's portrait in the Pitti. The Duc d'Aumale's picture has the vigorous brutality and flatness of the Pollajuoli, the Pitti portrait can only be a Piero della Francesca and has nothing to do with Simonetta Vespucci, who, whatever else she was, was a beauty. On the matter of the Assumption in our gallery, I may be permitted to refer to the ACADEMY for January 9, 1892, where I adduced the reasons which led me to waive Signor Frizzoni's similar opinion. Herr Ulmann, who, like Frizzoni and everybody else, wholly misses the point of the picture and its heretical content, decides against Sandro's authorship, upon the ground that his drawing of a more or less identical subject—the cloud of angels in one of the Dante illustrations—is a much better piece of work. But the argument has no force. For, to begin with, the subject is not the same: in the Assumption the heavenly host is contemplative, in still ecstasy; in the Dante drawing they illustrate Dante, for

"Questi ordini di su tutti mirirano,
E di giù vincon sì, che verso Dio
Tutti tirati sono, e tutti tirano."

The "tanto disio" of Dionysius, and of Dante, and of Botticelli had to be expressed. Again, there was hardly a painter of Florence whose drawing was not bolder and technically better than his painting. Florence was pre-eminently a school of drawing; so, for that matter, was Umbria. Compare Perugino's drawing with his painting, compare Lippi's, Verrocchio's! They had a pen line not to be equalled for tenderness and expression; they could wash clouds of colour into their bistre and sepia, which never appear in their crimson and gold altar-pieces. Sandro with a pen and Sandro with his brushes were different men: one was an artist; the other, by comparison, a conscientious mechanic, before whose incrustations of detail and goldsmithry the creative line too often disappeared. On the Simonetta question I should like to enlarge, but forbear out of tenderness for my space. Tradition (not always, and never wilfully, a liar) gives her name to Sandro's most lovely and most girlish Venuses and Madonnas. She is said to endow the foam-born Venus (in the Uffizi) with her witchery and pathos; she is said to be behind the woful, wan Zipporah in the Sistine Chapel; again she is the Madonna Incoronata; in the magnificent tondo in the National Gallery (which Herr Ulmann, by some inconceivable aberration of insight, denies to Botticelli), it is she who gives our Lady the rapt gaze of a Mysteriarch.* If

* This beautiful piece has also led Mrs. Costelloe astray in the serious pages of the Nineteenth Century. She there announced three discoveries concerning it: first, it was signed on the back by Sangallo the architect; second (and consequently), it was painted by him; third, the National Gallery authorities had wickedly concealed the signature. It is only necessary to say that a signature on the back of a fifteenth-century picture does not denote authorship, but ownership; and that, if printing the signature in the Catalogue be concealment, then the Gallery has "wilfully hidden" Sangallo's name.

she is here, then, she is also, beyond all cavil, the original of the Frankfort and Dudley portraits; nor is there any difficulty in tracing her resemblance in the Chantilly portrait which has her name—SIMONETTA JANVENSIS VESPUCCI—incribed at its base. The difference of handling and the difference of conception, which betray a different authorship, would account for the fall from dignity to impudence, from debonnairetò to chic. Herr Ulmann is not ready with any decision. He does not, of course, accept the Pitti portrait. If that is Simonetta, she is in none of Sandro's pictures—

"Candida è ella, e candida la vesta,
Ma pur di rose e fior dipinta e d'erba:
Lo inanellato crin dell' aurea testa
Scende nella fronte umilmente superba"— says Politian of her. None of that is in the drooping little girl of the Pitti. And on the other hand, he takes the Frankfort portrait to be merely a "Schönheitsideal" of the painter's, but compares it, truly enough, with one of the Hours (the central one) in the Primavera (whose gaze, oddly, is riveted on the Giuliano-Hermes), and with the Venus of the Nascità and of our Mars and Venus. So that, perhaps, with me, he has a sneaking kindness for the tradition which saw her filling these beautiful forms with their expressiveness.

Our age may claim, with some complacency, that it has discovered Sandro Botticelli. Perhaps he "supplies a want" brought upon us by the revival of Gothic and the Oxford Movement; for it is certain that he is much sought in circles to whom Madonnas are more than Venuses, and who take no satisfaction in the thought that to Sandro they were much the same. The fashion in pictures is a curious study. What young poet of Keats's temper would now set about decorating his walls with "Pictures all Salvador's, save a few

Of Titian's portraiture, and one, though new,
Of Haydon's in its fresh magnificence"?

Surely not a Keatsian choice with the world before him and Spenser in his heart! How could he have mated Spenser better than with some Cassone-front of Sandro's—white-kirtled girls dancing in a sparsely flowered mead? The same frugality of material, the same throbbing imagination all riotous behind it, giving it all its extraordinary richness of effect. If Spenser is the poets' poet, Botticelli is the poets' painter.

For, after all, he was unique in an age where distinction was hereditary and in the blood. Idealism was spread deep and wide over Tuscany, but Sandro was the most diligent idealist of them all: not content to dream, struggling also, in whatever company or set of notions he might be drifting, to clothe the fair things which all Florence inhaled—to exhale them again crystallised in shapely bodies. Greece—dead and buried, dug up and set to flitting like a ghost in the brisk Tuscan land—Greece was of the essence of Tuscan dreams; and for Sandro, until his light died down and grew grey with Savonarola, "broken, hinted sights" of Greece sobered the Tuscan landscape, Venus lit to earth in a bay of the Mediterranean, and a staring, blue-eyed Judith (not Hobrew, not Tuscan, but Grook as he knew Greeks) sped over the hills of Fiesole. While, however, there was much effort to reconstruct, passionate but pitifully dry effort to build up the bleached bones, Sandro's labour was to give them form and colour: not, indeed, like their comely old habiliments—less sure of themselves, looser fitting, worn more consciously than these—but beautiful always because of the added touch which betrays the spirit informing them, making them what they are—the wistful, misty surmise of one of the most inveterate dreamers of Florence. It is this, and Herr Ulmann does not fail to notice it, sets Botticelli over against Piero di Cosimo and Filippino Lippi, and even a greater man, Andrea Mantegna; it is this which makes him, as it were, the plaintive accompanist of Pico della Mirandola and Hieronimo Benivieni, and even of poor old Matteo Palmieri's orphic discords. It is this obviously ethical strain in him which ranges him with poets rather than painters, which distinguishes him finally from plastic artists pure and simple, such as Lippi and Luca della Robbia, and which, when he lit upon a paintable historical incident—the story of Apelles or the death of Lucrece—drove him into the heart of the story, to grasp the ethos of the matter rather than what idée plastique it might enfold. It is a pity, you may think, that a born poet should drift into illustration. It is a pity that we should like best in him what was least paint-worthy, because song-worthy. His exuberance has not the right play in such a medium. He was driven into indecorous corners: his Fruchtbarkeit (a word we may envy the Germans), his pregnant Venus, his snoring Mars, the disordered rout he makes of what would have been a solemn frieze in Lucian's day, arresting the supreme moment in the poisoning of calumny. We see in these things the straining of a caged imagination "mewing his mighty youth" in a prison which showed him the sun, yet hold him fast. It is a pity, but not uncommon in our own day. Every now and then Fortune—a cynical jade when all's said—gives a jerk to the skeins in her hand, and lives are at cross-purposes. She sets a painter jiggling in metres, or compels a poet to lie among the pots—to the high detriment of all and sundry. But for some such twist Sandro, subject of much surmise and (in his defects at least) imitation, would have been singing a broader stave than Politian and a deeper than Ariosto's. For with Politian (and it was the drawback to the art of his day) the pedant is at work as often as the poet. That made him sing the Elegy for Lorenzo before a looking-glass, and filled the Orfeo with the stores of a mythological dictionary. Sandro is never the mere archaeologist: not enough of one, say some people, who complain of his Gothic Nascità and bicker over Hermes or Favonius, the Zephyr of April or the Boreas of March. Instead, he broods over some far echo of Lucretius caught up by the rococo fluting of the Giostra, plucks out the heart of the story, and sets it to some stately old processional music of his own—his own and the anti-phonists' of his Catholic Church. That is a new thing: it may be a hybrid thing, but it is Botticelli's own. No other Italian has done it quite, except (very differently) Giorgione. For the same method in a later day, for a similarly personal and poetical and vivid result, we must go to Corot. And if Corot's is a case of the essentially poetic genius set to painting of a high order—the highest order—Blake's example gives us another where the moral idea overflows and outmasters the expression in the proportion of three to one. Sandro comes somewhere between the two. We might put him level with Rossetti.

It is not Herr Ulmann's fault exactly that we cannot find these things explicitly in his book. He appears to prefer dates, and I do not say he is wrong. I should like dates very much if I could get enough of them; but I do not find many in his pages that I had not before I opened them. Sandro's birth-date and death-date we know. His fresco work is dated more or less exactly—the Saint Augustine, for instance, in 1480; the Sistine Chapel between 1481 and 1483, the Villa Lemmi somewhere about 1486. It was in 1490, it would seem, he painted the fine Annunciation for the Guardi Chapel in S. Maria de' Pazzi, and Herr Ulmann deserves the credit of having ascertained this approximately by his discovery of the date at which the chapel was consecrated. In 1503, as Mr. Colvin told the readers of the ACADEMY as long ago as 1871, he painted the Fuller-Maitland Nativity in the National Gallery. It was his last; in 1510 he died. Beyond this we have never certainly gone: beyond it Herr Ulmann cannot take us, unless as floating upon his floods of surmise.

The visit to Rome is the watershed of Sandro's life. Herr Ulmann is right to give it a prominent position and a chapter to itself. All that was best and most essential in the art of the fifteenth century, all the facets of Sandro's own spirit are reflected there:—His wistfulness, the kind of strain there was ever on him, his exuberance, and then the things which reveal these—his sensitive, nervous line, his pure and cool colour, his love of ornament and his architectural disposition of the masses of his picture. Every student in Rome must have been struck with the feeling of blessed relief with which his eye encounters this broad band of gracious antic figures moving as in some state revel or masque, these pure washes of wholesome silvery blue and green, the sense of something clean (as in early June mornings), contrasted as all is with the tarnished profusion of the sixteenth-century work, with which unhappy Rome is crammed. It is the most decisive object-lesson in Florentine art there can be. For Sandro it was the culmination of his golden time, his dallies with a faint delightful old Paganism and what not. After it came, for him, Savonarola and the gripping of poverty—relieved, we may hope with Herr Ulmann, towards the end—much darkling over the esoterics of the Commedia and much disillusionment. Indeed, so markedly does the stamp of his work alter from this time forth, that I cannot agree with Herr Ulmann when he puts the Primavera before and the Nascità di Venere after the Roman episode.

To my mind the Venus of the Nascità was painted while Simonetta Vespucci was still alive; I believe she was, in point of fact, his model. I see in the Zipporah of the Sistine a remembrance of her, saddened to the weebegone ghost she there is, by her untimely death some few years before the fresco was painted; and I cannot think that after painting that, he went back to the serene mystery of birth on the shore of his Tuscan Cythera. Herr Ulmann's reasons, lying principally in differences of handling, do not seem to me to outweigh this high improbability; it is highly improbable he would work a picture out of the Giostra, then go to Rome for two years upon an elaborate theological utterance, then return to Florence and pick up his Giostra where he let it drop. I suspect Herr Ulmann of hypercriticism here, but forgive him for his manly resistance of the many temptations to conjecture which a life so clouded with age and silence must throw out. In matters of fact it is but right to say that Herr Ulmann has proved himself diligent to seek and exact to record. I may tell him that the beautiful portrait belonging to Lady Alfred Seymour is undoubtedly of Giovanna degli Albizzi, who is, as he knows, the initiate in one of the Lemmi frescos. I should like to ask him why he calls Baccio Bandini a "mythischer"; and I would beg him, if he sees another edition, to correct his proofs. His pages are at present sadly at fault. The errors in the text one can correct in passing; but what is to be made of English like this: "But it in the instance it is difficult to give a decided opinion because the picture is hung high, and also because it is possibly repainted" (p. 124, n. 1)? There are some wild Italian passages too. They are all the more conspicuous because the book is such a conscientious, thorough, and thought-out piece of work.

MAURICE HEWLETT

CORRESPONDENCE.

THE WADI LULU.

London: August 20, 1894.

It is a well settled rule that, when a new place is added to a map, by virtue of discovery and survey, the discoverer has the right to give it the name by which it is thenceforward to be known. It is often his sole reward. In the exercise of this right, I gave the name of Lulu—"the pearl"—to the valley whose remarkable characteristics had escaped the attention even of the natives. Lying below the level of the hill, and immediately south of the Gharaq basin of the Fayoum, and communicating with the great Raiyan depression beyond, it has acquired importance in connexion with the topography of this district. The name was adopted by the British and Italian Governments in 1888 and 1891. It was recognised by the Inspector-General of Irrigation for Upper Egypt, and appears in his book on the Fayoum and Lake Moeris in 1892.

In the volume of plans published this year by the Reservoir Department, Mr. Willcocks has arbitrarily changed my descriptive term and called the Wadi Liernus, after an engineer now employed at the Barrage. This name, however, will not be adopted by the Egyptian Government; and I trust that no cartographer will, after this warning, be led to put it upon the map of Egypt.

CORE WHITEHOUSE.

NOTES ON ART AND ARCHAEOLOGY.

THE Autotype Company will publish shortly, in a very limited edition, ninety-three drawings by Albert Dürer, reproduced in facsimile from the originals in the print-room at the British Museum, with descriptive letterpress by Mr. Sidney Colvin. The size of the volume will be imperial folio.

A PICTURE by William Dyce, representing St. John leading home the Virgin Mary from the Sepulchre, which exhibited at the Royal Academy in 1860, has been presented to the National Gallery. The donor wishes to remain anonymous.

DURING the past year the committee of the municipal art gallery at Leeds was fortunate enough to receive the sum of £700 from the Government grant for technical education. One-half of this was spent in the purchase of technical books; the other half was devoted to acquiring art works for the gallery. Among the works thus bought were—oil-paintings, by Mr. David Murray and Mr. Edwin Hayes; pen-and-ink drawings, by Mr. Joseph Pennell and Mr. Herbert Railton; and a number of proof etchings—including examples of the work of Méryon, Mr. Whistler, Sir F. Seymour Haden, Prof. Hubert Herkomer, Mr. Oliver Hall, and Mr. C. J. Watson.

M. GRANDIDIER has presented to the Louvre his collection of ceramics, which contains some unrivalled specimens of Oriental porcelain—the only condition being that he shall himself remain curator of it until his death.

WE hear from a correspondent that a project is being seriously discussed at Florence to profane the historic church of Or San Michele, so closely connected with the name of Orcagna, by converting it into a market or exchange of some sort.

THE committee of the Society for the Preservation of the Monuments of Ancient Egypt have published (Kenny) a useful pamphlet, dealing in a popular manner with the proposed reservoirs in the valley of the Nile. After a general statement of the question, a list is given of the chief objects of archaeological, historical, and artistic interest, that would be submerged by a dam at Assuan, showing that the Temple of Philae is by no means the only one, or even the most important; and at the end is a sketch map, on a large scale, marking the principal sites mentioned.

THE STAGE.

A PLAY, founded on Mr. Hall Caine's novel, The Manxman, was produced by Mr. Wilson Barrett at the Grand Theatre, Leeds, on Wednesday night, and met with a very favourable reception. Mr. Wilson Barrett himself took the part of Pete Quilliam.

DR. HEINRICH FELBERMANN has completed a four-act play of modern life, which will shortly be produced at a London theatre. A version of the same play will be acted almost simultaneously in Germany and Hungary.

WORKS BY DR. MACLAREN.

Crown 8vo, cloth boards, price 5s., post free.

PAUL'S PRAYERS, and other Sermons.

"As striking and suggestive as any Dr. Maclaren has published.....The book is full of helpful thoughts."

Christian World.

Uniform with the above, price 5s., post free.

THE HOLY OF HOLIES: a Series of Sermons on the 14th, 15th, and 16th Chapters of the Gospel by John.

"Every sermon glows with unction, and shows intense power."—Methodist Recorder.

LONDON: ALEXANDER & SHEPHEARD, PUBLISHERS, 21 AND 22, FURNIVAL STREET, E.C.; and all Booksellers.

COMPLETION OF THE "BORDER" WAVERLEY. READY, SEPTEMBER 1st.

CASTLE DANGEROUS. 1 vol. CHRONICLES of the CANONGATE, &c. 1 vol.

TEN ETCHINGS by or after H. MACBETH-RAEBURN, G. D. ARMOUR, and D. Y. CAMERON.

Introduction and Notes by ANDREW LANG.

Prices for Complete Sets in Leather Bindings may be obtained from all Booksellers.

LONDON: JOHN C. NIMMO, 14, KING WILLIAM STREET, STRAND.

CHOICE BOOKS and PICTURES offered by LOWE (CHARLES), New Street, Birmingham

| | |
|--|---------|
| Arundel Society's Publications, complete set books included | 130 0 0 |
| Not quite complete | 75 0 0 |
| Ivories, 170 in magnificent oak polished case, 28 drawers | 35 0 0 |
| "Punch," original choice set, vols. 1 to 103, new, half-morocco | 46 0 0 |
| "Punch," original, in years (new, half-morocco) 1841 to 1860... | 12 12 0 |
| Dugdale's Monasticon, 9 vols., purple morocco, very choice set, cost £150 | 45 0 0 |
| Autograph Letters, collection of over 500, mostly with the envelopes | 18 18 0 |
| British Association Reports, complete set, new, half-calf | 55 0 0 |
| George Morland Prints, splendid set of 12 coloured original, framed | 25 0 0 |
| Abbotsford Waverley Novels, 6 sets. Kindly write for samples | 30 0 0 |
| Sir Richard Steele, magnificent Kneller Portrait of, large framed | 38 0 0 |
| Mrs. Elizabeth Rowe do. do. | 26 0 0 |
| Nice example of Simon Voeste, wood block books on vellum | 28 0 0 |
| Perfect example of Wykes de Wagon, 1500 | 30 0 0 |
| Remarkable collection of Autographs of Members of Parliament during the Reform | 50 0 0 |
| Parliamentary Speeches, collection of 23 vols., new, half-purple morocco, uncut | 20 0 0 |
| Scott, Sir W., complete choice set of 104 vols., purple morocco, gilt, cost £50 | 24 0 0 |
| Thackeray, complete works, Edition de Luxe, 26 vols., elegant crimson morocco, cost £30 | 40 0 0 |
| Villon Society's Arabian Nights, 9 vols., vellum, gilt, nice as new | 10 10 0 |
| Soverby's Dictionary, fine set, equal to new, last edition, 12 vols. | 14 0 0 |
| Voltaire's Works, 70 vols., large paper, coloured plates, elegant crimson morocco, cost £150 | 28 0 0 |
| Gallery of Fashion, very choice set old tree calf (faultless), 7 vols. | 50 0 0 |
| Chapman's Homer, fine copy, original old calf, gilt back | 29 0 0 |
| English Spy, The uncut, 2 vols., £22; another copy, polished morocco, 2 vols. | 20 0 0 |
| Pennant's London, many hundred extra Plates, and choice | 22 0 0 |
| Portraits, 2 vols., atlas folio | 60 0 0 |
| Thackeray, W. M., unpublished unique Portrait by D'Orsay | 42 0 0 |
| Alsworth's Novels, set of first editions, 15 vols., polished calf | 24 0 0 |
| Life of Mrs. Siddons, extra illustrated and extended, 4 vols., purple morocco | 25 10 0 |
| Atkyn's Gloucestershire, large paper, splendid copy | 15 0 0 |
| Exquisite Drawing by Cipriani | 15 0 0 |

LOWE'S £5 PACKAGES of Assorted Books for Asylums, Hospitals, Village Libraries, School Libraries, Working Men's Institutes, Public Libraries, and for Private Families, have given great satisfaction wherever sent. These Packages consist of from 150 to 200 volumes, and are books well selected, and most useful for the purposes named. These books are all very carefully selected, and are books of a deeply interesting and instructive character, and are mostly in their original binding, in nice clean condition (cost nearly £20). No duplicates supplied. Books not approved of will at once be taken back and exchanged for others.

To ladies and gentlemen desirous of making presents of books, these lots are specially adapted, as they are nice clean copies, and well selected from many thousands.

PARCELS MAY BE HAD FROM £1 IS. UPWARDS.

BOOKS!

WANTED TO PURCHASE.

CHARLES LOWE,

NEW STREET (EXCHANGE BUILDINGS), BIRMINGHAM.

Libraries and Small Quantities of Old and New Books,

Manuscripts, Periodicals, Engravings, Old Portraits, &c., purchased, FULL VALUE GIVEN.

ESTABLISHED 1851.

BIRKBECK BANK,

Southampton Buildings, Chancery Lane, London.

TWO-AND-A-HALF per CENT. INTEREST allowed on DEPOSITS repayable on demand.

TWO per CENT. on CURRENT ACCOUNTS, on the minimum monthly balances, when not drawn below £100.

STOCKS, SHARES, and ANNUITIES purchased and sold.

SAVINGS DEPARTMENT.

For the encouragement of Thrift the Bank receives small sums on deposit, and allows interest monthly on each completed £1.

BIRKBECK BUILDING SOCIETY.

HOW TO PURCHASE A HOUSE

FOR TWO GUINEAS PER MONTH.

BIRKBECK FREEHOLD LAND SOCIETY.

HOW TO PURCHASE A PLOT OF LAND

FOR FIVE SHILLINGS PER MONTH.

The BIRKBECK ALMANACK, with full particulars, post free. FRANCIS RAVENSCROFT, Manager.

Take with you on Vacation

A TABLET

OF VINOLIA SOAP.

Price 4d.

MUDIE'S SELECT LIBRARY,

For the CIRCULATION and SALE of all the BEST ENGLISH, FRENCH, GERMAN, ITALIAN, and SPANISH BOOKS.

TOWN SUBSCRIPTIONS from One Guinea per annum.

LONDON BOOK SOCIETY (for Weekly Exchange of Books at the Houses of Subscribers) from Two Guineas per annum.

COUNTRY SUBSCRIPTIONS from Two Guineas per annum.

N.B.—Two or three friends may unite in One Subscription and thus lessen the cost of carriage.

LIBRARY BOXES GRATIS.

Town and Villages Clubs supplied on Liberal Terms

Prospectuses and Monthly Lists of Books gratis and post free.

SALE DEPARTMENT.

All the leading Books of the Past Seasons are on Sale, second-hand at greatly Reduced Prices.

LISTS GRATIS AND POST FREE.

MUDIE'S MANCHESTER LIBRARY, 10 to 12, BARTON ARCADE, MANCHESTER, Is in daily communication with this Library.

MUDIE'S SELECT LIBRARY, Limited,

30 to 34, NEW OXFORD STREET, LONDON;

241, Brompton Road, S.W.; and 48, Queen Victoria St., E.C.

MESSRS. J. C. DRUMMOND & CO., ART REPRODUCERS,

14, HENRIETTA STREET, COVENT GARDEN, W.C.

Are the sole representatives in Great Britain of

HERR HANFSTAENGL, of Munich,

the well-known Artist in PHOTOGRAPHURE, now patronised by the leading London Art Publishing Firms. A large Collection of important Plates always on view.

Process Blocks for the purpose of Ordinary Book Illustrations.

Messrs. DRUMMOND & CO. supply the cheapest and best Processes in the market, which are specially adapted to meet the wants of Antiquarians, Archaeologists, and those engaged in the investigation and publication of Pictorial and Diocesan Records.

J. C. DRUMMOND & CO. invite attention to their

Improved Rapid Photo-Mechanical Process

For the Reproduction of Works of Art, Original MSS., Designs, Lace Manufactures, Photographs, Views, Book Illustrations, Artistic Advertisements, Catalogues, &c., &c., at a moderate cost.

Specimens and price list on application.

Offices: 14, HENRIETTA STREET COVENT GARDEN, LONDON

To H.R.H. the PRINCE of WALES.

BRAND & CO.'S AI SAUCE,

SOUPS, PRESERVED PROVISIONS

and

POTTED MEATS, and YORK and GAME

PIES. Also.

ESSENCE of BEEF, BEEF TEA,

TURTLE SOUP, and JELLY, and other

SPECIALITIES for INVALIDS.

CAUTION—BEWARE of IMITATIONS.

SOLE ADDRESS—

11, LITTLE STANHOPE STREET,

MAYFAIR, W.

MESSRS. MACMILLAN & CO.'S

NEW PUBLICATIONS AND TEXT-BOOKS FOR THE OXFORD AND CAMBRIDGE LOCAL EXAMINATIONS,
THE OXFORD AND CAMBRIDGE SCHOOLS EXAMINATIONS, LONDON UNIVERSITY AND COLLEGE OF PRECEPTORS EXAMINATIONS.

LATIN.

- MACMILLAN'S SHORTER LATIN COURSE:—
FIRST PART. By A. M. COOK, M.A. Globe 8vo, 1s. 6d.—KEY, for Teachers only, 4s. 6d.
SECOND PART. By A. M. COOK, M.A., and W. E. P. PANTIN, M.A. Globe 8vo, 2s.—KEY, 4s. 6d. net.
- CÆSAR.—GALLIC WAR. BOOKS II. and III. With Notes and Vocabulary by the Rev. W. G. RUTHERFORD, LL.D. 1s. 6d.
—BOOK IV. With Notes and Vocabulary, by C. DRYAN, M.A. 1s. 6d.
—BOOK VII. With Notes and Vocabulary by the Rev. J. BOND, M.A., and the Rev. A. S. WALFORD, M.A. 1s. 6d.
- CÆSAR.—TALES from the CIVIL WAR. With Notes and Vocabulary by C. H. KERN, M.A. 1s. 6d.
- CICERO.—DE SENECTUTE. With Notes and Vocabulary by E. S. SHUCKERBURN, M.A. 1s. 6d.
—PRO ROSCIO AMERINO. By E. H. DONKIN, M.A. 2s. 6d.
—PRO MILON. By F. H. COLSON, M.A. 2s. 6d.
- CURTIIUS (QUINTUS).—SELECTIONS. With Notes and Vocabulary by F. COVERLEY SMITH, B.A. 1s. 6d.
- EUTROPIUS.—BOOKS I. and II. With Notes and Vocabulary by W. WELCH, M.A., and the Rev. C. G. DUFFIELD, M.A. 1s. 6d.
- EXERCISES IN UNSEEN TRANSLATION from LATIN. By W. WELCH, M.A., and C. G. DUFFIELD, M.A. 1s. 6d.
- HORACE.—ODES. I, II, III, IV. With Notes and Vocabulary by T. E. PAGE, M.A. 1s. 6d. each.
- SELECT EPODES and ARS POETICA. By H. A. DALTON, M.A. 1s. 6d.
—SATIRES. Edited by Prof. A. PALMER, M.A. 5s.
—EPISTLES. Edited by Prof. A. S. WILKINS, Litt.D. 5s.
- JUVENAL.—THIRTEEN SATIRES. Edited by E. O. HADY, M.A. (Containing Satires I., II., V.) 6s.
—Translated by A. LEEPER, M.A. 3s. 6d.
- LIVY.—BOOKS II., III. Edited by H. M. STEPHENSON, M.A. 3s. 6d.
—BOOK XXI. With Notes adapted from Mr. Cape's Edition, and Vocabulary. By J. E. MURPHY, M.A. 1s. 6d.
- MEISSNER'S LATIN PHRASE BOOK. Translated by H. W. ADEEN, M.A.
- TACITUS.—THE HISTORIES. BOOKS I. and II. By A. D. GODLEY, M.A. 5s. 6d.
—BOOKS III.—V. By the same. 3s. 6d.
- TERENCE.—AUTION TIMORUMENOS. By E. S. SHUCKERBURN, M.A. 2s. 6d. With Translation, 3s. 6d.
—ADELPHOE. By Prof. S. G. ASHMORE, 3s. 6d.
- VIRGIL.—ÆNEID. BOOK I. With Notes and Vocabulary by T. E. PAGE, M.A. 1s. 6d.
—By the Rev. A. S. WALFORD, M.A. 1s. 6d.
—BOOK III. With Notes and Vocabulary by T. E. PAGE, M.A. 1s. 6d.
—BOOK V. With Notes and Vocabulary by the Rev. A. CALVERT, M.A. 1s. 6d.
—BOOK IX. With Notes and Vocabulary by the Rev. H. M. STEPHENSON, M.A. 1s. 6d.

GREEK.

- MACMILLAN'S GREEK COURSE. Edited by the Rev. W. G. RUTHERFORD, M.A., LL.D., Head Master of Westminster. Globe 8vo.
- FIRST GREEK GRAMMAR.—ACCIDENCE. By the Editor. 2s.
FIRST GREEK GRAMMAR.—SYNTAX. By the Editor. 2s.
ACCIDENCE and SYNTAX. In one volume. 3s. 6d.
- ÆSCHYLUS.—EUMENIDES. With Translation by B. DRAKE, M.A. 5s.
—PERSE. By A. O. FRIGARD, M.A., Fellow and Tutor of New College, Oxford. With Map. 2s.
- EURIPIDES.—HECUBA. With Notes and Vocabulary by the Rev. J. BOND, M.A., and the Rev. A. S. WALFORD, M.A. 1s. 6d.
- HERODOTUS. BOOK VI. Edited by Prof. J. STRACHAN. 3s. 6d.
- HOMER.—ILIAD. BOOK IX. By the late J. J. PRATT, M.A., and WALTER LEAF, Litt.D., Fellows of Trinity College, Cambridge. 2s.
—ILIAD. BOOK XXIV. With Notes and Vocabulary by W. LEAF, Litt.D., and the Rev. M. A. BAYFIELD, M.A. 1s. 6d.
—ODYSSEY. BOOK IX. Edited by Prof. J. E. B. MAYOR. 2s. 6d.
- PHEDRUS. With Notes, Vocabulary, by the Rev. G. H. NALL, M.A. 1s. 6d. [In September.]
- PLATO.—EUTHYPHRO (and MENEXENUS). With Introduction and Notes by C. E. GRAVES, M.A., Fellow of St. John's College, Cambridge. 1s. 6d.
—EUTHYPHRO, APOLOGY, CRITO, and PHEDO. Translated by F. J. CHURCH. 2s. 6d.
- THUCYDIDES.—THE FALL of PLATEÆ and the PLAGUE at ATHENS. From Books II. and III. By W. T. SUTHERY, M.A., and A. S. GRAVES, B.A. 1s. 6d.
—BOOKS VI., VII. By the Rev. PERCIVAL FROST, M.A. With Map. 3s. 6d.
—BOOK VII. By E. C. MARCHANT, M.A. 3s. 6d.
- XENOPHON.—ANABASIS. BOOK I. With Notes and Vocabulary by the Rev. A. S. WALFORD, M.A. 1s. 6d.
—BOOK I. With Notes, Vocabulary, and Exercises by E. A. WELLS, M.A. 1s. 6d.
—BOOK II. With Notes and Vocabulary by the Rev. A. S. WALFORD, M.A. 1s. 6d.
—BOOK IV. With Notes and Vocabulary by the Rev. E. D. STONE, M.A. 1s. 6d.
- XENOPHON.—TALES from the CYROPÆDIA. With Notes and Vocabulary by C. H. KERN, M.A. 1s. 6d.
- SELECTIONS ILLUSTRATIVE of GREEK LIFE. With Notes and Vocabulary by C. H. KERN, M.A. [In the press.]

ENGLISH LITERATURE.

- BACON.—ADVANCEMENT of LEARNING. BOOK I. With Notes. By F. G. SELBY, M.A. 2s.
- BOSWELL.—LIFE of JOHNSON. Edited by M. MORRIS. 8s. 6d.
- BURKE.—REFLECTIONS on the FRENCH REVOLUTION. By F. G. SELBY, M.A. 5s.
- BUTLER.—HUDIBRAS. Part I. Edited by A. MILNES, M.A. 3s. 6d.
- COWPER.—LETTERS. Edited by the Rev. W. BENHAM. 2s. 6d. net.
- DRYDEN.—ESSAYS. Selected and Edited by C. D. YONGE. 2s. 6d.
- GOLDSMITH.—ESSAYS. Edited by Prof. C. D. YONGE. 2s. 6d.
- GRAY.—POEMS. With Introduction and Notes. By J. BRADSHAW, LL.D. 1s. 9d.
- MILTON.—PARADISE LOST. BOOKS I. and II. By MICHAEL MACMILLAN, M.A. 1s. 9d.
- POETICAL WORKS. Edited by Prof. D. MARSON. 3s. 6d.
- POPE.—POETICAL WORKS (including the "Essay on Man"). Ed. by A. W. WARD. 3s. 6d.
- SCOTT.—THE LADY of the LAKE. By G. H. STUART, M.A. 2s. 6d.; sewed, 2s.—CANTO I, 9d.
- Edited by Professor F. T. PALGRAVE. 1s.
- MARMION. By MICHAEL MACMILLAN, B.A. 3s.; sewed, 2s. 6d.
- MARMION. and THE LORD of the ISLES. Edited by F. T. PALGRAVE. 1s.
- SHAKESPEARE. With Introduction and Notes by K. DEIGHTON.
- KING LEAR. 1s. 6d.
- CORIOLANUS. 2s. 6d.; sewed, 2s.
- MACBETH. 1s. 9d.
- A PRIMER of SHAKESPEARE. By Prof. DOWDEN. 3s.
- SHORT STUDIES of SHAKESPEARE'S PLOTS. By Prof. C. RANSOME. HAMLET. 9d.
- SPENSER.—THE FAERIE QUEENE. BOOK I. By H. M. PERCIVAL, M.A. 3s.; sewed, 2s. 6d.
- SPENSER. By R. W. CHURCH. 1s. 6d.; sewed, 1s.
- TENNYSON.—SELECTIONS from TENNYSON. With Introduction and Notes by F. J. ROWE, M.A. and W. T. WEBB, M.A. Globe 8vo, 3s. 6d.; or in 2 Parts—Part I, 2s. 6d.; Part II, 2s. 6d.

FRENCH AND GERMAN.

- BEAUMARCHAIS.—LE BARBIER de SEVILLE. Edited by L. P. BLOUET, B.A. 3s. 6d.
- CORNEILLE.—IE CID. By G. E. FAS-SACHT. 1s.
- VOITAIRES.—CHARLES XII. By G. E. FASSACHT. 3s. 6d.
- MACMILLAN'S PROGRESSIVE FRENCH COURSE. By G. E. FASSACHT. 1st Year 1s. 2nd Year, 2s. 3rd Year, 2s. 6d.—KEYS, 4s. 6d. each.
- MACMILLAN'S FRENCH COMPOSITION. By G. E. FASSACHT. Part I, Elementary, 2s. 6d.—KEY, 4s. 6d. Part II, Advanced, 5s.—KEY, 5s. net.
- A FRENCH GRAMMAR for SCHOOLS. By G. E. FASSACHT. 3s. 6d.
- A COMPENDIOUS DICTIONARY of the FRENCH LANGUAGE. By Prof. ELWALL. Adapted by G. MASSON. 3s. 6d.
- MACMILLAN'S PROGRESSIVE GERMAN COURSE. By G. E. FASSACHT. 1st Year, 1s. 6d. 2nd Year, 2s. 6d.—KEYS, 4s. 6d. each.
- MACMILLAN'S PROGRESSIVE GERMAN READERS. By G. E. FASSACHT. 1st Year, 2s. 6d.
- MACMILLAN'S GERMAN COMPOSITION. By G. E. FASSACHT. 2s. 6d.—KEY, 4s. 6d.
- A COMPENDIOUS GERMAN GRAMMAR. By Prof. WHITNEY. 4s. 6d.
- A COMPENDIOUS GERMAN and ENGLISH DICTIONARY. By Prof. WHITNEY, assisted by H. H. EDGREN. 5s.
- GERMAN ENGLISH PART, separately, 2s. 6d.

GEOGRAPHY AND HISTORY.

- COMMERCIAL GEOGRAPHY. By Prof. E. C. K. GONNAR. 3s. 6d. [In September.]
- CLASS-BOOK of GENERAL GEOGRAPHY. By H. R. MILL, D.Sc. 3s. 6d.
- GEOGRAPHY of INDIA, BURMA, and CEYLON. By H. J. BLANFORD, F.G.S. 2s. 6d.
- GEOGRAPHY of EUROPE. By J. SIME, M.A. 2s.
- GEOGRAPHY of the BRITISH ISLES. By Sir A. GRIEK, F.R.S. 1s.
- SHORT GEOGRAPHY of the BRITISH ISLANDS. By J. R. and H. S. GREEN. 3s. 6d.
- A PRIMER of the HISTORY of GREECE. By C. A. FYFFE, M.A. 1s.
- A PRIMER of the HISTORY of ROME. By Bishop CRIGHTON, D.D. 1s.
- A HISTORY of ROME. By E. S. SHUCKERBURN, M.A. 8s. 6d.
- A HISTORY of ENGLAND for BEGINNERS. By A. B. BUCKLEY. 8s.
- HISTORY of ENGLAND. By EDITH THOMPSON. 3s. 6d.

DIVINITY.

- THE GOSPEL according to ST. MATTHEW. The Greek Text. With Introduction and Notes by the Rev. A. STOMAN, M.A. 2s. 6d.
- THE GOSPEL according to ST. LUKE. The Greek Text. With Introduction and Notes by the Rev. J. BOND, M.A. 2s. 6d.
- THE ACTS of the APOSTLES. The Greek Text. With Notes by T. E. PAGE, M.A. 2s. 6d.
- A CLASS-BOOK of the CATECHISM of the CHURCH of ENGLAND. By the Rev. G. F. MACLEAR, D.D. 1s. 6d.
- A FIRST CLASS-BOOK of the CATECHISM of the CHURCH of ENGLAND. By the Rev. G. F. MACLEAR, D.D. 6d.
- AN ELEMENTARY INTRODUCTION to the BOOK of COMMON PRAYER. By the Rev. F. PROCTOR and the Rev. G. F. MACLEAR, D.D. 2s. 6d.
- AN INTRODUCTION to the CREEDS. By the Rev. G. F. MACLEAR, D.D. 3s. 6d.
- A HISTORY of the CHRISTIAN CHURCH during the FIRST SIX CENTURIES. By Archdeacon CHEETHAM, D.D. 10s. 6d.

MATHEMATICS AND SCIENCE.

- ARITHMETIC for SCHOOLS. By Rev. J. B. LOCK, M.A. New Edition, Revised and Enlarged, 1894. 4s. 6d. (Copies of the last Edition are still on sale.—KEY, 10s. 6d.)
- ARITHMETIC in THEORY and PRACTICE. By J. BROOKSMITH, M.A. 4s. 6d.—KEY, 10s. 6d.
- ARITHMETIC for BEGINNERS. By J. and E. J. BROOKSMITH. 1s. 6d.—KEY, 6s. 6d.
- A TEXT-BOOK of EUCLID'S ELEMENTS. Including Alternative Proofs, with Additional Theorems and Exercises, Classified and Arranged. By H. S. HALL, M.A., and F. H. STEVENSON, M.A., Masters of the Military Side, Chifton College. BOOKS I.-VI. and XI., 4s. 6d.; BOOK I., 1s.; BOOKS I. and II., 1s. 6d.; BOOKS I.-IV., 2s.; BOOKS II. and III., 2s.; BOOKS III. and IV., 2s.; BOOKS III.-VI., 3s.; BOOKS V., VI., and XI., 2s. 6d.; BOOK XI., 1s.—KEY to I.-VI. and XI., 8s. 6d.; KEY to I.-IV., 6s. 6d.; KEY to VI. and XI., 3s. 6d.
- THE ELEMENTS of EUCLID. By I. TODRINTER, F.R.S. 3s. 6d. BOOKS I. and II., 1s.—KEY, 6s. 6d.
- ELEMENTARY ALGEBRA. By CHARLES SMITH, M.A., Master of Sidney Sussex College, Cambridge. Second Edition, Revised. 4s. 6d.—KEY. Crown 8vo, 10s. 6d.
- ALGEBRAIC FACTORS. By J. ARNOT JARMAN. 2s.; with Answers, 2s. 6d.
- ALGEBRAIC EXERCISES. Progressively Arranged. By Rev. C. A. JONES and C. H. CHEYNE, M.A., Late Mathematical Masters at Westminster School. 2s. 6d.—KEY. By the Rev. W. FAIRLES, M.A. 7s. 6d.
- ALGEBRA for BEGINNERS. By H. S. HALL, M.A., and S. R. KNIGHT, B.A., M.B. 2s. With Answers, 2s. 6d.
- ELEMENTARY ALGEBRA for SCHOOLS. Globe 8vo, 5s. 6d. With Answers, 4s. 6d.; Answers, 1s.—KEY, 5s. 6d.
- ALGEBRAIC EXERCISES and EXAMINATION PAPERS. To accompany "Elementary Algebra." Revised. 2s. 6d.
- HIGHER ALGEBRA. Fourth Edition. 7s. 6d.—KEY. 10s. 6d.
- ELEMENTARY TRIGONOMETRY. 4s. 6d. [KEY, in the press.]

- TRIGONOMETRY for BEGINNERS, as far as the Solution of Triangles. Third Edition. 2s. 6d.—KEY, 6s. 6d.
- ELEMENTARY TRIGONOMETRY. Sixth Edition. 4s. 6d.—KEY. 8s. 6d.
- HIGHER TRIGONOMETRY. Fifth Edition. 4s. 6d. Both Parts complete in 1 vol., 7s. 6d. [KEY, in preparation.]
- MECHANICS for BEGINNERS. Part I. MECHANICS of SOLIDS. 2s. 6d.
- ELEMENTARY STATICS. Third Edition. 3s. 6d.—KEY. Crown 8vo, 8s. 6d.
- ELEMENTARY DYNAMICS. Third Edition. 3s. 6d.—KEY. Crown 8vo, 8s. 6d.
- ELEMENTARY DYNAMICS and STATICS. 6s. 6d.
- PRACTICAL LESSONS in PHYSICAL MEASUREMENT. By A. EARL, M.A. 1s.

TECHNICAL EDUCATION.

- ELEMENTS of HANDICRAFT and DESIGN. By W. A. S. BRINSON, M.A. 5s. net.
- DRAWING and DESIGN: a Class Text-Book for Beginners. By E. H. TAYLOR. 2s. 6d.
- LEAD WORK: Old and Ornamental, and for the most part English. By W. B. LETHBRIDGE. 4s. 6d. net.
- A PRIMER of HYGIENE. By E. S. REYNOLDS, M.D. 1s.
- A PRIMER of DOMESTIC ECONOMY. By E. A. BARNETT and H. C. O'NEILL. 1s.
- DRESSMAKING: a Manual for Teachers. By Mrs HENRY GREENFELL. 1s.
- NEEDLEWORK, KNITTING, and CUTTING OUT. With Methods of Teaching. By E. ROSEYAR. Crown 8vo, 6s.

MACMILLAN & CO., LONDON.

THE ACADEMY.

A WEEKLY REVIEW OF LITERATURE, SCIENCE, AND ART.

No. 1165.
[New Issue.]

SATURDAY, SEPTEMBER 1, 1894.

PRICE 3d.
[Registered as a Newspaper.]

| TABLE OF CONTENTS | |
|---|-----|
| MÉNÉVAL'S MEMOIRS OF NAPOLEON, by Judge O'CONNOR | 143 |
| MORRIS | 143 |
| EDMOND LEE-HAMILTON'S SONNETS, by J. A. NOBLE | 145 |
| EDWARD DICKEY ON BULOARIA, by J. G. C. MINCHIN | 145 |
| COMPAYRE'S PSYCHOLOGY AND EDUCATION, by FOSTER | 146 |
| WATSON | 146 |
| NEW NOVELS, by WILLIAM SHARP | 147 |
| SOME BOOKS ON ECONOMICS | 149 |
| NOTES AND NEWS | 149 |
| UNIVERSITY JOTTINGS | 150 |
| ORIGINAL VERSE: "ADVICE TO A YOUNG BLACKBIRD," by ELLIOT STOCK | 150 |
| OBITUARY: DIONYSIOS LATAS, by Mrs. EDMONDS | 151 |
| NOTES FROM DIOPHANTUS REGISTERS | 151 |
| SLAVICA, by W. R. M. | 151 |
| MESSEURS. MACMILLAN & CO.'S ANNOUNCEMENTS | 151 |
| MR. JOHN C. NIMMO'S ANNOUNCEMENTS | 153 |
| MESSEURS. W. & J. CHAMBERS & CO.'S ANNOUNCEMENTS | 153 |
| SELECTED FOREIGN BOOKS | 153 |
| CORRESPONDENCE— | |
| The Sources of Chaucer's "Prioresse's Tale," by Prof. Skeat; Notes on Some Ogham Inscriptions in Ireland, by R. A. S. Macalister and the Earl of Southesk | 153 |
| APPOINTMENTS FOR NEXT WEEK | 153 |
| MAX MÜLLER'S LECTURES ON THE VEDĀNTA PHILOSOPHY, by Colonel G. A. JACOB | 155 |
| SOME OROLOGICAL BOOKS | 156 |
| PHILOLOGY NOTES | 156 |
| DURER'S LITERARY REMAINS, by W. M. CONWAY | 157 |
| NOTES ON ART AND ARCHAEOLOGY | 157 |
| MUSIC PUBLICATIONS, by J. S. SHEDLOCK | 158 |

TYPE-WRITING.

AUTHORS, PUBLISHERS, &c.—Scientific, Literary, and Medical MSS. carefully and promptly typewritten by RAYNE & CO., 40, Norfolk Street, Strand, W.C. Private room for dictation. Highest references. Translations.

THE FLEET STREET TYPEWRITERS

115, FLEET STREET, E.C. Lowest Charges. Highest Speed. Every kind of Typewriting Work Done. Price List.—115, Fleet Street, London.

TYPE-WRITERS.—SECOND-HAND

MACHINES, equal to new, FOR SALE, EXCHANGE, or LENT ON HIRE. Machines Sold by Instalments on Terms to suit purchasers. Use of Machine taught free to hirers or purchasers. Remingtons, Yosts, Hammonds, Caligraphs, Barlocks, Etc., &c., from 25s. MS. Copied with accuracy and despatch at lowest rates. Highest references. Illustrated Catalogue free.—N. TAYLOR, Manager, National Type-Writer Exchange, 74, Chancery Lane, London (Holborn end).

CHEAP TYPE-WRITING RIBBONS.—

Ribbons for Barlock (18 yds.), 3s. each; Two, 3s. 6d. net; post free. Other ribbons same rate.—E. CARO, care of Wm. Newall, 101, Park Road, Bradford.

CATALOGUES

FOREIGN BOOKS and PERIODICALS

promptly supplied on moderate terms. CATALOGUES on application. DULAU & CO., 37, SOHO SQUARE.

BAEDEKER'S & BADDELEY'S

TOURISTS' GUIDE BOOKS. New fully detailed Catalogue sent post free on application. DULAU & CO., 37, SOHO SQUARE, LONDON, W.

FOREIGN BOOKS AT FOREIGN PRICES.

WILLIAMS & NORGATE,

Importers of Foreign Books, 11, HENRIETTA STREET, COVENT GARDEN,

AND 20, SOUTH FREDERICK STREET, EDINBURGH. CATALOGUES post free on application.

TH. WOHLLEBEN,

FOREIGN BOOKSELLER, 45, GREAT RUSSELL STREET (Opposite the British Museum), Supplies all FOREIGN BOOKS and PERIODICALS at the most moderate prices. Catalogues on application.

AGENCY FOR AMERICAN BOOKS.

G. P. PUTNAM'S SONS, PUBLISHERS

and BOOKSELLERS, of 27 and 29 West 23rd Street, New York, and 24, BEDFORD STREET, LONDON, W.C., desire to call the attention of the READING PUBLIC to the excellent facilities presented by their Branch House in London for filling, on the most favorable terms, orders for their own STANDARD PUBLICATIONS, and for ALL AMERICAN BOOKS and PERIODICALS.—CATALOGUES sent on application.

NEW WORK in preparation by

W. RUSSELL, Author of "An Invalid's Twelve Years' Experience"—"MAN: his Peculiarities, Weakness, Diseases, Degeneration, and Remedies."

ST. PAUL'S SCHOOL, London.—

FOUNDATION SCHOLARSHIPS. AN EXAMINATION for filling up about 20 VACANCIES on the Foundation will be held on the 4th SEPTEMBER NEXT.—For information, apply to the Bursar, St. Paul's School, West Kensington, W.

UNIVERSITY of ST. ANDREWS.

Chancellor—His Grace the DUKE of ARGYLL, K.T., LL.D.
Rector—The Most Honourable the MARQUESS of BUTE, K.T., LL.D.
Principal—JAMES DONALDSON, M.A., LL.D.

OPENING OF SESSION 1894-95.

September 28th to October 5th—Preliminary Examinations in Arts, Science, and Medicine at St. Andrews and Dundee. Candidates will obtain Examination Schedules on application to the Secretary. These must be returned duly filled up, and fees paid, not later than September 24th.

September 29th to October 5th—Bursary Competitions at St. Andrews and Dundee. Candidates should send in their Schedules (to be obtained from the Secretary to the Dean of the Faculty of Arts, The University, St. Andrews, on or before 2nd September).

September 29th to 5th October—M.A. (Ordinary and Honours), L.L.B., and B.Sc. Examinations. The M.A. Examination Schedules should be returned, duly filled up and fees paid, by September 10th. October 9th—Opening of the United College, St. Andrews, and of University College, Dundee (Faculties of Arts, Science, and Medicine).

November 2nd—Bursary Competition at St. Mary's College, St. Andrews. November 2nd and 3rd—B.D. Examinations at St. Andrews. November 4th—Opening of St. Mary's College (Faculty of Theology).

The Classes in the University are open to Students of both sexes and include Latin, Greek, English, French, Hebrew, Syriac, Logic, and Metaphysics, Moral Philosophy, Education, Mathematics, Natural Philosophy, Chemistry, Zoology, Botany, Physiology, Anatomy, Engineering, Systematic Theology, Biblical Criticism and Church History.

Specimen Examination Papers and full particulars respecting the Courses of Instruction, Fees, Examinations for Degrees, &c., will be found in the CALENDAR of the UNIVERSITY, published by Messrs. WILLIAM BLACKWOOD & SONS, 45, George Street, Edinburgh, price 2s. 6d.; by post, 2s. 11d.

A general Prospectus for the coming Winter Session, as well as detailed information regarding any department of the University, may be had on application to J. Maitland Anderson, Secretary.

University of St. Andrews, 25th August, 1894.

DEPARTMENT of SCIENCE and ART,

NATIONAL ART TRAINING SCHOOL, South Kensington, S.W.
Principal—JOHN C. L. SPARKES, Esq.

The ANNUAL SESSION, 1894-95, will commence on WEDNESDAY, October 3rd. Art Classes in connection with the Training School are open to the Public on payment of fees. The Classes for Men and Women Students meet separately.

The Studies comprise Ornament and the Figure, with a view to their intimate use in Design and Composition, and include the study of Plants and Flowers, the Painting of Still Life, and the Drawing and Painting of Ornament and of the Figure.

Candidates for admission who have not passed any Examination of the Department in Freehand Drawing must pass the Admission Examination in that subject. The Examination will be held at the School on October 2nd and 3rd, at 11.45 a.m. and 4.45 p.m. on both days, and on subsequent Tuesdays at frequent intervals during the Session.

Application for further information may be made in writing to the Secretary, Department of Science and Art, S.W., or, on and after October 3rd, personally, to the Registrar, at the School, Exhibition Road, S.W.

By order of the Lords of the Committee of Council on Education.

VICTORIA UNIVERSITY.

THE YORKSHIRE COLLEGE, LEEDS.

The Sixty-fourth Session of the Medical Department and the Twenty-first Session of the Department of Science, Technology, and Arts begin OCTOBER 8th.

The Classes prepare for Professions, Commerce, and University Degrees in Arts, Science, and Medicine. The Physical, Chemical, Biological, Engineering, and Leather Industries Laboratories, and the Weaving Sheds, Dye-house, and Printing Rooms will be open daily for Practical Work.

The following Prospectuses may be had free from the Registrar:—
1. For Regular Day Students.
2. For Occasional and Evening Students.
3. Classes in Agriculture.
4. For Medical Students.

A Hall of Residence for College Students has been established.

THE DURHAM COLLEGE of SCIENCE

NEWCASTLE-UPON-TYNE.

The College represents the Faculties of Science and Engineering in the University of Durham, and is open to Students of either sex.

In addition to the Departments of Pure Science, complete Courses of Instruction are provided in Agriculture, Engineering, Naval Architecture, and Mining. There are also Departments of Literature, Classics, History, Modern Languages, Fine Art, &c.

A House of Residence for Women Students is attached to the College. The SESSION commences SEPTEMBER 24th, 1894. Full particulars will be found in the College Calendar, price 1s. Prospectuses will be forwarded on application free.

H. F. STODOLSKA, Secretary.

THE CAMBRIDGE TRAINING COLLEGE FOR WOMEN TEACHERS.

Principal—Miss E. P. HUGHES, late of Newnham College.

The Students attend the Cambridge University Lectures on Teaching, and have ample opportunity for teaching in various schools in Cambridge.

The object of the College is to give a professional training to educated women who intend to teach. In addition to the course of training, it offers the advantages of a college life, and one year's residence in Cambridge.

Students are admitted in January and in September. Full particulars may be obtained by application to the Principal.

EDINBURGH.—SUPERIOR BOARD

offered for STUDENT in professional gentleman's family; large house; good locality. Highest references.—No. 388, Robertson & Scott, Hanover Street, Edinburgh.

THE UNIVERSITY of ST. ANDREWS

GRANTS TRX

DIPLOMA and TITLE of L.L.A. to WOMEN.

The Subjects of Examination may be selected from any seven out of thirty different subjects, the standard being the same as that for the M.A. Degree. The centres of examination are St. Andrews, Aberdeen, Bedford, Belfast, Birmingham, Bristol, Cardiff, Cheltenham, Cork, Dublin, Dumfries, Edinburgh, Inverness, Leeds, Leicester, Liverpool, London, Loughborough, Manchester, Newcastle-on-Tyne, Paisley, Teuro, &c.

For Prospectus, &c., apply to the SECRETARY, L.L.A. Scheme, the University, St. Andrews, N.B.

UNIVERSITY COLLEGE, LONDON.

LECTURES ON ZOOLOGY.

The General COURSE of LECTURES on ZOOLOGY, by Professor W. F. R. WELDON, F.R.S., will COMMENCE on WEDNESDAY, OCTOBER 3rd, at 1 p.m.

LONDON SCHOOL of MEDICINE for

WOMEN, 30, HANDEL STREET, BRUSWICK SQUARE, W.C., and the ROYAL FREE HOSPITAL, prepare for all the Medical Examinations open to Women. Entrance Scholarship, value £30; Stuart Hill Scholarship, £20 a year for four years; Mackay Prizes of £20 each, &c.—Apply to SECRETARY at School.

TECHNICAL CLASSES for GENTLE-

WOMEN, with instruction in Housewifery and the Care of Children. Boarders, weekly boarders, and day-students received.—Address Miss E. C. SHARLAND, St. Andrew's, Watford, Herts.

GERMAN UNIVERSITY GRADUATE

(34), with 14 years' experience in English Public Schools and abroad, desires RE-ENGAGEMENT. Thorough English, French, German, Spanish, &c. Excellent testimonials.—Address "MAESTER," Bromley Villa, Grove Road, Windsor.

IMPORTANT.—PRINTING AND PUBLISHING

NEWSPAPERS, MAGAZINES, BOOKS,

&c.—KING, SELL & RAILTON, Limited, high-class Printers and Publishers, 12, Gough Square, 4, Bolt Court, Fleet Street, E.C., have specially built Rotary and other fast Machines for printing and binding illustrated or other Publications.

Advice and assistance given to anyone wishing to commence New Journals. Facilities upon the premises for Editorial Offices, free. Advertising and Publishing Departments conducted.

Telephone 2739. Telegraph, "Africanism, London."

COAL-DUST an EXPLOSIVE AGENT,

as shown by an Examination of the Camerton Explosion. Crown Copyright. Illustrated with 7 Plates. By DONALD M. L. STUART, F.R.S., Mining and Civil Engineer. London: Office of the Colliery Manager, 32, Bonville Street; E. & F. N. SPON, 125, Strand, N. York; Spou & Chamberlain, 12, Cortlandt Street. Or of the Author, Redland, Bristol.

The object of this work is to present a description of the Explosion, to locate its origin and trace its propagation; to enquire into the source and character of the gaseous mixtures to which the initial gaseous explosions, and the subsequent propagations were due; the nature and sufficiency of the physical and chemical activities for the effects produced; and to indicate the conditions under which the explosion was commenced and propagated and stopped.—A. LUTON'S PAPER. Price 7s. 6d. net; free by post, 8s.

IMPORTANT WORK ON THE HISTORY OF THE NOVEL.

A GUIDE TO

BRITISH & AMERICAN NOVELS.

BEING A COMPREHENSIVE MANUAL TO BRITISH AND AMERICAN FICTION FROM THE EARLIEST PERIOD TO THE END OF 1893.

BY PERCY RUSSELL, Author of "The Author's Manual," &c. Crown 8vo, cloth, 300 pp., price 3s. 6d. net; by post, 3s. 10d.

THE GUIDE CONTAINS A COMPLETE HISTORY OF THE NOVEL, LIVING NOVELISTS, AND NOVELISTS OF THE PAST.

BY THE SAME AUTHOR.

THE AUTHOR'S MANUAL.

WITH PREFATORY REMARKS BY MR. GLADSTONE. Seventh and Cheap Edition. With New Preface, 304 pp., crown 8vo, cloth, price 3s. 6d. net; by post, 3s. 10d. With Portrait.

"Mr. Russell's book is a very complete manual and guide for journalist and author. It is not a merely practical work—its literary and appreciative of literature in its best sense,.... We have little else but praise for the volume."—Westminster Review.

LONDON: DIGBY, LONG & CO., PUBLISHERS, 18, BOUVERIE STREET, FLEET STREET, E.C.

ESTABLISHED 1831.

BIRKBECK BANK,

Southampton Buildings, Chancery Lane, London. TWO-ANNUAL HALF PERCENT INTEREST ALLOWED ON DEPOSITS repayable on demand.

TWO PER CENT. ON CURRENT ACCOUNTS, on the minimum monthly balances, when not drawn below £100. STOCKS, SHARES, and ANNUITIES purchased and sold.

SAVINGS DEPARTMENT.

For the encouragement of Thrift the Bank receives small sums on deposit, and allows interest monthly on each completed 4d.

The BIRKBECK ALMANAC, with full particulars, post free. FRANKS RAVENSCROFT, Manager.

RICHARD BENTLEY & SON'S LIST.

Notice.—THE TEMPLE BAR

MAGAZINE for SEPTEMBER contains, among other Articles of Interest:—THE ADVENTURESS, Chaps. 9-12.—POET, PARSON, and PAMPHLETEER, by Mrs. ANDREW CROSSE.—LOUISA MARCHIONESS of WATERFORD, by W. M. HAROINGE.—MADAME CHARLES REYBAUD.—AN AFTERNOON CALL.—ALEXANDER LORD PITSLIGO.—CLIFF'S END FARM, by FLORENCE WARDEN—&c.

Three New Novels.

NOW READY.

THE ADVENTURESS.

By MRS. ANNIE EDWARDES,
Author of "Ought We to Visit Her?" &c.
In 1 vol., crown 8vo, 6s.

NOW READY.

WEDDED TO A GENIUS.

By NEIL CHRISTISON.
In 2 vols., crown 8vo.

"Few modern novels show a better insight to the human heart, and it is calculated to hold up an instructive mirror to many an ill-matched pair."—Scotsman.

NOW READY.

IN a CINQUE PORT: a Story of Winchelsea.

By E. M. HEWITT. In 3 vols., crown 8vo.
"A graceful and suggestive story. The old-world glories and present autumnal grace of Winchelsea are brought vividly before the reader. Every page is indicative of a cultured mind and a certain nobleness of purpose."
Athenæum.

POPULAR EDITIONS

OF

POPULAR NOVELS.

Each in 1 vol., crown 8vo, 6s.

By RHODA BROUGHTON.

A BEGINNER.
MRS. BLIGH.
COMETH UP AS A FLOWER.
GOOD-BYE, SWEETHEART.
JOAN.
NANCY.
NOT WISELY, BUT TOO WELL.
RED AS A ROSE IS SHE.
SECOND THOUGHTS.
"DOCTOR CUPID."
BELINDA.
ALAS!

By ROSA N. CAREY.

LOVER OR FRIEND?
FOR LILIAS.
NELLIE'S MEMORIES.
BARBARA HEATHCOTE'S TRIAL.
HERIOT'S CHOICE.
NOT LIKE OTHER GIRLS.
ONLY THE GOVERNESS.
QUEENIE'S WHIM.
ROBERT ORR'S ATONEMENT.
UNCLE MAN.
WEE WIFE.
WOODED AND MARRIED.
MARY ST. JOHN.

By MARIE CORELLI.

A ROMANCE OF TWO WORLDS.
VENDETTA.
ARDATH.
THELMA.
WORMWOOD.
THE SOUL OF LILITH.

RICHARD BENTLEY & SON, New Burlington Street
Publishers in Ordinary to Her Majesty the Queen.

READY SEPTEMBER 1.

VOLUME II., price 15s.

SOCIAL ENGLAND

A Record of the Progress of the People in Religion, Laws, Learning, Arts, Science, Literature, Industry, Commerce, and Manners, from the Earliest Times to the Present Day.

Edited by H. D. TRAILL, D.C.L.,

Sometime Fellow of St. John's College, Oxford.

 Vol. II. embraces the Period from the Accession of Edward I. to the Death of Henry VII.

The Contributors to Volume II. include:—

- By Prof. MAITLAND, M.A.—The History of Law.
- „ R. L. POOLE, M.A.—Wyclif and the Lollards.
- „ HUBERT HALL, F.S.A.—The History of Trade.
- „ LAIRD CLOWES—The Navy.
- „ DR. HUGHES—Architecture and Art.
- „ DR. HEATH—Literature.
- „ DR. HEATH—Growth of a Common English Language.
- „ OWEN EDWARDS, M.A.—Some Episodes in Welsh History.
- „ W. S. ROCKSTRO—Early English Music.
- „ C. RAYMOND BEAZLEY, M.A., F.R.G.S.—Travel and Exploration by Englishmen in the Early Middle Ages.
- „ C. R. L. FLETCHER, M.A.—Medieval Town Life.
- „ ROBERT STEEL—Alchemy and Astrology.
- „ DR. CREIGHTON—Medicine and Public Health.
- „ E. G. DAFF—Early History of Printing.

Entirely New and Revised Edition

NOW READY, PART I., price 7d.

DR. BREWER'S DICTIONARY OF PHRASE AND FABLE

Giving the Derivation, Source, or Origin of Common Phrases, Allusions, and Words that have a Tale to Tell.

In this New and Enlarged Edition of THE DICTIONARY OF PHRASE AND FABLE more than one-third of the book consists of entirely new matter. Some 350 extra pages have been added, and all that has been retained of previous editions has been subjected to the severest scrutiny.

The fact that nearly 100,000 copies of Brewer's Dictionary have already been sold in Great Britain alone shows its vast popularity, which will be greatly enhanced by this New and Enlarged Edition.

NEW BOOKS for 1894-5.

A List of Cassell and Company's NEW and FORTHCOMING VOLUMES for the SEASON 1894-5 will be sent post free on application.

CASSELL & COMPANY, LIMITED, LONDON;
And all Booksellers.

THE LITERATURE OF THE FAR EAST,

PUBLISHED BY KEGAN PAUL,
TRENCH, TRÜBNER & CO., LTD.

CONFUCIUS, the GREAT TEACHER.
By MAJIN-GUEN G. G. ALEXANDER. 6s.

CHINESE CHARACTERISTICS. By ARTHUR H. SMITH, Twenty-two Years a Missionary of the American Board in China. New Edition. 7s. 6d.

LEAVES from my CHINESE SCRAP BOOK. By F. H. BALFOUR. 7s. 6d.

CLASSICAL POETRY of the JAPANESE. By Professor B. H. CHAMBERLAIN. 7s. 6d. [Trübner's Oriental Series.]

THINGS JAPANESE. By Professor CHAMBERLAIN. Second and Revised Edition. 8s. 6d.

RELIGION in CHINA. Containing an Account of the Three Religions of the Chinese. By the Rev. Dr. EOKINS. Third Edition. 7s. 6d. [Trübner's Oriental Series.]

CHINESE BUDDHISM. Sketches Historical and Critical. By the Rev. Dr. EOKINS. 18s. [Trübner's Oriental Series.]

HANDBOOK for the STUDENT of CHINESE BUDDHISM. By E. J. EISEL. Second Edition. 18s.

CHINESE CLASSICS. Translated into English by the Rev. Dr. LEGGE.

Vol. I. LIFE and TEACHINGS of CONFUCIUS. Sixth Edition. 10s. 6d.

Vol. II. WORK of MENGZIUS. 12s.

Vol. III. SHI-KING, or Book of Poetry. 12s.

FOLK-LORE of CHINA, and its Affinities with that of the Aryan and Semitic Races. By N. B. DENNY. 10s. 6d.

JAPANESE and ENGLISH DICTIONARY. By J. C. HEPBURN. Pocket Edition. 14s.

FANS of JAPAN. By Mrs. Salway. With 10 Full-Page Coloured Plates and 30 other Illustrations. Royal 4to, 31s. 6d. net.

TRANSACTIONS and PROCEEDINGS of the JAPAN SOCIETY of LONDON. Vol. I. 15s.

ENGLISH INTERCOURSE with SIAM in the SEVENTEENTH CENTURY. By J. ANDERSON. 15s. [Trübner's Oriental Series.]

BOOK of CHINESE POETRY. Being the Collection of Ballads, Sagas, Hymns, and other Pieces known as the Shih Ching. Metrically Translated by C. F. R. ALLEN. 16s.

SYLLABIC DICTIONARY of the CHINESE LANGUAGE, arranged according to the Wu-Peng Yuen Yin, with the Pronunciation of the Characters as heard in Peking, Canton, Amoy, and Shanghai. By S. W. WILLIAMS. Third Edition. 4to, £3 15s.

PAPERS RELATING to INDO-CHINA. Reprinted from Dalrymple's "Oriental Repository," "Asiatic Researches," and the "Journal of the Asiatic Society of Bengal." 2 vols. 21s. [Trübner's Oriental Series.]

PIDGIN-ENGLISH SING SONG; or Songs and Stories in the China-English Dialect. By C. G. LELAND, Author of "Britanna Ballads." Third Edition. 5s.

CHINESE LANGUAGE and LITERATURE. By Professor R. K. DOUGLAS. 5s.

THE LIFE of JENGHIZ KHAN. Translated from the Chinese by Professor R. K. DOUGLAS. 5s.

THE MIKADO'S EMPIRE. By W. E. GRIFFIS. Sixth Edition. Illustrated. 20s.

ORIENTAL CATALOGUE (No. 2) of NEW and SECOND-HAND BOOKS. Contents: Chinese Language—Books for Special Dialects—Pidgin-English and English Grammars for Chinese—Books on China: its Literature, History, Ethnography, &c.—Japanese Language—Languages of the Far East—Books on Japan—Bibliographies.

PATERNOSTER HOUSE, CHANCERY CROSS ROAD, LONDON.

SATURDAY, SEPTEMBER 1, 1894.

No. 1165, New Series.

THE EDITOR cannot undertake to return, or to correspond with the writers of, rejected manuscript.

It is particularly requested that all business letters regarding the supply of the paper, &c., may be addressed to the PUBLISHER, and not to the EDITOR.

LITERATURE.

Ménéval's Memoirs of Napoleon. Translated by Robert H. Sherard. Vols. II. and III. (Hutchinson.)

THE second and third volumes of this interesting work comprise the period between 1805 and 1815, the zenith and the nadir of Napoleon's fortunes. They dwell at length on the external history of the time: the epic of marvels which saw the Empire rise as an exhalation, and as quickly vanish, and in which the idolatry lavished on the hero on the scene changed into the execration of a transformed world. But we shall not follow the course of a narrative which simply reproduces the Napoleonic legend. Some passages, indeed, in Ménéval's book referring to these events deserve attention. Enthusiastic Bonapartist as he was, he did not admire the policy of Tilsit; he confirms the worst that has been written, or said, of Talleyrand, from 1808 to 1814; and he has noticed points in Napoleon's public conduct which have been the subject of much controversy. There is little new, however, in these chapters: their most striking feature is the grotesque hatred of England appearing in every page, and the deep devotion the author felt for his master. Historically, the most remarkable part of the work is Ménéval's account of the artful intrigues which kept Marie Louise and Napoleon apart in 1814-15. This does not excuse what was worst in her conduct, but it relieves her character, in some measure, from charges that have been made against her. But what is most instructive and important in these volumes is this: a continual eye witness gives us a view of Napoleon in his camp, his closet, his court, and his home, no doubt favourable, but essentially correct; affords us an estimate of the acts, the habits, and the daily life of that wonderful being which puts to shame his lying detractors; and throws a steady and searching light on the grandest personage of modern times. Ménéval has grouped, too, around the great central figure most of the subordinate figures of Imperial France, and his portrait of Marie Louise is drawn with much care and skill.

We pass over the settlement made of the Continent, and of Germany, after the Peace of Pressburg. This was the real climax of the Napoleonic Empire. England, according to Ménéval, was to blame for the rupture with Prussia, the Continental System, and the events that led to Jena and Friedland; but we need not notice extravagance of this kind. Frenchmen of our day might do well to recollect that the author disapproved of the Russian alliance of 1807, though he almost always extols Napoleon's foreign policy.

"The treaty of Tilsit, which inaugurated this alliance, brought with it a system of concessions, the entire advantage of which was in favour of the Russian empire. Disadvantages and dangers were all that France ever derived from the treaty."

Like Lanfrey, Ménéval also believes that Alexander really tricked Napoleon, and got the better of him on the raft on the Niemen:—"The Russian monarch's affection for Napoleon was never sincere. As to the latter, he succumbed to the charm of the cunning Alexander."

England, of course, comes in for violent abuse for the bombardment of Copenhagen, and her intervention in Spain. Ménéval examines at length Napoleon's Spanish policy; declares that Talleyrand was the Emperor's tempter, a fact, we think, now completely proved; and pronounces the celebrated letter, supposed to be addressed to Murat, before Bayonne, genuine. This, we are convinced, is a mistaken notion. Ménéval admits that Napoleon felt compunctious visitings for what he had done to gain the crown of Spain:—

"The illegality, however, of the means employed was the frequent subject of Napoleon's reflections, and maintained him in a continual state of perplexity. His mind revolted against perfidious conduct, for he had an instinctive loathing for crooked and tortuous ways."

Napoleon's invasion of Spain was followed by the war with Austria, stirred up, Ménéval has no doubt, by Machiavellian England. We cannot dwell on Essling, Wagram, and Walcheren, or notice the provisions of the Peace of Vienna, the no plus ultra of the abasement of the House of Hapsburg. The divorce of Joséphine was succeeded by the Austrian marriage; Fate, in her irony mocked at this stroke of policy. Ménéval thus introduces Marie Louise on the scene—no Frenchman of the time had, perhaps, such means of watching and understanding her character:

"Accustomed to look upon the princesses of her family as instruments of the greatness of their House, and as destined to avert the storms which threatened it, she did not consider herself the victim of a sacrifice, but contemplated the part which she was called on to play not without pride. . . . She left Vienna with the wish to please Napoleon; her subjugation was completed when she had yet to know his character."

The policy of Austria on this occasion is fairly described:

"When she had been destined to become Napoleon's wife, her father, the Emperor, had said, on taking leave of her, 'Be a good wife, a good mother, and render yourself agreeable in everything to your husband.' Austrian politics had mentally added, 'as long as he is powerful, happy, and useful to our House.'"

The splendour of her position, the homage of France, and Napoleon's devoted and constant attentions, unquestionably turned the heart of Marie Louise to him: her letters and conversations clearly prove that she loved him, as much as love was possible in that feeble and easily yielding nature. Meanwhile, the excesses of the Continental System, impelling Napoleon to universal conquest, the devouring waste of the war in Spain, and the growing hatred of five-sixths of Europe, were undermining the overgrown Empire, which became rapidly weakened as it was enlarged. Ménéval tells us curious details respecting Napoleon's quarrel with Louis, which led to the annexation of Holland: a characteristic letter, too long to be quoted, and revealing the Emperor's mind on this subject, is omitted in the Correspondence published under the auspices of the son of the King of Holland. A very few words must suffice here:

"It is my intention to annex Holland to France, both to add to my territory, to strike the most terrible blow in my power against England, and to deliver myself from the continual insults which the ringleaders of your Cabinet never cease to direct against me."

Another letter of the kind omitted from the same collection has been published in Prince Napoleon's works on his uncle's detractors.

In these and other passages these volumes throw light on disputed parts of Napoleon's policy abroad; but we can do no more than refer to them. Ménéval makes a lame excuse for what was, perhaps, one of the most decisive mistakes of Napoleon's reign: his embarking in the crusade against Russia before bringing the war in Spain to a close. He accompanied Napoleon in the campaign of 1812, saw the Continent bow before its lord at Dresden, reached Moscow, and shared in the horrors of the retreat. There is nothing new in his account of these events. As usual, he sees the hand of England in them: "When the government of the Empire was rendering our nation great and powerful, the English Cabinet had but one thought, to strike it down, and to interest the continental powers in its fall."

Ménéval's health having been impaired by the retreat from Moscow, he was attached as a secretary to Marie Louise, by a master always indulgent to faithful servants. He describes the events of 1813 and 1814, but he heard, as it were, their echoes only; and his narrative is not of much value. He condemns Talleyrand severely, and not unjustly, for the conspiracy that overthrew Napoleon, and follows, as it were, the trail of the serpent from Erfurt to the last scenes in Paris. Time has not improved the fame of Talleyrand; great as his services were to France in 1814, his corruption and treachery were detestable. Lannes, Ménéval tells us, referred to him in this military phrase:

"He summed him up in this saying, which is perhaps strictly true, if expressed in somewhat too military language, 'It's a lot of — mud in a silk stocking.'"

With Pasquier, Ménéval ascribes the resolve of the allies to march on Paris in 1814 to the daring advice of Pozzo di Borgo; but this, we believe, is not correct. Pozzo risked his neck, it is said, in this venture.

"His head was at stake if his promises could not be realised. On the morrow he triumphed, as he joined in the procession of the sovereigns on their entrance by the Pantin Gate. Grand Duke Constantine came up to him and said, 'Pozzo, it is a happy day for you. If we were not here you would be hanging!'"

England, in Napoleon's language, was the most persevering as well as the most powerful of his foes. One of the reasons of this constancy was that England embodied institutions and ideas in direct conflict with the revolutionary Napoleonic Empire. This was not the case with the continental sovereigns, who, if vassals, had a kind of sympathy with an order of things that made them despotic at home over subjects set free from feudalism alone. There is truth in the following :

"As a general rule the sovereigns personally were not at all hostile towards the Emperor. They were influenced and even dominated by the ascendancy which England and the high aristocracy of Europe exercised in their cabinets, and in the leaders of their armies."

Ménéval listened from afar to the fall of Napoleon, and, as secretary to Marie Louise, shared in the distracted councils of her short-lived government. The sympathies of the Empress were sincerely with France; she acted the part of Regent with dignity; she was not to blame for the neglect that left Paris defenceless. It was at the pointed command of Napoleon in writing that she took the fatal step of going away from the capital; but when called upon to form a decided purpose, her weakness betrayed itself, and she completely broke down :

"Resting her head in her hands she began to cry. In the midst of her complaints, broken with tears, she was heard to repeat with impatience, 'My God, let them make up their minds, and put an end to this agony.'"

It was not thus that Maria Theresa confronted adverse fortune.

The first impulse of Marie Louise was to leave Blois, and to rejoin, at Fontainebleau, her discrowned husband. She sought the advice of Mme. de Montesquiou, the governess of her ill-fated child, who bore herself admirably amid these scenes of trouble :

"She threw herself into the arms of Mme. de Montesquiou, whom she held in great esteem. . . . This lady had never any other thought than to remain faithful in adversity. The Empress strengthened herself under her influence in her resolution to go and join the Emperor at Fontainebleau."

Napoleon, however—he had faith in the ties of family—was desirous that the Empress should see her father, in the hope of securing an appanage for herself out of the huge spoils of his vanishing empire. The following words of the Emperor Francis ought to have been a warning to the unhappy woman: "As my daughter, all that I have is yours, even my blood and my life; as a sovereign I do not know you."

Metternich, true to this cold-blooded policy—it was the tragedy of Iphigenia over again—lured the fallen Empress to go to Vienna, and to seek a temporary home at Schönbrunn. Marie Louise was still anxious to join her husband; and Maria Caroline, of Naples, her strong kinswoman, pointed out to her the plain path of duty: "Marie Louise ought to tie her bed sheets to the window, and escape under disguise. That is what I should do in her place," she said, "because when a woman is married, it is for life."

At Vienna the Empress was placed between the temptations of interest and the appeals of conscience. She was artfully told—the leperous distilment of Metternich's counsels filled her ears—that she would obtain nothing for herself and her son unless she chose to give up her husband; and saying she would not consent, she consented. A subtle and evil influence, too, was employed without scruple: she was placed under the care of Neipperg; and honour and virtue were before long forgotten. Ménéval sketches the adventurer, who supplanted Napoleon in the heart of Marie Louise years before St Helena beheld his end :

"His general appearance was an amiable one, mingled with alacrity and gravity. His manners were polite, insinuating, and flattering. He possessed agreeable talents, and was a good musician. Active, clever, possessed of little scruple, he knew how to conceal his acuteness under an exterior of simplicity. He expressed himself and wrote with grace. He added to much tact a spirit of observation, and he knew how to listen, listening with studied attention to what was said to him. His face would now assume a caressing expression, and now his glance would seek to fathom the secret thoughts."

It was for this Fouché of the Salon that Marie Louise betrayed Napoleon!

Through these abominable and cruel intrigues the Empress forgot what was due to herself and her husband; consented to have no correspondence with him; placed his letters into the hands of the allies—truly the Holy Alliance were honourable men; nay, gave her son over to Austrian guardians, and he was dead to Napoleon when he returned from Elba; and promised to act as the Coalition should direct, even though it had proclaimed him an outlaw. Yet the still small voice of conscience made itself heard; and, as Ménéval bade her farewell, she spoke piteously :—

"The Austrian princesses were mere instruments in the hands of the head of the House; she had been brought up in the principle of absolute submission to this authority; she was no longer an independent sovereign; she was without protection and incapable of resistance; she could but yield to the yoke which would be put upon her, or openly rebel against her father and her family; I could imagine what would be the consequences of such rebellion on her son's future; she had been born under a fatal star; she was doomed never to be happy."

In the conduct of the Empress we see throughout the weakness that lends itself to wickedness. But she was the doomed victim of a barbarous policy; and, save only for her adulterous passion for Neipperg, a good deal may be said for her. It deserves notice that Napoleon did not condemn her, though he was ignorant, perhaps, of her fall to the last. Ménéval rejoined the Emperor, when the Titan at bay was confronting, undaunted, the world in arms. Banned, proscribed, and with a price set on his head, he neither reproached his wife, nor those who had wrought her disgrace :

"All that he said about the Empress was full of respect and consideration for her. He pitied her in the trials to which she had been exposed, anticipated whatever I had to say in her favour, and expressed no doubt that her feelings for France and for himself had been forced."

Ménéval thus describes his parting with the discrowned King of Rome, the Astyanax of the fallen House of Bonaparte :

"As I bent down to him to say farewell, struck with my emotion, he drew me towards the window, and, looking at me with a touching expression, he whispered to me: 'M. Méval, you will tell him that I am still very fond of him!'"

We have dwelt at some length on these passages: they reflect disgrace on the league of old Europe; they breathe the spirit of the evil régime of Metternich. But, as we have said, the most interesting part of the work is the illustration it affords of Napoleon himself, of his associations, and of the tenor of his life. Though composed from a favourable point of view, this analysis of what we may call the ground-plan of his wonderful character is essentially conceit :

"Nature had lavished upon Napoleon the faculties which she reserves to privileged beings created to command, to conduct, and to enlighten mankind. She had endowed him with a vivid and ardent imagination, united with a cold reasoning power; she had endowed him with genius fortified by study, which the most prolonged and arid labour could not wear out, and which, on the contrary, drew fresh stores of vigour from the diversity of his occupations; she had endowed him with a vast mind, which embraced the ensemble of the widest questions, and which descended to the most minute details; she had endowed him with a really extraordinary conception, to which sudden flashes revealed the deepest depths of human knowledge; she had endowed him with a prodigious memory. To these gifts of intelligence there was added in Napoleon a lofty and sensitive mind, but a mind which was strongly tempered, and which rose superior to the blows as to the favours of fortune. His sangfroid was unalterable in the midst of danger, as though he had felt himself invulnerable. A persevering and inflexible will, an instinct of power and superiority which broke down all obstacles, made him smile at the word 'impossible,' or deny its existence. The study of the human heart had taught him the art of attaching men to him, and of subjugating them. His presence and language excited enthusiasm, his eloquence was vivacious and rapid, his words were energetic, profound, and often sublime. His simple exterior—simple, but heightened with an air of grandeur and by the habit of command—the fascination of his look, his look, whose sweet or severe expression penetrated to the bottom of all hearts, inspired respect mingled with fear and affection. Never was there a more popular leader in history, and yet he would never consent to lower himself to acquire such popularity."

Ménéval has set forth in a number of passages the characteristics of Napoleon in his many-sided life, as warrior, ruler, and in the circle of home. We must refer, however, for these to the book; we shall only remark that, if too flattering, the estimate of the author is, in the main, just. One example of Napoleon's sense of the becoming we give :

"Among the persons whose exile was proposed to him was the Duchesse de Gesons. . . . When he had discovered that the Duchesse was a descendant of Duguesclin, this name stirred in him the French fibre. Not only did Napoleon forbid that Mme. de Gesons should be interfered with in any way . . . to supplement her small fortune the Emperor insisted on granting to the descendant of Duguesclin a pension."

The sketches of Napoleon's family and court, though perhaps too attractive, are, on the whole, life-like. We can present our readers with one only, that of the "man-hearted" woman known as Mme. Mère:

"Napoleon's mother was a Roman matron, both in appearance and by the loftiness of her character. Prosperity had no more dazzled her than bad fortune had cast her down. Her parsimony had been jested about, but her children always found her ready to help them with her private fortune. When the Emperor was at St. Helena, his mother sent him a full account of her fortune, and begged him to dispose of whatever belonged to her, an offer which Napoleon did not accept. When somebody pointed out to her, at the time when she thus offered her property to her son, that she was reducing herself to indigence in this way, 'What does it matter?' she answered, 'when I shall have nothing more I will take my stick and I will go about begging alms for Napoleon's mother.'"

Observe the contrast between the parental relations of Francis and Marie Louise, of Letizia Bonaparte and her son; in the first the well of nature was choked, in the second it overflowed.

These volumes should be in the hands of all who wish to study and understand Napoleon. The bias of the author must be watched and rectified; but his judgments on the greatest man of the modern world are infinitely more just and in accord with fact than the stupid calumnies of Lanfrey, Taine, and their followers.

WILLIAM O'CONNOR MORRIS.

Sonnets of the Wingless Hours. By Eugene Lee-Hamilton. (Elliot Stock.)

MR. EUGENE LEE-HAMILTON has divided his century of sonnets into five sections. Of the first section, and of many very lovely sonnets in the other four sections, I find it difficult to write sentences meant to be printed and read. A journal like the ACADEMY exists for purposes of criticism; but there are few men (and who of us would wish to be among the few?) who can so subdue their simple primitive humanity as to appraise the aesthetic quality of a moan of agony under torture, a stifled sigh of dumb despair. It is equally impossible to criticise in cold blood—and to the common mind cold-bloodedness is of the very essence of criticism—such cries, so assertively and bravely stoical, yet so resonant with implicit appeal to the world's sympathy, as make themselves heard in the twenty-three sonnets from "A Wheeled Bed." As a matter of fact, the

"Thing of wood, of leather, and of steel
Round which by day and night, at head and heel, Crouch shadowy tormentors, dumb and dread" has been the birth-couch of the whole hundred; but in these twenty-three we can never escape for a moment from the terrible fascination of "the wingless hours" which crawl round the "strange engine" of torture—the "hybrid of rack and of Procrustes' bed." He who says of them that they are beautiful, imaginative, finely finished, says what is true; but he could hardly say it unless he had missed the piteous heart of them, which seems to mock at such artistic trivialities as beauty, imagination, and finish. I could almost wish that the book had been submitted to the judgment of some critic—if such could be found—who felt the pain of it less keenly, and who could better celebrate the art by which pain's hideous raw material has been wrought into an arrestingly lovely fabric. It is, as I have said, difficult to write of these sonnets; but how lovely they are will be felt by those who read "Twilight," "To Health," the beautiful trio, "An Elfín Skate," or the one which I transcribe, addressed "To Others."

"Ye who can roam where thrills the tawny corn,
Or wade through seeded grass, or who can stray
Across the meadows as they make the hay,
Or where the dewdrop sparkles on the thorn—
If you could lose, but for a single day
Your use of limb, your power to pluck the may
In rutty lanes where thrushes sing all day,
I wonder, would you speak of life with scorn?
God knows I would not keep you pent for long
In that close cage where anguish pecks the husk
Of Life's spilt millet, upon which it thrives;
But long enough to let you learn the song
Which captive thrushes sing from dawn to dusk;
An hour or two would make you love your lives."

Of the sonnets grouped under the headings "Brush and Chisel," "Life and Fate," "The After-life," and "Miscellaneous," one can speak with greater ease, and certainly with more freedom from emotional strain. I think that no one who has studied the form which Mr. Lee-Hamilton has here chosen will fail to feel how admirable is his treatment of it. The mere craftsmanship is not only excellent, but, considering the number of the sonnets, remarkably equal in excellence; the only defect that is obvious enough to interfere with pleasure being an occasional huddling together of consonants, and a lack of the open vowel sounds which make verse easy to the speech and melodious to the ear. Thus, in the beautiful sonnet, "Lost Years" (which, by the way, is in the first section), Mr. Lee-Hamilton writes of his youth—

"It went where go the nights that steal day's place";

and the whole verse—especially the two final feet—has a disagreeably cacophonous effect. Even this, however, is a matter in which defect is comparatively infrequent.

Mastery of the mechanism of verse in general, and even of the complicated technique of the sonnet in particular, is, however, not uncommon nowadays; for it is a thing to be learned, and the learners are numerous and eager. Mr. Lee-Hamilton as a sonnet-builder proves his possession of something which cannot be learnt: he has the instinct which is not an acquisition but an endowment. And this instinct makes its presence manifest, not in treatment, but in something that goes before treatment, and conditions it—the choice of a motive which not only adapts itself to, but actually seems to demand, the form in which it is here embodied. Were I to repeat what I fear I have said several times in the ACADEMY concerning the absolute necessity to the sonneteer of "a sonnet-making argument," I fear I might be called "a barren rascal," or at the very least a man of one idea. Therefore, supremely important as the matter seems to me, I will here say only this—that to my eyes one of the crowning perfections of Mr. Lee-Hamilton's sonnets is that they are sonnets by necessity: they could no more be anything else than they are than a lark's song or a baby's cry could be other than what it is. His frequent manner is to open with an arresting image, the imaginative significance of which is not blurred out by the commonly prefixed "As," but left to reveal itself slowly as the sonnet, through octave and sestet, moves to a satisfying end. I do not, of course, mean that this method is Mr. Lee-Hamilton's invention or monopoly, or even that he makes exclusive or too preponderant use of it; but simply that his full grasp of its opportunities enables him to employ it with exceptional success—witness the noble sonnet entitled "Caesar's Ghost":

"In that sharp war where Caesar's slayers died,
There was a moment when it seemed decreed,
As sank the sun blood-red in clumps of reed,
That victory should take the guilty side:
But just as they were winning far and wide,
The ghost of Caesar on a phantom steed,
Bore down on Cassius with a soundless speed,
And with a sword of shadow turned the tide.
I think that in Life's battle, now and then,
The ghost of some high impulse or great plan,
Which they have murdered, may appear to men,
And, like the shade of Caesar, check the van
Of their success, though odds be one to ten,
And cow their soul, as only phantoms can."

Even Rossetti wrote few sonnets more sombrely powerful than this; and there is here a swift directness, as of an arrow flying to a mark, which, save in "The Sun's Shame" and "Lost Days," Rossetti never achieved or even strove after. On the page opposite to "Caesar's Ghost" Mr. Lee-Hamilton has a sonnet, "A Spanish Legend," which might be cited as even more powerful still; but there the power is largely due to the emotional effect produced by details of horror: here it comes of simple vividness of imaginative realisation.

It may seem that these births of the "wingless hours" have been appraised too exclusively as sonnets, and that inadequate attention has been paid to that quality of poetry, which is of much greater importance than is the treatment of any special form. In a brief notice some such disproportion is almost inevitable, but in this special case it is, I think, less regrettable than usual. I have endeavoured to make an attempt at placing Mr. Lee-Hamilton as a sonneteer, because at this time of day it is no longer necessary to place him as a poet. What he is as such is known to all students of contemporary verse; but it may be well to add that in imaginative vision, in freshness and agility of fancy, in feeling for form, and in fine felicity or specific gravity of word and phrase, these Sonnets of the Wingless Hours overtop his previous achievements.

JAMES ASHCROFT NOBLE.

The Peasant State. By Edward Dicey. (John Murray.)

THOUGH Mr. Dicey is only one of many writers upon Bulgaria who have blessed her altogether, his testimony is the more valuable as he has neither the faults nor the merits of an enthusiast. There is in his book, on the one hand, a refreshing absence of clap-trap; on the other a shade of cynicism and a cautiousness about committing himself on trifles which is sometimes comical. For instance, when speaking of the marked improvement in the health of Philippopolis since the introduction of a supply of pure water, he adds: "Though whether this improvement is post hoc or propter hoc I have no means of saying." Mr. Dicey is, however, far too old a journalistic hand not to know that indecision is an intellectual as well as a moral defect. We find in him no shilly-shally when dealing with more weighty matters.

In his chapter upon Bulgaria's neighbours, he is outspoken in his judgments. Although, like a true son of Adam, he has his longings for the flesh pots of Bucharest, he is not blind to the moral superiority of Sofia. The progress of Bulgaria is solid, stable, and enduring, while "there is a sort of gilt-and-gingerbread look about Bucharest." He is somewhat severe on the Serbs, and only saw in their country "signs of decay." "The Serb peasants have not the cheerful look of the Bulgarians; the Serb villages have not the same air of plain, rough comfort." Surely there must be some imagination in this. There is no land question in either country, and no need of a poor law. The difference between the two countries is that, while both can boast of a peasant proprietary, the one is Conservative and the other Radical. Why Servia, a peasant state, should be honeycombed with Socialism, would take too long to detail here. Suffice it to say that the facts are so. Bulgaria owes the maintenance of its independence and of its social order to its deep-rooted Conservatism, and she owes her Conservatism to never having broken with her past. Strange though it may sound, Bulgaria, like England, is a country of evolution, and not revolution. The peasant subjects of Prince Ferdinand are in all essentials the exact counterpart of the peasant subjects of Czar Boris. A century is but a day in the lifetime of the Bulgarians. The continuity of material well-being in Bulgaria has been very marked. The only real difference between the Rayah of Turkish rule and the elector to the national Sobranje, is that the latter can keep his money, while the former could only make it. There is, of course, a vast gulf between these two social conditions; but it was strange how the Bulgarians, whether Christian or Mahomedan, managed to keep their belongings out of the clutches of the Zaptiehs. Mr. Dicey, in travelling by rail from Rustchuk to Varna, notices the cultivation of the country and the absence of houses. One of the cardinal rules of the Bulgarian before the war was to build his village as far as possible from the main road leading to fortified towns. The railroad by which Mr. Dicey was travelling passes two such towns—Rustchuk and Shumla.

Mr. Dicey appears to have had an enjoyable trip through provincial Bulgaria. He visited Rustchuk, Varna, Bourgas, and Philippopolis. We look in vain in his pages for any reference to Tirnova, the ancient capital of the Asenidae dynasty. But possibly the old-world air of this picturesque town might not have suited the stern common sense of Mr. Dicey. Speaking of the two Slav races of the Balkans, he tells us that both "are extravagantly proud of their traditional, I might almost say, their mythical grandeur in bygone days." If Mr. Dicey is a trifle severe, he is delightfully free from rant and hysteria.

From 1876 to 1886 hardly a year passed without the publication of some book which increased our stock of knowledge of the Balkan Peninsula. Since 1886 this stream of travellers' books has dried up. It was high time that someone competent to judge should tell us how it fares with Bulgaria at the present day. Mr. Dicey's report is on the whole highly satisfactory. In an excellent chapter on "The Law of the Realm" he shows the need of a redistribution of the taxes, and how the Capitulations stand in the way of this reform. That Bulgaria forms an integral portion of the Ottoman Empire may be politically an advantage, but commercially this is not so. This is mainly due to the Greeks, "who take the most unfair advantage of the privileges accorded by the Capitulations."

It is impossible in a short review to touch on all the subjects which an author with 300 pages at his service can dispose of. We must be content here to dwell on points from which we differ rather than on those with which we agree. Ristitch has been called the Bismarck of the Balkans, but this title can far more justly be bestowed on Stambouloff. Mr. Dicey thus describes this extraordinary man:

"As a public speaker Stambouloff is admittedly without a rival in Bulgaria. As an administrator he towers equally above his colleagues. Exception may be taken to his modes of administration, but hitherto they have been crowned with invariable success. The dilatoriness which is characteristic of all Oriental administration, and which is a common failing amidst Bulgarian Ministers, is unknown to Stambouloff. Whatever he orders to be done has got to be done, and done at once. Whatever he promises is as good as performed. Loved by many, hated by few, he is feared by all."

It is true that he has fallen, and it is equally true that his successors "will succeed by some means or other" in securing a majority in the new Sobranje. It is, however, to be feared that the country will suffer far more from his retirement than Stambouloff himself. He was overthrown by a coalition with no common basis of principle, but united solely by the tie of hate. It recalls the old story of the Pulteney-Carteret coalition against Walpole, with one important difference. We all know how George II. received his prime minister's resignation: how he fell on his neck, wept and kissed him. This was not the manner in which Prince Ferdinand parted with the greatest man Bulgaria has produced in the last five hundred years. We must, however, resist the temptation of pursuing further the comparison between two sovereigns, who were both foreigners in the countries they were called to reign over.

The Prince insists on the Ministers wearing evening dress on all occasions when in attendance on him. Mr. Dicey gives us a humorous description of the Cabinet attending at the Sofia railway station to see the Prince off at ten in the morning.

"Bulgarian ministers are not built in the dress-clothes way; and whenever I saw them in other than their work-a-day costumes, they always reminded me of the supers who appear as the courtiers in 'Hamlet' when played at the provincial theatre. Moreover, the spectacle of a whole Cabinet Council sitting round the beer-stained table of a railway refreshment room, and standing drinks to each other of beer and brandy, is not, somehow, in accordance with Western ideas of official dignity."

In conclusion, we think that Mr. Dicey has underestimated rather than overestimated the prosperity of Bulgaria. Would that all labouring men in England and Ireland were as well off, as well clothed, and as well housed as the Bulgarian peasant!

J. G. C. MINCHIN.

Psychology applied to Education. By Gabriel Compayré. Translated by W. H. Payne. (Boston, U.S.A.: Heath; London: Isbister.)

M. COMPAYRÉ is one of the greatest of living educationists, and he is a Frenchman. This volume, therefore, ought, at any rate to teachers, to be very readable. Yet it is tough reading on account of its severe simplicity and its ingenious conciseness. It is a summary of educational principles deduced from psychology. Like his better known History of Pedagogy, it is masterly in its inclusiveness of so much material in so small a space. The arrangement of subjects is admirable, the proportions kept almost perfect, the judgment reasoned, the touch sure; but the reader constantly would like points further amplified and illustrated. No doubt M. Compayré would reply: for every chapter, you can read a book or two by others if you wish to do so. He would hardly exaggerate if he said the same for every paragraph in some of his chapters.

Yet I venture to think this book is a valuable addition to educational literature. There is a suspicion abroad among some English schoolmasters that Ascham, Locke, and Herbert Spencer have said enough, and perhaps more than enough, on the subject of education. English schoolmasters beyond those of almost any country are short-sighted through their disuse of the powers of further vision. It was not always so. Time was when England looked for light abroad as well as at home, and welcomed Erasmus and Vivès and their contemporaries with all the heartiness they accorded to their own countrymen. They read their works, too. Fancy Ascham's world without a Johann Sturm in it!

Now M. Compayré is an excellent corrective to English educational isolation. He takes suggestions and illustrations indifferently from English, Americans, Belgians, and Swiss, and from Frenchmen. And if quotations from the last-named predominate, it is not too much to say that they are always to the point; and if it is admitted that they are fair specimens of the French educational writers, the English teacher must confess how much he would gain by consulting their works more frequently. Not even in primary education, much less in secondary education, have English writers taken the trouble to acquaint themselves with the large amount of thought embodied in educational literature. There is not, therefore, any English book with the same wide outlook and comparative reach on the theoretical side of education as this treatise of M. Compayré.

He divides his work into three sections: Physical Education, Intellectual Education, and Moral Education.

He protests against formal gymnastics, in words borrowed from Dr. Lagrange:

"We fell under the ferule of the pedants of gymnastics; and doubtless the time will come when we shall be as much astonished at taking exercise while walking, as M. Jourdain was at speaking prose while talking."

He refers in terms of warm commendation to "vacation colonies," an institution due to M. Bion, of Zürich, by which poor school children are sent from the town schools into the mountains or into the woods with their teachers.

In the section on "Intellectual Education," M. Compayré has some excellent words on the arousing of curiosity in the pupil. He quotes these words:

"What do we do? We take a child, seat him on a bench, and teach him a multitude of things of which he has never observed the existence, which he did not anticipate, and which, consequently, he could not desire to know. We destroy his curiosity before it has had a chance to be aroused."

From this warning picture M. Compayré proceeds to show the desirability of "instruction through the eyes," of object lessons, of drawing, of manual exercises, and the development of the habit of observation. The chapters on the methods of instruction are of great practical value. Formerly, says our author, the best schools were those which used the most ink and paper. To-day, however, the best are those, on the whole, in which teacher and pupil use the most chalk. Here, of course, he refers in commendation to the American schools, in which the entire wall is often "transformed into a vast blackboard, where several pupils can work at the same time." He insists on the provision of good pictures and maps for history and geography lessons. He adds:

"Collections of geometrical solids, the outfit of the metric system, school museums, and botanical gardens, are also the indispensable auxiliaries of object-lessons and the intuitive method."

His remarks on the "Office of the Book" in education are reasonable and moderate. As to the work of the teacher, he assumes that preparation for the oral lesson is indispensable, yet he protests against lessons "too minutely prepared" as lacking in "freedom of manner." His criticisms on the Socratic method are wise and helpful. That M. Compayré is more than a doctrinaire is seen by such a passage as the following:

"Methods in pedagogy are somewhat like constitutions in politics. Both are valuable chiefly through the worth of the men who are called to apply them."

The deduction, of course, is not the negation of the value of methods for constitutions, but the necessity of large-minded and large-hearted administrators ready to recognise the possibilities and impossibilities, because they have put themselves in touch with the accumulated experiences of the past and present.

Finally, M. Compayré deals with "Moral Education." The following passage shows an insight into present day problems of significance as great for us as for the author's own country:

"In proportion as the citizens of a democracy are granted the use of larger liberties, and as the fuller development of their rights places in their hands the government of their lives and the voluntary performance of their duties, it becomes more and more necessary that each individual contain within himself the principles of morality, the check to his passions, and the elements of a moral personality armed with all the ideas and with all the energies which assure the accomplishment of duty."

With such a conception of the work of the teacher before him, it will readily be understood that the author's treatment of the subjects of instincts, dispositions, habits, culture of the feelings, is of great interest. Not less interesting is the treatment of the education of the will. In this connexion, I think that M. Compayré, against his custom, has done ill in leaving unnamed the greatest exponents of the education of the good will, viz., the educators of the Herbartian school.

FOSTER WATSON.

NEW NOVELS.

A Traveller from Altruria. By W. D. Howells. (Edinburgh: David Douglas.)

An Interloper. By F. M. Peard. In 2 vols. (Bentley.)

The White Virgin. By G. Manville Fenn. In 2 vols. (Chatto & Windus.)

Hoist with Her Own Petard. By Reginald Lucas. In 3 vols. (Hurst & Blackett.)

David's Loom. By J. Trafford Clegg. (Longmans.)

Laura Arbuthnot. By John Meredith. (Sonnenschein.)

The Dancing Faun. By Florence Farr. (Elkin Mathews & John Lane.)

Blessed are the Poor. From the French of François Coppée. (Heinemann.)

Keith Deramore. By the Author of "Miss Molly." (Longmans.)

A NEW book by Mr. W. D. Howells is always, for a wide circle of readers, an event. Altruria will be a surprise to many: perhaps to the majority not a welcome surprise. For this latest "romance" (how fond Mr. Howells is of a specific term which is singularly inapplicable to his later books!) is not a story of that middle-class American life of which he is the foremost painter, but a kind of New England complement to Mr. William Morris's Dream of John Ball or News from Nowhere, or Mr. Butler's Erewhon. Altruria is the close analysis and keen disintegration of the essential weaknesses of contemporary social life in the civilised world, and in America in particular. Like his figure-head, Mr. Homos, the man from Altruria (where all the dreams of democracy have at last been realised), Mr. Howells would be "a spiritual solvent to precipitate sincerity." It is impossible not to read this remarkable book without being forced to ponder many matters which may have been too loosely accepted as inevitable. There are exaggerations, and needless interpolations, which detract from the genuine earnestness and alert mental vision of the author; and though it might not be fair to object to the obtrusion of what to a Britisher seem inept Yankeeisms, it is impossible to refrain from wondering if the most patriotic New Englander can have pleasure in the somewhat passé "straight talk" which does duty for humour. Mr. Howells has the courage of his convictions. He does not hesitate to ruffle the feathers of that very susceptible fowl, the American eagle. If an Englishman were to declare that the government of the United States is now an absolute monarchy, and that the autocrat is King Dollar, overlord temporal and spiritual, he would be denounced for his combined jealousy and short sightedness. Mr. Howells does not use these exact words, but in the mouth of his banker he promulgates the same truth.

"I don't think there is any doubt but the millionaire is now the American ideal. It isn't very pleasant to think so, even for people who have got on, but it can't very hopefully be denied. It is the man with the most money who now takes the prize in our national cake-walk."

The Altrurian—and in this respect most of us will be Altrurians, I suspect—does not know what a cake-walk is. The mystery is explained, and the banker resumes:

"In any average assembly of Americans, the greatest millionaire would take the eyes of all from the greatest statesman, the greatest poet, or the greatest soldier we ever had. That," he added to the Altrurian, "will account to you for many things, as you travel through our country."

The experiences of Mr. Homos are pessimistic enough. Everywhere he sees discontent, injustice, oppression, tyranny from above and below, from the individual and the union; and go where he will, see what he can, hear what he may, he learns only that we are fallen upon evil days. The far-reaching evils of uncontrolled capitalism, the horrors of uncalculating and desperate revolt, the growth of a new and detestable slavery, the ferment of all possible bigotries and wild passions, the racial clash and internecine conflict: all this, and much beside, saddens the heart of the pilgrim from a terra incognita, where liberty, equality, fraternity are sovereign realities, and not the empty bombast of a transatlantic democrat or the idle vaunt of a French Republican. The sole medicine for this gigantic ill is a revolt of the moral life. Conscience must become dictator. We must seek discarded clues, follow lost byways, persevere along intricate and difficult paths. The present primrose way is macadamised with dollars: the milestones are dollars; the signposts are dollars; the horizon is the hue of dollars: the sunny day is a flaming dollar, the stars by night are fragments of a gigantic primeval dollar; the portals of the grave are framed with dollars; the goal beyond the grave is the Land of Dollar; and dollar is the ultimate name of the First Cause. It is this terrible truth that Mr. Howells recognises, though he would not advance it so emphatically: it is his recognition of this truth, his earnest effort to meet it and grapple with it, that give his book a singular value. It is only fair to add, for the sake of the weaker brethren, that Altruria is an eminently readable book, apart from its fundamental seriousness. It is written with the wonted skill, the familiar lightness of touch, and with much of the charm, which won us all in the long series from The Undiscovered Country to A Hazard of New Fortunes.

Miss Frances M. Peard's latest story is as pleasant as any of its predecessors. It is, moreover, more actual in plot and treatment. The Interloper is the only really pleasant person in the novel. She is the heroine, Nathalie, the wife of the amiable but weak and exceedingly foolish Léon de Beaudrillart. He and his people have good qualities, of course; but the charming Nathalie is thrown away among them, and one is almost sorry that she succeeds in rescuing her selfish and stupid husband, when he tries to put an end to himself rather than face the outcome of his own misdeeds and general silliness. The pleasure derivable from the story is in its telling, and in the incidental touches of local colour and character-sketching. Miss Peard understands her own personages; and that is higher praise than could be awarded to ninety in a hundred novelists, who move puppets to and fro and think they are evolving the destinies of men and women. M^{me}. de Beaudrillart mère may be detestable, but she is real; and M. Bourget, Nathalie's bourgeois father, is real also. The only thing that is not convincing is the folly of Léon in one or two instances; where in real life so very self-considerate a young man, trained in Paris wiles, would have acted with at least ordinary foresight. His development into a better man, worthy of his noble wife, is admirably indicated; and the author shows at once her art and her knowledge of life by the wise discretion with which this partial metamorphosis is accomplished.

Mr. Manville Fenn's new story has nothing to do either with the Maiden Tribute or with the New Woman. It is not a Tendenz-roman. It has no mission; it is preoccupied with no problem of sex; it has no "new morality"; it is not even occasionally morbid. In a word, it is the antithesis of the fin-de-siècle novel; for it is sane, bright, and reads like the work of a robust man, and not of a consumptive hypochondriac. It has even that damning fault, a happy ending. If these negatives dissuade a few readers from Mr. Manville Fenn's latest romance, I hope they may attract a much larger number. "The White Virgin" is the name of a lead mine in Derbyshire. The fortune to be lost or won in its working affords the central motive of the story, in the development of which the characters of several personages are skilfully and vividly depicted. True, the plot is a conventional one, and the treatment emphatically melodramatic; but the tale is told with unflagging verve, and the reader must perforce follow eagerly the narrative of the machinations of Jessop Reed and his accomplice, John Wrigley, against Clive Reed and the beautiful Janet Praed. There is enough incident to satisfy the most insatiate novel-reader. It is an additional merit that the minor characters are as lifelike and interesting as the chief actors.

There is plentiful incident, also, in Mr. Reginald Lucas's three-volume story. It appears to be the first book of its author. As a tentative effort, it calls for considerate criticism; so I will only say that it is too stagey, too remote from actuality—not in point of incident, but in the manner in which the incidents are evolved. The personages and the episodes are all of the Jack-in-the-box kind. The author wants the husband to disappear at the church door on the marriage day, and he disappears; he needs him again as a distant menace, and the rumour of him comes from Australia; he requires him on the scene at a certain crisis, and he is present; his death would be convenient, and he dies. So is it throughout, with persons and events. Many readers, however, will peruse Hoist with Her Own Petard with pleasure. Virtue triumphs and vice fails in the old-fashioned way, not a whit too soon for the three-volume exigencies. Mrs. Dasent, the heroine, is a much loved woman: Miss Mirabel, the protagonist, is a typical Adelphi villainess. If the tale were one-third its present length the gain would be considerable, for at least two of the three volumes consist of irrelevant or uninteresting padding. Mr. Reginald Lucas—if the author be a man, which is doubtful—has a good deal to learn: but first he must unlearn industriously. In time, with his faculty for narrative, and with a more scrupulous heed for grammar and careful English, he ought to be able to write a much better book than Hoist with Her Own Petard. There are many passages, and not a few pages, which warrant this not too ambitious prophecy.

When one comes across writing such as this—

"And in the unhallowed autumn of a later year what band of wild pitiable affrighted women attends dread tribunal hereby hurried summons, whirling like storm-blown withered leaves across the gloomy stage to vanish in the gloomier chasm of eternity? Witches, forsooth! Cry you mercy, my Lord"—and so on, and so on—"Gape, dungeon! Drop, noose! Away, ye beldames, from the range of forensic vision, that peace may again fall upon Israel!"— the wise thing to do is to follow the example of the aforesaid beldames and get beyond the range of the author's vision. Fortunately Mr. Clegg, well known to Lancashire readers as "Th' Owd Weighver," can write in a very different style. When he drops into rhodomontade he is intolerable; when he pursues what he would be sure to call the even tenour of his way he is dull; but when he gives characteristic episodes of Lancashire life and folk he is sufficiently entertaining to hold the attention even of one who doesn't speak or understand "Yanks." The book is worth reading, if for nothing else than the unexpected vivacity and humour of the Irish schoolmaster, Phelim, the self-told story of whose wooing is pure comedy.

"Laura Arbuthnot: Meredith." This, on the back of a new novel, is alluring. But this particular Meredith is named John. Presumably the book is a first attempt. The promise held out is not sufficient to warrant one in urging the author to lose no time in the production of a successor to Laura Arbuthnot. The story has interest of a kind, certainly; but it lacks verisimilitude. The suicide of the heroine is one of those innumerable acts of folly which fortunately never happen in actual life except among women who are victims to hysteria. In a sense, though of course not the conventional one, this kind of thing is immoral.

"Onward on her milk-white ass Rideth the maiden Sanitas," sang Mr. Robert Buchanan in an early book of his; but in this ass's-milk the puling minor novelist, as a rule, takes no delight.

Miss Florence Farr has succeeded George Egerton in the "Keynotes" series. Much the most attractive thing about her book is the title. The story is a study—a narrative, rather—of vulgar selfishness on the part of a depraved man, and of vulgar because uncontrolled and ignoble passion on the part of the heroine, Lady Geraldine. If no one can sympathise with George Travers in the fate his own cruel brutality brings upon himself, neither, surely, can any sympathise with Geraldine Kirkdale in her selfish abandonment, or in her inevitable after-life of remorse. Miss Farr has talent. The Dancing Fawn contains some writing that is distinctively good. Doubtless it is only a prelude to something much stronger both in matter and manner.

Miss Winifred Heaton has translated with admirable skill two of the longer "short stories" of M. François Coppée. If I remember rightly, both are from the volume entitled Les Vrais Riches. M. Coppée is, often, simply a weak French Dickens. He is to be read as M. Coppée-Dickens in the first of these stories, which Miss Heaton has given under the title "Blessed are the Poor." It is a typical Christmas-eve tale. Money is blithely shown to be a curse, to a marquis, to a rising young architect, to a promising novelist, and to a toil-worn old school-mistress. All, however, pocket the unexpected windfall that comes to them through the good Abbé Moulin, the intermediary of a reformed swindler, who has amassed a huge fortune in the States, and returned to Paris to pay to three or four persons, whom he had defrauded, a sum exceeding two million francs. It is all very charming, very sentimental, and very unreal. Now a little of M. François Coppée at his best, however, is to be seen in these two tales.

Keith Deramore is the latest novel by the clever author of "Miss Molly." It is a pity that this writer does not disclose her name, or distinguish herself as the author of one of her abler books: say, the admirable and delightful Ingelheim. Keith Deramore is a charming story charmingly told. It shows altogether exceptional ability, and should send many readers to the books of an author who is not as well known as she ought to be.

WILLIAM SHARP.

SOME BOOKS ON ECONOMICS.

A Policy of Free Exchange. Essays edited by Thomas Mackay. (John Murray.) This volume is a sequel to A Plea for Liberty, which appeared in 1891 under the same editorship. The contributors are all new, with the exception of the editor, who furnishes Essay VII. (on "The Interest of the Working Class in Free Exchange") and gives a useful outline of contents in his preface. The general drift of the book will be anticipated by readers of the earlier volume. It is a series of lay sermons on the text: "Private enterprise is better than public works, and the best government is that which interferes least." The tuning of the pulpits has not led to absolute harmony of the preachers. The rest would not all of them agree with Mr. Acworth, in his frank assertion that there is a point beyond which non-interference is mischievous in the case of railways (p. 201). Mr. Macleod's theoretical premises are at discord (Essay I.) with Mr. Mallet's (Essay VIII.). But a collection of essays by several hands cannot be expected to have the consistency, often desired vainly, in the work of a single author. The essays of Mr. Maitland on "The Coming Industrial Struggle" and Mr. Fortescue on "The Collapse in Australia" present features of special interest for all who are concerned about the relations of England with the Colonies and the United States. Great importance is rightly attached by the former writer to the address of President Cleveland, directly dealing with the question of state and people (pp. 52-4). Mr. Wynaard Hooper's essay on "The Influence of State Borrowing on Commercial Crises" is full of matter for reflection and incidents worth noting, quite apart from the tendency of its argument. Mr. Lytleton's essay on "The Law of Trade Combinations" is a straightforward and lucid survey of leading cases and the law affecting them. As to the essay on "National Workshops," it will be hard for any one who has read Louis Blanc's account of the matter to believe that the experiment of 1848 was his experiment, as it is here expressly called (p. 92). Louis Blanc wanted something more than mere relief works for the unemployed; and his wishes were not carried out. It would be surprising if this book made many converts. Indeed, many of the writers are content to utter their protest, without any such hope (pp. 64, 141). The English people, if they have any general principle before them at all, may be said to hold fast by private enterprise together with regulation by the state. They are slow to allow any constructive or creative action of the state, until many experiments on a smaller scale have seemed to be successful. If this be Socialism at all, it is very cautious and not at all revolutionary.

Bimetallism. By H. D. Macleod. (Longmans.) For a man who wishes to abide by his mature opinions, there is very often safety in the reading of the publications of his opponents exclusively. This is probably a sound rule in party politics, but it is nowhere sounder than in the matter of currency; and on this principle there is no book better suited than the one before us to confirm the faith of bimetallicists. It is really (see Preface) a detached chapter of Mr. Macleod's Theory of Credit, and there are occasional references to the parent volume. But it has a beginning, middle, and end of its own, and may be treated as an independent book, containing the deliverances of the veteran economist on the question of the standard. Like Robert Owen, Mr. Macleod "had need to be very right, for he is very positive." For some references to correspondence and legislation (especially in regard to India) we may thank him ungrudgingly. As to the rest, the intelligent bimetallicist will give thanks that he is not as this writer. "Oresme and Copernicus" (we read on the first page) "had shown that the fundamental principle of bimetallicism" is erroneous. "Sir Thomas Gresham had explained to Queen Elizabeth that it threw the whole system of coinage into confusion." These statements are a fair specimen of our author's manner, and the reader soon learns to make his own commentaries on what he reads. In Mr. Macleod's account of Oresme's book (p. 7) he tells us that Oresme did not recognise the impossibility of bimetallicism, and also that he was dealing mainly with the question of debasement of the coinage. Copernicus, too, (p. 12) was dealing with debasement. Both these ancient authorities recommend a ratio between gold and silver coins that is to be determined by the market value of the metals. But this is not to "prove that the fundamental principle of bimetallicism is erroneous." It is to favour a species of bimetallicism of which in our days few defenders, if any, can be found. Finally, Gresham, like his two predecessors, laid down the principle that the inferior money will drive the superior out of circulation. He, too, was dealing with a debased coinage. Now, it is not quite fair to assume that bimetallicism is equivalent to a debasement of the currency. There is no attempt, throughout, to meet the particular arguments of what Prof. Foxwell calls the "revised bimetallicism" of today (Economic Review, July, 1893). If Mr. Macleod would examine the arguments presented by Prof. Foxwell, and marshal against them as strong an array of reasons and references as he has furnished against the obsolete forms of bimetallicism, we should know better where we stood. At present, most monometallicists are inclined to credit their opponents with intelligence at least equal to their own, and will be led to think that outpourings of contempt savour rather of rhetoric than reasoning. On the other hand, the books of the bimetallicists prove too much. They prove that gold has varied greatly in value and silver but little in the general market; and then they ask us to adopt as our standard not the one steady metal but a steady and unsteady one together: if silver be steadier than gold, alternation of gold with silver will not steady the standard so surely as the adoption of silver alone would. They prove also that the chief customers for the precious metals are the mints, and that, therefore, the mints can control the market price of gold and silver and maintain a ratio, once it has been fixed by international agreement. But there is a tacit concession that the outside market is a greater power than the mints; or else why need there be any hesitation about the ratio? Again, the blame for preventing an international agreement in Europe and America is thrown upon England. But England has made no change (except in India) since 1817. It is true that England has prevented bimetallicism from being adopted in India; but the adoption of a gold standard in that country need not "disturb the customary circulations" of that dependency, if the argument of Prof. Foxwell in another connexion be sound (Economic Review, loc. cit., p. 308). Moreover, there is no sign that the governments of the world are tending towards agreement in this matter. Hitherto all congresses and conferences have parted re infecta. The last word has not been said by anybody in this controversy, nor is it likely to be said for some time to come.

Body and Soul; or, the Method of Economy. By F. W. Bain. (Parker.) This book consists of four sections—on Scientific Method, on Economics, on Art, and on Political Philosophy. Its thesis is that of Aristotle, "that all structure is made such by its function." A well-known Oxford tutor was long believed to be engaged on a book that was to prove all modern ideas to have come from Plato. Mr. Bain (following, perhaps, Prof. Case) attempts to show it of Aristotle. "Science, thy name is Aristotle." Newton and Copernicus have done little in comparison. All others who have written on Mr. Bain's subjects before him were fools, with the doubtful exceptions of Darwin and Mr. Dunning Macleod. The latter will find in Mr. Bain a formidable rival for audacity of claim and certainty of conviction. Mr. Bain's style, at least, has been modelled on that of Mr. Macleod. It strikes an observer as curious that the fellow of a college should exhibit not a few of the less admirable features of an "autodidact." One of these is the habit of "bringing back a wheelbarrow and calling it an invention." But a much less innocent habit is to give hard names. Thus, Peel is as stupid as Dogberry (p. 229); Ricardo is an idiot (p. 235); Kant has a clumsy incapacity for thinking (p. 18); Ruskin's criticism is "puerile, absurd, nonsensical" (pp. 282-3); Virgil's Aeneid is "a vile soulless piece of pedantic imitation" (p. 355); Plato is the "prince of superlative pedants" (p. 423); Goethe "a cold-blooded, pedantic, callous, and inhuman critic" (p. 435). The history of England, as hitherto written, has been "a monstrous caricature," if not "a deliberate lie" (p. 397). Even Mr. Bain's ability will not prevent his writings from lacking influence as well as dignity, so long as his pages exhibit traces like these of unchastened judgment and intemperate expression.

NOTES AND NEWS.

WE understand that Mr. Elkin Mathews, the publisher, will retain the now well-known premises in Vigo-street, when at the end of September Mr. Lane parts company with him; and that from there he will issue an important series of publications during the forthcoming season.

A BIOGRAPHY of Sir John Macdonald, first prime minister of the Dominion of Canada, has been written by Mr. Joseph Pope, who was for many years his private secretary, and who has been permitted to make use of all his papers and correspondence. His widow, the Baroness Macdonald of Earncliffe, contributes an introduction. It will be published this season by Mr. Edward Arnold, in two volumes, illustrated with portraits.

MR. EDWARD ARNOLD will also publish a revised edition of the memoir of Maria Edgeworth, which was printed for private circulation nearly twenty years ago, containing a large number of letters written during her two visits to Paris in 1802 and 1820, reminiscences of the literary celebrities whom she knew, and pictures of life at Edgeworthstown. It has been edited by Mr. Augustus J. C. Hare, who also furnishes a preface.

EARLY in October Messrs. Edfingham Wilson & Co. will issue a History of the Banks and Bankers of Northern England, by Mr. Maberly Phillips, one of the staff of the Bank of England at Newcastle-on-Tyne. He deals with early currency, the establishment of the first north-country bank, traces the evolution from their early beginnings of the many banking concerns which now exist, and gives an account of the failures which attended the efforts of the earlier bankers to cope with the rapid strides in trade and industry which followed the invention of steam power.

MESSRS. EYRE & SPOTTISWOODE have in preparation a volume of essays, to be edited by the Rev. Dr. Valpy Trench, which is intended to take up the same position towards the Higher Criticism of the Old Testament as Aids to Faith did towards Essays and Reviews.

MR. HEINEMANN will publish on September 15 The Ebb-Tide: a Trio and Quartett, by Mr. R. L. Stevenson and Mr. Lloyd Osbourne. We understand that this is the last novel on which the step-father and step-son propose to collaborate.

MESSRS. LONGMANS & Co. have in the press a new edition of Mr. Leslie Stephen's early Alpine book, The Playground of Europe, with additions and four illustrations.

MR. STANLEY WEYMAN's historical novel of the Thirty Years' War, "My Lady Rotha," which is still running serially in the Monthly Packet, will be published early in October, in a single volume, by Messrs. A. D. Innes & Co., with illustrations by Mr. John Williamson.

MESSRS. RICHARD BENTLEY & SON announce for publication, about the middle of September, a new novel by Miss Rosa Nouchette Carey, entitled The Old Old Story. It will be in three volumes.

MESSRS. HUTCHINSON & Co. have in the press a novel by Mrs. Marie Hutcheson, entitled Bruno the Conscript. The scene is laid in Tuscany, and the motif of the story is the effect of enforced service in the army upon an artist.

MESSRS. SWAN SONNENSCHNEIN & Co. will publish in the course of the present month a politico-religious novel, entitled The Member for Workshire; or, Church and State, by Mr. Thomas Aspdon.

MR. WALTER SCOTT will issue in September The Humour of Ireland, with an introduction by Mr. D. J. O'Donoghue, and numerous illustrations by Mr. Oliver Payne.

THE next volume of Dr. Grosart's "Elizabethan Library" will be a selection from the works of Ben Jonson, under the title of Brave Translunary Things. The publisher is Mr. Elliot Stock.

MESSRS. G. P. PUTNAM'S SONS will publish, early in the autumn, a volume of poems by Mr. Francis Howard Williams, of Philadelphia, entitled The Flute-Player.

MESSRS. CROSBY LOCKWOOD & SON have nearly ready for publication Mr. D. K. Clarke's new volume on Tramways: Their Construction and Working, in which will be given a comprehensive history of the earlier forms as well as the latest developments of tramways in this country and abroad, including the various modes of traction.

THE same publishers will issue in a few days a popular handbook on Fertilisers and Feeding Stuffs, by Dr. Bernard Dyer, with notes on the Fertilisers and Feeding Stuffs Act of 1893, by Mr. A. J. David.

A WORK entitled The Elements of Modern Dressmaking, by Miss Jeannette Davis, Principal of the Manchester Municipal Technical School, will be published by Messrs. Cassell & Co. early in September. It will be illustrated with diagrams.

MESSRS. BEMROSE & SONS have in the press a work on Miners' Leaders. It will contain thirty portraits from half-tone engravings of the more prominent men connected with miners' organisations, together with biographical sketches.

A SIXTH edition of the Temperance Bible Commentary, by Dr. F. R. Lees and Dr. Dawson Burns, will be issued shortly, with the Revised Version readings of many important texts.

MR. T. FISHER UNWIN will publish next Monday a cheap edition, in one volume, of Annie Besant's Autobiography, which Mr. Gladstone discusses in his article in the current number of the Nineteenth Century.

LAMBETH Palace Library will be closed for the usual recess for six weeks from September 1.

UNIVERSITY JOTTINGS.

IN addition to the monument to the late Prof. Jowett, which is to be placed in Balliol College Chapel, a marble bust will be presented to the University of Oxford on behalf of the subscribers to the fund. This work has been entrusted to Mr. Pinker, whose statue of Sydenham was unveiled by Lord Salisbury during the recent meeting at Oxford of the British Association. The late Master gave Mr. Pinker repeated sittings while he was his guest at Balliol during the last two years of his life, and the result was the bust already executed for Mr. Walker, high master of St. Paul's School. The memorial bust will be placed on a pedestal of Sienna marble in the Bodleian, in recognition of the Master's unwearied interest in the library as one of the curators during a period of nearly forty years.

MR. WALTER PATER at the time of his death was under an engagement to lecture at the summer meeting of university extension students at Oxford. When it was found that he would be prevented by illness from fulfilling his engagement, the delegates requested the Rev. John Owen, rector of East Anstey, to undertake the Pascal lecture, which he accordingly did on August 3. Mr. Owen, who has recently written on Pascal in his work on The Skeptics of the French Renaissance, intends to publish his lecture in the enlarged form of four essays entitled, Pascal: His Life and Thought.

THE Romanes lecture which Prof. Weismann delivered at Oxford last May, on "The Effect of External Influences upon Development," has been published as a pamphlet by Mr. Henry Frowde, uniformly with the two preceding lectures by Mr. Gladstone and Prof. Huxley. Passages of considerable length, which were omitted when the lecture was originally read, are now restored to the text; and some notes have been added. In his preface, Prof. Weismann pays the following tribute to the memory of Romanes:

"His early death is a sad loss to the science for which he had still much to achieve; yet few have better used the time fate has allowed them. He worked with unwearied energy, and a long list of valuable writings bear witness to his fine gift of observation, his keen critical intelligence, and his great facility of exposition. In the very last month of his life he had set himself to solve a problem which he had originally, with prophetic insight, put forward a considerable time ago, and which he again followed out with increasing interest when biological inquiry had brought it to the front. Thus his ceaseless energy ended only with his life. "Of him it may be said—and nothing higher can be said of any distinguished man—he used to the greatest possible extent the gifts with which Nature had so abundantly supplied him."

THE Clarendon Press has also published the Robert Boyle lecture delivered by Lord Kelvin before the Oxford University Junior Scientific Club, in May of last year, on "The Molecular Tactics of a Crystal," with twenty illustrations. It deals with a problem of chirality, which—as the word is not to be found in Dr. Murray's New English Dictionary—we may allow Lord Kelvin to explain:

"I call any geometrical figure, or group of points, chiral, and say that it has chirality, if its image in a plane mirror, ideally realised, cannot be brought to coincide with itself. Two equally and similarly right-hands are homochirally similar. Equal and similarly right and left hands are heterochirally or allochirally similar (but heterochirally is better). These are also called enantiomorphs, after a usage introduced, I believe, by German writers. Any chiral object and its image in a plane mirror are heterochirally similar."

BOWDOIN COLLEGE, the university of the State of Maine, celebrated this year the hundredth anniversary of its foundation by charter, on June 24, 1794. At that time Maine was only a district of Massachusetts; and therefore it is natural that the constitution of the college should have been modelled after that of Harvard. The actual inauguration did not take place until September, 1802. The name is derived from James Bowdoin, Governor of Massachusetts in 1787, the grandson of a Huguenot refugee. But the actual patron was his son, of the same name, who gave large benefactions, both during his lifetime and after his death, the most important being a collection of Dutch pictures and drawings by the old masters. This James Bowdoin is said to have studied law at Oxford, where his name duly appears among the matriculations in Foster's Alumni Oxonienses:

"Bowdoin, James, s. James, of Boston, New England, arm. Christ Church, matric. 2 May 1771, aged 18."

The history of the college has not been eventful. To English readers the most interesting record is that Nathaniel Hawthorne and Longfellow were both members of the class of 1825, while the name of President Pierce (Hawthorne's friend and patron) appears in the previous year. Of these three, Longfellow alone was a native of Maine. Immediately after Longfellow graduated he was sent to Europe to study French and Spanish, in order to qualify for the chair of modern languages, now called after his name. This chair he held, together with the office of librarian, from 1829 to 1835, when he moved to Harvard. We have derived most of these facts from a handsome memorial volume, compiled by the present librarian, Mr. G. T. Little, which contains not only an historical sketch of Bowdoin College, but also a catalogue of all the alumni, containing about five thousand names. The addresses delivered on the occasion of the centenary, together with a poem by Prof. Arlo Bates (a graduate of 1876), are to be published separately.

ORIGINAL VERSE.

ADVICE TO A YOUNG BLACKBIRD.

Ah, there you are, let out alone at last,
I've watched your goings on for some days past;
Though you may try to hide your youth by cheek,
I know your age: you left the nest last week.
Come here and let me give you some advice,
It shall be useful, kindly, and concise:
For your new life has jars as well as joys,
And there are cats and catapults and boys.
When on the lawn be vigilant and firm,
And deftly learn to land the unwilling worm;
When times are hard and every lawn is dry,
Give up the usual worm and try the fly;
Feast through the summer; but, when autumn comes,
Abstemious be (but chiefly with my plums).
Thank man in winter for his crumbs and grain,
And, in the summer, praise the Lord for rain.
In nesting-time don't build too near the sod,
Choose a thick holly; and then trust in God;
Get a good mate, with kindly heart, and tail
Managed with grace, not flaunted like a tail.
When you fall out—as will do hens and hubs,
Don't make it known by scolding through the shrubs.
And now about your singing, just a word:
Practice for skill, not merely to be heard;
You ought to have a voice of some repute,
Your father's voice, you know, is like a flute;
Keep your song low and warble from the chest,
A mellow, rich contralto suits you best;

Whate'er you do don't trifle with the air,
But work it out with conscientious care;
"Give yourself airs," but don't "go on the street,"

Or your best passages too oft repeat;
At early morn a cheerful voice maintain,
But in the evening sing your tenderest strain.
Work hard, be true, and for perfection search,
Then in your art you'll take the highest perch.
Think over what I've said: remember that Where'er you are—look out! here comes the cat!

ELLIOT STOCK.

OBITUARY.

DIONYSIOS LATAS.

THE Greek Church has just lost one of her brightest ornaments by the death of Dionysios Latas, Archbishop of Zante, who, in addition to the genial and philanthropic patriotism which was so conspicuous in the exercise of his high functions, was also eminent for his learning and contributions to theological literature.

There unhappily exists throughout Western Christendom considerable prejudice or ignorance in respect to the Orthodox clergy. Undoubtedly there is a far wider gap between the gifts of the higher and lower clergy than obtains here, as it is not required of the ordinary priest that he should be a man of any literary attainments. This is expected only of those who aspire to the higher dignities, which are confined to members of the monastic orders. None among this highly venerated body was more deserving of respect than Dionysios Latas. A greater breadth of thought—acquired probably from his long studies in Germany—brought him closer to the intellectual classes in modern Greece than most of his brethren. Whenever as a simple Archimandrite he preached his Lenten sermons in the Metropolitan Church of Athens, the building was closely packed. When it was my privilege to hear him, his restrained yet burning eloquence, and the but half suppressed applause of his hearers (chiefly men) brought to my remembrance the accounts that are extant of the effect of the preaching of the Golden-mouthed at Constantinople, fifteen centuries ago.

Among his literary works his "Treatise upon the Atheistic Ideas of Our Times" (Πραγματεία περί τῶν κατὰ τοὺς χρόνους ἡμῶν ἀθεϊστικῶν ἰδεῶν) is probably the best. In this he advocates, with reserve, some modifications in the form of worship. To the outside world he was known through his benevolent exertions at the terrible catastrophe of the earthquake in Zante in 1892, and still later from being called upon to represent the Orthodox Church at the ecclesiastical gathering in Chicago. The non-fulfilment (from personal causes) of his intention to visit England in the course of his tour in Europe, after the Chicago Exhibition, was a great disappointment to his compatriots here, as also to myself, who had been looking forward to meeting again as a friend so exalted a member of the Christian Church, and who has now to record that which, above all personal grief, will be a great loss to the whole body of the Orthodox.

ELIZABETH MAYHEW EDMONDS.

NOTES FROM DIOCESAN REGISTERS.

MR. W. FERGUSON IRVINE is working at the Decrees of Divorce in the Diocesan Registry of Chester. The first he has copied recites that Alice Ireland, als Riseley (one of the Irelands of Hale, in Lancashire, a county family still existing), pleaded for dissolution of marriage with Richard Ryseley (of Ryseley, also of a county family)—which marriage had been duly solemnised in the chapel of Hale—on the ground that two years and more before her marriage with him, she "contraxit verum purum et legitimum matrimonium . . . coram honestis et gravibus personis cum quodam Thoma Stanley viro soluto infra parochiam de Wygan in quodam campo vocato the brynfeld juxta manerium de Bryn." There is no date to the decree; but from internal evidence it must have been between 1535 and 1537, probably—almost certainly—in 1535. Alice Ireland states that the bogus marriage with Ryseley had taken place seventeen years before the date of the plea, so that the field-wedding (which we suppose was only a trothplight) must have taken place about 1516. It has been thought that these field-weddings, &c., were one of the products of the Reformation, but this would seem to point otherwise.

DR. FURNIVALL writes that he finds only five Deposition Books at Gloucester: I., 1567; II., 1592-6; III., 1606-8; IV., 1611-12; V., 1639-61; and that no record of a child-marriage is in any of them. There are plenty of libels (mostly women abusing one another), a few broken trothplights, many tithe and will cases, several disputes about sittings in church, and some cases of clergymen not doing their duty. The officials state that they have no registry of the old Bishops' Acts.

THE Subscription Books in the Gloucester Diocesan Registry contain a few entries like the following, of surgeons and schoolmasters, declaring that they believe in the Thirty-nine Articles, and will conform to the Anglican Liturgy:—

I.

"September 23, 1691.

"I, Abraham Rudhall of the City of Gloucester, being to be admitted to practise Chirurgery within the diocese of Gloucester, doe subscribe to the Articles of Religion contained in the 36th Canon made in the year 1562, and doe declare that I will conforme to the Liturgy of the Church of England as it is now by Law established.

"ABRA: RUDHALL.

"Fiat Licencia predicto Abrahamo Rudhall ad practicandum Artem Chirurgicam in et per totam diocesam Gloucestrensem, prestitis prius per eum Juramentis allegantie, &c., factaque subscriptione coram me.

"EDW: FIDKIN, Surrogate."

II.

"28 die Novembris, 1681, in Registro Episcopali Gloucestrensi coram Cancellario, &c.

"I, John Edwardes of Stratford upon Aven in the County of Warwick, now to be Licent to teach in the Publike Free Schoole of Clifford Chambers in the dioces of Gloucester, doe subscribe to the thirty-nine Articles of Religion, as by Law is Required."

These subscriptions were made in consequence of the Act of Uniformity (14 Charles II.).

SLAVICA.

THE Bulgarian review, Pregled (Sophia), we are glad to see from the last number, still flourishes. Perhaps we might have been spared the pessimistic aphorisms, translated from the Danish writer Jacobsen, however much salt they may contain. A young and rising nation has nothing to do with pessimism, native or imported. The Bulgarians have noble work before them in the shaping of their own destinies. Let them keep steadily to this duty. The article "Impressions of a Tour in Bosnia" is full of interest, as showing the transformation which the country is undergoing at the hands of the Austrians. It is pleasing to see so fair a portion of the earth, after having been condemned for centuries to ignorance and barbarism, finally made accessible to European culture. A curious article is that on the Bulgarian (Roman) Catholic propaganda in the sixteenth century. At several periods of their history the Bulgarians have been on the point of falling under the spiritual domination of Rome. The reviews of two works by the Servian author, Stojan Novakovich, help us to understand the strenuous attempts now being made to create a "Serb" party in Macedonia, which, certainly, with the exception of its Greek fringe, belongs to Bulgaria.

The Macedonian dialect of Bulgarian has already formed the subject of some learned disquisitions, such as the Laut- und Akzentlehre der Makedoslavischen Dialecte of Dr. Leonhard Masing. A collection of the songs of the country was published by Verkovich, who attained afterwards an unenviable reputation by his publication of the Veda S' ovena. Others have made their appearance in the Sbornik, published by the Government; and now P. Draganov, of the University of St. Petersburg, has issued the first part of a valuable collection, to which a dictionary is to be added (Makedonsko-Slavianski Sbornik s' prilozheniem slovarya). The part which has appeared contains some interesting poems, many of which are devoted to the national hero, Marko Kraljevich. Mr. Draganov adds some useful notes, and we sincerely hope that he will continue his valuable labours.

Dr. Cenek Zibrt, already well known for his writings on Bohemian antiquities, and one of the editors of the Cesky Lid, the folk-lore journal of the Czechs, already mentioned in the columns of the ACADEMY, has just published a work on the popular superstitions of the eighth century, based on a MS. of that period preserved in the Vatican Library (Seznam pover a zvyklosti pohanskych), the "Indiculus superstitionum et paganarum," as illustrated by the customs and beliefs prevalent among the Slavs at the period, compared with other European nations. The long list of books cited at the end shows how thoroughly the subject has been studied. Dr. Zibrt's notes are everywhere full of learning and information.

The last publication of the Polish Academy in the series entitled "Biblioteka Piszarzów Polskich," is a translation of the well-known medical work of Aristotle, which enjoyed so much popularity. It appeared in 1535, and was compiled "from Aristotle and other wise men," by Andrew z Kobylna. Copies are of the greatest rarity: and in editing it Prof. Rostafiuski, of Cracow, not only confers a benefit upon philologists, but helps to show how active literature was among the Poles in the sixteenth century. This is the twenty-eighth rare work of that period which the Academy has reprinted.

W. R. M.

THE COMING PUBLISHING SEASON.

MESSRS. MACMILLAN & CO.'S ANNOUNCEMENTS.

Literature.—"A Shakespeare Concordance," a New and Complete Concordance or Verbal Index to Words, Phrases, and Passages in the Dramatic Works of Shakespeare, with a Supplementary Concordance to the Poems, by John Bartlett; "The Complete Works of Alfred Lord Tennyson," in 1 vol., with portrait engraved on steel by G. J. Stodart; "Matthew Arnold's Letters," edited by G. W. E. Russell, in 3 vols.; A Volume of Selections from the Poems of Aubrey de Vere, by George E. Woodberry, of Columbia College; "Essays and Studies," reprinted from the Quarterly Review, by J. Churton Collins; "Essays on Questions of the Day," by Goldwin Smith, new and revised edition; "The Warfare of Science, and other Essays," by Andrew White, president of Cornell University; "The Chronicles of Froissart," translated by John Bourchier, Lord Berners, edited and reduced into one volume, by G. C. Macaulay—in the Globe Library; "Selections from the Writings of Thoreau," edited by H. S. Salt; "Chaucer's Canterbury Tales," edited by A. W. Pollard, in 2 vols.; "Life of Swift," by Henry Craik, in 2 vols. with portraits, new edition—in the Eversley Series; "The Christian Year," with Introduction by Charlotte M. Yonge; "Poems by Robert Southey," chosen and arranged by Edward Dowden—in the Golden Treasury Series.

Illustrated Books.—"Coridon's Song, and Other Verses," with Preface by Austin Dobson, and illustrations by Hugh Thomson; "Gulliver's Travels," with introduction by Henry Craik, and 100 illustrations by C. E. Brock; "The Fables of Æsop," selected, told anew, and their history traced, by Joseph Jacobs; with about 300 illustrations by Richard Heighway—three volumes of the Cranford Series; "The Reign of Queen Anne," by Mrs. Oliphant, with illustrations; "My New Home," by Mrs. Molesworth, illustrated by Leslie Brooke; "The End of Elftown," by Jane Barlow, with illustrations and decorations by Laurence Housman; "Maurice; or, the Red Jar," a Tale of Magic and Adventure for Boys and Girls, by the Countess of Jersey, with illustrations by Miss Rosie M. M. Pitman; "Tales of the Punjab, told by the People," by Mrs. Steel, illustrated by J. L. Kipling; "Pen Drawing and Pen Draughtsmen: their Work and their Methods," a Study of the Art to-day, with Technical Suggestions, by Joseph Pennell, a new and enlarged edition, with over 400 illustrations.

Fiction.—"Love in Idleness," by F. Marion Crawford; "In the Lion's Mouth," the Story of Two English Children in France, 1789-1793, by Eleanor C. Price; "Sibylla," by Sir H. Cunningham, in 2 vols.; "The Melancholy of Stephen Allard," by Garnett Smith; "Tales of Naples and the Camorra," by Charles Grant.

Biography.—"The Life and Letters of R. W. Church," late Dean of St. Paul's; "The Life of Henry Edward Manning," Cardinal Archbishop of Westminster, by Edmund Sheridan Purcell, in 2 vols., with portraits; "The Life of Sir A. C. Ramsay," by Sir Archibald Geikie, with Portraits; "The Life of John Milton," Vol. II., by Prof. David Masson, new edition, also an Index to the six volumes; "Chapters from Some Unwritten Memoirs," by Mrs. Ritchie (Miss Thackeray); "Life of Chief Justice Higinbotham," of Victoria, by Prof. E. B. Morris.

History and Archaeology.—"The Meaning of History, and Other Historical Pieces," by Frederic Harrison; "A Handbook of European History," by Arthur Hassall; "Greek History from its Origin to the Destruction of the Independence of the Greek People," by Adolf Holm, authorised translation, in 4 vols.; "Outlines of Church History," by Rudolf Sohm, translated from the German by Miss Sinclair; "The Church of S. Sophia at Constantinople," by H. Swainson and W. R. Lethaby, with illustrations; "Western Europe in the Fifth Century," and "Western Europe in the Eighth Century," being lectures delivered at Oxford by the late Prof. E. A. Freeman; "A Short History of the English People," by J. R. Green, illustrated edition, edited by Mrs. Green and Miss Kate Norgate, Vol. IV. (completing the work); "A Constitutional History of the House of Lords," by Luke Owen Pike, of the Public Record Office; "Memorials of Old Whitty; or, Historical Fragments from Ancient Whitty Records," by Canon Atkinson, with illustrations; "Atlas of Classical Antiquities," by Th. Schreiber, edited for English use by Prof. W. C. F. Anderson; "Life in Ancient Egypt," described by Adolf Erman, translated by H. M. Tirard, with 400 illustrations and 12 plates.

Theology.—"The New Testament in the Original Greek," the Text of Westcott and Hort, printed in "Macmillan Greek"; "Personality, Divine and Human," being the Bampton Lectures for 1894, by the Rev. J. R. Illingworth; "Lectures on Preaching," by the Bishop of Ripon; "The Word and the Way; or, The Light of the Ages on the Path of To-day," by the Rev. W. Leighton Grane; "Documents Illustrative of the History of the English Church," selected and edited by W. J. Hardy and the Rev. Henry Gee; "History, Prophecy, and the Monuments," by J. F. McCurdy, of Toronto, in 2 vols.; "Christus Imperator!" the Universal Empire of Christianity in the Light of Evolution, a series of sermons delivered in Liverpool by the Dean of Ely and others; "Lectures on Judaistic Christianity" and "Introductory Lectures on St. Paul's Epistles to the Romans and to the Ephesians," by the late Prof. Hort; "Last Words in the Temple Church," by the Dean of Llandaff.

Miscellaneous.—"The Use of Life," by Sir John Lubbock; "A Catalogue of Adam Smith's Library," edited by James Bonar; "Australia," by Miss Shaw; "A Corner of Cathay," by Adele M. Fielde, with illustrations and coloured plates; "Sketches in Sport and Natural History," by the late Dr. George Kingsley; "The Book of the Rose," by the Rev. A. Foster-Melliar, illustrated.

Modern Languages.—"Wulker's Anglo-Saxon Literature," translated by A. W. Deering and C. F. McClumpha; "English Prose," Selections, with Critical Introductions by various writers, and General Introductions to each Period, edited by Henry Craik, Vols. III. and IV.; "Chronological Outlines of American Literature," by L. Selden Whitecomb, with Introduction by Brander Matthews; "History of the English Language," by O. F. Emerson, of Cornell University; "A German Primer," containing a First Grammar, Reader, and Writer, for the Lower Forms of Public Schools, by Otto Siepmann. Macmillan's English Classics, New Volumes: "Macaulay's Essay on Addison," edited by Prof. J. W. Hales; "Cowper's Letters," edited by W. T. Webb; "Burke's Speech on American Taxation, Speech on Conciliation with America, and Letter to the Sheriffs of Bristol," edited by F. G. Selby.

Classics.—"Meissner's Latin Phrase-Book," translated from the sixth German edition, with the addition of supplementary phrases and references, by H. W. Auden; "The Theory of Conditional Sentences in Greek and Latin," for the use of students, by Richard Horton-Smith; "Scholia Aristophanica," being such comments adscript to the text of Aristophanes as are preserved in the Codex Ravenus, arranged, emended, and translated by the Rev. W. G. Rutherford; "Herodotus," Books IV.-VI., with introduction, commentary, and dissertations, by R. W. Macan; "The Poetics of Aristotle," a revised text, with translation and illustrative essays, by Prof. S. H. Butcher; "Plutarch, 'Life of Pericles,'" edited by Dr. H. A. Holden; "Homer, 'Iliad,'" Books I.-XII., edited by Walter Leaf and the Rev. M. A. Bayfield; "Virgil, 'Aeneid,'" Books I.-VI., edited by T. E. Page; "Xenophon, 'Selections Illustrative of Greek Life,'" from the minor works of Xenophon, adapted for the use of beginners, with vocabulary, notes, and exercises, by C. H. Keene; "Sallust, 'The Jugurthine War,'" adapted and edited by E. P. Coleridge.

Mathematics.—"A Treatise on Bessel Functions," by Profs. G. B. Matthews and A. Gray, of Bangor; "Elementary Treatise on the Theory of Functions," by James Harkness and Frank Morley; "Elliptic Functions," by A. C.

Dixon; "Practical Plane Geometry," by J. Humphrey Spanton; "An Introductory Account of Certain Modern Ideas and Methods in Plane Analytical Geometry," by Charlotte Angas Scott, Professor of Mathematics in Bryn Mawr College, Pennsylvania; "Integral Calculus and Differential Equations for Beginners," by Joseph Edwards; "Geometrical Conic Sections," by Charles Smith; "Elementary Mensuration," with Exercises on the Mensuration of Plane and Solid Figures, by F. H. Stevens.

Science.—"The Theory of Light," by Thomas Prestou, second edition, thoroughly revised; "Magnetism and Electricity," by Prof. Andrew Gray, illustrated; "Steam and the Marine Steam Engine," by John Yeo; "Pumping Machinery," by Dr. Julius Weisbach; "A Laboratory Manual of Physics and Applied Electricity," arranged and edited by Edward L. Nichols, Vol. II. Senior Course and Outline of Advanced Work, by George S. Moler, Frederick Bedell, Homer J. Hotchkiss, Charles P. Matthews, and the editor, illustrated; "Theoretical Chemistry," by Prof. Nernst, translated by Prof. Charles Skeel Palmer, of Colorado; "Manual of Physico-Chemical Measurements," by Prof. Wilhelm Ostwald, of Leipzig, translated by Dr. James Walker; "Laszar Cohn's Organic Chemistry," translated by Alexander Smith; "The Rise and Development of Organic Chemistry," by the late C. S. Shorlemmer, translated and edited by Prof. Smithells; "Chemical Analysis of Oils, Fats, Waxes, and their Commercial Products," by Prof. R. Benedikt, translated, edited, and enlarged by Dr. J. Lewkowitsch; "The Planet Earth," an astronomical introduction to geography, by R. A. Gregory; "Papers on Geology," by Joseph Prestwich; "The Cambridge Natural History," edited by J. W. Clark, S. F. Harmer, and A. E. Shipley; Vol. III., "Molluscs," by the Rev. A. H. Cooke; "Aquatic Insects," by Prof. L. C. Miall, of Leeds, illustrated; "Text Book of the Diseases of Trees," by Prof. R. Hartig, translated by Prof. W. Somerville, with a preface by Prof. H. Marshall Ward, with numerous illustrations; "Timber and Timber Trees, Native and Foreign," by Thomas Laslett, new edition, revised by Prof. Marshall Ward; "A Text-Book of Comparative Anatomy," by Prof. Arnold Lang, of Zürich, translated by Henry M. Bernard, and Matilda Bernard, Vol. II.; "Human Anatomy," by Prof. Wiedersheim, translated from the last German edition by H. M. Bernard, revised and annotated by Dr. G. B. Howes, illustrated; "A Text-book of Pathology: Systematic and Practical," by Prof. D. J. Hamilton, Vol. II.; "Lessons in Practical Bacteriology," by Dr. A. A. Kanthack and J. H. Drysdale, of Liverpool; "Mental Development in the Child and the Race," by Prof. J. Baldwin, of Princeton College; "A Course of Experimental Psychology," by J. McKeen Cattell, of Columbia College; "Leibnitz's 'Nouveaux Essais,'" translated by A. G. Langley; "The Right to the Whole Produce of Labour," by Prof. Menger, translated by Mary E. Tanner; "Elementary Course of Practical Science," Part II., by Hugh Gordon; "Short Studies in Earth Knowledge," by William Gee, with illustrations; "Physiography for Beginners," by J. E. Marr and Alfred Harker; "Physiology for Beginners," by Prof. Michael Foster and Dr. L. E. Shore; "Agriculture: Practical and Scientific," by Prof. J. Muir, of Leeds; "Horse Breeding for Farmers," by A. E. Pease; "Garden Plants and Flowers," a Primer for Amateurs, by J. Wright; "Greenhouse and Window Plants," a Primer for Amateurs, edited by J. Wright; "Vegetables and their Cultivation," a Primer for Amateurs, Cottage Gardeners, and Allotment Holders, by A. Dean, edited by J. Wright; "The Mechanism of Weaving," by Thomas William Fox; "Boot and Shoe Manufacture," by C. W. B. Burdett, with numerous illustrations; "Facts about Processes, Pigments, and Vehicles," a Manual for Art Students, by A. P. Laurie, illustrated; Class Books edited by Dr. James Gow—"Commercial Geography," by Prof. E. C. K. Gonner, of Liverpool; "Advanced Bookkeeping," by J. Thornton.

MR. JOHN C. NIMMO'S ANNOUNCEMENTS.

"John Addington Symonds: a Biography," compiled from his Papers and Correspondence, by Horatio F. Brown, Mr. Symonds's literary legatee and executor, with portraits and other illustrations; "Giovanni Boccaccio: as Man and Author," by John Addington Symonds; "Blank Verse," by John Addington Symonds, reprinted at the author's special request; "Melting Snows," by Prince Emil von Schonach-Carolath, translated by Margaret Symonds; "Matteo Bandello," twelve stories selected and done into English, with a memoir of the Author, by Percy Pinkerton; a new edition, with the plates carefully revised and corrected, of the Rev. F. O. Morris's "A Natural History of British Moths"; "The Pilgrim's Progress," with fourteen plates, designed and etched by William Strang, printed on thick Japanese Paper by F. Goulding; "Charterhouse Old and New," by E. P. Eardley Wilmot and E. C. Streetfield, with four etchings by D. Y. Cameron; "The Hero of Esthonia, and Other Studies in the Romantic Literature of that Country," by W. F. Kirby.

MESSRS. W. & R. CHAMBERS & Co.'s ANNOUNCEMENTS.

"Chambers's Concise Gazetteer of the World," Topographical, Statistical, Historical, with pronunciation of the more difficult names of places, numerous etymologies, and information regarding the derivation of names; "Olivia," a story for girls, by Mrs. Molesworth; "Betty, a School-girl," by L. T. Meade; "Diamond Dyke; or, the Lone Farm on the Veldt," a story of life on an ostrich farm in South Africa, by George Manville Fenn; "The Rebel Commodore" (Paul Jones), by D. Lawson Johnstone; "The White Kaid of the Atlas," by J. Maclaren Cobban; "The Yellow God," by Reginald Horsley; "Vanished; or, the Strange Adventures of Arthur Hawkesleigh," by David Ker; "Adventure and Adventurers, being True Tales of Daring, Peril, and Heroism," by the Editor of "Recent Travel and Adventure"; "Thistle and Rose," a story for girls, by Amy Walton. Also four new volumes of popular biographies: "Queen Victoria," "General Gordon and Lord Dundonald," "Livingstone and Stanley," and "Columbus and Cook."

Educational.—"Elementary Science," by S. R. Todd; "Organic Chemistry," Part II., by Prof. Perkin and S. Kipping; "Elementary Book-Keeping," by George Lisle; and a set of reading books, with coloured illustrations, called "Chamber's Fluent Readers."

SELECTED FOREIGN BOOKS.

GENERAL LITERATURE.

ANALECTA hymnica mediæ ævi. Hrg. v. G. M. Dreyes. 18. Historiæ rhythmicæ. Liturgische Reimofficien d. Mittelalters. 3. Folge. Leipzig: Reisland. 8 M.
COMENII, J. A., Magna didactica. Ex editione Amstelodamensi anni 1657 nunc primum separatim edita F. C. Hultgren. Pars II. Leipzig: Siegersund. 2 M. 75 Pf.
HORNUNG, F. Die Gedichte d. Heinzelein v. Konstanz u. die Minnelehre. Leipzig: Fock. 1 M.
KORNER, P. Der Versbau Robert Garniers. Berlin: Vogt. 2 M. 40 Pf.
PERRI, F. Kritische Beiträge zur Geschichte der Dichtersprache Klopstock's. Greifswald: Jaeger. 2 M.

HISTORY, ETC.

AMELUNG, K. M. Johannes Mathesius*, e. lutherischer Pfarrherr d. 16. Jahrh. Gütersloh: Bertelsmann. 3 M. 60 Pf.
DUNANT, A. La législation par le peuple en Suisse. Etude historique. Geneva: Stapelmohr. 2 fr. 25 c.
GRISTESHELDEN. 12. Bd. Freiherr vom Stein. Von F. Neubauer. Berlin: Hofmann. 3 M. 60 Pf.
MEOVORIAN, A. Etude ethnographique et juridique sur la famille et le mariage Arméniens. Geneva: Stapelmohr. 3 fr.
MONUMENTA mediæ ævi historica res gestas Poloniae illustrantia. Tom. XIII. et XIV. Krakau. 10 M.
QUELLEN U. FORSCHUNGEN aus dem Gebiete der Geschichte. 3. Bd. Die päpstlichen Kollektorien in Deutschland während d. 14. Jahrh. Hrg. v. J. P. Kirsch. Paderborn: Schöningh. 20 M.

PHYSICAL SCIENCE AND PHILOSOPHY, ETC.

BAUMANN, J. Die grundlegenden Thatsachen zu e. wissenschaftlichen Welt- u. Lebensansicht. Stuttgart: Neff. 3 M.
BEITRÄGE zur Geologie u. Paläontologie des Herzogth. Braunschweig. 4 M. 50 Pf.
CHYZER, C., et L. KULCZYNSKI. Aianae Hungarias. Tom. II. pars. 1. Theridividae. Budapest: Tisinger. 10 M.
GRASSMANN'S, H. Gesammelte mathematische u. physikalische Werke. 1. Bd. 1. Thl. Die Ausdehnungslehre v. 1844 u. die geometrische Analyse. Unter der Mitwirkung v. E. Study hrg. v. F. Engel. Leipzig: Teubner. 12 M.
HAAR, F. ter. De systemate morali antiquorum probabilistiarum dissertatio historico-critica. Paderborn: Schöningh. 1 M. 25 Pf.

PHILOLOGY.

EPICUREI dissertationes ab Ariano digestae, ad fidem cod. Bodleiani rec. H. Schenkl. Leipzig: Teubner. 10 M.
GRAMMATIK, historische, der lateinischen Sprache. 1. Bd. 1. Hülfe. Einleitung u. Lautlehre v. F. Stolz. Leipzig: Teubner. 7 M.
HIPPARCHI in Arati et Eudoxi phaenomena commentariorum libri III., recensuit. . . . C. Manitius. Leipzig: Teubner. 4 M.
LUCRATI CASI, T. de rerum natura libri sex. Editio A. Brieger. Leipzig: Teubner. 1 M. 80 Pf.
STEINACH, L. Fabularum Aesopiarum sylloge. E cod. Parisino Gr. N. 690 suppl. editio L. S. Krakau. 3 M.
ΠΛΟΥΤΑΡΧΟΥ τὸ ἐν Δελφοῖς Ε προσφανεῖται Ἑρμίστι Κουρτίῳ ἀγορεύει τὴν ὀρθοκονιστικὴν ἐκείνην ἐπὶ Γ. Ν. Βερνάρδου. Leipzig: Teubner. 1 M. 50 Pf.

CORRESPONDENCE.

THE SOURCES OF CHAUCER'S "PRIORESSES TALE."

Cambridge: August 7, 1894.

It is well known that the apparent source of Chaucer's "Prioresses Tale" is the French poem by Gautier de Coinci,* printed by the Chaucer Society. This story contains nearly all the incidents mentioned by Chaucer, though he has retold everything in his own delightful fashion.

There is, however, one incident in Chaucer of which Coinci, in this poem, gives no hint whatever. This is towards the end, where Chaucer varies from his original with great judgment. Coinci brings the martyred boy to life again, which gives an inartistic ending. Chaucer escapes from this by saying that the Virgin laid a grain upon the child's tongue, and that he could only live till it was taken away. Where, we may ask, did he find this notion about the grain on the tongue?

The answer, as I take it, is this. He has here adapted, with a judicious change, an incident which he found in another story by the same Gautier de Coinci: a story, namely, which belongs to the same set of "Miracles of Our Lady," and was doubtless in the same MS. as the other. This story is easily accessible, being (fortunately) printed in the new edition of the Chrestomathie by Bartsch, which is now entitled La Langue et la Littérature Françaises, &c., and is edited by A. Horning (Paris, 1887). There, at col. 367, we find a story headed "De Clerico sancte Virgini devoto, in cujus jam mortuo ore flos inventus est."

* I find, to my surprise and regret, that the name "Coinci" is unfortunately misprinted as "Poincy" in my new Chaucer (vol. iii., p. 422). It looks like a "portmanteau" word, commemorating both Coinci and his editor Poquet.

The story is rather dull and clumsy; but it comes, briefly, to this.

There was a certain clerical sinner in the town of Chartres, who was entirely given up to worldly pleasures. But (like Chaucer's child) he had one merit: he never passed an image of Our Lady without kneeling down, dropping a penitential tear, and saying a few words of prayer. He had enemies, who one day caught and slew him; whereupon everybody said that he was not fit to be buried in consecrated ground. The clergy held a council about it, and promptly commanded his body to be thrown into a vile ditch outside the town, as if he had been a common felon. But Our Lady was displeased at this insult to one who had shown her such constant respect, and appeared by night to one of the principal clergy, whom she severely rebuked, commanding him at the same time to disinter the body, and to bury it again in the holiest site that could be found. Accordingly, all hasten to repair their fault, and soon disinter the corpse. They had no sooner done so—and here we come to the point—than they found a beautiful fresh-blown flower within the dead man's mouth; and, though he had been buried a month, the tongue was still fresh, red, and uncorrupted, and seemed, in the imagination of the awed spectators, to move as though it were still striving to utter a prayer to the Holy Virgin. At this sight tears of remorse were freely shed; and the assembled multitude promptly removed the corpse to the most sacred spot in the cemetery, and reinterred it with singing of masses and every possible form of respect.

In this story the fresh-blown rose and the uncorrupted tongue are merely introduced for miraculous effect, and serve no other purpose. With the artist's instinct, Chaucer seized upon the very thing he wanted. The rose became a grain,* with a special virtue attached to it; and the tongue of the dead utters real praises. Moreover, whereas in the other story the dead child recovers, in this one the corpse is regarded as that of a saint, and is duly buried in the most sacred spot available, with every circumstance of honour. The former story enabled Chaucer to begin his tale; the present one helped him to end it.

This consideration explains yet one thing more. For it so happens that the Chaucer Society also gives the story of the boy who was murdered by a Jew for singing "Alma Redemptoris Mater," from the Vernon MS. In this version, it is not the grain that is found in the child's mouth, but the original rose; or rather, the original rose multiplied by five. For one fresh red rose was found in his mouth, two in his eyes, and two in his ears! We now know whence these roses sprang. Besides, this is a mere miracle, and nothing comes of it.

In the course of this second tale by Coinci, I noted two lines which seemed strangely familiar. They answer, however, not to any two lines in "The Prioresses Tale," but to two lines in "The Clerkes Tale"; however, the man who wrote one wrote the other. Here are the two French lines:—

"De mainte lerne chaude et clere
I out mainte face arosee."

And here are the English ones (which are independent of Petrarch's Latin version):—

"O many a tere on many a pitous face
Deun ran of hem that stoden hir bisyde."

WALTER W. SKEAT.

* Compare the three grains which Seth placed under Adam's tongue (Cursor Mundi, p. 87), a well-known legend.

to be seen on the Donard, Tulloherin, Roovesmore, Aglish, and other Ogham Stones, and which, no doubt, are the marks made by the engraver in sharpening his tools.

R. A. S. MACALISTER.

Kinnaird Castle, August 27, 1894.

Allow me to correct two small misprints in my letter in the current number of the ACADEMY. In second line from foot for "inscription" read "ascription," and in the following line for "seems" read "seem."

SOUTHESK.

APPOINTMENTS FOR NEXT WEEK.

TUESDAY, Sept. 4, 3 p.m. Anglo-Russian: "Our Ideals," by Mr. Kuskov.

SCIENCE.

Three Lectures on the Vedānta Philosophy. Delivered at the Royal Institution in March, 1894, by Prof. Max Müller. (Longmans.)

WE have here the outlines of a very interesting system of philosophy, presented in an extremely lucid and attractive form. There is something undoubtedly fascinating about the Vedānta, a system which has held sway over some of the best minds of India; and much enjoyment, and even profit, can be got from the study of this old-world effort to reach the highest truth by the dim light of unaided reason. The Professor has, however, rightly called the subject of his lectures "mere speculations," though they are, as he says, "bound up with the highest and dearest interests of our life"; and one is therefore surprised that he can find in them "a preparation for a happy death." Surely "mere speculations" can hardly supply the "strong and solid planks" referred to on page 18? To one who has watched the current of thought in India for thirty-seven years, and has seen the best-cultured minds gradually turning away from these speculations to a species of Theism drawn from the Christian Scriptures, if not to Christianity itself, it is strange to witness the reverse process going on among some of our Western philosophers. My friend Prof. Deussen's last words to the educated men whom he addressed in Bombay last year were, "The Vedānta, in its unfalsified form, is the strongest support of pure morality, is the greatest consolation in the sufferings of life and death—Indians, keep to it!" But I do not think they will.

All the Indian schools of philosophy owe their origin to the belief in the doctrine of transmigration, from which they profess to provide a way of escape. A succession of births—an idea foreign to the Vedic Hymns—is necessitated, they say, by the works done in previous states of existence, all of which are carefully stored up, and must bear fruit. The Vedāntist tells us that by following his system we destroy the accumulated (sanchita) works and nullify the current (kriyamāna) ones; at death, therefore, nothing remains to cause a return to this bhavasāgara, and the soul, set free from limiting conditions (upādhis), loses its personality in Brahman.

Prof. Max Müller appears to accept the theory of metempsychosis as the only satisfactory way of accounting for the inequalities of the present existence.

"If a man feels that what, without any fault of his own, he suffers in this life can only be the result of some of his own former acts, he will bear his sufferings with more resignation, like a debtor who is paying off an old debt. And if he knows besides that in this life he may, by suffering, not only pay off his old debts, but actually lay by moral capital for the future, he has a motive for goodness, which is not more selfish than it ought to be" (p. 165).

The people of India have without doubt been greatly influenced by the belief that everything in the present life is due to something good or bad done in a former existence, and which cannot be interfered with. The very word (prarabdha) used by the philosophers to signify "fructescent" works—that is, such of the "accumulated" works as are bearing fruit in the present life—has been adopted in Marāṭhī in the sense of "fate"—something which is irresistible and must run its course, do what you may. But I doubt whether it has proved much of a "motive for goodness." A man cannot have much concern for a future existence, as an insect or animal, or even as a man, in which there will be no consciousness of personal identity. And of course all sense of moral responsibility to a superior Being as a motive for goodness is wanting to the out-and-out Vedāntist; for, as Prof. Gough has well put it, "the God of the Upanishads is but the highest of manifestations in the world of unreality"; and what possible impulsive power for good can be derived from the belief in such a Being? The popular mind, indeed, to some extent rises above (or, as Sankara would say, sinks below!) the teaching of the Vedānta, and invests the deity with reality; but, even then, what kind of a deity is he? Prof. Max Müller (p. 10) quotes the following remark of Frederick Schlegel:

"It cannot be denied that the early Indians possessed a knowledge of the true God; all their writings are replete with sentiments and expressions, noble, clear, and severely grand, as deeply conceived and reverentially expressed as in any human language in which men have spoken of their God."

This is a bold statement, and is tantamount to saying that the Indian mind, unaided by a revelation from without, succeeded in searching out and grasping "the high and lofty One that inhabiteth eternity," regarding whom it might with truth be said:

"Yato vācho nivartante, aprāpya manasā saha."

It has been asserted that humanity started with the lowest possible conceptions of deity, and, by its own reasoning powers, arrived at the knowledge which we now possess. I believe this view to be without foundation, and that the true state of the case is as set forth in the first chapter of the Epistle to the Romans. There we learn that men originally knew God but "exchanged the truth of God for a lie, and worshipped and served the creature rather than the Creator; and as they refused to have God in their knowledge, He gave them up into a reprobate mind." As a natural consequence they lapsed into almost total ignorance of Him, though doubtless some fragments of truth were retained and handed down, and may still be found underlying manifest fiction in the sacred writings of India; but certainly not such a knowledge as that described by Schlegel. If it exists, where is it to be found? In the Vedic Hymns? Certainly not, unless the true God is to be identified with the elements and with the phenomena of nature. In the Upanishads? They swallow up God in Brahman, a Being devoid of attributes and therefore indescribable. Is it in the Purāṇas? They certainly say a good deal about Vishnu and Śvara; but surely such a knowledge of the true God as that referred to would include a sense of His holiness—an attribute not to be found in any Pauranic deity. Let us listen to one who is no outside theorist, but was born and bred in the midst of Brāhmanism and is well versed in philosophy. He says:

"Neither I nor my co-religionists had a true idea of this attribute [the holiness] of God. This becomes very clear from this, that both I and they, even the most learned among them, believed that Krishna was the supreme God Himself incarnate, and believed also that He could commit such unholy acts as are related of Krishna. The great Śankarāchārya fully believed that Krishna was the true God incarnate, as he expressly says in the introduction to his commentary on the Bhagavad-gītā. . . . Now you will acknowledge that these doctrines—namely, of God's being the Creator of all, of His holiness, of His being Almighty, and of His being merciful, are essential to Theism; so that where they are not, there is no Theism at all. But while I was a Hindu I was ignorant of them."

That the Indian conception of deity was unsatisfactory and unsatisfying is demonstrated by the fact that the philosophers were constrained to put it aside and to evolve from their inner consciousness a being styled Brahman, devoid of all attributes, and of which nothing can be affirmed but existence, objectless knowledge, and joy without the fruition of bliss. I will venture to say, however, that no one who has really known the true God of revelation could possibly ascribe to Him unreality in any sense, or conceive a Being superior to Him.

The great philosopher Śankara gives clear definitions of God and Brahman, but, not infrequently, as I have shown in my recent edition of the text of the Vedāntasāra, he ignores the distinction between them, although that distinction is one of the main features of his system. Amongst us, at any rate, to avoid confusion, the term Brahman (neuter) should be strictly confined to the pure, unassociated, Brahman; whilst God is Brahma-associated-with-ignorance. In the work before us Prof. Max Müller has not preserved this distinction with sufficient care. We read:

"The self can never be known as objective, but can only be itself, and thus be conscious of itself . . . it knows, but it cannot be known" (p. 67). "Whose very being is knowing, and whose knowing is being" (p. 70). "The only attributes of this Brahman, if attributes they can be called, are that he is, that he knows, and that he is full of bliss" (p. 71). "The soul or self has but three qualities. It is, it perceives, and it rejoices" (p. 94). "Brahman was before the creation of the world, and had always something to know and think upon" (p. 139).

* Theism and Christianity, by Nilakantha Sāstri Gore (Calcutta, 1882).

Now a Vedântist of Sankara's school would take exception to every one of these statements, and rightly so; for to attribute to pure Brahman perception, knowing, thinking, rejoicing, or even consciousness, is to destroy his system of non-duality. For Prof. Flint has well said in his Anti-Theistic Theories (p. 423):

"All consciousness involves the dualism of subject and object. It is only realised as a relation. The terms of the relation may be self and a modification of self, for the object is not necessarily apart from or out of the Ego; but wherever there is consciousness there is relation, and wherever there is relation there is dualism."

The essence of the Vedânta, according to Sankara's school, is that Brahman alone exists, and that all phenomena, whether animate or inanimate, are superimposed on it by ignorance. Individuality is therefore illusory.

"But even appearances or illusions are phenomena which require to be explained. And they cannot be explained on the hypothesis of absolute unity. They imply that besides the absolute being there are minds which can be haunted by appearances, and which can be deluded into believing that those appearances are realities" (Flint's Anti-Theistic Theories, p. 418).

Reason and common sense, however, meet with very little respect in the system of the advaitavādins, and they easily get rid of mind and matter by means of the never-failing avidyā and māyā.

In regard to the former of these terms, Prof. Max Müller says (p. 97):—

"Originally I believe this Nescience may have been meant as subjective only, as a confession of our inevitable ignorance of all that is transcendent. But very soon this Avidyā was conceived as an independent power."

The modern Vedântists describe avidyā as a "something" consisting of the three qualities, but which cannot be defined as existent or non-existent. Sankara, however, has no such definition, but identifies it with adhyāsa. In the introduction to his bhāṣya, he says:—

"Tam etam evamlakṣaṇam adhyāsam paṇḍitā avidyēti manzante. . . . Tam etam avidyākhyam ātmānātmanor itaretarādhyāsam puraskṛitya sarve pramāṇapramēyavyavahārāṁ lankikāṁ vaidikāśca pravartitāh."

Nescience produces names and forms, and from them proceeds the illusory universe, or Māyā.

The spiritual guide leading his pupil on step by step from the known to the unknown, by the method termed adhyāropā-pavādanyāya, brings him at last to the truth embodied in the twelve "great sentences," the chief of which are "Thou art that," "All this is indeed Brahman," and "I am Brahman." The last is the climax; and its immediate issue is jīvanmukti, which, at death, becomes full and irreversible emancipation. Prof. Deussen, in his Metaphysics (p. 337), puts it thus:

"It is not the falling of the drop into the infinite ocean, it is the whole ocean, becoming free from the fetters of ice, returning from its frozen state to what it is really and has never ceased to be, to its own all-pervading, eternal, almighty [?] nature."

This, then, is the goal of the Vedânta and the highest flight of unaided human reason—the absolute extinction of individuality! Let us, then, be heartily thankful for the revelation of a better hope—"Now are we the children of God, and it doth not yet appear what we shall be; but we know that when He shall appear we shall be like Him, for we shall see Him as He is."

G. A. JACOB.

SOME GEOLOGICAL BOOKS.

"ELEMENTARY PALAEOLOGY."—Invertebrate. By Henry Woods. (Cambridge: University Press.) Palaeontology is a science which appeals to both the geologist and the biologist; and hence it might be supposed that it would be weighted with an excess of text-books, each side of the subject having its representatives. On the contrary, however, there is, as a matter of fact, a curious lack of such literature in English. The admirable work of Prof. Nicholson and Mr. Lydekker is practically our only text-book; and this is far too bulky for the ordinary student. Mr. Wood was, therefore, fully justified in preparing a small manual, as an aid to elementary work. The zoological characters of the successive groups of the Invertebrata, commencing with the Protozoa, are clearly given, special stress being laid upon the nature of the hard structures likely to be preserved in a fossil condition. The classification of each group is explained, and such genera as are of palaeontological interest receive due description. It would have been desirable, we think, to introduce figures much more generously into the text; but the author assumes that the student who uses his book will be able to study the fossils themselves, and these are, of course, vastly more useful than even the best illustrations. A few slips will need correction in a new edition; but, even as the book stands, it will be distinctly useful to any student entering on the study of geology. Mr. Wood's volume forms the first of a series of "Cambridge Natural Science Manuals," edited by Mr. Arthur Shipley.

Tables for the Determination of the Rock-forming Minerals. Compiled by F. Loewinson-Lessing. Translated from the Russian by J. W. Gregory. (Macmillans.) Several sets of tables have been issued for the aid of the student of microscopic petrography; but unfortunately they have usually begun at the wrong end. Let the student know the minerals in his section, and the published tables afford him admirable information about them. But it is the determination of the mineral that forms the initial difficulty; and it has remained for Prof. Loewinson-Lessing, reversing the ordinary method, to devise a set of tables which shall enable the student to identify an unknown or a doubtful mineral. This is done by means of tabular schemes, such as are familiar to botanical students in the key to a flora. But as the professor at Dorpat published this key in Russian, most students found that the key was itself locked up. Dr. Gregory has therefore rendered a decided service to petrographical science by rendering the tables into English. The translation was made before he left England for his famous African expedition; but the preparation of a prefatory chapter on the petrological microscope was deputed to Prof. Grenville Cole, who also passed the work through the press. The result of their joint work is in every way satisfactory.

PHILOLOGY NOTES.

THE MS. of the Palestinian Syriac Lectionary which was discovered and photographed in part by Mrs. S. S. Lewis at Mount Sinai in February, 1892, and was described by her in the ACADEMY of April 15, 1893, has been edited by her, with the variations from De Lagarde's edition of the Vatican MS., and with the variations also from a similar MS. discovered at Sinai by Mr. Rendel Harris. Messrs. Gilbert & Rivington have the work in the press, and expect it will be ready for publication in the course of next year. In a book lately published by Dr. Schwally, of Strassburg, Idioticon des Christliche Palästinschen Aramaisch, the mistake occurs of attributing the discovery of the first of these MSS. to the late Prof. Bensly, who visited the Sinai Convent only in 1893.

PROF. TERRIEN DE LACOUPERIE's work on the Western origin of early Chinese civilisation, which Messrs. Asher & Co. now have ready for issue, contains not only a reprint of his papers on the subject from the Babylonian and Oriental Record, but also five new chapters. One of these gives a popular summary of the chief results which the author claims to have discovered; while at the end there is a chronological table, showing the dates of the introduction into China of the several foreign influences from 2283 B.C. to 220 A.D.

WE understand that Prof. de Lacouperie will also publish shortly a book on the beginnings of writing in Central and Eastern Asia, in which he deals with no less than 450 different kinds of script.

WE have received Volume XXIV. of the Transactions of the American Philological Association (Boston: Ginn; London: Edward Arnold), which also contains the Proceedings of the meeting held last year at Chicago, in conjunction with the so-called Congress of Philologists. Chiefly as a result of that meeting, the volume is notable for the large proportion of contributions from foreign scholars. Two papers are printed in German: "Ein Ablautproblem der Ursprache," by Prof. W. Streitberg, of Freiburg; and "Dunkles und helles l im Lateinischen," by Prof. H. Osthoff—both of whom attended the meeting. Prof. Michel Bréal, of Paris, sent a paper on "The Canons of Etymological Investigation," dealing chiefly with semantics, which is here printed in an English translation; and Prof. E. A. Sonnenschein, of Birmingham, read a paper entitled "The Scientific Emendation of Classical Texts," which is an attempt to lay down certain canons of textual criticism, and to illustrate them from the example of Plautus, where questions of metre and prosody are almost more important than those of MSS. Among the other contents are: "English Words which have Gained or Lost an Initial Consonant by Attraction," by Mr. Charles P. G. Scott, which has already been noticed in the ACADEMY; "The Implicit Ethics and Psychology of Thucydides," by Prof. Paul Shorey, of Chicago; and "Extended and Remote Deliberatives in Greek"—a reply to Mr. Arthur Sidgwick's theory—by Prof. W. G. Hale, of Chicago, who was the president of the meeting. We may mention that the Association, which was founded in 1869, now numbers 378 members, in addition to 62 subscribing institutions, while it distributes gratis 38 sets of its Transactions.

M. THÉODORE REINACH has reprinted from the Revue Celtique a paper entitled "L'Espagne chez Homère," in which he claims to have discovered the earliest mention of Spain in European literature. The passage in question is the following, from the Catalogue of the allies of Priam (Iliad II., 856, 7):—

Αὐτὰρ Ἀλκίωνα Ὀδῖος καὶ Ἐπίστροφος ἦρχον,
Τηλόθεν ἐξ Ἀλύβης, δὲν ἀργύρου ἐστὶ γενέθλη.

Following Strabo, it has been customary to connect Ἀλύβη with the Chalybes, and to identify the place with Argyria, recorded by Arrian on the Black Sea, near Tripolis, where Hamilton attests the existence of a small silver mine. Indeed, M. Reinach confesses that he adopted this theory himself in his Mithridate Eupator. Now, however, he quotes from Dionysius Periegetes, who, when writing of Spain, says (335-7):

ἐν δὲ οἱ ἄκρῃ
Στηλᾶν Ἀλύβη κεῖται μίαν τῆς δ' ὑπενέρθεν
Ταρτησὸς χαλκισσα.

Charax of Pergamon also says that the column of Hercules on the European shore is called Calpe by the barbarians and Alube by the Greeks; while Suidas glosses Alube as the name of a column. M. Reinach, therefore, argues that the original compiler of the Catalogue must have heard of Alube as the place from which Spanish silver came, though a later redactor incorporated the passage between references to the Paphlagonians and the Mysians. The name Halizones is appropriate to a peninsula; while the Greek names of the two chiefs only imply that one led the expedition (and was afterwards killed by Agamemnon, Il. V., 39) and the other brought it back.

FINE ART.

DÜRER'S LITERARY REMAINS.

Dürer's Schriftlicher Nachlass. By Dr. K. Lange and Dr. F. Fuhse. (Halle a. S.)

THE considerable remains, published and in MS., of Albrecht Dürer's literary activity have received no small attention from students during the present century. Campe's charming little volume of Reliquien (1828) contained all the more important unpublished documents of an autobiographical character, though, unfortunately, the editor gave no account of the sources to which he was indebted. Other documents were from time to time discovered and published; but the main mass of MSS., four volumes in the British Museum and others at Dresden and Nuremberg, remained practically untouched till A. von Zahn copied, and published in the Jahrbuch für Kunstwissenschaft (vol. i.), the principal passages contained in the British Museum volumes.

If anyone asks why half a dozen thick volumes in the handwriting of so important a man as Dürer were not long ago printed in extenso, the answer is that they are not worth so printing. Literary expression was not the natural outlet to Dürer's thoughts. He composed with difficulty, and he rewrote passage after passage four and five times over before he brought his ideas into a form that satisfied him. The MS. volumes are composed mainly of such drafts. In most cases the passages in question ultimately appeared in the artist's published volumes; and the preliminary stages possess but small interest, and almost no importance. There is, however, one long essay which is important, and there are several drafts for it; and this essay A. von Zahn published, along with almost everything else in the London volumes that a student would care to read.

Some years ago I conceived the idea of making Dürer tell the story of his own life and his ideas about art as far as possible in his own words. I translated everything of his that seemed to bear upon these things, and strung the translations together with the minimum of additional matter of my own. When the work was nearly done, it seemed well to print with it transcripts of such original documents, included in my translations, as either had not been before published at all, or only inaccurately, or in publications not easy of access. Miss Lina Eckenstein made the transcripts under my direction, and added some valuable notes to them. The result was a book entitled Literary Remains of Albrecht Dürer (Cambridge, 1889).

The condition of things then was that practically all Dürer's known writings worth publication were published with tolerable accuracy and in one or another tolerably accessible form. Now, however, the work has been advanced a further stage. Drs. Lange and Fuhse have gone over all the documents again, hunted transcripts as far as possible to their sources, collated the MSS. afresh, and brought all the materials together into a single convenient volume, in which they have also printed a certain number of extracts from Dürer's own published books, the originals of which are still quite easy of access.

Of Dürer's personal writings, the original MSS. of his Venice letters, a leaf of commonplace book, and letters to Behaim, Kress, Stromer, Spalatin, Cardinal Albrecht, Frey, and Kratzer remain; and there are also the originals of certain receipts and other formal documents, as well as the volumes of MSS. referred to. We may now assume that we possess the text of these as accurately printed as need be. The original of the Familienchronik is lost, but the existing copies of it appear to be accurate; and the same is the case with the Heller letters. In 1884 Dr. Leitschuh published the Bamberg copy of a lost copy of the lost original of Dürer's Netherlands Diary. Another copy, apparently of the same copy, has since turned up at Nuremberg; and this has now been collated with the Leitschuh edition, but without materially improving the text, which was good enough already for all practical purposes. The original of Dürer's Rhymes is lost; but a new copy has been found at Nuremberg containing 225 forgotten and (truth to tell) bad verses—Von der bösen Welt, Von ein gebornen Narren, and some others.

Our editors preface each passage they reprint with references to previous publications or translations of it. In my edition the following passages were translated, but are not referred to: the Dedications of the three published volumes and portions of the text of the volumes, the Excursus at the end of the third Book of Human Proportions, letters in the Dresden Codex, the letter to Amerbach, and inscriptions on the rhinoceros print, the Wolgemut portrait, and the drawing of Kaiser Max. My translations were always made from passages in their final form; the editors print both these and the drafts for the same passages. On p. 242 of my book there are references to certain drafts, which the editors (on their p. 354) state were not referred to, and similar small omissions might be quoted, if it mattered. The only considerable passages printed by them, not being drafts of passages printed by me or in Dürer's published volumes, are a list of geometrical axioms of no importance, doubtless copied by Dürer from some mathematician, two receipts for his annual pension, and an inscription from an engraving. On the other hand, the long description of the structure of an improved form of roof is omitted by the editors, doubtless because of the necessity they were under not to introduce many illustrations. One or two of the illustrations they do give might, however, have been exchanged for this.

The sum total of the extracts from the London volumes of MSS. printed by them is a little more than double the amount printed by me. Their text corrects various minor inaccuracies in our readings, and is an improvement upon ours. They have partially modernised the spelling. On the whole, their work is well done in all senses, and their book is bound to take its place as the final and authoritative edition of Dürer's writings. It was high time that a handy volume of this sort appeared, where students should be able to find all they need between two covers; but it is unfortunate that, having printed so much, illustrations were not so far included as to make it possible also to print those further passages, in number not considerable, which must still be hunted up in other works.

W. M. CONWAY.

NOTES ON ART AND ARCHAEOLOGY.

ARCHDEACON FARRAR has long been at work on a book to be called The Life of Christ as Represented in Art, which will, it is hoped, be ready before Christmas. He will not intrude upon the functions of the art critic, but passes in review the predominant conceptions of Christ, and of the events narrated in the Gospels as they are expressed by great painters in varying epochs. One object of the book will be to show how widely the theological and religious views of later times differ from that simplicity of which we possess the disappearing records in the many paintings of the Catacombs during the first three centuries. The book will be profusely illustrated.

WE learn from the Art Journal that the trustees of the National Gallery have consented to undertake the management of the new Gallery of British Art, which, through the munificence of Mr. Henry Tate, is to be erected on part of the vacant site of Millbank Prison, near Westminster. As the first official act, they have already selected sixty-one pictures out of sixty-six which Mr. Tate placed at their disposal. They have taken no less than seven by Sir John Millais, including "Ophelia," "The Vale of Rest," "The North-West Passage," and "St. Bartholomew's Day"; four by Mr. Briton Riviere, including "The Herd of Swine" and "Giants at Play"; three by Mr. W. Q. Orchardson, including "The First Cloud" and "Her Mother's Voice"; three also by Mr. J. C. Hook, Mr. T. Faed, and Mr. J. W. Waterhouse; two by Sir Edwin Landseer, including "Uncle Tom and his Wife for Sale"; two also by Mr. A. C. Gow, Frank Holl, Mr. Erskine Nicol, John Linnell, Mr. S. E. Waller, and Mr. Dendy Sadler. Among the rest we may specially mention Sir Frederic Leighton's "And the Sea gave up the Dead that were in it," Mr. Luke Fildes's "The Doctor," Mr. Alma Tadema's "A Silent Greeting," Mr. Stanhope Forbes's "The Health of the Bride," Albert Moore's "Blossoms," Mr. Albert Goodwin's "Sinbad the Sailor," Lady Butler's "The Remnants of an Army," Mr. Alfred Hunt's "Windsor Castle," and Mr. E. J. Gregory's "Marooned." There are, in addition, examples of Hoppner and John Crome.

THE jury of the annual exhibition at Munich has awarded medals of the first class to Mr. H. S. Tuke, and of the second class to Mr. C. W. Furse.

MR. BATSFORD will publish, early in September, a new edition of Meyer's Handbook of Ornament, revised by Mr. Hugh Stannus, lecturer on applied art at South Kensington. It contains about 3000 illustrations of the elements, and the application of decoration to objects.

The Times of August 29 contains an account by Mr. Arthur J. Evans of his archaeological discoveries in Crete, and in the same paper for the following day there is an article on the excavation of the Heracon at Argos by the American School at Athens.

THE following is a list of the purchases made by the trustees of the National Portrait Gallery during the past year:—"Frederick, King of Bohemia," the son-in-law of James I., and grandfather of George I., painted by Mireveldt—a similar picture, formerly at Hampton Court, is now at Holyrood (£20); "Sir Peter Iely," painted by himself, and described as coarsely painted (£4); "Elizabeth Claypole," the second and favourite daughter of Oliver Cromwell, painted on panel by Joseph Michael Wright, with allegorical accessories implying her devotion to science (£52 10s.); "John Martin," the imaginative painter of sacred subjects, painted by Henry Warren (£5 5s.); "George Romney," an unfinished picture painted by himself, engraved by Thomas Wright as a frontispiece for the Rev. John Romney's Life of his father, bought at the sale of Miss Romney's effects (£441); "Thomas, Lord Erskine," painted by Sir William Ross (£63); "William, Lord Paget," diplomatist under Henry VIII. and Queen Mary, painter unknown (£40); "Sir Henry Spelman," the antiquary, painted by Paul van Somer (£12 12s.). The donations during the year included portraits of the late Earl of Derby, the late Earl of Stanhope, William of Nassau (father of William III.), William Roscoe of Liverpool, William Hunt the Radical, a bust of Sir Charles Eastlake (by Gibson), and a copy of Woolner's bust of Tennyson.

MUSIC.

MUSIC PUBLICATIONS.

WE have received from Messrs. Novello:—

Basses and Melodies, by Ralph Dunstan: one of the many excellent primers issued by this firm. Harmony in the days of old was a thing to be dreaded; it consisted of dry rules and exercises still more dry. Mr. Dunstan has adapted basses from the great composers. Students will take interest in working on these, for they will seem to be making music rather than writing exercises; and later on, in studying the works of the great masters, when they happen to come across the passages from which these basses come, they will find it instructive to compare notes. Mr. Dunstan believes that his system of adapted basses is unique. It may be so, but surely it was suggested by certain basses in the additional exercises of Mr. E. Prout's Counterpoint. The latter at the end of his volume gave the sources of his melodies and basses, but not so Mr. Dunstan. Perhaps he did not wish to put temptation into the way of students.

Progressive Studies for the Pianoforte. Books 16, 20, 22, 23, 34, and 47. By Franklin Taylor. The idea of illustrating certain departments of technique from various authors is to be highly recommended. As in other matters, so in studies, variety is pleasing; and it is useful also, for each composer has his own particular style of illustration. Moreover, as Mr. Taylor remarks in his preface, some valuable studies have fallen into disuse, owing to their being obtainable only in old and frequently costly editions: as, for example, those of Kalkbrenner, Steibelt, and Ries. Clementi, Cramer, and Czerny, the foundation stones on whom elaborate modern technique rests, are, of course, well represented. Of the books named above, the first is devoted to Arpeggio, the next three to Velocity, then one to Double Notes, and one to Accompanied Melody. In the book on Double Notes we should like to have seen included Czerny's great "Uebung der Terzenläufe" (Op. 380). Mr. Taylor is doing much to "assist students to achieve that mastery over mechanical difficulties without which the highest aspirations can never be realised."

Original Compositions for the Organ. Nos. 211-215. There are some attractive passages in the two movements (Prelude and Allemande) of Mr. Hamilton Clarke's "Grand Suite"; but the writing generally lacks definiteness. The title, indeed, we think a misnomer; for the movements are modern in character, to say nothing of their number. The "Elegie" and "Gavotte" appear to us far more satisfactory, although, sometimes, in seeking to avoid the commonplace, Mr. Clarke falls into the other extreme. Then follow an "Intermezzo" and "Minuet," and also an "Introduction and Fughetta," which, though last, is certainly not least. The theme of the little Fugue is already announced in the Introduction, but in minor; the writing in both movements is skilful and not at all heavy. Mr. E. Silas contributes a "Capriccio," and the piece answers well to its title. The principal theme, with its palpitating accompaniment, is striking; the second theme in the dominant is in excellent contrast, and the ff passage which follows is bright and effective. A brief development section leads to a return of the themes with certain variations, and the movement ends with a quiet coda.

Organ Arrangements. By John B. Lott, Organist, and C. Charlton Palmer, Assistant Organist, of Lichfield Cathedral. Some fine movements have been here transcribed for the "king of instruments." Two Largos, one from Beethoven's Pianoforte Sonata in A (Op. 2, No. 2), the other from The Sonata in E flat (Op. 7), lend themselves readily to such transcription. The same, too, may be said of Schubert's tender Moment Musical (No. 6), and the Benedictus from Dr. Mackenzie's "Six Pieces for Violin" (Op. 37). Indeed, in the whole set of books there is not one unsuitable number, and the arrangements are skilful, and therefore satisfactory.

Organ Arrangements. Edited by George C. Martin, Organist of St. Paul's Cathedral (No 19). This is an excellent transcription of the introduction to "The Creation," one of the master's finest inspirations, and one which shows that he was not always light and humorous.

J. S. SHEDLOCK.

MESSRS. LONGMANS & CO'S LIST.

Now ready, in 1 volume, 8vo, with 2 Maps, 21 Full-page Illustrations, and 29 Illustrations in the Text.

Price ONE GUINEA.

PROBLEMS OF THE FAR EAST

JAPAN—KOREA—CHINA.

By the Hon. GEORGE N. CURZON, M.P.,

Fellow of All Souls College, Oxford,

Author of "Russia in Central Asia," and "Persia."

"A fascinating and painstaking work."—Morning Post.

"The whole nation will thank Mr. Curzon for his opportune effort to arouse its attention."—World.

"Is a careful and statesmanlike study of problems which no one interested in the future of the empire can afford to neglect."—St. James's Gazette.

"This work possesses in a pre-eminent degree the merit of seasonableness.... But while Mr. Curzon's book will be eagerly welcomed because it appears at a most opportune moment, it will be appreciated, we need hardly say, for many qualities of a rarer and more enduring kind."—Times.

MR. ASTOR'S NEW ROMANCE.

A JOURNEY in OTHER WORLDS

A Romance of the Future.

By JOHN JACOB ASTOR.

With 10 Illustrations. Crown 8vo, 6s.

"John Jacob Astor has eclipsed Jules Verne. His 'Journey in Other Worlds' is more daring, more imaginative, and more resourceful than anything yet attempted by the French scientific romancer.... Scaring beasts are seen and overcome; new conditions of life are faced triumphantly, and the mind is whirled tumultuously from marvel to marvel. Back to earth we are bound to come, but in Mr. Astor's six-shilling excursion we may profitably lose ourselves for a time to gain the worlds he has to show."—Morning Leader.

CELESTIAL OBJECTS for

COMMON TELESCOPES. By the Rev. T. W. WEBB, M.A., F.R.A.S., Vicar of Hardwick, Herefordshire. Fifth Edition, Revised and greatly Enlarged by the Rev. T. E. SPIN, M.A., F.R.A.S. 2 vols.

Vol. I. With Portrait and a Reminiscence of the Author, 2 Plates and numerous Illustrations. Crown 8vo, 6s.

Vol. II. With Illustrations and Map of Star Spectra. Crown 8vo, 6s. 6d.

"A very welcome new edition of a work which has long been recognised as invaluable by young students and amateur astronomers in general."—Times.

NEW BOOK BY MR. J. WALFORD.

"PLOUGHED"; and other

Stories. By L. B. WALFORD, Author of "Mr. Smith," "One Good Guest," &c. Crown 8vo, 6s.

NEW NOVEL BY MR. HORNUNG.

THE UNBIDDEN GUEST. By

E. W. HORNUNG, Author of "A Bride from the Bush," &c. Crown 8vo, 6s.

Now ready. Price Sixpence.

LONGMAN'S MAGAZINE— SEPTEMBER.

THE MATCHMAKER. By L. B. WALFORD. Chaps. XLIII.-XLV.

WHITE SEA LETTERS. (Concluded.) By AUSTIN TREVOR-BATTVE, B.A.

THE VALLEY OF DREAMS. By S. CORNISH WATKINS.

THE APOSTLE OF PORT ROYAL. By L. COPE CORNFORD.

THE CINDERELLA of CIVILISATION. By GRANT ALLEN.

A SUBJECT RACE. By Miss E. T. FOWLER.

THE CAVERN of the GREAT DEATH. By SEBASTIAN EVANS, LL.D.

THE UNBIDDEN GUEST. By W. E. HORNUNG. Chaps. XV.-XVII.

AT the SIGN of the SHIP. By ANDREW LANG.

LONDON: LONGMANS, GREEN & CO.
NEW YORK: 15 EAST 16TH STREET.

MUDIE'S SELECT LIBRARY, For the CIRCULATION and SALE of all the BEST ENGLISH, FRENCH, GERMAN, ITALIAN, and SPANISH BOOKS.

TOWN SUBSCRIPTIONS from One Guinea per annum.
LONDON BOOK SOCIETY (for Weekly Exchange of Books at the Houses of Subscribers) from Two Guineas per annum.
COUNTRY SUBSCRIPTIONS from Two Guineas per annum.
N.B.—Two or three friends may unite in One Subscription and thus lessen the cost of carriage.

LIBRARY BOXES GRATIS.

Town and Village Clubs supplied on Liberal Terms
Prospectuses and Monthly Lists of Books gratis and post free.

SALE DEPARTMENT.

All the leading Books of the Past Seasons are on Sale, second-hand at greatly Reduced Prices.

LISTS GRATIS AND POST FREE.

MUDIE'S MANCHESTER LIBRARY,
10 to 12, BARTON ARCADE, MANCHESTER,
Is in daily communication with this Library.

MUDIE'S SELECT LIBRARY, Limited,
30 to 34, NEW OXFORD STREET, LONDON;
241, Brompton Road, S.W.; and 48, Queen Victoria St., E.C.

THE AUTOTYPE COMPANY

Has the honour to announce the Publication of

NINETY-THREE DRAWINGS

BY

ALBERT DURER,

Reproduced in Facsimile from Originals in the British Museum, and accompanied by Descriptive Text by

SIDNEY COLVIN, M.A.,

Keeper of Prints and Drawings, British Museum.

"The British Museum collection, reproduced in this volume, is," says Professor Colvin, "a fairly complete and representative survey of the several phases of Durer's activity as a draughtsman and sketcher during all periods of his career."

The Volume is Imperial folio, half-morocco, Plates Linen-
Guarded and Interleaved. Edition 100 Copies.
Price Six Guineas.

The AUTOTYPE FINE-ART CATALOGUE
(New Edition), of 184 pages, with Illustrated Supplement, containing 68 Miniature Photographs of notable
Autotypes, post free, ONE SHILLING.

"AUTOTYPE: a Decorative and Educational Art."
NEW PAMPHLET, FREE ON APPLICATION.

THE AUTOTYPE COMPANY,
74, New Oxford Street, London.

MESSRS. J. C. DRUMMOND & CO.,
ART REPRODUCERS,
14, HENRIETTA STREET, COVENT GARDEN, W.C.
Are the sole representatives in Great Britain of
HERR HANFSTAENGL, of Munich,

the well-known Artist in PHOTOGRAVURE, now patronised by the leading London Art Publishing Firms. A large Collection of Important Plates always on view.

Process Blocks for the purpose of Ordinary
Book Illustrations.

Messrs. DRUMMOND & CO. supply the cheapest and best Processes in the market, which are specially adapted to meet the wants of Antiquarians, Archaeologists, and those engaged in the investigation and publication of Parochial and Diocesan Records.

J. C. DRUMMOND & CO. invite attention to their

Improved Rapid Photo-Mechanical Process

For the Reproduction of Works of Art, Original MSS., Designs,
Lace Manufactures, Photographs, Views, Book Illustrations,
Artistic Advertisements, Catalogues, &c., &c., at a moderate cost.

Specimens and price list on application.

Offices 14, HENRIETTA STREET COVENT GARDEN, LONDON

CHOICE BOOKS and PICTURES offered by

LOWE (CHARLES), New Street, Birmingham

Arundel Society's Publications, complete set books included 120 0 0
Not quite complete 75 0 0
Ivories, 170 in magnificent oak polished case, 28 draws 35 0 0
"Punch," original choice set, vols. 1 to 165, new, half-morocco 46 0 0
"Punch," original, in years (new, half-morocco) 1841 to 1890 12 12 0
Dugdale's Monasticon, 9 vols., purple morocco, very choice set, cost £150 45 0 0
Autograph Letters, collection of over 500, mostly with the envelopes 18 13 0
British Association Reports, complete set, new, half-calf 55 0 0
George Morland Prints, splendid set of 12 coloured original, framed 25 0 0
Abotford Waverley Novels, 6 vols. 30 0 0
Sir Richard Steel, magnificent Kuller Portrait of, large framed
Mrs. Elizabeth Rowe do do 38 0 0
Nice example of Simon Voste, wood block books on vellum 30 0 0
Perfect example of Wynken de Worde, 1500 28 0 0
Remarkable collection of Autographs of Members of Parliament during the Reform 50 0 0
Parliamentary Speeches, collection of 25 vols., new, half-purple morocco, uncut 20 0 0
Scott, Sir W., complete choice set of 100 vols., purple morocco, gilt, cost £50 24 0 0
Thackeray, complete works, Edition de Luxe, 26 vols., elegant crimson morocco, cost £50 40 0 0
Villon Society's Arabian Nights, 9 vols., vellum, gilt, nice as new Sowerby's Botany, fine set, equal to new, last edition, 12 vols. 10 10 0
Voltaire's Works, 70 vols., large paper, coloured plates 14 0 0
Gallery of Fashion, very choice set old tree gilt (faultless) 7 vols. 28 0 0
Chapman's Homer, fine copy, original old calf, gilt back 29 0 0
English Spy, The, uncut, 2 vols., £22; another copy, polished purple morocco, 2 vols. 20 0 0
Penny's London, many hundred extra Plates, and choice
Portraits, 2 vols., atlas folio 22 0 0
Thackeray, W. M., unpublished unique Portrait by Dorsey
Ainsworth's Novels, set of first editions, 15 vols., polished calf 60 0 0
Life of Mrs. Siddons, extra illustrated and extended, 4 vols., purple morocco 24 0 0
Atkyn's Gloucestershire, large paper, splendid copy 25 10 0
Exquisite Drawing by Cipriani 15 0 0

LOWE'S £5 PACKAGES of Assorted Books for Asylums, Hospitals,
Village Libraries, School Libraries, Working Men's Institutes, Public Libraries, and for Private Families, have given great satisfaction wherever sent. These Packages consist of from 150 to 200 volumes, and are books well selected, and most useful for the purposes named.
These books are all very carefully selected, and are books of a deeply interesting and instructive character, and are mostly in their original binding, in nice clean condition (cost nearly £20). No duplicates supplied. Books not approved of will at once be taken back and exchanged for others.

To ladies and gentlemen desirous of making presents of books, these lots are specially adapted, as they are nice clean copies, and well selected from many thousands.

PARCELS MAY BE HAD FROM £1 IS. UPWARDS.

BOOKS!

WANTED TO PURCHASE BY

CHARLES LOWE,
NEW STREET (EXCHANGE BUILDINGS), BIRMINGHAM.

Libraries and Small Quantities of Old and New Books, Manuscripts, Periodicals, Engravings, Old Portraits, &c., purchased, FULL VALUE GIVEN.

OLD SHIRTS RE-FITTED, Fine Irish Linen, 2s.
or very best Irish Linen, returned free, ready to wear, 2s. 6d. Sample Shirt, for Dress and ordinary wear, any size, post free, 2s. 6d., 3s. 6d., 4s. 6d., or 6s. 6d. Twilled
Night Shirts, 2s. 11d., 3s. 6d., 4s. 6d., or 6s. 6d. LINEN COLLARS and CUFFS. Best 4-fold Collars, 4s. 6d. and 5s. 6d. doz.; made exact to pattern, 2s. 6d. half-doz., post free. Napkins, 2s. 6d. per doz.; Dinner
Napkins, 4s. 6d. per dozen; Table
Cloths, 2 yards square, 2s. 6d. each,
2½ yards by 3 yards, 5s. 6d.; Kitchen Table Cloths, 10½d. each; red Irish Linen Sheetting, fully bleached, 2 yards wide, 1s. 11d. per yard;
and Linen Diaper, 8½d. per yard; Nursery Diaper, 4½d. per yard;
Surplice Linen, 7½d. per yard; Glass Cloths, 3s. 6d. dozen. LINEN
HUCKABACK TOWELS, 3s. 6d. per dozen; Damask Towels, 6s. 6d.
per dozen; Turkish Bath Towels, 1s. each; Twilled Linen Pillow
Cases, from 1s. 1d. each. IRISH CAMBRIC HANDKERCHIEFS.—
Children's, 1s. 2d.; Ladies', 2s. 3d.; Gent's, 3s. 6d. Hemstitched—
Ladies', 2s. 3d.; Gent's, 4s. 11d. per dozen. Better qualities equally cheap. Price Lists and Patterns of all kinds of Linen Goods and Hosiery sent to any part of the world, post free. Monograms, Crests, Coats of Arms, Initials, &c., woven and embroidered. Samples and illustrated Price Lists post free to any part of the world.

IRISH LINEN
B. & E. M'HUGH & CO., Limited, BELFAST

To H.R.H. the PRINCE of WALES.

BRAND & CO.'S A1 SAUCE,
SOUPS, PRESERVED PROVISIONS
and
POTTED MEATS, and YORK and GAME
PIES.

CAUTION—BEWARE OF IMITATIONS.

SOLE ADDRESSES—

11, LITTLE STANHOPE STREET,
MAYFAIR, W.

NATIONAL PROVIDENT
INSTITUTION.
For Mutual
Life Assurance.

PROFITS.—The whole are divided amongst the Assured. Already divided, £1,600,000.
At the division in 1892 there were nearly eight hundred Policies in respect of which not only were the Premiums entirely extinguished, but also Annuities were granted or Cash Bonuses paid, whilst in the case of many Policies the original sums assured are now more than doubled by the Bonus Additions. Applications for Agencies invited.
48, Gracechurch Street, London, E.C.

BLACKWOOD'S MAGAZINE.

No. 947.—SEPTEMBER, 1894.—2s. 6d.

CONTENTS:—"THAT DAMNABLE COUNTRY," by Alfred
Austin.—WHO WAS LOST AND IS FOUND, chaps. xiii.-xvi.
—A RECENT VISIT TO HARRAR, by Walter B. Harris.
LA FEMME DE M. FEUILLET.—THIRTY YEARS OF SUIKAR, by Sir Edward Braddon.—THE DOUBLS-BEDDED ROOM, by An Electrician.—A QUITRENT ODE, by G. W. Y.—A NEW SPORT, by John Bickerdike.—NITCHEVO: A FSAGMENT OF RUSSIAN LIFE, by G. B. Stuart.—THE LOSS OF H.M.S.
"VICTORIA": A LAMENT, by Rev. Edw. H. Horne.—
SESSION OF 1891.

WILLIAM BLACKWOOD & SONS, Edinburgh and London.

THE JOURNAL OF EDUCATION

No. 302, for SEPTEMBER.

OCCASIONAL NOTES:—Sir Henry Roscoe and "The New Education"; The New Prussian Regulations for Girls' Schools; Oxford University Extension Summer Meeting; Dr. Blandford on the Prevention of Insanity; University Colleges and the Treasury
Grant; Mr. Havelock Ellis's "Man and Woman"; Mr. Harry Quilter's New School, &c.

THE ARTIFICIAL PRODUCTION OF STUPIDITY IN SCHOOLS—
A Talk with Mr. Braden-Carter, F.R.C.S.

THE PFEIFFER BEQUEST.

A VISIT TO A FINNISH TRAINING COLLEGE.

LITERE HUMANIORES—An Appeal to Teachers. By HENRY S.
SALT, Hon. Sec. Humanitarian League.

THE DOCTOR'S BOY. (Concluded.)

THE HALLS BICENTENARY. By A. SONNENSCHEIN.

JEAN FRÉDÉRIC SIMON. By W. G. FIELD.

CORRESPONDENCE:—Secondary Education and Grade Schools; The Private Schools Association; Inflection in Schools; The Series
Method and Mrs. Piercy; French in Twenty-four Hours; Errors in School Books, &c.

TRANSLATION and EXTRA HOLIDAY PRIZES.

Price 6d.; per post, 8d.

Office: 86, FLEET STREET, LONDON, E.C.

THE FORTNIGHTLY REVIEW.

SEPTEMBER.

SOME ANARCHIST PORTRAITS. By CHARLES MALATO.

POLITICS and SCIENCE. By KARL PEARSON.

THE WORK OF MR. PATER. By LIONEL JOHNSON.

OXFORD v. YALE. By W. H. GREENFIELD.

THE NAVAL MANŒUVRES. By NAUTICUS.

A JOURNEY TO THE SACRED MOUNTAIN IN CHINA. By A. H.
SAVAGE-LONDON.

THE RAJASIS of SARAWAK. By HUGHES LE ROUX.

IMAGINATIVE CURRENCY STATISTICS. By J. EARL ROBERTSON.

SHAKESPEARE and RACINE. By PAUL VERLAINE.

PROFESSOR DRUMMOND'S DISCOVERY. By Mrs. LYNN LINTON.

THE MUNICIPAL MUSEUMS OF PARIS. By FREDERIC HARRISON.

CHAPMAN & HALL, Ltd.

THE NEW REVIEW.

Price One Shilling.

CONTENTS FOR SEPTEMBER.

CHINA and JAPAN.—

1. ASHORE. By Sir EDWIN ARNOLD, K.C.I.E., C.S.I.

2. AT SEA. By NAUTICUS.

A CHILD'S RECOLLECTIONS OF ROSSETTI. By Miss HALL CAINE

DALMENY and DEVONSHIRE. By T. H. S. ESCOTT.

THE FINANCIAL OUTLOOK. By HARTLEY WITPERS.

SOME UNPUBLISHED REMINISCENCES OF NAPOLEON. By

Col. the Hon. NELLIE LITTLETON.

IN DEFENCE OF ANARCHY. By WORDSWORTH DONISTHORPE.

SECRETS from the COURT of SPAIN. (V.)

THE CHAOS of MARRIAGE and DIVORCE LAWS. (Conclusion.

By J. HENRIER HEATON, M.P.

SPORT and SPORTSMEN. By Major GAMHER PARRY.

THE UNDEFINABLE: a Farallasia. (I.) By SARAH GRAND.

CHIESS. (With Problems.) By I. GUSNIERO.

London: WM. HEINEMANN, 21, Bedford Street, W.C.

USE

VINOLIA CREAM

FOR

SUNBURN and INSECT BITES.

Invested Funds £4,700,000
Paid in Claims £9,000,000

Death Duties provided for by Life Assurance.

INSTITUTION.

ARTHUR SMITHER, Actuary and Secretary.

CLARENDON PRESS PUBLICATIONS.

Just published, 2 vols., 4to, paper boards, linen back, £3 3s.

THE COLLECTED MATHEMATICAL PAPERS of HENRY JOHN STEPHEN SMITH, M.A., F.R.S., late Savilian Professor of Geometry in the University of Oxford. Edited, with a Memoir, by J. W. L. GLAISHER, Sc.D., F.R.S., Fellow of Trinity College, Cambridge. With a Portrait, and Biographical Sketches and Recollections by Dr. CHARLES H. PEARSON, Prof. JOWETT, Lord BOWEN, and others, prefixed.

"Not only mathematicians, but all who were privileged to know the late Professor Henry Smith, and all who can appreciate a rare and remarkable mind, will welcome these two imposing volumes.....They contain certain introductory notices of high interest."—Times.

Just published, demy 8vo, cloth, 14s.

A TREATISE on the MEASUREMENT of ELECTRICAL RESISTANCE. By W. A. PRICE, M.A., A.M.I.C.E., formerly Scholar of New College, Oxford.

During some years the author has superintended the construction of a large number of resistance coils, and of various forms of instruments for their comparison and measurement, and he thinks that a systematic account of the methods and processes employed may be useful to the large and increasing body of electricians who use such apparatus.

"This treatise is a companion for the workshop or the laboratory, and will be appraised by those engaged in the construction and manipulation of electrical instruments. Its directions are full, minute, and lucid."—Times.

Just published, demy 8vo, paper covers, 3s. 6d.

THE MOLECULAR TACTICS of a CRYSTAL.

By Lord KELVIN, P.R.S., Professor of Natural Philosophy in the University of Glasgow and Fellow of Peterhouse, Cambridge. With 20 Illustrations.

Being the Second Robert Boyle Lecture, delivered before the Oxford University Junior Scientific Club on Tuesday, May 16, 1893.

ANECDOTA OXONIENSIA.MEDIÆVAL AND MODERN SERIES.

Just published, Part VI., crown 4to, paper covers, 21s.

THE ELUCIDARIUM and other TRACTS in

WELSH, from LLYVIR AGKYR LLANDEWIVREVI, A.D. 1346. (Jesus College MS. 119.) Edited by J. MORRIS JONES, M.A., and JOHN RHYS, M.A. With a Facsimile.

Just published, Part VIII., crown 4to, paper covers, 7s. 6d.

HIBERNICA MINORA: being a Fragment of an Old Irish Treatise on the Psalter. With Translation, Notes, and Glossary, and an Appendix containing Extracts hitherto Unpublished from MS. Rawlinson B 512, in the Bodleian Library. Edited by KUNO MEYER. With a Facsimile.

Just published, extra fcap. 8vo, cloth, 3s.

HALM'S GRISELDIS. Edited, with English

Notes, &c., by C. A. BUCHHEIM, Phil. Doc., Professor of the German Language and Literature in King's College, London.

Just published, THIRD SERIES, extra fcap. 8vo, 3s.

ANGLICE REDDENDA; or, Extracts, Latin and Greek, for Unseen Translation, for the use of Higher and Middle Forms. Selected by C. S. JERRAM, M.A., late Scholar of Trinity College, Oxford.

Just published, in 2 vols., crown 8vo, cloth, 15s.

CO-OPERATIVE PRODUCTION. By Benjamin

JONES. With a Preface by the Right Hon. A. H. DYKE ACLAND, M.P., Vice-President of the Committee of Council on Education.

"There is a vast amount of interesting information and valuable suggestion in Benjamin Jones's 'Co-operative Production.'.....The author's remarks upon the advantages of co-operation are pregnant with sound sense."

Daily Telegraph.

Just published, demy 8vo, cloth, 21s.

THE HISTORY of SICILY from the EARLIEST

TIMES. By EDWARD A. FREEMAN, M.A., Hon. D.C.L., LL.D., late Regius Professor of Modern History, Fellow of Oriel College, &c.

VOLUME IV.FROM the TYRANNY of DIONYSIOS to the DEATH of AGATHOKLES. Edited from Posthumous MSS, with Supplements and Notes, by ARTHUR J. EVANS, M.A., Keeper of the Ashmolean Museum, &c. With Maps and Numismatic Plate.

Also published, Vols. I. and II., 42s.; Vol. III., 21s.

"Freeman's Sicily is a considerable book, and this volume, fragmentary as it is, is not the least considerable part of it."—Times.

Just published, demy 8vo, buckram, 8s. 6d. net.

MODES of ANCIENT GREEK MUSIC. By

D. B. MONRO, M.A., Provost of Oriel College, Hon. Doc. of Letters in the University of Dublin.

"RULERS OF INDIA."

Just published, crown 8vo, cloth, 2s. 6d.

EARL AMHERST: and the British Advance

Eastwards to Burma. By ANNE THACKERAY RITCHIE and RICHARDSON EVANS.

"Pleasantly written and instructive as it is, the book will be read with interest by all who take it up."—Scotsman.

Just published, Third Edition, crown 8vo, 10s. 6d.

A HISTORY of FRANCE. Vol. III., 1621-1793.

With Numerous Maps, Plans, and Tables. By G. W. KITCHIN, D.D. In 3 vols.

Vol. I., to 1453. Third Edition. 10s. 6d.

Vol. II., 1453-1621. Second Edition. 10s. 6d.

Just published, crown 8vo, cloth, 9s. 6d.

EDITION SEVEN, ENLARGED, AND PARTLY REWRITTEN.

AN ANGLO-SAXON READER. In Prose and

Verse. With Grammar, Metre, Notes, and Glossary. By HENRY SWEET, M.A., Ph.D., LL.D.

Just published, extra fcap. 8vo, stiff covers, 2s.

HEUTE MIR, MORGEN DIR: eine Erzählung für meine jungen Freunde. Von FRANZ HOFFMAN. Edited, with Notes, by J. H. MAUDE, M.A., Fellow of Hertford College, Oxford. Set for the Oxford Local Examinations, 1895.

Just published, crown 8vo, cloth, 3s.

PRACTICAL WORK in PHYSICS. By W. G.

WOOLLCOMBE, M.A., B.Sc.

FULL CLARENDON PRESS CATALOGUES WILL BE SENT POST FREE ON APPLICATION.

LONDON: HENRY FROWDE, CLARENDON PRESS WAREHOUSE, AMEN CORNER, E.C.

THE ACADEMY.

A WEEKLY REVIEW OF LITERATURE, SCIENCE, AND ART.

No. 1166.
[New Issue.]

SATURDAY, SEPTEMBER 8, 1894.

PRICE 3d.
[Registered as a Newspaper.]

MR. MURRAY'S LIST OF SCHOOL BOOKS.

SIR WM. SMITH'S EDUCATIONAL SERIES.

YOUNG BEGINNERS' LATIN COURSE.

- 2s. each.
- I. First Latin Book. Grammar, Easy Questions, Exercises, and Vocabulary.
 - II. Second Latin Book. An Easy Latin Reading Book with Analysis of Sentences.
 - III. Third Latin Book. Exercises on the Syntax, with Vocabulary.
 - IV. Fourth Latin Book. A Latin Vocabulary for Beginners, arranged according to Subjects and Etymologies.

PRINCIPIA LATINA.

- *Part I. Grammar, Delectus, Exercises, and Vocabulary. 3s. 6d.
Appendix to Part I. Additional Exercises and Examination Papers. 2s. 6d.
*Part II. A First Latin Reading Book. Price 3s. 6d.
*Part III. A First Latin Verse Book. Price 3s. 6d.
*Part IV. Latin Prose Composition. Price 3s. 6d.
*Part V. Short Tales and Anecdotes for Translation into Prose. 3s. 6d.
Students' Latin Grammar. 6s.
Smaller Latin Grammar. For Middle and Lower Forms. 3s. 6d.
A Child's First Latin Book. Comprising a Full Practice of Nouns, Pronouns, and Adjectives, with the Verbs. By T. D. HALL. Revised and Enlarged Edition. 2s.

GREEK COURSE.

- INITIA GRÆCA.
*Part I. Grammar, Delectus, Exercises, and Vocabulary. 3s. 6d.
*Appendix to Part I. Additional Exercises and Examination Papers. 2s. 6d.
*Part II. A Greek Reading Book. 3s. 6d.
*Part III. Prose Composition. 3s. 6d.
Students' Greek Grammar. 6s.
Smaller Greek Grammar. For Middle and Lower Forms. 3s. 6d.
Greek Accidence. 2s. 6d.
An Introduction to the Greek Testament. A Work for Beginners in Greek. By T. D. HALL. 8s. 6d.

ENGLISH COURSE.

- *English Grammar. With Exercises. 3s. 6d.
*Primary English Grammar. With Exercises and Questions. 1s.
English Composition. Examples and Exercises. 3s. 6d.
Primary History of Britain. New and thoroughly Revised Edition. Coloured Map. (430 pp.) 2s. 6d.
Modern Geography. 5s.
Smaller Modern Geography. Price 2s. 6d.

FRENCH COURSE.

FRENCH PRINCIPIA.

- *Part I. Grammar, Delectus, Exercises, Vocabulary, and Materials for Conversation. 3s. 6d.
*Appendix to Part I. Additional Exercises and Examination Papers. 2s. 6d.
*Part II. A French Reading Book; with Etymological Dictionary. 4s. 6d.
*Part III. Prose Composition. 4s. 6d.
Students' French Grammar. With an Introduction by M. LITTRE. 6s.
Smaller French Grammar. Price 3s. 6d.

GERMAN COURSE.

GERMAN PRINCIPIA.

- *Part I. Grammar, Exercises, Vocabulary, and Materials for Conversation. 3s. 6d.
*Part II. Reading Book; with Dictionary. 3s. 6d.
Practical German Grammar. For Advanced Students. 3s. 6d.

ITALIAN COURSE.

ITALIAN PRINCIPIA.

- *Part I. Grammar, Delectus, Exercises, Vocabulary. 3s. 6d.
*Part II. An Italian Reading Book. Price 3s. 6d.

MURRAY'S STUDENTS' MANUALS.

Crown 8vo, 7s. 6d. each.
With Maps and Woodcuts.

The Students' Hume: a History of England from the Earliest Times to 1688. Thoroughly Revised Edition, continued to the Treaty of Berlin, 1878. By Prof. J. S. BREWER. (830 pp.)

The Work may also be obtained in Three Divisions, price 2s. 6d. each. PART I.—B.C. 55—A.D. 1485. PART II.—A.D. 1485—1688. PART III.—1688—1878.

Modern Europe. By R. LONGE, M.A.

Europe during the Middle Ages. By HENRY HALLAM.

Constitutional History of England. By HENRY HALLAM.
Old and New Testament History. By PHILIP SMITH. 2 vols.

Ancient History, to the Conquests of Alexander the Great. By PHILIP SMITH.

Ecclesiastical History. 2 vols.: I. A.D. 30—1003. II. 1003—1614. By PHILIP SMITH.

English Church History. 3 vols.: I. 596—1509. II. 1509—1717. III. 1717—1884. By Canon PERRY.

Greece, to the Roman Conquest. By Sir WILLIAM SMITH. With Coloured Maps and Woodcuts.

Rome, to the Establishment of the Empire. By Desa LINDALL.

The Roman Empire, from its Establishment to the Reign of Commodus, 180. By J. B. BURY.

Gibbon. By Sir WILLIAM SMITH.

France, to the Fall of the Second Empire. By W. H. JEVES.

Ancient Geography. By Canon BEVAN.

Modern Geography. By Canon BEVAN.

Geography of British India. By Dr. GEORGE SMITH.

English Language: its Origin and Growth. By GEORGE P. MARSH.

English Literature. With Biographical Notices of the Authors. By T. B. SHAW.

Specimens of English Literature. By T. B. SHAW. 5s.

Moral Philosophy. By Dr. FLEMING.

SIR WM. SMITH'S SMALLER HISTORIES.

Maps, Plans, and Woodcuts. 16mo, 3s. 6d. each.

England. From the Earliest Times to 1887. New and thoroughly Revised Edition.

Scripture History. Continued down to A.D. 70.

Ancient History. Down to the Conquests of Alexander the Great.

Ancient Geography.

Modern Geography. Physical and Political. 2s. 6d.

Rome, to the Establishment of the Empire.

Greece, to the Roman Conquest.

Classical Mythology. For Ladies' Schools and Young Persons.

English Literature. With Lives of our Chief Writers.

Specimens of English Literature.

LITTLE ARTHUR'S HISTORIES.

England. From the Earliest Times. Continued down to 1878. With 86 Woodcuts. 1s. 6d.

France. From the Earliest Times to the Fall of the Second Empire. With Maps and Woodcuts. 2s. 6d.

MRS. MARKHAM'S HISTORIES.

England. From the First Invasion by the Romans down to the year 1883. With 100 Woodcuts. Price 3s. 6d.

France. From the Conquest of Gaul by Cæsar down to 1878. With 70 Woodcuts. 3s. 6d.

Germany. From the Invasion by Marius to 1890. With 59 Woodcuts. 3s. 6d.

SIR WM. SMITH'S SCHOOL DICTIONARIES.

LATIN.

Smaller Latin-English Dictionary. With a Dictionary of Proper Names. 81st Edition. By Sir WILLIAM SMITH and Prof. T. D. HALL, M.A. (730 pp.) 7s. 6d.

Smaller English-Latin Dictionary. 7s. 6d.

Larger Latin-English Dictionary. 16s.

Larger English-Latin Dictionary. Compiled from Original Sources. 16s.

BIBLE.

Concise Dictionary of the Bible. With Illustrations. 21s.
Smaller Bible Dictionary. With Illustrations. 7s. 6d.

CLASSICAL.

Classical Dictionary of Greek and Roman Mythology, Biography, and Geography. With 750 Woodcuts. New and Enlarged Edition. Price 13s.

Smaller Classical Dictionary. With 200 Woodcuts. 7s. 6d.

Smaller Dictionary of Greek and Roman Antiquities. With 200 Woodcuts. Price 7s. 6d.

Eton College School Books.

Eton Latin Grammar. For the Higher Forms. 6s.

Eton Elementary Latin Grammar. For Use in the Lower Forms. 3s. 6d.

Eton Preparatory Grammar, abridged from the above Work. Crown 8vo, 2s.

Eton First Latin Exercise Book, adapted to the Latin Grammar. Crown 8vo, price 2s. 6d.

Eton Fourth Form Ovid: Selections from Ovid and Tibullus. With Notes by H. G. WINTLE, M.A. 2s. 6d.

Eton Horace: The Odes, Epodes, and Carmen Seculare. With Notes. By F. W. CORNISH, M.A. In Two Parts. With Map. 6s.

Eton Exercises in Algebra. 3s.

Eton Exercises in Arithmetic. Price 3s.

English-Latin Gradus, or Verse Dictionary. By A. C. AINGER, M.A., and H. G. WINTLE, M.A. (415 pp.) Crown 8vo, 9s.

NATURAL SCIENCE, ETC.

First Book of Natural Philosophy: an Introduction to the Study of Statics, Dynamics, Hydrostatics, Light, Heat, and Sound. By Prof. NEWTH. 3s. 6d.

Elements of Mechanics, including Hydrostatics. By Prof. NEWTH. 8s. 6d.

MURRAY'S

University Extension Manuals.

EDITED BY PROFESSOR KNIGHT, of St. Andrews University.

An Introduction to Modern Geology. By R. D. ROBERTS. With Illustrations and Coloured Maps. 5s.

The Realm of Nature: a Manual of Physiology. By Dr. H. R. MILL. With 19 Coloured Maps and 63 Illustrations. 5s.

The Study of Animal Life. By J. ARTHUR THOMSON. With many Illustrations. 5s.

The Rise of the British Dominion in India. By Sir ALFRED LYALL. From the Early Days of the East India Company. With Coloured Maps. 4s. 6d.

The Physiology of the Senses. By Professor MCKENDRICK and Dr. SNODGRASS. With Illustrations. 4s. 6d.

Chapters in Modern Botany. By Prof. PATRICK GEDDES. With Illustrations. 3s. 6d.

Logic, Inductive and Deductive. By WILLIAM MIN. Late Professor of Logic, University of Aberdeen. W Diagrams. 4s. 6d.

A full List and all details relating to this Series sent application to the Publisher.

* KEYS TO THESE WORKS SUPPLIED TO AUTHENTICATED TEACHERS ON WRITTEN APPLICATION.

 DETAILED CATALOGUE SENT GRATIS BY POST ON APPLICATION.

LONDON: JOHN MURRAY, ALBEMARLE STREET, W.

TABLE OF CONTENTS

| | PAGE |
|--|------|
| TWO BOOKS ON SOCIAL QUESTIONS, by A. W. BENN | 165 |
| A CAVALRY OFFICER IN THE PENINSULAR WAR, by H. MORSE STEPHENS | 166 |
| PINKERTON'S ADRIATICA, by H. F. BROWN | 167 |
| WILFRID WARD'S WITNESSES TO THE UNSEEN, II., by the Rev. JOHN OWEN | 168 |
| NEW NOVELS, by J. STANLEY LITTLE | 169 |
| SOME BOOKS OF TRAVEL | 170 |
| NOTES AND NEWS | 171 |
| UNIVERSITY JOTTINGS | 172 |
| ORIGINAL VERSE: "AT HARVEST," by ARTHUR L. SALMON | 172 |
| MAGAZINES AND REVIEWS | 172 |
| MR. EDWARD ARNOLD'S ANNOUNCEMENTS | 173 |
| THE S.P.C.K.'S ANNOUNCEMENTS | 173 |
| MESSRS. A. D. INNES & CO.'S ANNOUNCEMENTS | 173 |
| SELECTED FOREIGN BOOKS | 173 |
| CORRESPONDENCE— | |
| The Proping of America: A New Theory, by Prof. A. H. KENNE; An Attempted Child-Marriage near Leominster in 1575, by Dr. F. J. FURNIVALL; The Etymology of "Tank," by H. BEVERIDGE; The Ogham X at Donard, by R. A. S. MACALISTER | 173 |
| NISRET'S STUDIES IN FORESTRY, by the Rev. M. G. WATKINS | 175 |
| CORRESPONDENCE— | |
| The Abyssinian Inscriptions of Mr. Theodore Bent, by Dr. E. GLASER | 175 |
| ANTHROPOLOGICAL JOTTINGS | 176 |
| REPORTS OF SOCIETIES | 177 |
| ADMIRAL BRINE ON THE AMERICAN INDIANS, by E. J. PAYNE | 177 |
| NOTES ON ART AND ARCHAEOLOGY | 178 |
| STAGE NOTES | 179 |
| WALLASCKE'S PRIMITIVE MUSIC, by J. S. SHEDLOCK | 179 |

LIBRARIAN'S ASSISTANT or SECRETARY.—A YOUNG LADY seeks ENGAGEMENT as above. Good testimonials and certificate of the Professional Examination of the United Kingdom Library Association.—Address M. GROVER, 11, Moss Hall Crescent, N. Finchley, London, N.

AN experienced WRITER is willing to READ AUTHORS' MSS. Novels, one guinea; Articles, Sketches, &c., at moderate rates. Letters only.—C. K., 2, 440, Sell's Advertising Offices, London.

A SOCIETY or Institution of recognised standing may have USE of Well-Furnished FIRST FLOOR FRONT OFFICES and COMMITTEE ROOM, over a Library, in Central position, convenient for Historical, Legal, or Literary Research, on very moderate terms. Secretarial assistance optional.—M.R.I., 10, 11, 13, Selborne Chambers, Temple Bar, W.C.

TYPE-WRITING.

AUTHORS, PUBLISHERS, &c.—Scientific, Literary, and Medical MSS. carefully and promptly typewritten by RAYNE & CO., 40, Norfolk Street, Strand, W.C. Private room for dictation. Highest references. Translations.

THE FLEET STREET TYPEWRITERS
115, FLEET STREET, E.C.
Lowest Charges. Highest Speed.
Every kind of Typewriting Work Done.
Price List—115, Fleet Street, London.

CHEAP TYPE-WRITERS' RIBBONS.—For Bartock, 16 yds., 3s. each; Two, 6s. 6d. Ribbons re-dyed, 1s. each.—E. CROOK, Mr. Newall, 101, Park Road, Bradford.

CATALOGUES

FOREIGN BOOKS and PERIODICALS
promptly supplied on moderate terms.
CATALOGUES on application.
DULAU & CO., 37, SOHO SQUARE.

BAEDEKER'S & BADDELEY'S
TOURISTS' GUIDE BOOKS.
New fully detailed Catalogue sent free on application
DULAU & CO., 37, SOHO SQUARE, LONDON, W.

FOREIGN BOOKS AT FOREIGN PRICES.

WILLIAMS & NORGATE,
Importers of Foreign Books,
14, HENRIETTA STREET, COVENT GARDEN,
AND
20, SOUTH FREDERICK STREET, EDINBURGH.
CATALOGUES sent free on application.

TH. WOHLLEBEN,
FOREIGN BOOKSELLER,
45, GREAT RUSSELL STREET
(Opposite the British Museum),
Supplies all FOREIGN BOOKS and PERIODICALS at the most moderate prices.
Catalogues on application.

G. P. PUTNAM'S SONS, PUBLISHERS
and BOOKSELLERS, of 27 and 29 West 23rd Street, New York, and 1, BEDFORD STREET, LONDON, W.C., desire to call the attention of the READING PUBLIC to the excellent facilities presented by their Branch House in London for filling, on the most favourable terms, orders for their own STANDARD PUBLICATIONS, and for ALL AMERICAN BOOKS and PERIODICALS.—CATALOGUES sent on application.

IMPORTANT.—PRINTING AND PUBLISHING
NEWSPAPERS, MAGAZINES, BOOKS,
&c.—KING, SELL & RAITON, Limited, high-class Printers and Publishers, 12, Gough Square, 4, Bolt Court, Fleet Street, E.C. have specially-built Rotary and other fast Machines for printing and binding illustrated or other Publications.
Advice and assistance given to anyone wishing to commence New Journals.
Facilities upon the premises for Editorial Offices, free. Advertising and Publishing Departments conducted.
Telephone 2750. Telegraph, "Africaism, London."

ROYAL COLLEGE OF SCIENCE, LONDON,

THE ROYAL SCHOOL OF MINES.

WITH WHICH IS INCORPORATED

DEAN—THE RT. HON. T. H. HUXLEY, LL.D., F.R.S.

| | |
|---------------------------|---|
| MECHANICS AND MATHEMATICS | Professor Goodeve, M.A. |
| PHYSICS | Professor A. W. Rucker, M.A., F.R.S. |
| ASTRONOMY | Professor J. Norman Lockyer, C.B., F.R.S. |
| CHEMISTRY | Professor W. A. Tilden, D.Sc., F.R.S. |
| BIOLOGY | Professor (Hon.) The Rt. Hon. T. H. Huxley, LL.D., F.R.S. |
| GEOLOGY | Professor J. W. Judd, F.R.S. |
| METALLURGY | Professor W. C. Roberts-Austen, O.B., F.R.S. |
| MINING | Professor C. Le Neve Foster, D.Sc., A.R.S.M., F.R.S. |
| AGRICULTURE | Professor J. Wrightson, F.O.S. |
| | Francis Fladgate, Registrar. |

NEXT SESSION BEGINS OCTOBER 3RD.

Full Particulars can be obtained from the Registrar, Royal College of Science, South Kensington, and Prospectuses of Eyre & Spottiswoode, East Harding Street, Fleet Street, E.C., or of any Bookseller.

VICTORIA UNIVERSITY.

THE YORKSHIRE COLLEGE, LEEDS.

The Sixty-fourth Session of the Medical Department and the Twenty-first Session of the Department of Science, Technology, and Arts begin OCTOBER 8th.

The Classes prepare for Professions, Commerce, and University Degrees in Arts, Science, and Medicine. The Physical, Chemical, Biological, Engineering, and Leather Industries Laboratories, and the Weaving, Sheds, Dye-house, and Printing Rooms will be open daily for Practical Work.

The following Prospectuses may be had free from the Registrar:—

1. For Regular Day Students.
2. For Occasional and Evening Students.
3. Classes in Agriculture.
4. For Medical Students.

A Hall of Residence for College Students has been established.

UNIVERSITY COLLEGE of SOUTH WALES and MONMOUTHSHIRE, CARDIFF.

The TWELFTH SESSION will begin on MONDAY, OCTOBER 8th, 1894. For information about the Entrance Scholarship and Exhibition Examination in September send for the College Prospectus, which gives full information in regard to the Faculties of Arts, Science, and Medicine, the Departments of Engineering and Mining, and the Departments for the Training of Teachers in Elementary and Secondary Schools, apply to

IVOR JAMES, Registrar.

University College, Cardiff, August 15th, 1894.

UNIVERSITY COLLEGE, LONDON.

LECTURES ON ZOOLOGY.

The General COURSE OF LECTURES ON ZOOLOGY, by Professor W. F. R. WELDON, F.R.S., will COMMENCE on WEDNESDAY, OCTOBER 3rd, at 1 p.m.

LONDON SCHOOL OF MEDICINE for WOMEN. 30, HANDEL STREET, BRUNSWICK SQUARE, W.C., and the ROYAL FIFTH HOSPITAL, prepare for all the Medical Examinations open to Women. Entrance Scholarship, value £30; Stuart M.D. Scholarship, £30 a year for four years; Mackay Prizes of £20 each, &c.—Apply to SECRETARY at School.

TECHNICAL CLASSES for GENTLE-

WOMEN, with instruction in Housewifery and the Care of Children. 18, Fens, weekly boarders, and day-students received.—Address Miss E. C. SHARLAND, 8, Andrew's, Watford, Herts.

SMALL SCHOOL for GENTLEMEN'S SONS.—Country house; healthy hilly district. Small classes; individual attention. Moderate terms.—OXFORD M.A., The Grange, Hailstead, Essex.

ADVICE as to CHOICE of SCHOOLS.—

The SCHOLASTIC ASSOCIATION (a body of Oxford and Cambridge Graduates) gives ADVICE and ASSISTANCE, without charge, to PARENTS and GUARDIANS in the SELECTION of SCHOOLS for Boys or Girls, and Tutors for all Examinations at home and abroad.—A Statement of Requirements should be sent to the Manager, R. J. BEVON, M.A., 8, Lancaster Place, Strand.

EDINBURGH.—SUPERIOR BOARD

offered for STUDENT in professional gentleman's family; large house; good locality. Highest references.—No. 598, Robertson & Scott, Hanover Street, Edinburgh.

NEW WORK in preparation by W. RUSSELL, Author of "An Invalid's Twelve Years' Experience"—"MAN: his Peculiarities, Weakness, Diseases, Degeneration, and Remedies."

SEPTEMBER, 1894.—Price 1s.

THE FREE REVIEW.

Edited by JOHN M. ROBERTSON.

CONTENTS.

| |
|---|
| THE SAXON and the CELT. By the Editor. |
| ROYALISM IN LITTLE. By X. |
| OCCUPATIONS of the ENGLISH PEOPLE. By JOHN A. HOBSON. |
| THE PROGRESS of TRADE REVOLUTION and DEPRESSION. By J. D. ALCOCK. |
| VACCINATION and SANITATION. By ALEX. WHEELER. |
| NERVE-CURING IN GERMANY. By J. G. |
| WAGES, and their INFLUENCE on the COST of PRODUCTION. By J. T. BLANCHARD. |

London: SWAN SONNENSCHEIN & Co., Paternoster Square, E.C.

DEPARTMENT of SCIENCE and ART.

ROYAL COLLEGE OF SCIENCE,
STEPHEN'S GREEN, EAST, DUBLIN.

SESSIONS 1894-95.

The Royal College of Science supplies Courses of Instruction in the Sciences applicable to the Industrial Arts, especially those which may be classed locally under the heads CHEMICAL MANUFACTURES, ENGINEERING, and MINING.

A Diploma of Associate of the College (A.R.C. Sc., I.) is granted at the end of Three Years' Course, the required conditions being complied with.

Four Royal Scholarships, of the value of £50 yearly each, with free admission to the Lectures and Laboratories, are attached to the College. Two are offered for competition each year to associate students not being Royal Exhibitors, on completion of their first year's course.

The Fees payable for Non-Associate Students are—£2 for each separate Course of Lectures; £3 for Session—Pure Mathematics, 1st year, £2 for term, do, do.

For ANALYTICAL CHEMISTRY.—£2 for a Special Course of One Month; £3 for Three Months; £9 for Six Months; £12 for the Entire Session.

For PHYSICAL LABORATORY.—£2 for a Special Course of One Month; £4 per Month (for 6 hours a day); or £6 for the Session (one hour per day); £12 for the Entire Session.

For ASSAYING.—£5 for the Three Months; £9 for Six Months; £12 for the Entire Session.

For ZOOLOGICAL LABORATORY.—£2 for a Special Course of One Month; £3 for 1st Medical or 2nd Arts Course Royal University of Ireland; or £5 for a Special Course of Three Months.

For BOTANICAL LABORATORY.—Same as Zoological Laboratory.

For GEOLOGICAL LABORATORY.—£2 for a Special Course of One Month.

For DRAWING SCHOOL.—£5 for the Session; £3 for One Term.

The Chemical, Physical, Botanical, and Zoological Laboratories and the Drawing Schools are Open Daily for Practical Instruction, and the Geological Laboratory is open for Non-Associate Students at hours to be arranged with the Professor.

Applied Mathematics and Mechanics Professor W. McF. OAR, M.A.
Descriptive Geometry, Drawing, Engineering, and Surveying Professor JAS. LYON, M.A.

Chemistry (Theoretical and Practical) and Metallurgy Professor W. N. HARTLEY, F.R.S., F.O.S., F.R.S.E., Dean of Faculty for the Session.

Physics (Theoretical and Practical) Professor W. F. BARRETT, F.R.S.E., M.R.I.A.

Geology Professor O. A. J. COLE, F.G.S., M.R.I.A.

Mining and Mineralogy Professor J. P. O'REILLY, C.E., M.R.I.A.

Botany Professor JOHNSON, D.Sc., F.L.S.

Zoology Professor A. C. HADSON, M.A., F.Z.S., M.R.I.A.

The Courses of Chemistry, Physics, Botany, Zoology, Geology, and Mineralogy are recognised by the Royal University of Ireland, and Certificates of attendance are granted to Medical and other Students attending the Courses, and the Chemical, Physical, Botanical, and Zoological Laboratories.

Programmes may be obtained on application at the College, or by letter addressed to the Secretary, Royal College of Science, Stephen's Green, Dublin.

The First Term of the Session will commence on MONDAY, the 1st OCTOBER, 1894.

NOTE.—Desiring Associate Students will be required to pass an Entrance Examination in Elementary Mathematics and Elementary Practical Geometry, as indicated on Page 5 Programme, copies of which may be had on application from the Secretary.

Professor J. P. O'Reilly, Secretary.

IMPORTANT WORK ON THE HISTORY OF THE NOVEL.

A GUIDE TO

BRITISH & AMERICAN NOVELS.

BEING A COMPREHENSIVE MANUAL TO BRITISH AND AMERICAN FICTION FROM THE EARLIEST PERIOD TO THE END OF 1893.

BY PERCY RUSSELL,

Author of "The Author's Manual," &c.

Crown 8vo, cloth, 300 pp., price 3s. 6d. net; by post, 3s. 10d.

THE GUIDE CONTAINS A COMPLETE HISTORY OF THE NOVEL, LIVING NOVELISTS, AND NOVELISTS OF THE PAST.

BY THE SAME AUTHOR.

THE AUTHOR'S MANUAL.

WITH PRELIMINARY REMARKS

BY MR. GLADSTONE.

Seventh and Cheap Edition. With New Preface, 901 pp., crown 8vo, cloth, price 3s. 6d. net; by post, 3s. 10d. With Portrait.

"... Mr. Russell's book is a very complete manual and guide for journalists and authors. It is not a merely practical work—it is literary and appreciative of literature in its best sense.... We have little else but praise for the volume."—Westminster Review.

LONDON: DIGBY, LONG & CO., PUBLISHERS

18, BOUVERIE STREET, FLEET STREET, E.C.

BIRMINGHAM MUSICAL FESTIVAL,
1894.TUESDAY, WEDNESDAY, THURSDAY, AND FRIDAY,
OCTOBER 2, 3, 4, and 5, 1894.

PRINCIPAL VOCALISTS.—Madame ALBANI, Mrs. HENSCHIEL, and Miss ANNA WILLIAMS; Miss HILDA WILSON, Miss MARIE BREMA, and Madame MARIAN MCKENZIE; Mr. EDWARD LLOYD and Mr. IYER McKAY; Mr. ANDREW BLACK, Mr. EUGENE OUDIN, Mr. BRERETON, and Mr. HENSCHIEL.

TUESDAY MORNING—"ELIJAH."

TUESDAY EVENING.

BERLIOZ "TE DEUM," AND MISCELLANEOUS.

WEDNESDAY MORNING.

DR. PARRY'S NEW ORATORIO, "KING SAUL"

WEDNESDAY EVENING.

GORING THOMAS "THE SWAN AND THE SKYLARK," SULLIVAN'S OVERTURE, "IN MEMORIAM," MENDELSSOHN'S "HYMN OF PRAISE."

THURSDAY MORNING—"MESSIAH."

THURSDAY EVENING.

HENSCHIEL'S NEW "STABAT MATER," and Miscellaneous.

FRIDAY MORNING.

CHERUBINI'S D MINOR MASS. PALESTRINA'S "STABAT MATER."
MOZART'S E FLAT SYMPHONY.

FRIDAY EVENING.

"TANNHAUSER" OVERTURE. SCHUMANN'S "FAUST."
BEETHOVEN'S NINTH SYMPHONY.

CONDUCTOR.....DR. HANS RICHTER.

Detailed programmes may be obtained post free on application to WALTER CHARLTON, Secretary,
112, Edmund Street, Birmingham.

Just published.

COAL-DUST an EXPLOSIVE AGENT,

as shown by an Examination of the Camerton Explosion.
Crown 4to, Illustrated with 7 Plates. By DONALD M. D. STUART, F.G.S., Mining and Civil Engineer. London: Office of the Colliery
Manager, 32, Boulevard Street; E. & F. N. Spott, 125, Strand. New York: Spott & Chamberlain, 12, Cortlandt Street. Or of the Author, Redland, Bristol.

"The object I have sought is to present a description of the Explosion; to locate its origin and trace its propagation; to enquire into the source and character of the gaseous mixtures to which the initial gaseous explosion, and the subsequent propagations were due; the nature and sufficiency of the physical and chemical activities for the effects produced; and to indicate the conditions under which the explosion was commenced, propagated, and stopped."—AUTHOR'S PREFACE
Price 7s. 6d. net; free by post, 8s.

ESTABLISHED 1851.

BIRKBECK BANK,

Southampton Buildings, Chancery Lane, London.
TWO-AND-A-HALF PER CENT. INTEREST allowed on DEPOSITS
repayable on demand.

TWO PER CENT. on CURRENT ACCOUNTS, on the minimum
monthly balances, when not drawn below £100.
STOCKS, SHARES, and ANNUITIES purchased and sold.

SAVINGS DEPARTMENT.

For the encouragement of Thrift the Bank receives small sums on deposit, and allows interest monthly on each completed £1

BIRKBECK BUILDING SOCIETY.

HOW TO PURCHASE A HOUSE
FOR TWO GUINEAS PER MONTH.

BIRKBECK FREEHOLD LAND SOCIETY.

HOW TO PURCHASE A PLOT OF LAND
FOR FIVE SHILLINGS PER MONTH.

The BIRKBECK ALMANACK, with full particulars, post free
FRANCIS RAVENSCROFT, Manager.

To H.R.H. the PRINCE of WALES.

BRAND & CO.'S AI SAUCE,

SOUPS, PRESERVED PROVISIONS
and

POTTED MEATS, and YORK and GAME
PIES. Also.

ESSENCE of BEEF, BEEF TEA,

TURTLE SOUP, and JELLY, and other

SPECIALITIES for INVALIDS.

CAUTION—BEWARE OF IMITATIONS.

SOLE ADDRESS—
11, LITTLE STANHOPE STREET,
MAYFAIR, W.

USE

VINOLIA CREAM

FOR

SUNBURN and INSECT BITES.

MUDIE'SSELECT*LIBRARY,

For the CIRCULATION and SALE of all the BEST ENGLISH, FRENCH, GERMAN, ITALIAN, and SPANISH BOOKS.

TOWN SUBSCRIPTIONS from One Guinea per annum.
LONDON BOOK SOCIETY (for Weekly Exchange of Books at the Houses of Subscribers) from Two Guineas per annum.

COUNTRY SUBSCRIPTIONS from Two Guineas per annum.
N.B.—Two or three friends may unite in One Subscription and thus lessen the cost of carriage.

LIBRARY BOXES GRATIS.

Town and Village Clubs supplied on Liberal Terms
Prospectuses and Monthly Lists of Books gratis and post free.

SALE DEPARTMENT.

All the leading Books of the Past Seasons are on Sale, second-hand at greatly Reduced Prices.

LISTS GRATIS and POST FREE.

MUDIE'S MANCHESTER LIBRARY,

10 to 12, BARTON ARCADE, MANCHESTER,

Is in daily communication with this Library.

MUDIE'S SELECT LIBRARY, Limited,

30 to 34, NEW OXFORD STREET, LONDON;

241, Brompton Road, S.W.; and 48, Queen Victoria St., E.C

THEAUTOTYPE COMPANY

Has the honour to announce the Publication of

NINETY-THREE DRAWINGS

BY

ALBERT DURER,

Reproduced in Facsimile from Originals in the British Museum, and accompanied by Descriptive Text by

SIDNEY COLVIN, M.A.,Keeper of Prints and Drawings, British Museum.

"The British Museum collection, reproduced in this volume, is," says Professor Colvin, "a fairly complete and representative survey of the several phases of Durer's activity as a draughtsman and sketcher during all periods of his career."

*The Volume is Imperial folio, half-morocco, Plates Linen-
Guarded and Interleaved. Edition 100 Copies.*

*Price Six Guineas.The AUTOTYPE FINE-ART CATALOGUE

(New Edition), of 184 pages, with Illustrated Supplement, containing 68 Miniature Photographs of notable
Autotypes, post free, ONE SHILLING.

"AUTOTYPE: a Decorative and Educational Art."

NEW PAMPHLET, FREE ON APPLICATION.

THE AUTOTYPE COMPANY,

74, New Oxford Street, London.

MESSRS. J. C. DRUMMOND & CO.,
ART REPRODUCERS,

14, HENRIETTA STREET, COVENT GARDEN, W.C.

Are the sole representatives in Great Britain of
HERR HANFSTAENGL, of Munich, the well-known Artist in PHOTOGRAPHY, now patronised by the leading London Art Publishing Firms. A large Collection of Important Plates always on view.

Process Blocks for the purpose of Ordinary
Book Illustrations.

Messrs. DRUMMOND & CO. supply the cheapest and best Processes in the market, which are specially adapted to meet the wants of Antiquarians, Archaeologists, and those engaged in the investigation and publication of Parochial and Diocesan Records.

J. C. DRUMMOND & CO. invite attention to their
Improved Rapid Photo-Mechanical Process
For the Reproduction of Works of Art, Original MSS., Designs,
Lace Manufactures, Photographs, Views, Book Illustrations,
Artistic Advertisements, Catalogues, &c., &c., at a moderate cost.

Specimens and price list on application.
Offices 14, HENRIETTA STREET, COVENT GARDEN, LONDON

WORKS BY DR. MACLAREN.

Crown 8vo, cloth boards, price 5s., post free.

PAUL'S PRAYERS, and other Sermons.

Uniform with the above, price 5s., post free.

THE HOLY OF HOLIES: a Series of Sermons
on the 14th, 15th, and 16th Chapters of the Gospel by John.

Uniform with the above, price 5s., post free.

THE UNCHANGING CHRIST, and other
Sermons.

Uniform with the above, price 5s., post free.

THE GOD of the AMEN, and other
Sermons.

London: ALEXANDER & SHEPHERD, Farnival Street, E.C

THEATRES.ADELPHI THEATRE.

A. and S. Gatti, Sole Proprietors and Managers.
THIS EVENING, at 7.45, THE FATAL CARD. Messrs.
William Terriss, Murray, Carson, Charles Fulton, W. L.
Abingdon, Richard Purdon, and Harry Nicholls; Mesdames
Vane, Laura Linden, Sophie Larkin, and Miss Millward.

COMEDY THEATRE.

Sole Lessee and Manager, Mr. J. Comyns Carr.
THIS EVENING, at 8.15, THE NEW WOMAN. Mr.
Fred Terry, Mr. Cyril Maude, Mr. J. O. Grahame, Mr. Wyes,
Mr. Champion, Mr. Byron; Miss Rose Leclercq, Miss Alma
Murray, Miss Laura Graves, Miss Gertrude Warden, Miss Rickards, and Miss Winifred Emery.

CRITERION THEATRE.

Lessee and Manager, Mr. Charles Wyndham.
THIS EVENING, at 9.0, HOT WATER. Messrs. Charles Hawtrey, Edward Righton, George Giddens, William Blakeley, Sydney Valentine, J. G. Taylor, F. Atherley, E. Dagnall,
F. Vigay; Mesdames Edith Chester, Alice de Winton, E.
Vining, K. Drew, A. Saker. Preceded, at 8.30, by HOME RULE.

GAIETY THEATRE.

THIS EVENING, at 8.0, LITTLE JACK SHEPPARD.
Messrs. Seymour Hicks, Willard Ward, F. M. Wood, E. W.
Royce, W. Cheesman, and Charles Danby; Misses Ellaline
Terriss, Amy Augarde, Florence Levey, Georgina Preston,
Lizzie Collier, Violet Monckton, Ethel Earle, Sutherland, Benton, Cannon, Henshaw, and Jessie Preston.

GARRICK THEATRE.

MR. WILLARD'S SEASON.
THIS EVENING, at 8.30, THE PROFESSOR'S LOVE
STORY.
MATINEES SATURDAY and WEDNESDAY NEXT,
at 2.30.

GLOBE THEATRE.

THIS EVENING, at 9, CHARLEY'S AUNT. Mr. W. S.
Penley, Messrs. Walter Everard, Sidney Paxton, H. Farmer,
Cecil Thornbury, and E. Reeve Smith; Misses Ada
Branson, Emmie Meyrick, Kate Graves, Nina Boucicault,
At 8, IN THE EYES OF THE WORLD.

LYRIC THEATRE.

THIS EVENING, at 8.0, LITTLE CHRISTOPHER
COLUMBUS (New Edition). Messrs. E. J. Lonnen, John F.
Sheridan, F. Cook, Thompson, W. S. Laidlaw, H. Gregory;
Mesdames Geraldine Uinar, Maud Holland, M. Love, A.
Newton, E. Greville, D. Thorne, F. Wilson, V. Cassell,
M. Marsden, and Florence St. John, &c. At 7.15, THE HOUSE OF LORDS.

PRINCE OF WALES' THEATRE.

THIS EVENING, at 8.15, A GAIETY GIRL. Messrs.
C. Hayden Coffin, D'Orsay, Harcourt, Soutar, Somerville,
Baton, Macmillan, Porteous, and Eric Lewis; Mesdames Kate
Cutler, Sidney, Hodson, Malone, Strohalmes, Robinson,
Pounds, Skipworth, Martino, and Lottie Venne.

STRAND THEATRE.

THIS EVENING, at 8.45, OUR FLAT. Misses Georgie
Esmond, Annie Goward, May Edouin, Annie Esmond, Grace
Lane, F. Loveridge; Messrs. C. Fawcett, H. Ross, E. Hendrie, E. Silward, Cecil Paget, D. Gordon, and Willie Edouin. At 8,
PARALLEL ATTACKS.

TERRY'S THEATRE.

THIS EVENING, at 9, THE FOUNDLING. Messrs.
Charles Groves, Sydney Brough, Huntley Wright, Oswald
Yorke, George Warde, Stanley Kennis; Misses Ellis Jeffreys,
Emmeline Orford, Susie Vaughan, Lizzie Webster, Gwynne
Herbert, Minnie Clifford, Fanny Erris. At 8.15, THEN FLOWERS GREW FAIRER.

VAUDEVILLE THEATRE.

THIS EVENING, at 9, THE NEW BOY. Messrs. Arthur
Helmors, J. D. Beveridge, J. Beauchamp, S. Warden, K.
Douglas, T. Palmer, F. Volpe, T. Kingston, J. L. Mackay;
Mesdames Gladys Homfrey, May Palfrey, Esme Beringer,
A. Beet. Preceded, at 8.15, by LOYAL.

PALACE THEATRE.

THIS EVENING, at 7.45. Millie Hylton, Fanny Wentworth, Tom Faccourt, Hubertus, Rainbow Troupe, Dorothy Hanbury, Duncan's Colli Dogs, The Donnells, Nellie Christie,
Cliff Ryland, Mona Richards, the Fredericks Demons, Miss
Ethel Ross-Selwicks, and the TABLEAU VIVANTS.

OLYMPIA—TWICE DAILY.

CONSTANTINOPEL, 12 to 5, and 6 to 11. 2,000 Performers. Superb Spectacle. Stage larger than any six theatres combined. Glorious Gardens. Roumelian, Hungarian, Turkish, and English Bands. Continual Round of Enjoyment.

RICHARD BENTLEY & SON'S LIST.

On September 22 will be published

THE LIFE OF FRANCES POWER COBBE

By HERSELF.

In 2 vols., large crown 8vo, with Portraits and other Illustrations, 21s.

"In the autobiography are reminiscences of the many interesting people Miss Cobbe has become acquainted with in her busy life, including Tennyson and Browning, Gladstone and Bright, Matthew Arnold, Theodore Parker, Lord Shaftesbury, Jowett, Savage Lador, Lady Byron, Adolphus Trollope, George Eliot, John Stuart Mill, Mrs. Somerville, Fanny Kemble, Darwin, Sir Charles Lyell, and many others." [Athenaeum.]

New Novels at the Libraries.

In One, Two, and Three Volumes.

READY ON TUESDAY NEXT.

A NEW NOVEL BY THE AUTHOR OF "NOT LIKE OTHER GIRLS," &c.

THE OLD OLD STORY

By ROSA NOUCHETTE CAREY,
Author of "Nellie's Memories," &c.

In 3 vols., crown 8vo.

NOW READY.

BY THE AUTHOR OF "OUGHT WE TO VISIT HER?"

THE ADVENTURESS.

By MRS. ANNIE EDWARDES,
Author of "A Girt-on Girl," &c.

In 1 vol., crown 8vo, 6s.

"The local colour and tone of the little drama, the conversation at Negretti's Hotel at Nice, the 'dear bishop' and his satellites, the petty spites and ambitions are perfectly admirable. Juliana Tredennick is, perhaps, the most clever of all the author's studies in complex character; she is worthy of Thackeray's scalpel-pen."—World.

NOW READY.

WEDDED TO A GENIUS.

By NEIL CHRISTISON.

In 2 vols., crown 8vo.

"An interesting study in psychology."—Athenaeum.

NOW READY.

AN INTERLOPER. By Frances

MARY PEARD, Author of "The Baroness," &c. In 2 vols., crown 8vo.

"A graceful and charming writer. Miss Peard's touch remains gentle even when raising a corner of the veil that conceals the depths of the heart. Her stories have the freshness and delicate colouring of the finished pastel."—Morning Post.
"Miss Peard's latest book is also, we think, one of her best. The scene is laid at Poissy, and the sketch of provincial France is quaint and vivid."—Daily News.

NOW READY.

IN A CINQUE PORT: a Story

of Winchelsea. By E. M. HEWITT. In 3 vols., crown 8vo.

"The author seems to have been under the influence of the ancient, sea-forsaken Sussex city which he has chosen for the setting of his scenes. He describes lovingly and well, and those who know Winchelsea will take pleasure from the description, apart altogether from the plot and action of the story."—Daily Chronicle.

NOW READY.

A TROUBLESOME PAIR. By

LESLIE KEITH, Author of "Lisbeth," &c. In 3 vols., crown 8vo.

"The lively record of the difficulties encountered by a retired Indian officer who has undertaken to watch over the fortunes of two young step-sisters, lovely, high-bred, but, alas! also, for the colour of the mind, too high-spirited to submit to the control of a resident chaperon." [Manchester Guardian.]

RICHARD BENTLEY & SON, New Burlington Street
Publishers in Ordinary to Her Majesty the Queen.

BLACKWOODS' LIST OF EDUCATIONAL WORKS.

On October 1st will be published.

A History of English Literature.

For Secondary Schools. By J. LOGIE ROBERTSON, M.A., First English Master, Edinburgh Ladies' College. Crown 8vo.

PROFESSOR MINTO'S WORKS.

The Literature of the Georgian Era.

Edited, with a Biographical Introduction, by Professor KNIGHT, St. Andrews. Post 8vo, 6s. [Immediately.]

Manual of English Prose Literature.

Third Edition, Revised. Crown 8vo, 7s. 6d.

Characteristics of English Poets.

New Edition, Revised. Crown 8vo, 7s. 6d.

Plain Principles of Prose Composition.

Crown 8vo, 1s. 6d.

DR. CURRIE'S

English Prose Composition.

Fifty-fifth Thousand. 1s. 6d.

A NEW ENGLISH HISTORY.

Commentaries on the History of England from the Earliest Times to 1865. By MONTAGU BURROWS, Oxford. Crown 8vo, 7s. 6d.

BY REV. DR. MACKAY.

Manual of Modern Geography.

Eleventh Thousand. Revised to date of publication. Crown 8vo, 7s. 6d.

Elements of Modern Geography.

Fifty-fifth Thousand. Revised to the Present Time. Crown 8vo, 8s.

Intermediate Geography.

Eighteenth Edition. Enlarged and Thoroughly Revised to date. 2s.

Outlines of Geography.

One Hundred and Ninety-first Thousand. Thoroughly Revised to date. 1s.

BY PROFESSOR NICHOLSON.

Manual of Zoology.

Seventh Edition. Rewritten and Enlarged. Post 8vo, with Engravings, 18s.

Text-Book of Zoology.

For Junior Students. Fifth Edition. Revised and Enlarged. Crown 8vo, with 354 Engravings, 10s. 6d.

Introductory Text-Book of Zoology.

Sixth Edition, with Engravings. Crown 8vo, 3s.

Outlines of Natural History.

Third Edition. 1s. 6d.

BY DR. PAGE.

Introductory Text-Book of Geology.

With Engravings. Twelfth Edition, Revised by Professor LAPWORTH. 3s. 6d.

Advanced Text-Book of Geology.

Sixth Edition, Revised and Enlarged, with Glossary, 7s. 6d.

Introductory Text-Book of Physical GEOGRAPHY.

Thirteenth Edition, Revised and Enlarged by Professor LAPWORTH. 2s. 6d.

Advanced Text-Book of Physical GEOGRAPHY.

With Engravings. Revised and Enlarged by the Same. Third Edition. 6s.

ARITHMETIC AND MATHEMATICS.

Practical Arithmetical Exercises.

Containing upwards of 8,000 Examples. New and Revised Edition. Crown 8vo, pp. 357, 3s. With Answers, 3s. 6d.

Exercises in Mensuration.

Complete Book, pp. 128, cloth, 1s. Answers to be had separately.

Elementary Algebra.

Complete in One Volume, 298 pp., crown 8vo, cloth, 2s. With Answers, 2s. 6d. [Immediately.]

Mental Arithmetic.

A complete Course of Exercises in Mental Arithmetic, with Answers. 1 vol., large crown 8vo. [Shortly.]

WILLIAM BLACKWOOD & SONS,
EDINBURGH AND LONDON.

Messrs. HUTCHINSON'S NEW BOOKS

The TIMES, in a review of nearly eight columns on BARON DE MENEVAL'S HISTORY OF NAPOLEON I., speaks of the work as being both valuable and important, and extremely interesting. The DAILY NEWS is of opinion that students and historians who wish to form a trustworthy estimate of Napoleon cannot afford to neglect this testimony by one of his most intimate associates. The SATURDAY REVIEW says that the interest is sustained to the very last pages and must be acknowledged to be little less than absorbing.

MEMOIRS to SERVE for the HISTORY of NAPOLEON I. From 1802 to 1816. By his Private Secretary, Baron CLAUDE FRANÇOIS DE MENEVAL. The work completed by the addition of hitherto Unpublished Documents. Translated and fully Annotated by ROBERT H. SHERARD. In 3 vols., demy 8vo, cloth gilt and gilt top (about 1,400 pp.), with Autograph Letters and Photogravure Portraits, 18s. per vol.

DAVID CHRISTIE MURRAY'S NEW NOVEL.

A RISING STAR. In 3 vols. [This day.]

MRS. OLIPHANT'S NEW NOVEL.

A HOUSE in BLOOMSBURY. In 2 vols.

"Mrs. Oliphant's story, 'A House in Bloomsbury,' is one of the best that she has produced."—Globe.

THE SUCCESS OF THE YEAR IN FICTION.

A YELLOW ASTER. In cloth gilt. 6s.

Twenty-second Thousand

* * 3,000 Copies of this Novel have been sold in Three-Volume form.

A FLORENTINE ROMANCE.

BRUNO the CONSCRIPT. By Marie HUTCHESON. In crown 8vo, cloth gilt, 3s. 6d.

FOURTH and POPULAR EDITION.

THE JAPS at HOME. By Douglas

SLADEN. With 40 Illustrations. In demy 8vo, artistic cloth cover, 3s. 6d.; or with the addition of 12 Full-Page Colotype Illustrations, 6s.

THIRD and CHEAP EDITION.

HOOKS OF STEEL. By Helen Prothero-LEWIS. In crown 8vo, cloth gilt and gilt top, with Illustrations, 5s.

Punch says—"Ask for 'Hooks of Steel,' and see that you get it. 'Tis a very powerful novel, a well-imagined, well-developed plot worked out by means thoroughly original and by simply natural characters. Read it."

CHEAP EDITIONS OF

FRANKFORT MOORE'S NOVELS.

SIXTH EDITION.

I FORBID the BANNIS. The Story of a Comedy which was Played Seriously. In crown 8vo, cloth gilt, 6s.

"A very remarkable novel. It is daring in conception, brilliant in execution, and altogether fascinating in treatment."—Daily Telegraph.

EIGHTH EDITION.

A GRAY EYE OR SO. In crown 8vo, cloth gilt, 6s.

"A brilliant book. An amazingly clever book." [Illustrated London News.]

SECOND EDITION.

DAIREEN. A South African Story. In crown 8vo, cloth gilt, 6s.

"'Daireen' is indeed a fine story, full of strength and manliness of spirit and style."—Morning Post.

POPULAR EDITION.

SOJOURNERS TOGETHER: a Holiday Romance. In crown 8vo, cloth, gilt top, 2s. 6d.; picture boards, 2s.

"This romantic novel. Light and pleasantly told."—Standard.

* * Mr. FRANKFORT MOORE'S New Novel, "ONE FAIR DAUGHTER," will be published in 3 vols., simultaneously in London and New York, on the 10th inst.

HUTCHINSON'S SELECT NOVELS.

Each Volume in large crown 8vo, handsome cloth gilt, 3s. 6d.

A MARRIAGE CEREMONY. By Ada Cambridge.

THE HERITAGE of LANGDALE. A Story of the Eighteenth Century. By Mrs. ALEXANDER.

THE TRAGEDY of IDA NOBLE. By W. CLARK RUSSELL. With 46 Illustrations by Everard Hopkins.

THE CUCKOO in the NEST. By Mrs. OLIPHANT. With Illustrations by G. H. Edwards. Sixth Edition.

THE STORY of an AFRICAN FARM. By OLIVE SCHREINER. Seventy-eighth Thousand.

LONDON: HUTCHINSON & CO., PATERNOSTER ROW

SATURDAY, SEPTEMBER 8, 1894.

No. 1166, New Series.

THE EDITOR cannot undertake to return, or to correspond with the writers of, rejected manuscript.

It is particularly requested that all business letters regarding the supply of the paper, &c., may be addressed to the PUBLISHER, and not to the EDITOR.

LITERATURE.

TWO BOOKS ON SOCIAL QUESTIONS.

The Psychic Factors of Civilisation. By Lester F. Ward. (Boston, U.S.A.: Ginn.)

Ethics of Citizenship. By John MacCunn. (Glasgow: Maclehose.)

ACCORDING to Mr. Lester Ward, the impelling force of all progress in the world of consciousness is desire—the tendency to seize on what is pleasurable and to avoid what is painful. It came into existence by a happy accident in the course of organic evolution, and was immediately appropriated as an aid in the struggle for existence. Long afterwards, by another happy accident, intelligence made its appearance, and was similarly utilised as an instrument for the gratification of desire. Through the whole biological process, success was secured and the psychic factors were developed by unrestricted competition between individuals, but at the expense of enormous waste. With the advent of man as a reasonable and social being began a new régime, the tendency of which has been to substitute orderly co-operation in the pursuit of common ends for blind, blundering, and destructive competition.

Mr. Ward constantly protests against the application of the biological methods to social science by thinkers of the individualist school. But he has nothing to say to the moral grounds on which such protests are usually based. He even thinks that the importance of morality in the abstract has been enormously exaggerated, and gives it next to no place among the factors of evolution, treating it, indeed, very much as Buckle treated literature, religion, and government. It is negative, not positive, a result rather than a cause of the social condition at any given period. At the same time, he is a profound believer in moral progress, which, however, he attributes to anything but moral causes. But on this point his language is so absolutely self-contradictory, that he had better be left to speak for himself:

"None of the real moral progress has been due to the enforcement and inculcation of moral precepts. It has been due . . . in general to the progress of intelligence . . . creating a new code of morals which society literally enforces. . . . The modern improved morality is a condition to the modern improved state of civilisation, and the latter is the cause of the former, not the reverse" (pp. 112-13).

May I suggest that, before undertaking to enlighten the public, Mr. Ward should first come to a clearness with himself? Of his self-contradictions I pass over other and still worse examples than this.

The masses of confused effete materialism that encumber the pages of this volume have little connexion with its practical drift, which is the advocacy to some undefined extent of State Socialism, or, if the author so please to call it, "sociocracy." All the moral and intellectual progress about which we have been hearing, all the multiplication of desires and of the means for satisfying them in which civilisation and true happiness consist, have so far resulted in a surplus of evil over good. At least,

"those who see a surplus of good in things as they are, or can hope for their improvement under the laws of evolution, unaided by social intelligence, must be set down as hopelessly blinded by the great optimistic illusion of all life" (p. 275). "The individual will never make social progress an end of his action. He will always pursue a narrow destructive policy, exhausting prematurely the resources of the earth, caring neither for the good of others now living nor for posterity, but sweeping into the vortex of his own avarice all that he can obtain irrespective of his real needs. If this is ever to be prevented, it must be by society putting itself in the place of the individual, and seeking its interests as the individual seeks his" (p. 288).

It has an instrument ready to hand in the shape of government: a term under which, it seems, the whole population may properly be included, for the not very convincing reason that all pay taxes (p. 296). In practice, however, it is the worst who rule.

"Government must always adapt itself to its worst class, and even a small class of unintelligent citizens lowers its standard out of proportion to the importance of that class" (p. 301). America "is to-day fully ripe for an important series of national reforms, which cannot be made because a comparatively small number of influential citizens oppose them" (p. 303).

The first remedy for this deplorable state of things will be to force state secular education on the people (p. 308). Then legislation by elected assemblies is to be abolished or restricted. The principal duty of the reformed state will apparently be to raise wages and lower prices. Under the individualistic régime,

"the world appears to be approaching a stage at which those who labour, no matter how skilled, how industrious, or how frugal, will receive only so much for their services as to enable them 'to subsist and to perpetuate their race'" (p. 320). "It is known to all political economists that the prices of most of the staple commodities consumed by mankind have no necessary relation to the cost of producing them and placing them in the hands of the consumer. It is always the highest price that the consumer will pay rather than do without" (p. 327).

Does Mr. Ward seriously believe that Prof. Alfred Marshall, for instance, knows "consumer's rent" to be equal to zero? America has reason to thank "the small class of influential citizens" who prevent the reforms proposed by persons with the knowledge and reasoning power of this author from being put into practice.

In method and principle Prof. MacCunn's work differs toto coelo from Mr. Ward's. If the one entirely ignores religion and regards morality as an element of trifling importance in civilisation, or at any rate as an element that may safely be left to take care of itself, to the other morality is the very soul of progress, and religion, or the equivalent spiritualistic philosophy, is the soul of morality. Mr. Ward is a utilitarian who measures the value of political institutions by their effect on human happiness, and who measures happiness by the multiplication of desires coupled with the multiplication of the means for their satisfaction. Prof. MacCunn agrees with Kant in considering a good will as the summum bonum, and in estimating actions as manifestations of character rather than as causes of pleasure or pain. Mr. Ward does not conceal his sympathy with the opinion—according to him, widely prevalent in America—that a livelihood gained by manual labour is "degrading and degraded." Prof. MacCunn assumes as self-evident that we respect worth wherever we find it, and that we find it as easily in the humblest as in the highest circles of life. Those who hold such a philosophy have generally nothing to say to pessimism, even of the most hypothetical or provisional type; and it is quite in order that, while the American thinker looks on the present state of society as utterly bad and hopeless in the absence of a complete economical revolution, the English thinker should see more reason for cheerfulness than for despondency in the immediate prospects of civilisation, even supposing that the forces now at work are allowed to go on without any violent change in their direction. Dealing as he does with political philosophy, the great fact of our age is for him, as for most other observers, the triumph of democracy; and his book on the whole shapes itself into a defence of democracy, which—wiser in this respect than Sir H. S. Maine—he treats as a form of society no less than as a form of government.

Notwithstanding all the hostile and in part telling criticism that has been showered on such watchwords as "Liberty, Equality and Fraternity" and "The Rights of Man," Prof. MacCunn believes them to contain a certain element of truth: they recognise, however indistinctly, the vital importance of worth. Men are not equal in all respects, nor is it desirable that they should be equal; but in respect to their most essentially human attribute, the capacity for moral goodness, they all possess worth, and ought to be given opportunities for developing it to the utmost possible extent. Without civil rights no man can take the first steps towards self-realisation; without political rights no man can make self-realisation complete. Whatever causes may actually bring about an extension of the suffrage, its true justification lies in the moral end to which it is a means. I may here note an implication of which the author is doubtless aware, though he nowhere insists on it: namely, that his principle leads straight to the political enfranchisement of women, both married and single, for surely they have selves to be realised as much as men.

The recognition of a common worth implies mutual respect and helpfulness on the part of human beings: elements that tend to develop into a true sentiment of fraternity. Prof. MacCunn holds—with perfect justice, as I think—that selfish individualism is not on the increase, but that our society is, on the contrary, distinguished by a growing regard for others. It is another question whether family life is such a school and stronghold of unselfishness as he maintains. Have we not all heard of the père de famille who is capable de tout? Has not Guy de Maupassant told us that a married couple is in a permanent state of conspiracy against the rest of the world? Does not Miss Ellice Hopkins warn us against an egoism à deux, à trois, et à quatre? And even in the family itself there is danger of disintegration, as the Revolt of the Daughters too clearly shows.

No special section is devoted to liberty; but one gathers from some incidental remarks in the two very able chapters on "The Rule of the Majority in Politics" and "Party and Political Consistency," that the author does not share in the fears of those who look on full-blown democracy as fatal to individual freedom. Here also, so far as I can judge, he is right. Recent political history has shown us more than one instance of insignificant minorities growing into majorities, and of other minorities throwing off the party allegiance that seemed incompatible with the principles for whose sake alone it had been originally bestowed; while in social matters, in matters of opinion, and in matters of taste, the tendency seems to be rather towards undue licence than towards undue restraint. But such considerations, though helpful, do not carry us far enough; and it is to be regretted that our philosopher should not have found room for a more systematic discussion, from his own point of view, on the right of the community to interfere with the individual for his own good—or what is alleged to be such.

Perhaps the most appropriate place for a discussion of the point at issue would have been in the chapter on the "Rights of Man." Prof. MacCunn has little sympathy with the fanatics who drew up lists of such rights, talked as if they were self-evident, and habitually disregarded them in practice. But neither does he agree with Bentham, that rights have no validity or meaning except as constituted by positive law. Legal enactment may do no more than set the stamp of authority on previously existent rights, and there are rights generally recognised as such that do not need the sanction of the legislature at all. It seems not impossible for the opposing schools to come to an understanding on this point. It might be contended that unwritten rights are the creation of tacit agreements; that a claim made on grounds admitted to be the raison d'être of a law already in force may fitly be called equitable; and that for convenience of brevity an equitable claim may be quoted as a right.

If our author is a friend of democracy, he is certainly a very candid friend, who exposes its vices and dangers with no sparing hand. The classical topics of its assailants are no less familiar to him than the arguments in its favour; and his references range with equal sympathy over the whole literature of the subject, from the immortal prose of Burke's attack on the French Revolution to the immortal verse in which Burns embodies the fierce sarcasms of Tom Paine. In truth, Prof. MacCunn possesses that stereoscopic vision to which opposing views appear as opposite sides of a single concrete ideal. I may add that a too copious citation of authorities does perhaps some injustice to his own powers of original reflection and composition. But it has been well said that the man who never quotes will never be quoted himself. Prof. MacCunn has proved his title to be quoted not only by the transcription of many apposite passages, but by many a passage of his own in which the dignity and polish of the language are on a level with the loftiness and maturity of the thought.

ALFRED W. BENN.

The Diary of a Cavalry Officer in the Peninsular and Waterloo Campaigns, 1809-1815. By the late Lieutenant-Colonel William Tomkinson. Edited by his son, James Tomkinson. (Sonnenschein.)

THE astounding success of Marbot's Memoirs has been the cause of the publication of a host of volumes of reminiscences by French officers and soldiers who served in the wars of the Revolution and of Napoleon. None of these have equalled Marbot's book in popularity; for it has hardly been sufficiently recognised that that famous work owes its vogue even more to the exceptional literary skill of the author than to the romantic and exciting events which it describes. Marbot, further, was not a mere raconteur: he endeavoured to represent the spirit of the Grande Armée, with full knowledge that he was undertaking a task of historic importance. It seems to be partly due to the admiration excited by Marbot that Mr. James Tomkinson has published the diary kept by his father during part of the Peninsular war and the Waterloo campaign. The editor, at any rate in his Preface, compares the two writers, defending the simple style of his father's notes, and attributing the contrast between the narratives of the English and the French cavalry officers to their difference of nationality. There was no need for the semi-apology which Mr. James Tomkinson sees fit to make; for, utterly different as the Diary of a Cavalry Officer is from Marbot's Memoirs, it possesses the merit of giving to posterity a general impression of the spirit which animated English officers of Wellington's Peninsular army, just as Marbot has fixed with masterly ability the spirit of Napoleon's Grande Armée.

William Tomkinson went to the Peninsula in 1809 as a subaltern in the 16th Light Dragoons, now the 16th Lancers, a regiment whose uniform is perhaps better known to the public than that of any other, from its appearance upon the outside cover of John Strange Winter's military sketches. In his first engagement, during Wellesley's advance on Oporto, he was severely wounded, and did not rejoin his regiment until the spring of 1810, thus missing the battle of Talavera. Thenceforward he served continuously in the Peninsula for three years and a-half, obtaining his promotion to captain in 1812; and he returned to England, after the capture of San Sebastian, in October, 1813. It will be observed, therefore, that he had first-rate opportunities for studying the development of Wellington's army in the Peninsula, from the badly led and inexperienced troops of 1809 into the superb force which invaded France at the end of 1813, and which was then, in the words of its commander, "fit to go anywhere or to do anything."

From his subordinate position William Tomkinson was naturally unable to understand the meaning of the whole of the operations in which he was engaged, and it is to the military historians like Napier that one must look for a detailed account of the great war. But though a diary writer in Tomkinson's position affords no fresh contributions to our knowledge, he gives, what military historians unfortunately consider to be beneath their dignity, little touches of camp rumour and life in the field which add actuality to the bare knowledge of facts, and invest the leading individuals, whose personality in despatches and histories seems so shadowy, with the characteristics of humanity. The French are richer than we are in this sort of literature, and can show a dozen pictures of life in the Grande Armée to one which we possess on the Peninsular army. Sir Augustus Fraser's Letters, Larpent's Journal, Kincaid's Random Shots, with the charming echoes from the ranks by Sergeant Lawrence, Private Edward Costello, Rifleman Harris, and Quartermaster Surtees, comprise almost the whole of the camp reminiscences of the Peninsular War. With these books—some of them real classics, like Costello's, which ought to be reprinted—can for the future be ranked Tomkinson's Diary of a Cavalry Officer.

For Captain Tomkinson has remembered to set down many points forgotten by more serious historians. Take, for instance, his record of the cant names used in the army to describe the different divisions. Everyone at all conversant with the period knows that the Third, or Picton's Division, was called the Fighting Division; but few really well-read students in Peninsular annals could give the popular titles of the other divisions. According to Tomkinson, the First Division was called "The Gentlemen's Sons," presumably because it included the Guards; the Second was "The Observing Division"; the Fourth was "The Supporting Division"; the Fifth was "The Pioneers"; the Sixth was "The Marching Division"; the Light was proudly termed "The Division"; while of the Seventh it was said, "They tell us there is a Seventh, but we have never seen them" (p. 133). The whole volume is full of similar graphic touches illustrating camp life and camp opinion of dignitaries. In several passages mention is made of the incapacity and unpopularity of Major-General Slade, who for some time commanded a cavalry brigade; reference is made to Mrs. Dalbiac, who lost herself on the battlefield of Salamanca when looking for her husband; General the Hon. William Stewart is reported to have so plagued Wellington with plans for foolish attacks that Beresford was placed in command of the Southern Corps in 1811 (p. 73); Hill's nickname of "Daddy" Hill is duly noted (p. 108); Sir Benjamin D'Urban is stated to have been the officer who won the battle of Albuera (p. 103); Sir William Erskine is accused of having put in his pocket an order from Lord Wellington, which allowed the garrison of Almeida to escape, and of having thrown the blame on the Fourth Regiment, whose colonel committed suicide; while Major Lincoln Stanhope is sarcastically stated to have been promoted lieutenant-colonel, in reward for "the long campaign he has had in Bond-street since he left the Sixteenth" (p. 128).

While a hundred passages could be quoted showing that Tomkinson was a first-rate collector of camp gossip, he occasionally shows a deeper insight. It is well known to students of the Peninsular War that the English cavalry learned their business from the King's German Legion, a truth which is fully illustrated in Tomkinson's Diary. He shows also what admirable training both cavalry and infantry received in the work of war during the months that Lord Wellington held the lines of Torres Vedras. He makes many shrewd remarks on the disability under which the French laboured, owing to the hatred felt for them in the Peninsula, and shows a sound appreciation of the excellence of the Portuguese troops.

But the hero of the Diary, and therefore of the volume, is Tomkinson's dearest friend—Major the Hon. Charles Somers Cocks. Readers of Wellington's Despatches will remember the eulogistic language used by the usually cold Commander-in-Chief when reporting the untimely death, in action, of Major Cocks. A soldier must have been energetic and enterprising indeed to have won the regard of Wellington. The glimpses given of Major Cocks in Tomkinson's volume show that he well deserves to be honoured as one of the heroes of the Peninsular War; and a short sketch of his life by Major Hugh Owen, printed on pp. 212-218, was worthy of being reproduced. Major Cocks appears to have been the beau idéal of an English officer of the aristocratic type. He took the greatest pains to master the details of his profession, his personal gallantry was beyond dispute, and he was marked out for a successful military career. He was a typical English gentleman, as well as a most promising officer; and one cannot but regret, with Major Owen, that Napier did not devote one of his inimitable descriptive paragraphs to Major Cocks, to live for ever with the famous character of Colonel Lloyd.

In conclusion, the reviewer would not be doing his duty if he did not make some comment upon the innumerable misprints of proper names which disfigure the volume. It is such a welcome addition to the scanty English library of military literature that it is a pity more care should not have been taken in the work of editing. Possibly Mr. James Tomkinson may have been urged by a pious desire to preserve even the orthography of his father's MS.; but he would have done more honour to his father if he had taken the trouble to revise the spelling and correct obvious mistakes. The misprints may be counted by the dozen. "Frant" for Trant (p. 82); "Ball" for Bull (p. 87); "De Lerna" for D'Alorna (p. 96); "Durban" for D'Urban (p. 103); "Kemp" for Kempt (p. 131); "Bower" for Bowes, "Eaten" for Eben, "Soutag" for Sontag, "Houstoun" for Houston, and "Crawford" for Craufurd (all on p. 132); "Le Merchant" for Le Marchant (p. 133); and "Schovel" for Scovell (p. 156) are a few examples picked at random. Worse than misprints, because more misleading, are such errors as "Arthur" Paget for Edward Paget (p. 6) and Major-General "Osborne" for Major-General Oswald (p. 257). If another edition of this book be called for, as may fairly be expected from its genuine interest and value, Mr. James Tomkinson ought to secure the services of someone skilled in the history of the Peninsular War to revise his proof-sheets.

H. MORSE STEPHENS.

Adriatica. By Percy Pinkerton. (Gay & Bird.)

THERE are apparently two regions with which Mr. Pinkerton is intimately acquainted, Venice and the Emyrean. As the poet of both he presents himself in Adriatica. When, many years ago, that little cryptic volume, Galeazzo, first came to light, some who had a right to judge felt at once that Venice had found a poet in the Englishman who knew so well the pearly levels of the lagoon, the flaming glories of the sunset, the operations of the clouds to east or west. The Venetian poems appear once more in Adriatica, and re-awaken the pleasure and confirm the opinion which they evoked upon their first shy birth. The new poem, which strikes the keynote as it were, makes no unworthy prelude to the music which the volume contains; and it displays one of Mr. Pinkerton's salient qualities as a poet—a sense of space, caught no doubt from the vast Venetian plain, the broad lagoon, the mighty dome of the Venetian sky. He lies on the hills of Asolo, and

"Here from such height I survey
The procession superb of the clouds,
White heralds, foretoking storm;
As in phalanx august they approach
From the sun-smitten slopes or the sea,
As they meet and, dividing, descend,
While rain like a shadowy cloak
Covers the face of the hills."

Only a man who had actually lain on the slopes of Asolo, wandered through its chestnut groves, and dreamed away whole days in brooding contemplation above the boundless plain, could write with such direct simplicity, such certainty of touch as this:

"Prone on the thyme-covered slope,
Listlessly musing, I lie,
Vaguely remorseful, content
To claim for a while from the flowers,
From the leaves, from the purple expanse
Some eloquent message of peace."

And this mood, mingled of Matthew Arnold and Marvel, is repeated again with the same and even greater felicity of expression in that delicate poem upon the "Arbour." How refined, how graceful is this passage of reflection on Catarina Cornaro's sylvan home:

"Ah! she was wise; here one enjoys
Peace after clamour, after noise
Of cities, and the ceaseless strain
To win what one must lose again.
Am I not rich who hear the bees
Kissing those pale anemones
That make the grass about my feet
A coloured pavement rich and sweet;
Who see the birch-leaves on their stem
Shake as the wind goes over them:
Is not this opulence for me
Here to forget futurity,
And leave all idle questioning,
If life be just a trivial thing,
That they use best who multiply
Their pleasures in it ere they die,
Ignoring an eternity?
Is not this wealth, to bask supine
Beneath a roof of jessamine?"

There is surely a very real and very charming music in this passage. To our ear the violation of the rhythmical full stop at "futurity," and the change from largo to staccato in the next five lines, constitutes a flaw; but the author may plead that this was done with rhetorical intention.

Out on the lagoon the vision of the poet is just as sure. The scene is so, and we accept, though perhaps with a gasp, the "vermilion air" and the "lurid lakes"; for we know that we have seen them in the strange reflection of a flaming sunset upon sea and sky.

"Some eve, when from his burning chair"
The sun below Fusina slips,
And all the sable poplar tips
Wave in the warm, vermilion air,
The wind, the lips
Of the soft breeze with wayward touch
Shall tell thee all I long to own;
And thou, on lurid lakes alone,
Will say, 'Poor soul, he loved me much;
And he is gone.'"

But that touch about the behaviour of the sun, this "slipping" from his chair, leads us to the other section of Mr. Pinkerton's poems, that other home of his muse, the Emyrean. Here the tone is different, more passionate, less contemplative, though here again we feel the quality of space. Things are done on a large scale. The poet proposes to have a good time; accordingly

"No archangelic summons then
Shall rouse our fears;
No Michael trumpeting to men
Across the spheres" is to be allowed to interrupt; a fine image, reminiscent of Signorelli's frescoes at Orvieto. But, more than this—

"The archangels are envious Proud Michael will not speak."

Is sulky, in short; and why? Because he has had the shine taken out of him by Mr. Pinkerton's beloved. The way he behaves suggests a charming picture for Sir Edward Burne-Jones:

"Proud Michael on a rainbow
Rests both his silver thighs;
But who in heaven would look at him
When they could watch your eyes."

In his magnificent "Dream" the poet looks down first of all on London—and its sleepers—then he has a glance at Isphahan, and eventually gets high up above the clouds into a very rarified atmosphere indeed. He hears the Deity, or at least the demiurgus, hammering away at the making of man, forging the fate of the universe; then his love swims into view. Apparently she would not "answer to hie or to any loud cry," and he finds nothing more handy than a star wherewith to attract attention. This he shies at her, but misses; and she goes out. The picture is all so large, so far "above the smoke and stir of this dim spot which men call earth." These high jinks in heaven are exhilarating: there is imagination, space; one hardly knows whether to laugh or to cry. And listen to the style:

"Then all the world grew dim, but I could hear
The clangour of God's forges, and fierce flames,
Like crimson banners, streamed across the void;
And I beheld my white love wandering
Forlorn, along the lonely causeways of the sky.
Ah! so remote, so unattainable
She seemed in that dark instant of despair!
I called to her across infinity,
But the Creator's anvil drowned my voice;
I hurled a star in fragments at her feet,
Alas! she never heeded, never heard,
But passed in grave dejection from my sight."

Landor would not have scorned those last two lines; and Donne would have welcomed Mr. Pinkerton's "white love wandering Forlorn, along the lonely causeways of the sky," in spite of the audacious twelve syllables, hardly to be justified by the longest rhetorical pause after "Forlorn," possibly to be pardoned as a piece of what our author calls "delicious cheek."

HORATIO F. BROWN.

Witnesses to the Unseen. By Wilfrid Ward.
(Macmillans.)

(Second Notice.)

BUT Mr. Ward is too adroit a controversialist to permit the termination of the issue on any but his own side of the question to definitive foreclosure, as an inferior and more superficial pleader might have done. It is enough for him, precisely as it was for Newman in his Grammar of Assent, to bring his antagonist into a position, or I might say into a labyrinth, from whence the only logical or ratiocinative outlet is the acceptance of the conclusion which he has been continuously, if partially, holding up for his approval. The position is one well known to the Schoolmen, the most subtle of all the metaphysical controversialists that the world has known. The position is that of an unstable equilibrium, which may at any moment, or as the result of the merest accidental impulse, give place to the only enduring fixity possible under the given circumstances; or like a falling body, i.e., a body predisposed to fall, placed on the side of an inclined plane (it may be an avalanche or landslip in expectation, whose final giving way may alter the whole structure of the valley or landscape towards which it tends), an unexpected shower or gust of wind may effect the only possible equipoise, and induce the ultimate movement in a descent more or less long of shifting positions. Doubtless it is possible, when the body is large and weighty, and is for that reason possessed inherently of a sufficing incidence and centre of gravity—when, in other words, the bulk of intellectual power, or, physically speaking, of cerebral substance, is great enough to be self-asserting, it is capable of maintaining any position which it seems compelled by the laws of reason and sound judgment to take up. But such cases are somewhat rare; and for that reason no recourse has ever been more common among astute disputants, who know how to mingle finesse, subtlety, and indirectness with the other constituents of potent controversy, than placing their foes in a position which their own sense of consistency may suggest their evacuating at the earliest available moment. To quote Mr. Ward:

"Did Walton" [i.e., Mr. Ward's own impersonation] "think that his conversations with his friend had been useless? No. He was not a sanguine man as to the immediate result of such conversations. And he knew well that the initial stage of conversion depends on that grace which is given as a reward for earnestness, and which intensifies natural earnestness in its effect. But he did hold that, once that initial stage was reached, it was important that a man of active mind should not be hampered by any feeling that he might be surrendering to a wholly irrational impulse; and so he was, surprising as it may seem, not only not disappointed, but pleased beyond all expectation with the degree of acquiescence which Darlington had ultimately given to his principle."

What this degree of acquiescence was we find in a few sentences before (p. 304):

"The truth is that there was no radical change in his [Darlington's] convictions; and this from no halting in his reasoning, but from the fact of accepting Walton's analysis he detected a further consideration in his own mind—a further element in his own basis of unbelief which from the nature of the case Walton was unable to touch. To put it as shortly as possible, he saw that a 'wish to believe' of the kind fully explained by Walton was the reasonable attitude when a really promising clue to knowledge was found. This seemed plainly true in physical discovery, and he saw no reason to limit it to this one branch. He also, though not so readily, admitted to himself that religious knowledge must, if attainable, be a process of individual investigation and discovery, as appealing to much which a man must study in his own heart for himself. But the insertion of one little phrase into his admission will show how so promising a change of view collapsed completely so far as immediate change of convictions went. Darlington would have inserted between 'if' and 'attainable' the words per impossibile. That is to say, his original conclusion dwelt so strong within him as to take away from his mind the force necessary for applying Walton's principles. A promising clue which lighted up the mind with the hope of discovery should indeed give birth to the 'Wish to Believe,' but such a clue he had not found. [The italics are mine.] Truths about another world and the author of our Being were to him too hopelessly beyond the reach of the human mind to give him any zest in the inquiry. From several remarks which his friend made to him in the course of the afternoon, before he left Llandudno, Walton suspected his state of feeling even before Darlington had expressly acknowledged it to himself. And he saw that here was a radical defect quite outside the reach of all argument. 'I shall pray,' he said, 'that you may acquire enough seriousness and a sufficient sense of the need of religious knowledge and of the import of that part of your nature which should tell you that your search for it would not be vain to make you work at the matter in earnest. At present you are stagnant. If your study of everything else were handicapped by such a state of mind you would learn nothing. You have no real wish for knowledge in the matter.'"

I have quoted this passage because I regard it as one of the most important in the book. Especially does it reveal the author's insight into the necessary defects in his argument, as well as the subtleties with which it is connected. As my readers will see, the whole question hinges upon the emotional starting point of Belief. It is an inquiry how far such a starting point will direct us to what the author designates as "Witnesses to the Unseen." The history of all religious thought teems with examples of converts and perverts, in which the vehement desire to believe may be induced by questionable motives and aspirations; indeed, it may imply a certain amount of selfish and interested motives. Hence it may become a departure from the strict indifference or justice which should be the starting point for every man who desires to attain truth.

The peculiar danger is that it allows such scope for the seductive attractions of Romanism and certain altered forms of Christianity. But, in truth, Christianity (taken by itself) has no need of a pre-determination to believe. Like Truth, Virtue, or whatever else is self-obvious, Christianity is αὐτοδιδασκικόν. Its credentials are not greater or more compulsory ab extra than those apparent on its surface or inherent in its essential features and matter. Christ, in other words, does not wish our belief in Himself or His Gospel to spring from an a priori pre-resolved wish or desire, but from a simple instinct or intuition on our parts. Not only is He not eager to proselytise on His own behalf, but He makes it a reproach against the Pharisees that they were so suspiciously anxious to convert men to their own modes of faith and worship. His own position was a defiant appeal to truth as mutually understood by Pharisees no less than Himself. "Which of you convicteth me of error? and, if I say the Truth, why do ye not believe me?" It is just this fact—this attitude of sublime passivity—this abstention from undue anxiety to force our volition into a direction and energy harmonising with its own preconceptions—that creates the standpoint of pious indifference urged by Lamennais, or of philosophic Quietism set forward by Fénelon and Madame Guyon, and gives them their affinity with the teaching of Christ. A jury, passionately eager to find a particular verdict, would not be deemed for that reason more worthy of credence; and a scientific man, who started with the presumption of the truth of a certain theory, would not thereby be thought to have strengthened his position. Mr. Ward, indeed, distinguishes, in more than one place, the eager wish for the knowledge of the data available for the solution of the problem, and the wish that the determination should itself take a particular direction. There is one passage in particular which is not in harmony with the main ratiocination of his book, but in which he manifests himself as being more of the impartial logician than the passionate advocate. In mere fairness, it seems to me to deserve quotation, more especially as it contains the last sentences in the volume.

"There are many rival theories, and of none of them can it be said that the logical apprehension of their prima facie evidence is convincing. Consequently, the mode of procedure must be to choose what appears to be best, and then to throw oneself into it, and with the hearty wish to find it true and effort to master it; to study its credentials, not by apprehending their logic only, but by the personal appreciation and full realisation of the facts which the logic combines, and of facts which may be too inadequately, however unmistakably, seen for logic to combine them at all—facts of human nature, facts of history, phenomena in the working of the religion, which can only be taken in by one whose whole heart is in the matter, and which must ultimately, so far as reason goes, turn the balance which was left undecided by the prima facie aspect of verbal evidences as it existed patent to all alike" (p. 309).

Though somewhat involuntarily expressed, the animus of this passage is unmistakable—it is the animus of the whole book, which I think exaggerated: namely, the hearty wish to find it true must precede what appears to be best. On the other hand, the position of the philosopher is of another kind.

(1) The wish to believe may be induced by questionable motives, impulses, and aspirations: indeed, it implies a certain amount of selfish and, more or less, interested motives.

(2) The wish to believe may become an anxiety; and in this intensive, exaggerated form may act in a compulsory manner. The overmastering strength of volition is a principle of psychology which all the students of human thought have long since recognised.

(3) The making Deity or a religious creed of a specific form the object of a powerful wish seems to derogate from those grounds and aspects of faith which should be the inherent bases of our persuasion and their reception. Doubtless the wish may follow the grounds of belief and be actuated by them. (Indeed, this is their safer and more prudent course.) But when this wish is put forward as the main motive, the tendency is engendered of resting too exclusively upon it, and of allowing it to override all other motives and reasons. Imagine Deity, or Truth, or Duty, saying to its devotees: You have a wish to believe in me; that wish you should obey, irrespective of all other considerations whatsoever. Mr. Ward derives an adventitious advantage from the fact that it is Romanism which makes the supposed appeal to her devotees or partial adherents. Certainly the attractions of Romanism present a well-recognised origin, wherein to the mass of cultivated Christians the mere wish to believe may be so readily made to override the main and sober judgment of thoughtful humanity. The annals of Romanist biography prove how abundantly and insidiously the wish to believe in an infallible church—the unmistakable source and measure of all truth, the great self-contained and self-centred Church of Christendom—has impressed persons in whom the sentimental and ritual side of ecclesiasticism has overpowered the cold and calm reason by means of which all decisions as to spiritual truth should be determined. If it be said that the wish may unite with the reason in suggesting the conclusion, I grant that this may be so, but the truth when signified by its own existence and energy has no need of another volition beyond such a presentation. A man who is told to believe that two sevens are fourteen has no need of wishing that such may be the case; it is only when the conclusion is not so self-pronounced that the need of the volition becomes obvious.

As further corollaries from the foregoing conclusions we may also deny:

(1) That it is wrong to assign to Deity a desire that right belief is demanded of all men irrespectively of the methods by which it may be attained.

(2) We may also deny the assumption that all Christian evidences strike and influence those to whom they are submitted in precisely the same way. Thus, it is clear that some men may be moved by Newman's intellectual incidence, as evidenced by the Grammar of Assent, while others may be more influenced by the emotional force of Mr. Ward's volitional energy—the initiatory and preliminary "desire to believe."

I have accorded to this work more than customary space on account of its importance. It seems to me one of the most significant books on recent Romanist controversy. It sets forth and emphasises that point in the issue between Romanism and Protestantism which is most commonly overlooked. It illustrates that most operative of all causes for explaining the continued diffusion of Romanism among cultured and emotional persons. It lays stress on that argument which has been so efficacious in the past, and which must, as it seems to me, exercise even greater power in the future. Its parallelism to Newman's Grammar of Assent I have already indicated as the juxtaposition of the emotional to the intellectual causes of the progress of Romanism. The occult operation of the laws and methods of belief will always remain a field for the exercise of the subtlest and most delicate of mental procedures; and this is the reason why the Grammar of Assent will always lack its constructive portions, and the parts of speech of such a grammar will never evolve a syntax of connected and coercive rule, whereas the "desire to believe" will always appeal to the largest section of man's religious faith. It will never stand for demonstration, as Mr. Ward supposes, but it will occupy the position of an originating impulse. It can never become an actual witness for the Unseen (that is to say, taken by itself) but it can attest and indicate a direction as a witness for truth. It can never prove of itself even the existence of the Unseen; and its evidence in that respect must not only be halting and defective, but be charged with peculiar danger, because its undoubted suggestions may be accepted for more than they are worth. A bodily pain may not establish the fact of a disease, but it may point out, at least partially, the direction of further and more skilled investigation.

JOHN OWEN.

NEW NOVELS.

The Merchant of Killoyne. By Edmund Downey. In 3 vols. (Heinemann.)

The Confessions of a Currency Girl. By W. Carlton Dawe. In 3 vols. (Ward & Downey.)

The Star of Fortune. By J. E. Muddock. In 2 vols. (Chapman & Hall.)

A Banished Beauty. By John Bickerdyke. (Blackwoods.)

A Question of Casuistry. By Alec MacHeild. (Sonnenschein.)

In Due Season. By A. Goldwin. (Digby, Long & Co.)

Pharais. By Fiona Macleod. (Frank Murray.)

Uncle's Ghost. By W. Sapte, jun. (Friedrick Warne.)

Red Coats. By John Strange Winter. (White.)

MR. DOWNEY'S tale is valuable by reason of the light it throws upon the genesis of the Home Rule movement. He shows us how the conviction that nothing was to be gained by force deepened in the minds of the Nationalist party, until it gave birth to the alternative scheme of legislative separation. For the general reader the period dealt with is both too recent and not recent enough to excite supreme interest, though the vivid pictures of life in a Munster town a quarter of a century ago often rise to the dignity of literature. But, when a novel or play ends with a note of interrogation, the reader must be satisfied that this is not a convenient device to shirk technical difficulties. Of course, instances might be multiplied where the convention is not only artistic but inevitable. To suggest, if the suggestion be sufficiently potent, ethical and psychological problems, and leave them unanswered, is the very essence of literary art; but to arouse our interest in flesh and blood, as Mr. Downey does in the case of Denis O'Reilly and Maud Cleary, and then to leave us absolutely in the dark as to their future, is a lame way of escaping difficulties. The merchant of Killoyne himself, whose fortune has been created out of whiskey and chicanery, is well enough drawn; but we do not feel a tenth part of the interest in him that we feel in his refined and nervous wife, and in his two sons. His character is infinitely less complex. These, the wife and her sons, together with a gallery of Nationalists and a Resident Magistrate, are admirably portrayed. There is at least one really fine scene in the novel. Sir Patrick O'Flynn, a parvenu Whig landowner, lays bare the nakedness of his soul to his friend Colonel Cleary. Here we have subtilty of a high order.

There is much that is crude and superfluous, especially in the opening chapters, about The Confessions of a Currency Girl. But as the book goes on, it improves. The experiences of the heroine as an actress are so vividly presented as to make one believe they were derived from actual experience. Florence Hastings is the daughter of an ex-convict, a man of high birth, who in his youth enlisted in the army, and in a moment of uncontrollable passion resented the insults of a bullying officer by assaulting him. For this offence he is transported to Botany Bay. His children grow up in ignorance of this blot on their father's name; but they learn it all too soon, and with it comes the knowledge of their own hard lot. However, the utter hollowness of the ban is adroitly brought home to us when the son succeeds to the baronetcy, and the disgrace is annulled.

The story of the Mutiny, called The Star of Fortune, resembles the last two volumes, in that its value lies in the special knowledge of facts and locality possessed by the author. Mr. Muddock sets forth his matter attractively, and his details happen to coincide more or less with Col. Innes's account of the Mutiny, contained in his history of the Royal Munster Fusiliers. The plot is thin, the characterisation thinner. The heroine's father, William Dellaby, is by way of being a second Mr. Tanqueray; he refuses to allow his daughter to marry Jack Hallett, because of some real or imaginary liaison of the officer's early youth. Broken-hearted Jack volunteers for Persia. Hester Dellaby takes advantage of an invitation from her sister to go to Meerut, in the hope that fate may throw her with the man she loves. But it is not to be. Her warrior dies outside Delhi; and she falls to the lot of another officer, a gallant fellow enough. Of course, this may be natural, but it leaves rather a bitter taste in the mouth, the reason being that the author has no skill in psychological dissection. He is altogether too prone to a species of literary inflation; the haughty choleric father and the disobedient daughter have an extremely ancient flavour. But although this, and more than this, could be advanced against the book, it is undeniably pleasant reading for persons who have plenty of time on their hands, while the descriptions of the incidents of that Indian Reign of Terror are written with spirit and vivacity.

Mr. C. H. Cook's tale is sufficiently interesting, and so are his characters and situations. There is a good deal of the Bailey-Martin-cum-Jack Brag about three of the social adventurers who find themselves under the roof of a gentleman; but they are by no means so presentable as Mr. Percy White's hero, nor so adroit as Theodore Hook's. It is difficult to believe that gentlemen could foregather with cockneys of this kind masquerading as sportsmen. The truth is, we read and enjoy A Banished Beauty for its descriptions rather than for its story or its incidental stories, some of which, by the way, are just a little "risky." There is an account of a breakfast in a Highland manor house, which will make a robust man's mouth water. Sport of all kinds is described admirably. We try to forgive the author for the insensibility he shows in his narrative of playing a salmon, because of his genuine sympathy with the Crofters. To sportsmen the story may be heartily commended.

The duologue which prefaces Mr. MacHeild's sprightly essay in fiction is the best thing in the book. If a shorthand writer were present when Mr. Oscar Wilde or Mr.

Bernard Shaw was engaging an opponent, this is the kind of thing he would find on his writing-pad. Paradox and epigram: mere mental gymnastics. Apart from its verbal adroitness, the book is not always clever. Cyril Edmar disappoints us. Fearing him to be a prig, we find on p. 71 that he is also a snob, and before we have done with him he becomes an unmitigated bore. Mary Carling is a much happier creation. This psychological problem is well worked out. The man for love of whom she has attempted her husband's life, becomes hateful in her eyes as the visible embodiment of her temptation and sin—a fine Dantesque situation.

It cannot be said that the author of In Due Season possesses much inventive power; but she is a keen and accurate observer, and if she would use the pruning knife liberally she might find a public. Her novel is well written: it flows easily, its situations are natural, its men and women are real. So one goes on reading it, forgiving its prolixity and obviousness. The relationship between Dr. Arkwell and his patient, Agnes Evans, is artistically managed, and shows that the author is no mean student of character and motive. The reader is glad that the Doctor and his brave protégé find happiness in the end.

Some folks are sustained on bread and milk, some on raw beef-steak. In passing from In Due Season to Pharais, we leave, so to speak, the former dietary for the later. This is the third volume of the Regent Library, and it is as remarkable as its predecessors: it is saturated with the superstition and nature-worship of the Celt. Alastair Macleod, deeply loving Lora, his wife, discovers at the penultimate moment, when Lora's hour is upon her, that the mental sickness which has afflicted his ancestors is shadowing him. The one thought of the father and mother is how to spare the innocent child. There is only one way: they will die in each other's arms. Bound together by Lora's hair and strands of sea-weed, they lie down in a cave by the shore; having eaten of the fruit of oblivion, they prepare for death, assured that the incoming tide will sweep them into eternity. The idea is a fine one: the theme is as novel as its treatment is fresh, and it is handled with dramatic intensity. The critical reader is fretted now and again by curious lapses in style. Picturesque and well chosen language degenerates without warning into the thinnest colloquialism.

Of its kind, Uncle's Ghost is good. An old man capriciously disinherits his nephew, and leaves his wealth to a stranger. In another world he suffers qualms of conscience; so he re-visits "the glimpses of the moon" for the purpose of bringing his nephew and his heiress together. A series of rapidly shifting and entertaining situations have been devised by Mr. Sapte; and anyone who wants a book merely to amuse, without regard to far-fetched and impossible situations, may take up the volume confidently.

I have not read anything from the pen of John Strange Winter I like better than her little volume of short tales, entitled Red Coats. They contain as much as many of her longer stories, and prove that she possesses the power of compression, so rare in art. Sketches they are, as slight as can be; but they are true and sweet. Indeed, the sweetness of them, sometimes heightened by frolic, sometimes by pathos, gives them a peculiarly pleasant flavour. I thank John Strange Winter for having lifted the burthen of dull care from my shoulders for one or two good quarters of an hour.

JAS. STANLEY LITTLE.

SOME BOOKS OF TRAVEL.

Glimpses of Four Continents. By the Duchess of Buckingham and Chandos. (John Murray.) The happy inspiration which seized the Duchess of Buckingham, while watching the making of blue cotton pinafores for a little girl to wear on board ship, that she too might enjoy a trip to Australia and New Zealand was acted upon forthwith; and, accompanied only by Miss Wolfe Murray and a maid, she set out on a voyage of discovery to the Southern Hemisphere. The bright and gossiping letters which make up this book record her experiences. With no pretensions to inform or instruct her stay-at-home relatives, and written at the moment and often to catch the mail, these extracts from her journal are pleasant reading. From government house to government house, from Marble Hill in South Australia to Mount Macedon in Victoria and Hill View in New South Wales, the Duchess flitted as an honoured guest. She entered into every amusement with a verve that must have delighted her hosts: she boated in the creek, she played tennis when the sun began to be less fiery, and watched polo practice in the paddock, picnicked at the Jenolan Caves, cooked potatoes in the scrub, and drank "billy tea," and braved the heat and flies to sketch the famous red rocks near the Wentworth Falls. But when the Duchess reaches New Zealand, and joins Lord Glasgow's family party on board the Hinemoa in a voyage up the Sounds, the good spirits and bonhomie of the travellers were high. They land and explore the bush, catch penguins, bathe and swim like ducks, and enjoy the delights of life during a southern summer. There were hardships also to endure, and the long fifty mile drives were not without danger. Miss Murray's blandishments so wrought upon a nice young Irishman called Brady that he consented to let her take the reins while he took a back seat.

"The horses were accustomed to have the drag put on; but this lady driver had made herself comfortable with a thick rug over her feet, and when the critical moment came she could not find the skid, and, of course, the buggy touched a horse's hocks and he began to kick. We had some work to get them pulled up, and were already off the road, bumping over stones and grass tussocks. We lost one of the bolts of the cross bar and broke my umbrella; James [the maid] had hers caught by the wind and turned inside out."

During a visit to the scenes of the eruption at Tarawera and Wairoa, and the geysers—where the Duchess made the acquaintance of the ancient dame Hangaia Rangitani, known in the settlement by the shorter appellation of Cup o' Tea—she inspected a tribal meeting-house at Rotorua, and on entering, "an old native woman and a stalwart youth fought for the shilling we paid at the door, while a whole family encamped in one corner played nap for matches." From Auckland, via Samoa and Honolulu, the Duchess started on her homeward trip, and, conveyed in America in private drawing-room cars and other luxurious means of transit, arrived in Chicago in time to join with the Duke of Veragua and other notabilities in the opening ceremonies of the World's Fair at Chicago. No one can doubt that the trip was a successful one, and that the Duchess thoroughly enjoyed herself, and that her many friends must have welcomed the arrival of the mail which brought such amusing and sunshiny letters to the colder and more prosaic north.

On the Wallaby: or, Through the East and across Australia. By Guy Boothby. (Longmans.) Mr. Guy Boothby and his companion have made copy of a very remarkable trip. For forty-seven pounds odd, their total capital, they had themselves conveyed via Ceylon and Singapore to Batavia. There the supplies "petered out," but by recourse to a Batavian pawnbroker a further sum of twelve pounds was raised; and from that point the real interest of the book commences. The light-hearted tramps did at length engage in the fairly remunerative business of pearl-diving off Port Moresby, and the author did try his hand at walking the bottom of the sea clad in a diver's dress. The experience was disagreeable:

"As I landed on the bottom I felt a sharp plop in both ears. This was followed by a tiny flow of blood; and had I not been assured that this would prove the best thing that could happen to me, I should have been alarmed. As it was, I found it relieved the head and prevented any disagreeable sensations below. . . . I found myself upon a level plain, out of which rose here and there ugly rocks. True, there was a considerable amount of coral, but it was nothing to rave about; many fish there were, but they didn't gleam; occasionally I found tufts of seaweed, sometimes of a brilliant colour, but more often of a muddy and sombre hue; and instead of the white sand I had expected, I found a sort of yellowish mud, which was not at all to my taste. Now and again, at considerable distances, a few oysters were met with, and these I immediately secured. Looking up, I could plainly see the keel of the lugger moving through the water above me, while ahead the anchor, like a sign-post, dangled, inviting me to follow."

On their return to Thursday Island, the wanderers resolved to work their way down the eastern coast of Queensland by Cooktown, Cairns, and across to Normanton, and from thence on horseback at first, and afterwards by buggy due south, so that they should strike the Darling river and finish their toilsome journey at Adelaide. This would impress the reader as an impossible task for two impecunious tramps to attempt; but by degrees the secret leaks out. There were remittances to be received at divers towns; and though the starvation point was nearly reached, the orders were always cashed in time. The best part of the book is that devoted to tropical Queensland, and its sugar, rice, and mining industries. Places known to most only by quotations in the mining share list, such as Chartres Towers, Day Dawn, George Town, and the Croydon gold fields, were visited by the traveller; and an insight is given into the rough and ready life, and the successes and failures of the happy-go-lucky-inhabitants. The journey south, which day by day brought them nearer to the drought belt, tells of wonderful endurance both of men and horses. The horrors of a dry camp and empty water holes, parched earth and leaden sky, thirst with nought to slake it, and a toilsome and almost hopeless march on in search of water, are graphically described, and redeem the many faults of taste which disfigure the book. Suffice to say, the journey was safely accomplished; and Mr. Boothby and his companion survived, the one to write, the other to illustrate their adventures.

Pictures of the World. By Clement Scott. (Remington.) The year 1892-3 was especially a year of pilgrimages: the attractions of the World's Fair drew many travellers westward, but chiefly by the longer route, which is served by the P. & O. Steamship Company. Among the throng who started upon an expedition with Chicago as its Mecca, was Mr. Clement Scott, the critic and journalist. In this little book he gives us a series of pen-sketches of the places he visited and the adventures that befell him. At once bright, cheery, and just long enough to amuse without boring the reader with guide-book facts or tales of personal discomforts by sea and land, these "Pictures of the World," as the author calls them, leave a pleasant impression on the mind, as they take us with the rapidity and abruptness of a magic lantern slide from place to place. The tone of the letters is the lightest and most cheerful, and in all the hand of an accomplished journalist can be traced; but Mr. Scott can change from gay to grave under the awe inspired by that miracle in marble, the Taj Mahal. He thus describes the opaline tint of the dome as he beheld it:

"It is the sheen or gloss of velvety surface that we find on a white garden lily, on the back of a white swan pluming his feathers in the sun on some reach or backwater of our Thames at home. If the Latin poets in their fancy called such a white swan purpureus olor, they would describe the Taj as marmor purpureus. [Oh, Mr. Scott!] For it is marble that assumes colour by means of the glory of its perfect purity."

The interview with Arabi Pasha and his fellow exile, Ali Fehmy, recall to us the circumstances of 1882, which have all but passed from public memory. The plea for leave to return and die in Egypt is one that appeals to English people, and would possibly be granted did the state of domestic politics on the Nile so permit. Of Japan so much has been written in praise and appreciation that pages of blame and disgust come upon us as a surprise. Evidently the Japanese type of female beauty is repugnant to Mr. Scott; and he was, besides, unfortunate in his acquaintance with pert waitresses at tea-houses in the treaty ports or behind the wooden barriers of the Yoshiwara. Perhaps the little maids have been idealised; but to describe them as shuffling, undersized, featureless dolls, cobby in shape, as fat as dumplings, without a trace of grace in movement or carriage, is to paint the Mme. Chrysantheme too black—Vaccinia nigra leguntur. As correspondent for a well-known paper, Mr. Scott well fulfilled his mission at Chicago. He gives a capital description of the miserable May-day, in which the naked unpreparedness of the show was laid bare to the world with the assistance of President Cleveland and the Princess Eulalia of Spain; but it is somewhat appalling to hear that, within a few days, the Columbian Guards arrested within the Exhibition grounds the president of the Fair himself, the captain of their own guard, and America's honoured guest, the Duke of Veragua. Of what crimes they were suspected we are not informed. It is a pity that so amusing a book should be disfigured by a collection of woodcuts possessing the artistic merit of the hotel advertisements in Bradshaw's Guide.

On Short Leave to Japan. By Captain G. J. Younghusband. (Sampson Low.) So many books have been written of late about Japan that a close time ought soon to be proclaimed, and that country placed upon the prohibited list by publishers. Captain Younghusband made the most of his short leave, and visited the towns and places which lie within easy reach from Yokohama and the treaty ports. His style is easy and fluent; and had there not already been so many travellers working on the same lines who have exhausted the subject, the book might have taken its place among the readable travels in the East. However,

Japan has been overdone, and many others have trodden the same paths as the author and described the same scenes with greater freshness of touch. The last chapter in the book, the one that treats of the army, contains information of value now that Japan has entered upon a foreign campaign in the Corea. As a professional soldier, Captain Younghusband writes with authority; for every facility was granted him for studying the army both in and out of barracks. The report he gives is a favourable one, as regards both discipline and efficiency. Now that universal conscription has been introduced, the army numbers 228,848 men of all arms. Of these, 113,229 belong to the reserve and 53,137 to the territorial army. The number available for foreign service is, roughly speaking, 56,589. At the time of writing these lines the reserves have been called out; so that if the order is carried out Japan has, at the present moment, about 150,000 men under arms. The cavalry, mounted on unhandy horses of fourteen hands and under, are not a very efficient force. The long bodies and short legs of the Japanese do not adapt themselves to this form of military evolution; and in troop drill the ponies were generally masters of the situation. Captain Younghusband writes prophetically of "this young army so speedily and admirably raised. Like young institutions, it is longing for the day on which it may show its mettle. Any war against anybody, and on any pretext, would be immensely popular with all classes; and if that war chanced to be against China, the national enthusiasm would be unbounded."

But the conclusion he draws that China—"huge, unwholesome, semi-barbarous"—might succumb to Japan, if no timely help was given her, is not one which can be endorsed by students of the history of the Middle Kingdom. Against China, rich in money, in men, and in determination, Japan will dash herself in vain.

NOTES AND NEWS.

THE address delivered by Lord Salisbury at Oxford last month as president of the British Association will be published by the Roxburghe Press, under the title of Evolution: a Retrospect. The author has made some slight revisions in the address as originally delivered.

THE long-promised volume on Archery, in the Badminton Library, is now announced for September 25. The two chief contributors are Mr. C. J. Longman and Colonel H. Walrond; and it will have nearly two hundred illustrations.

WE understand that Mr. John Bartlett has been engaged for more than twenty years upon the Shakspeare Concordance which will shortly be published by Messrs. Macmillan & Co.—indeed, it may be regarded as an outgrowth of the Shakspeare Phrase-Book which he brought out in 1881. It will form a big volume of nearly 2000 pages; and a special feature of it is that references are given to the lines as numbered in the Globe edition. Though best-known in this country as compiler of that useful volume, Familiar Quotations (of which a ninth and final edition appeared in 1891), Mr. Bartlett is also senior partner in the publishing firm of Little, Brown, & Co., Boston, U.S.

MESSRS. CASSELL & Co. will be the publishers of the new Life of Defoe, by Mr. Thomas Wright, of Olney, the biographer of Cowper. It will form a demy octavo volume of nearly 500 pages, illustrated with seventeen plates. Mr. Wright claims that, as the result of his examination of MS. sources, he has been enabled to add many interesting details, and to settle some disputed points in the obscure life of his hero.

SIR EDWARD ARNOLD'S new book, Wandering Words, consisting of articles reprinted from various books and magazines, will be published by Messrs. Longmans early next week. It is illustrated with twenty-three plates from drawings by Mr. Ben Boothby and from photographs.

MESSRS. REMINGTON & Co. will publish next week a book by Lady Jeune, entitled Lesser Questions.

THE firm of George Newnes will publish on September 14 a handsome demy-quarto volume, entitled Queen Victoria's Dolls, containing forty coloured plates, with numerous other illustrations. It appears that thirty-two dolls are still preserved which the Queen, when a child, not only played with but dressed with her own hands. Most of them represent either historical personages of Elizabethan times or contemporary stage characters. The descriptive letterpress has been written by Miss Frances A. Low, who was granted special advantages for the purpose.

M. CALMANN LÉVY, of Paris, and Messrs. Charles L. Webster & Co., of New York, will, on September 19, publish Max O'Rell's book on the Colonies, La Maison John Bull et Cie. Messrs. Frederick Warne & Co. will issue the illustrated English edition on October 19. Max O'Rell will sail for America on October 31, on a fourth lecturing tour in the States.

SIR EDWARD SULLIVAN is engaged on a volume of Tales from Scott, which is intended to do for Scott what Lamb's Tales did for Shakspeare. It will be fully illustrated, and will be published by Mr. Elliot Stock.

MR. ALBERT F. CALVERT will shortly publish, through Messrs. Simpkin, Marshall & Co., a book entitled Western Australia: its History and Progress, dealing with the rise and growth of the colony, its aborigines, its mineral, pastoral, and agricultural wealth, and its fauna, pearl fisheries, harbours, commerce, manufactures, railways, governments, and public and private institutions. The volume will contain upwards of one hundred pictures illustrative of scenery and public buildings, a complete set of plans of all the goldfields, and a new map of the North-west district, from surveys made by the author on the spot. Reproductions of old colonial papers will also form a special feature.

MESSRS. SWAN, SONNENSCHN & Co. will publish the reports of the ladies who were deputed last year by the Gilchrist trustees to study female education in the United States. Miss Amy Bramwell and Miss H. M. Hughes write upon the training of teachers; Miss S. A. Burstall upon the education of girls; Miss A. Zimmern upon the methods of education; and Miss M. H. Page upon graded schools. Each of the four volumes will have a preface by Dr. Roberts.

MESSRS. HUTCHINSON will publish shortly a novel dealing with the woman-question from an orthodox point of view, entitled A Daughter of the King, by a author who calls herself "Alien."

A NEW novel, by Mrs. A. Phillips, entitled The Birth of a Soul, will be published by Messrs. W. H. Allen & Co. early next month.

MESSRS. OLIPHANT, ANDERSON & FERRIER announce for early publication a book of Scottish character sketches, by Mr. Andrew Smith Robertson, entitled The Provost o' Glen-dokie, Glimpses of a Fife Town; and also a novel, entitled Through Love to Repentance, by Maggie Swan.

MISS FRANCES E. WILLARD has written an Introduction to Dr. Lyman B. Sperry's Confidential Talks with Young Women, which Messrs. Oliphant, Anderson & Ferrier will publish this autumn.

A NEW serial story by Mr. Fitzgerald Molloy, entitled "In Shadow of Shame," will appear in Cassell's Saturday Journal, beginning with the third week of this month.

THE first edition of Mr. Henry Dunning MacLeod's Bimetallism is exhausted. A second edition is in the press, and will be ready shortly.

A NEW and revised edition of Mr. Scott Mathieson's book on The Church and Social Problems will be published by Messrs. Oliphant, Anderson & Ferrier in the course of October.

DR. LEE'S work, The Making of a Man, published by Messrs. Hutchinson & Co., has been translated into Japanese.

THE Author for September contains a table of the prices at which novels have been sold from 1750 (Tom Jones) down to 1860, compiled by Mr. R. English, of the British Museum. It appears that in early days the regular price was three shillings a volume, which gradually rose to half a guinea in about the year 1820 (The Pirate). The rise in price is ingeniously attributed to the growth of private book clubs and circulating libraries during the war with France, which impoverished the book-buying public. However this may be, the table of prices is certainly an interesting contribution to the history of English literature.

A CORRESPONDENT writes:

"There is an amusing misprint on p. 337 of Colonel H. M. Vibart's handsome volume on Archdiscombe, published this week by Messrs. Archibald Constable & Co. Augustus Abbott, one of five famous brothers, is described as having holed his battery in the First Afghan War with 'Yahoos or Galloways of the country.' Not every English reader will know that the word ought to be yabus."

UNIVERSITY JOTTINGS.

THE Scottish University Commissioners have issued an ordinance, empowering the University Court, after consultation with the Senatus Academicus, to open to competition by women such open bursaries, scholarships, and fellowships as they may see fit. By another ordinance, a large number of restricted and preferential bursaries at each of the four universities are thrown open.

THE council of the Royal Geographical Society has arranged that Mr. H. J. Mackinder's third course of educational lectures shall be delivered at Gresham College, in connexion with the London University Extension Society, on Mondays, at 8 p.m., beginning on October 8. The course will consist of twenty-five lectures, on "The History of Geography and Geographical Discovery." Ten lectures before Christmas will treat of the ancient and mediæval period; ten between Christmas and Easter will treat of the renaissance and modern period; and five after Easter will discuss certain selected authors, such as Marco Polo.

BEDFORD COLLEGE, London, has this year received £700 from the annual government grant to university colleges. The council propose to devote the money, in the first place, to reducing the fees now paid by students.

THE latest addition to the University of Chicago is a physical laboratory, built by Mr. M. A. Ryerson at a cost of 250,000 dollars (£50,000), and called after his name.

THE last part of the Transactions of the Cambridge Philological Society (London: Clay) includes an elaborate index to the whole of the third volume, which has been in course of publication since 1886. Among the other contents is a paper on "The Romaunt of the Rose," by Prof. Skeat, in which he gives examples of the emendations he has been able to introduce into the received text of the poem by a collation of the three authorities: Thynne's edition (1532), a Glasgow MS., and the original French text. He acknowledges the assistance of Dr. Kaluza.

WE regret to record the death of Dr. John Veitch, professor of logic and rhetoric at Glasgow, in the sixty-fifth year of his age. A graduate of Edinburgh, he was for some time assistant to Sir William Hamilton (whose Life he wrote, and whose posthumous Lectures he edited in conjunction with Dean Mansel), and afterwards professor at St. Andrews. His earliest books were translations of Descartes; but he is probably best known for his History and Poetry of the Scottish Border, of which a new edition appeared only last year.

ORIGINAL VERSE.

AT HARVEST.

If we have let our sunny springtime pass
With idle scorn of what the year might bring—
Have gathered flowers to toss them on the grass,
And only cared to hear the woodbirds sing;
If we have turned aside from sober truth
In bright delusive fairylands to stray,
And spent the golden promise of our youth
With selfish living and regardless play—
When shadows fall we shall be struck at heart
With bitter grieving for our blasted fate;
And then the lesson of life's sadder part
Will lead to agonised remorse—too late;
The land is barren now which once was green:
We never can be what we might have been.

ARTHUR L. SALMON.

MAGAZINES AND REVIEWS.

THE Expositor for September opens with a paper on the Exodus by Sir J. W. Dawson, who may be trusted to make many extraordinary statements, both on Egyptian and on Biblical matters, but should be listened to with interest when he speaks of the physical facts which he knows so well. Dr. Peter Bayne writes on the Secret of Jesus; Prof. Beet on the teaching of the Synoptic Gospels relative to the Second Coming; Prof. A. B. Bruce on St. Paul's conception of the Church; Dr. Stalker derives lessons from some of the Hebrew and Greek names for sin; Prof. Dodds briefly notices some recent publications, including the new edition of Scrivener's Introduction; and Dr. Swete on the history of the Apostles' Creed; while Mr. Conybeare supplements his article in the Expositor for last October on "Aristion, the author of the last twelve verses of Mark" by a translation of reviews of this article by Zahn and Resch. We shall hope to hear more from him on his present view of this important subject.

THE Theologisch Tijdschrift for September opens with an essay on "Philosophical and Christian Ethics," suggested by Stange's recent work (1892), by Dr. Groenewegen. The age of the Epistle of James is investigated by that able radical critic, Dr. W. C. van Manen, and the age and composition of the Apocalypse by Dr. Rovers. The former article well deserves attention: the courtesy and fairness shown to those from whom the author differs are most exemplary. It seems clear that the conservative criticism of English scholars will need to make more concessions to "freisinnig" continental researches. Among the notices of books we notice Prof. Oort's disorientating, but kindly, estimate of the translation of the Old Testament edited by Kautzsch, and Dr. Pijper's friendly notice of the new edition of vols. ii. and iii. of Möller's Church History.

THE COMING PUBLISHING SEASON.

MR. EDWARD ARNOLD'S ANNOUNCEMENTS.

"Memoir of the Right Honourable Sir John Alexander Macdonald, G.C.B.," First Prime Minister of the Dominion of Canada, by Joseph Pope, with an Introduction by the Baroness Macdonald, of Earncliffe, in 2 vols., with portraits; "Memoir of Maria Edgeworth," with a Selection from Her Letters by Mrs. Edgeworth, edited by Augustus J. C. Hare, in 2 vols.; "The Recollections of the Dean of Salisbury," with photogravure portrait; "Life of Alphonse Daudet," by Robert H. Sherard; "More Memories," being Thoughts upon England Spoken in America, by Dean Hole; "Common-sense Cookery," for English Households, based upon Modern English and Continental Principles, with Menus for Little Dinners worked out in Detail, by Colonel A. Kenney Herbert ("Wyvern"); "Select Essays of Sainte Beuve," chiefly bearing on English Literature, translated by A. J. Butler; "The Draughts Pocket Manual," by J. Cavin Cunningham; "The Double Emperor," a Story of a Vagabond Cunarder, by W. Laird Clowes, with illustrations by Fred. T. Jane; "Swallowed by an Earthquake," by E. D. Fawcett, with illustrations by H. Seppings Wright; "The Golden Reef," a Story of the South Seas, by Maurice H. Hervey; "Wine Glasses and Goblets of the Sixteenth, Seventeenth, and Eighteenth Centuries," by Albert Hartshorne, with many full-page plates and smaller illustrations; "Diana's Looking-glass, and other Poems," by Canon Bell; "Farm Dairying," by Jasper A. Stephenson; "Successful Bee-Keeping," a Guide for Amateurs, by Charles Nettleship White; three new volumes of the Children's Favourite Series—"My Book of the Sea," "My Book of Adventures," and "My Book of Travel-Stories"; "The Mystery of the Rue Soly," from the French of Balzac, by Lady Knutsford; "Dave's Sweetheart," by Mary Gaunt, new edition; "Tales from Hans Andersen," second series, with numerous illustrations by Miss E. A. Lemann; "Psychology for Teachers," by Prof. C. Lloyd Morgan, of University College, Bristol; "A History of English Metre, from the Earliest Times to the Present Day," by Dr. John Lawrence; new volumes of the International Education Series—"The Education of the Greek People," by Thomas Davidson; "Systematic Science Teaching," by Edward G. Howe; "Evolution of the Public School System in Massachusetts," by George H. Martin; "A School History of England, from the Earliest Times to the Present Day," furnished with Maps, Plans of the Principal Battle-fields, and Genealogical Tables, by C. W. Oman; "Arnold's School Shakespeare," edited by J. Churton Collins; "King Horn," edited, with introduction, text, notes, and glossary, by Joseph Hall; "Cynewulf's Phoenix," edited, with introduction, text, and critical notes, by Prof. W. S. Currell, of Davidson College, N.C.

THE S.P.C.K.'S ANNOUNCEMENTS.

"The Dawn of Civilisation" (Egypt and Chaldaea), by Prof. Maspero, translated by M. L. McClure, edited by Prof. Sayce, profusely illustrated; "Art Pictures from the Old Testament," a series of ninety illustrations from original drawings by Sir F. Leighton, Sir E. Burne Jones, E. J. Poynter, G. F. Watts, E. Armytage, F. Maddox Brown, S. Solomon, Holman Hunt, &c., &c., with letter-press by Miss Alef Fox; "Ecce Ancilla Domini: Mary, the Mother of Our Lord," by Mrs. Rundle Charles, author of "The Schönberg Cotta Family"; "Noble Womanhood," a series of Biographical Sketches, by G. Barnett Smith; "Hymns and their Stories," by A. E. C.;

"Sunday Evening," a Book for Girls, by Caroline M. Hallett; "The Churchman's Manual," a Book of Instruction and Devotion, by the Bishop of Jamaica; "A First Book on Church Principles," by Canon Garnier, with diagrams; "Lectures at Sion College"—"Faith," by the Bishop of London, "The Share of Parliament and Convocation in the English Reformation," by Archdeacon Sinclair, "The Prayer-Book as a Manual of Religious Teaching," by the Rev. G. W. Gent, "How to Read the Bible," by Archdeacon Thornton, "The Church and the Younger Laity," by Canon Browne, "On Inspiration and Old Testament Criticism," by the Rev. Dr. Wace; "The Old Churches of our Land; the Why, How, and When of Them," by Francis Baldwin, Architect, with numerous illustrations; "The Romance of Science," our Secret Friends and Foes, by Prof. Percy Faraday Frankland; "Edible and Poisonous Mushrooms," what to eat and what to avoid, by Dr. M. C. Cooke, with eighteen coloured plates illustrating forty-eight species; "Fruit Culture for Profit," for Farmers, Small Holders, Allotment Holders, Cottagers, &c., by C. B. Whitehead.

Illustrated Stories.—"The Vast Abyss," being the Story of Tom Blount, his Uncles, and his Cousin Sam, by G. Manville Fenn; "Attila and his Conquerors," by Mrs. Rundle Charles, author of "The Schönberg Cotta Family"; "James Godfrey's Wife," by Mrs. Henry Clarke; "One Step Astray," by Austin Clare; "Rick Ralton's Reconciliation," by the Rev. E. N. Hoare; "The Cruise of the 'Esmeralda,'" by Harry Collingwood; "The Two Clippers," by F. Frankfort Moore; "Farmer Goldworthy's Will," by Mrs. Isla Sitwell; "John Maillard," by Mrs. E. Newman; "Miss Bright's Guardian," by Alice F. Jackson; "A Hero's Experiment," by Helen Shipton; "A Life's Eclipse," by G. Manville Fenn; "Jenny Dear," by the author of "The Squire of Bratton"; "Midshipman Archie," by Annette Lyster; "The Burglar's Accomplice," by Beechwood; "Afterthought House," by E. Everett-Green; "As Between Man and Man," a Lancashire Picture, by Crona Temple; "Crossing the Ferry; or from Old England to New Brunswick," by Archdeacon Wynne; "Enchanted Ground," by Catherine E. Smith; "Mrs. Heritage," by F. E. Rode; "Only a Lad," by Margaret Keston; "Ralph Clifford," a Tale of Country Life in Virginia after the Civil War, by Archdeacon Wynne; "A Heart of Gold," by C. Selby Lowndes; "Can She Forgive?" by E. S. Curry; "Charlie Trench," by the Countess of Home; "Master Molyneux," by Lady Dunboyne; "Primroses," by Mary Bell; "Was it in Vain?" by G. E. M. Vaughan; "A Steep Road," by C. M. MacSorley; "Dear Granny," by C. E. M.; "Patty Burton," or, the Ninth Commandment, by F. E. Reade; "The First Cruise of the Good Ship 'Bethlehem,' and a Woodland Choir," by L. B. Walford; "The Young Pirates," a Story for Boys, by A. Eubule Evans; "Three Little Wanderers," by Christabel R. Coleridge; "Winifred Leighton," by H. S. Streatfield; "Denny Dick," by Mary Bell; "Old David Wright and Minnie's Answer," by the Rev. W. J. Bettison; "The Orderly Officer," by Harold Avery; "Paul's Partner," by Mary Roding; "An Unwritten Tale," by Jetta Vogel; "By Hook or by Crook," and five other stories in a volume, by Agnes Giberne.

MESSRS. A. D. INNES & CO.'S ANNOUNCEMENTS.

Novels.—"My Lady Rotha," a Romance of the Thirty Years War, by Stanley Weyman, with eight illustrations by John Williamson;

"Lot 13," by Dorothea Gerard; "Seething Days," a Romance of Tudor Times, by Caroline Holroyd, with eight illustrations by John Williamson; "6000 Tons of Gold," a Romance of Hard Cash; "Half a Hero," by Anthony Hope, new edition.

Story Books.—In the Tip-Cat Series—"The Satellite," by The Hon. Eva Knatchbull Hugessen; "Catherine," by F. M. Peard; "Hollyberry Janet," by Maggie Symington, (Aunt Maggie). In the Roseleaf Library—"Happy Go Lucky," by Ismay Thorn, illustrated by A. Bauerle; "The Real Princess," by Blanche Atkinson, illustrated by Violet and E. Holden; In the Dainty Books Series—"Moonbeams and Brownies," by Roma White, illustrated by L. Leslie Brooke; "Toby," by Ascott R. Hope, illustrated by Edith Ellison; "Messire," by Frances E. Crompton, illustrated by J. Johnson.

Miscellaneous.—"Broomieburn," Border Sketches, by John Cunningham; "Verse Translations from Greek and Latin Poets," by Arthur D. Innes, sometime Scholar of Oriel College, Oxford.

SELECTED FOREIGN BOOKS.

GENERAL LITERATURE.

BRETON, L. Du Rôle des Fortés en temps de guerre. Paris: Baudouin. 4 fr.
HUSOVIANI, N. Carmina, ed. J. Pelozar. Krakau. 3 M.
MAURER, K. Die Huldar Saga. München: Franz. 3 M.
MOUSBAU, Adr. Les Saint-Aubin. Paris: Lib. de l'Art. 4 fr. 50 c.
RICARD, J. Acheteuses de Rôves. Paris: Calmann Lévy. 3 fr. 50 c.
SECKÉ, L. Œuvres Moissels de Joachim du Bellay. Paris: Lechevalier. 25 fr.

HISTORY, ETC.

SCHMIDT, E. Vergeschichte Nordamerikas im Gebiet der Vereinigten Staaten. Brannschweig: Vieweg. 5 M.
SCRIPTORES rerum polonicarum. T. XV. Krakau. 14 M.

PHYSICAL SCIENCE AND PHILOSOPHY.

BARILLOT, Ernest. Traité de chimie légale. Paris: Gauthier-Villars. 3 fr. 50 c.
CAJAL, S. R. y. Die Retina der Wirbelthiere. Wiesbaden: Bergmann. 19 M. 60 Pf.
HEPPE, anatomische. 1. Abthg. 12. Hft. Wiesbaden: Bergmann. 18 M.
KATALOG der Bibliothek der k. Leopoldinisch-Carolinischen deutschen Akademie der Naturforscher, bearb. v. O. Grulich. 5 Lfg. Leipzig: Engelmann. 3 M.
SCHWABZ, W. Beiträge zur Kenntnis der umkehrbaren Umwandlungen polymorpher Körper. Göttingen: Vandenhoeck. 2 M. 40 Pf.

PHILOLOGY, ETC.

CORPUS inscriptionum latinarum. VIII. ii. Inscriptionum provinciae Numidiae latinarum, edd. R. Cagnat et I. Schmidt. Berlin: Reimer. 22 M.
GRIESE, F. Untersuchungen üb. die 'Addäa' auf Grund v. stellen in altarabischen Dichtern. Berlin: Calvary. 2 M. 40 Pf.

CORRESPONDENCE.

THE PEOPLING OF AMERICA: A NEW THEORY.
London: Sept. 1, 1894.

Prof. Otis T. Mason, of the Smithsonian Institution, has just issued, in separate form, the paper which he contributed to the July number of the American Anthropologist on "Migration and the Food Quest: a Study in the Peopling of America."

Like so many of the author's previous writings on the early history of man, this paper is marked by striking originality; and whatever be thought of the theory he advances on the peopling of the New World, none will deny its highly suggestive character. Here he decidedly leaves the beaten track, and attacks the difficult problem of prehistoric migratory movements from a distinctly novel standpoint.

Water, it is argued, yields the easiest food and means of transport, as well as the materials of all the earliest arts and industries: hence coastlands, and especially estuaries teeming with animal life, first attracted human settlers; and on this ground Morgan made the Columbia estuary the chief starting-point of tribal dispersions over the North American continent. Following up this line of argument, Prof. Mason now reasons with much learning and ingenuity that the Columbia river, or some neighbouring point, may have been reached at a very remote period from Indo-Malaysia by primitive seafarers in rude open boats skirting the East Asiatic and North-west American seaboard, and that such voyages may have been constantly made thousands of years ago, until the route was interfered with by Chinese and other civilised settlers spreading from the interior of Asia seawards. Such a route "might have been nearly all the way by sea. It could have been a continuously used route for centuries. Until interrupted by later civilisations, it might have been travelled over for thousands of years. It lies absolutely along a great circle of the earth, the shortest and easiest highway upon a globe." Reference is made to the analogous case of the British Columbian Haida Indians, who for ages have annually voyaged in their frail craft five hundred miles southwards to Puget Sound in quest of clams and oysters for their own consumption and for trade.

The separate marine areas, each almost an enclosed sea, following continuously along the track, are stated to be the North-Eastern Indo-Malayan Archipelago, the South China and Malay Seas, the East China and Yellow Seas, the Japanese and Tartary Seas, the Okhotsk Sea and environs, the Behring Sea, with its bays, the Alaskan Sea and inlets, the Thlinkit-Haida Sea, the Vancouver Sea, and the Columbia basin. The same great circular movement, it is added, would go on, so as to include the headwaters of all the Rocky Mountain streams, the Great Interior basin, the Pueblo region, Mexico, Central America, Ecuador, and Peru. Here are everywhere the required conditions of abundant food, easy conveyance, aided by marine currents, favourable winds and temperature, and so on; while the existence of the great prehistoric highway itself seems indicated by ethnical and linguistic affinities along the line of primeval traffic, similar social institutions, arts, and industries of too striking a nature to be explained otherwise than by actual contact. These and other points are all carefully worked out, the obvious difficulties and objections being also frankly acknowledged and discussed. The conclusion is stated in plain language, thus:

"During the centuries in which Europe was working out of her earliest Stone Age into her renaissance, certainly for three thousand years or more, America was being steadily and continuously peopled from Asia by way of its Eastern shores and seas from the Indian Ocean. Subsidiary movements in the way of offshoots from this migration, contributions to it and barriers to its progress, took place up and down the rivers and in the seas of India, China, Mongolia, and Siberia."

Altogether the essay, apart from its refreshing novelty, is well worth the attention not only of professed ethnologists, but also of archaeologists and all interested in the early history of mankind.

A. H. KEANE.

AN ATTEMPTED CHILD MARRIAGE NEAR LEOMINSTER in 1575.

Leadbury: Aug. 28, 1894.

The Worcester Diocesan Registry has several volumes of Depositions in trials in the Bishops' Court from 1560; but in the earliest ones that I have examined I find no case of child-marriage, though there is an attempt at one. The little girl, however, between eleven and twelve years old—just under the legally marriageable age—refuses her evidently older intended husband, saying that a master and mistress are fitter for her than a husband, and asking her father to leave her alone, and let her be at liberty as to marriage.

F. J. FURNIVALL.

(Worcester Diocesan Registry, Deposition—Book II.)

Alice Aston v. John Smith—Depositions made
Nov. 3, 1575.

The plaintiff's mother, Eleanor Aston, of the parish of Yorpolle, Herefordshire, aged fifty-seven, deposes:

"That there was a communication of matrimony to be had betwene the said John Smith and the said Alice Aston, by their parentes and fryndes: but yet the said Alice, beynge then presente, dyd not consente or agree to any suche matrimony . . . [and] 'after the said comlycacion' for matrimony had, as is aforesaid, the said Alice Aston beynge of the age of xj yerres or thereabouts, in the house of John Corfylde . . . her parentes wolde have her marryed to the said John Smythe, [but] the said Alice then and there said—beinge abashed—that 'a master was more meete for one of her yerres then a husbnde; and thereupon dyd seace, without any contracte of matrimony or further comlycacion. . . . [also] this deponentes husbnde dyd withsay—in this deponentes heringe—against her said daughter, that she beynge soe yonge of Age, wolde not that she shulde be marryed to the said John Smith . . . [further] this deponent and her said husbnde wolde have had the said Alice, by their meanes to be marryed to the said John Smith, she being in the age above deposed: to the which thinge to be borne [? MS.], as this deponent saith, the said Alice dyd refuse to be donne. . . . [also] that Richard Smith, brother to the said John Smith, heringe comlycacion in the said John Smythe's fathers howse in Yorpolle, for a conclusion for the Covenantes for the married [= marriage] betwene the said Johu and Alice, in his Rasshenes said, that if the said John wolde have a wiffe, he shulde have gotten a womanlyke woman, and not a gerle, as the said Alice then was. . . . [and] that about three yerres agoe nowe last paste, the said John Smith, in Yorpolle aforesaid, at the dwelling howse of Thomas Aston, the said Alice grandfather, her said grandfather said to the said John Smith, 'thow arte not worthy to have my cozen [= granddaughter], for that thow haste made a Ryme that I shulde burne in hell; and that then and there the said John Smyth said that he wolde not have her, but that he had lever marry with a bytche then marry with her, the said Alice. . . . [also] that, after the premisses, the said John Smith—forgoinge the the said Alice—was a shuter to be marryed to Alice Mylward of Yorpolle in the dioces of Hereford; and after that, to one Johan Cowewane of Aston in the said dioces of Hereford, as it was then commonly known amongst the people in those parties. . . ."

Thomas Aston, of Yorpolle, husbandman [agricola], aged fifty (the girl's father), says

"that there was Communycacion of matrimony to ensue betwene the said Alice and the said John Smythe, by their fathers and kynnesfolke, but the said Alice wolde non consent or agree thereunto, then beynge presente . . . [and] after the sayd communication of matrimony to be had betwene the said Alice Aston and the sayd John, this deponent and his wiffe wolde have had the said Alice Aston to have marryed with the said John, in John Corfildes howse in Lemster, in the dioces of Hereford[d], the said Alice then beynge abowte xij yerres of Age; then and there the said Alice, beynge of a small Age, and but a gerle, was abashed, and said that 'a master and a dame were more meter for me then a husband,' in the presence and heringe of this deponent and his wiffe, Roger Croue and Edward Smith. . . . [further] for that this deponent and his wiffe, [and] the said John Smith and his fryndes cowlde not agre upon Covenantes for marriage to ensue betwene the said John Smith and Alice Aston, and that thereupon this deponent dyd withdrawe his godewill and mynde from marriage to ensue betwixte them; and that the said Alice, beynge of the tender age aforesaid, willed this deponent to lett her alone, at her libertye from marriage. . . . [and] this deponent dyd say to the said Alice 'if she wolde not be ordered by him, that she shoulde have nothinge that he coulde doe for her' . . . [also] that Richard Smyth, brother to the said John Smyth, said in the heringe of this deponent, 'his wiffe, Richard Smythe his father, in the dwellinge howse of the said Alice Richard Smyth his father in Yorpowlle, said to the said John, 'You are abowte a wise bargayne! if you wolde have a wiffe you shulde have gotten a womanlyke woman, and not a gerle suche as the said Alice is' . . . [also] the said John Smyth by noe meanes, nor tokens, nor giftes, dyd give (to this deponentes knowlege) to goe abowte to obteyne the love or affection to the said Alice; but, as this deponent hath hard say, the said John Smyth dyd make oprobrius Rymes and songes in depravyng of the said Alice and her fryndes, for the space of iiij or fyve yerres togethether, before this shute began . . . [and] he saith, abowte iiij or fyve yerres togethether, after the premisses, the said John Smith dyd geve over his shute to the said Alice, and was a shuter to have marryed with one Alice Mylward of Yorpowlle in the dioces of Hereford; and after that, to one Johan Cowewarne, of Aston, in the said dioces, to have marryed with them, fyrste to the one, and then to the other, as yt was and is commonly known in all the Countrey there. . . ."

THE ETYMOLOGY OF "TANK."

Shottersmill, Surrey: Aug. 23, 1894.

There is an elaborate note on this word in the Anglo-Indian Glossary of Yule and Burnell, but it does not appear to be conclusive. Perhaps the following extract from the Khalisat-at-Tawarikh, a Persian geography and history of India written by Sujan Rai of Batála, in 1696, may throw some light on the derivation. The passage occurs in his description of the province of Ahmadabad—i.e., Gujrat:

"Some wealthy people construct places under the level of the surface, and so daub them with lime and plaster that the rain water comes into them clear and pure—these tekhkhana being made like havz (reservoirs). Such constructions are called tankha in the language of the country, and the water of them is drunk the whole year round."

The passage may also be found in the Araish-i-Mahfil, and in Major Court's translation thereof; but Sher Ali does not seem to have rendered Sujan Rai's words quite correctly. The word which I have rendered "place under the level of the surface" is in the original tah-khana. This usually means a vault or cellar; but here I think it clearly means a space open to the sky, and the word tah-khana is only used to denote that the soil was excavated. The authors of the Anglo-Indian Glossary seem to think that the word was only applied in Gujrat to places inside of houses; but this does not appear to be Sujan Rai's meaning, and his speaking of them as the work of wealthy people would imply that they were of considerable size.

The important point is to know if the word tankue is to be found in Portuguese before the beginning of the sixteenth century. If it is not—and Yule and Burnell say that they are not aware of any instance of its having been used by any author before the opening of communications with India—then the word was probably borrowed by the Portuguese from the inhabitants of Surat.

H. BEVERIDGE.

THE OGHAM X AT DONARD.

Cambridge: August 23, 1894.

I am afraid I did not make my foot-note on the value of X clear enough. My contention was that, while Y is a convenient transliteration for this character wherever it occurs, it is never sufficiently guttural in its sound to express it exactly. Thus, we could never suppose Toicayi to be pronounced in such a manner as to make it interchangeable with Toicaci. That X was a guttural consonant whenever it was a consonant at all I have long felt convinced, and (with the single reservation here mentioned) Y seems to me to be as close an equivalent as our alphabet can afford. It has the advantage of being, in different connexions, consonant, semi-vowel, and vowel, as was X; of being a single character (unlike CH or GH, the alternatives), as is X; and of not being required to represent any other character in the Ogham scale.

* For "communicacion."

I do not feel equally sure, however, that the sublinear X and the horizontally crossed X also = Y. These characters are carefully distinguished in the diphthongal scale. Why not also in the consonantal? It must, however, be admitted that the data are at present too scanty to argue one way or another. So far the sublinear X is only found on two stones: at Crickhowel and Killeenadreena—possibly also at Donard. At Crickhowel the Latin inscription positively asserts that it = p; but neither of the other inscriptions affords any satisfactory clue. It is of course conceivable that the Crickhowel engraver invented an arbitrary sign to represent a letter not occurring in his native alphabet—a sign possibly suggested by crossing two v's—but what did the Killeenadreena engraver mean? The matter is further complicated by the evidence of the Kenfig inscription, if the broad arrows in that long-suffering legend be really p's, as the most probable reading requires. But until some more satisfactory evidence is forthcoming, we cannot assert that the letters are actually independent; on the other hand, I do not think we are justified in identifying them. Until fresh discoveries are made, we can hardly pass over the Crickhowel Stone, doubtful as it is, and must accept its evidence that the sublinear X = p—of course tentatively, as Lord Southesk says.

I hinted at some such division of the main part of the Donard inscription as lagini Xoi in my letter. Reading X as p, I suggested that the last three letters might be the poi which some authorities see in the Monataggart inscription; but personally I have little faith in the existence of this word,† and have no desire to insist on it. In any case, there is not room for such a long word as Xoinetati, for the inscription runs lagini Xoi magi, &c.

In conclusion, I must thank Lord Southesk for his kind criticisms on my letter.

R. A. S. MACALISTER.

SCIENCE.

Studies in Forestry. By John Nisbet, of the Indian Forest Service. (Oxford: Clarendon Press.)

THESE Studies consist of a short course of lectures delivered at Oxford in 1893. They treat wholly of tree-growing for profit rather than beauty—of sylviculture, that is,

* O'Donovan's horizontal line must, I fear, be looked at sceptically.

† Two stones have a bearing on this question, if the published copies be reliable. These are the ninth Ballintaggart inscription, Lminacea yi Maggi muoi, and the fourth at Monataggart, Vergoso maci Lominacca. Here the apparent identity of the first name in the one with the second in the other seems to separate out a word yi in the Ballintaggart Stone. This may = yoi at Donard.

‡ Mr. Brash, I think, has misled Lord Southesk into a slight error regarding the third Monataggart inscription. The last word is Trenalugos, not Drenalugos: I have examined the stone over and over again, and there can be no doubt of this reading.

rather than arboriculture. The principles of forestry are laid down here much as they have been prescribed in German books and practice, and the lessons which the author enunciated in his British Forest Trees (reviewed in ACADEMY, July 15, 1893) are deepened and expanded.

To many tree-planters forestry is a matter of traditional practice, while pruning is exercised in the most arbitrary manner by any labourer who can wield an axe. That there should be a regular science of forestry, depending on principles of soil and aspect and nutrition, affected by the kindred sciences of fungology and entomology, and nicely calculated so as to account for every square yard of space, and to secure from it the highest profit—is a revelation to such people. All these novel teachings are lucidly drawn out by Mr. Nisbet, together with considerations on the formation and regeneration of woodland crops, on the effects of under-planting, and on the fungoid diseases which so frequently ravage the planter's nurseries. Most of all, perhaps, does he insist on the advantages of mixed timber-crops over "pure" woods—i.e., woods formed of one species only. Sir Herbert Maxwell, in the Nineteenth Century for 1891, espoused the other view, because "pure forest is much more easily tended than mixed plantations, and the timber is more readily marketable"; but Mr. Nisbet shows conclusively that his own view is more correct. Mixed forests excel pure ones in the supply of leaves to form humus and in their keeping the soil cool round the trees' roots, and because a greater density of crop is obtainable. Besides this, they are much less exposed than pure forests to dangers from external causes, whether organic or inorganic. The economic tending of mixed crops, too, can be more profitably conducted. Even empirical tree fanciers know that the practice of growing mixed woods possesses special advantages, as trees of one and probably a commoner species protect others by acting as "nurses" to them until experience shows that it is better to cut these out. All such questions are fully discussed by Mr. Nisbet.

Considerations on forestry force themselves unpleasantly upon many landholders who cannot make their farms pay at present. A writer in the Field paper for May 26 goes so far as to lay down unhesitatingly that "where a rent of 10s. per acre cannot be got, such land would realise a larger profit under a crop of suitable trees." The great drawback is, of course, the long time which must elapse before any returns can be obtained. Arable land is fast disappearing throughout the country, while there is an increase in the value of timber. Four hundred and seventy square miles of woodlands are to be found already in the United Kingdom, the south-eastern corner of England being most thickly covered with forests; while in Scotland, on account of recent planting, throughout Inverness-shire alone 169,000 acres of woodland may be seen. Mr. Nisbet would have chairs of Forestry established at the chief educational centres in the kingdom, to correct unintelligent planting for the future, teach the management of woodland estates, and show how their produce can be brought to market most profitably. Trees must possess high specific gravity, be long, straight and bulky in the bole, with few knots and branches, if they are to command a ready sale. Deterioration of soil in high forests must be guarded against by growing a sufficient leaf-canopy, and taking measures that the natural riches procured by the decomposition of the dead foliage should not be dispersed by wind or other agency. The beech tree is a most valuable agent in forestry. It shades, protects, and furnishes abundance of leaf-mould by its annual leaf-fall. On the continent it is deemed indispensable in woodlands.

Tree pruning is treated scientifically by Mr. Nisbet, and his remarks well deserve the attention of all timber growers; he insists, too, on the advantages of under-planting. This course improves the stems of trees by making them less tapering, and therefore of more value commercially. It increases the quantity of dead foliage, too, in a wood, and, as it prevents this from being scattered by the winds, greatly favours the production of humus. The chief fault of British forestry at present is deemed by Mr. Nisbet to be the thinness of its timber crops. Thus the productive power of the soil is not sufficiently called into play. The insect enemies and fungoid diseases of trees are described at great length, and such remedies as can be used pointed out.

The influence of German forest-craft is seen in every page of this book. Investigations in that country have been far more searching than any which have been pursued in England. Before long our traditional systems of forestry must be remodelled, and more attention paid to the scientific side of tree-growing. Mr. Nisbet's book stands by itself in acquainting English foresters with what has been done on the continent. It is thus of national importance; and lovers of Oxford must needs rejoice that Alma Mater has originated these lectures, which ought to bear abundant fruit in the future. The little volume is simply a necessity for all who would treat woodlands carefully in order to obtain the greatest profit from what is, after all, as much of a crop as wheat, although the farmer has to wait an indefinite time for his harvest.

M. G. WATKINS.

CORRESPONDENCE.

THE ABYSSINIAN INSCRIPTIONS OF MR. THEODORE BENT.

Saaz, Bohemia: August 12, 1894.

Prof. D. H. Müller's paper on the "Epigraphic Monuments of Abyssinia" in the Denkschriften der Wiener Akademie der Wissenschaften has hitherto been noticed only by myself (Bemerkungen zur Geschichte Altäthiopiens und zu einer sabäischen Vertragsinschrift, Saaz), and by Prof. Nöldeke (in the Z. D. M. G. xlviii. pp. 367 sq.). I am gratified at finding that the celebrated Strassburg scholar agrees with me in several points. More especially he has criticised certain philological statements of Prof. Müller. Thus, he has pointed out that the two Ethiopic inscriptions in Sabæan characters have an m at the end of each word, which is erroneously explained by Prof. Müller sometimes as a representative of the mim-nation, sometimes as an enclitic pronoun mā or mū. The character, however, must be regarded as indicating the end of a word, like the vertical line at the end of Sabæan words, or the double point at the end of Abyssinian words. I have occupied myself exclusively with the chronology of Mr. Bent's inscriptions, and have made it certain that all the royal texts among them hitherto known belong to the age of King Aizana, whereas Prof. Müller transfers to the fifth century those which are written in Ge'ez. Similarly, I have shown that the inscription of Adulis belongs, not to the first century as Prof. Müller believes, but to the third. As for Mr. Bent's inscription No. II., I have explained that it should not be treated as a historical one, since the royal name contained in it is uncertain. Now, however, I believe that the name can be recovered, though, in this case, it is necessary to consider Prof. Müller's facsimile as incorrect or imperfect.

In the first and, therefore, most important line of this inscription fourteen letters are preserved. Prof. Müller restores and translates: "This throne Ela Amida, lord of Q—, erected and set up," supplying nine letters at the beginning of the line. A careful examination of the facsimile shows that this restoration is impossible, since it is clear from a very obvious restoration of the second and third lines that the right hand side of the inscription is complete, so that the letters to be supplied must be confined to the left hand side. Now only two words (WZM SBAM) and consequently seven letters are wanting on the left side of the second line, and only three words or nine letters on the same side of the third. The second line, therefore, contained altogether twenty-five letters, the third line twenty-four; so that as the existing portion of the first line extends as far as the fifteenth letter of the second line, ten letters must be lost in it on the left side. The second line begins with sum, the remains of the word Aksum, and consequently the first line must terminate with the two initial letters of the name (i.e., Ak). Before the name of Aksum, we must have the word melik or negush, "king," leaving only four letters to be still supplied. As only one word is thus possible before the name Elam 'Am. m, no verb can have existed there, much less three words as Prof. Müller supposes. The sole word that can be supplied is the individual name of the king which we can approximately restore. Prof. Müller makes the word terminate in m, but we now know that this m is merely the sign for the division of words. Three letters, according to the facsimile, still remain to be supplied. The middle one is shown, by a comparison with the forms of the sh in all other parts of the inscription, not to be a sh, but rather a z. In the line which follows, an n may easily be recognised, so that the termination of the name will be . . . zân. As to the first letter, Prof. Müller's copy offers a w; but it is not difficult to conjecture that the two circles which compose this letter are only the result of a misreading. Doubtless the two circles exist, but they do not belong together. The first is clearly an 'ain, while the second represents the upper part of a Sabæan y. Consequently, the whole name will be 'Aizân. The rest of the line now offers no difficulty, and the text reads: "'Aizân(m) Ela(m) 'Am.(m) Bees(m) Halen(m), melik(m) Ak[sum(m)]," or, "'Aizân(m) Ela(m) 'Am.(m) Cen(m) . . . melik(m) Ak[sum(m)]."

The probability accordingly gains in strength that the doubtful third word is really 'Amida; and we therefore have 'Aizân Ela 'Amida, like Kaleb Ela Asbaha. The author of the inscription is consequently identical with the author of the bilingual text which I refer to the year 346 A.D. The two Ge'ez inscriptions will thus be due to the son of 'Aizân, and so belong to the fourth century, or, more exactly, to about 370 A.D.

The importance of the inscription now begins to increase, on account of the title of the king. In the bilingual text 'Aizân is also king of Habashat. In Bent II. this is no longer the case. 'Aizân therefore must have lost this province, and the bilingual is of earlier date than Bent II., the latter having been written about 360 A.D., and the use of the Sabæan alphabet having lasted in Abyssinia as late as the period between 360 and 370 A.D. What was the full name of . . . zânâ, the son of 'Aizân, now becomes a fresh problem. Perhaps he is identical with Ezana Bisi Olen (Azân Beese Halen), whose name I have deciphered on a coin, although the latter could also be compared with 'Aizân Ela 'Amida, the complete name being 'Aizân Ela 'Amida Beese Halen, a title similar to that of "William the Victorious of Hohenzollern."

I have only to add that Prof. Müller thinks it is the right hand side of Bent II. which is defective. But his restorations of the third and fourth lines show that he considers about nine or ten letters to be wanting in the first line, where he restores ZMNR 'TKL, reading what is left of the first word as WSHM and translating "This throne he erected and set up." But the reading WSHM is impossible, since, as we have seen, the final m is not a letter, and WSHI would give no suitable sense. Moreover, the word comes before the royal name Ela 'Amida, and hence would naturally be WZDM "son," as we may conclude that this inscription, like all others with which we are acquainted, begins with the name of a king followed by that of his father. If, then, we read: "N.N., son of Ela 'Amida," only one other word would be wanting before the word "son," and this would, of course, be the name of the king. There cannot, therefore, be room for the nine or ten letters which Prof. Müller's hypothesis demands. Moreover, the completion of the name to Tazêna, who is mentioned in the lists of Abyssinian kings as the son of Ela Amida, now becomes possible, if not probable. We should thus have epigraphic evidence, both of 'Aizân Ela 'Amida Beese Halen and of his son [Ta]zêna Beese Halen. The coins furnish us with the names of some other Abyssinian kings.

E. GLASER.

ANTHROPOLOGICAL JOTTINGS.

A RECENT number of L'Anthropologie (Paris: Masson) contains an article on "La Race Basque," by M. R. Collignon, who has enjoyed special opportunities of studying this vexed question as a medical officer attached to the recruiting service. He examined several thousand recruits in the department of the Basses Pyrénées, and was also permitted to extend his inquiries across the Spanish frontier. In the first place, he established to his own satisfaction a peculiar physical type, found only in the Basque-speaking cantons. This type is marked by considerable height, the average standard being as much as 1.658 metres, and by several features which recall the ancient Egyptians and the Berbers; but its most striking characteristics are "le renflement du crâne au niveau des tempes, et le prodigieux rétrécissement de la face vers le menton." That the French Basques should be short-headed, and the Spanish Basques long-headed, M. Collignon regards as a minor detail; but he insists that the former represent the purer type in all respects. Out of 732 recruits from the Basque-speaking cantons, no less than 302 or 41 per cent. show the Basque type, the maximum of 56 per cent. being furnished by the canton of Hasparen. M. Collignon then proceeds to seek for some historical explanation of his facts. From the complete absence of the Basque type in Béarn and Gascogne, he argues that the Aquitani of Caesar must have belonged to an altogether different stock, who extended right up to the Pyrenees. At that epoch the Basques must have been confined to Northern Spain, whence, in historic times, they crossed into France, and have there preserved their blood more purely than in their original home.

UNDER the title of "Italian Anthropometry," Dr. Beddoe has contributed to the July number of Science Progress an interesting summary of the conclusions drawn by Dr. R. Livi from the military statistics of Italy. After making allowance for important exceptions, it appears that high stature, breadth of head, and blonde complexion abound in the north, and the opposite characters in the south:

"Not that there are two races . . . but that a type, the one we usually call the Mediterranean, does really predominate in the south, and exists in a state of comparative purity in Sardinia and Calabria; while in the north the broad-headed Alpine type is powerful, but is almost everywhere more or less modified by or interspersed with other types—Germanic, Slavic, or of doubtful origin—to which the variations of stature and complexion may probably be, at least in part, attributed. In Sicily, Greek, Carthaginian, and Saracenic settlements and invasions have doubtless had considerable modifying influence."

The average height for the whole kingdom is 1.624 metres, or about 64 inches, which is much below that of most parts of Northern and Central Europe, though perhaps equal to that of Poland and Central Hungary. Sardinia and Calabria fall below the average, and so, also, does the district of Aosta, owing to the prevalence of goitre. During a period of sixteen years, no less than 32 per cent. of the young men of Aosta were rejected for goitre, and this after 27 per cent. had previously been rejected for deficient stature. Dr. Livi has been unable to trace any similar degradation as being caused by either malaria or pellagra, nor does it seem that much effect is anywhere produced by the differences of urban and rural life.

WE quote the following from the New York Nation, though it contains some statements which we cannot reconcile:—

"The rigid tests now applied to the conscripts for the Japanese army have incidentally thrown light upon the ethnology of the island empire. The national habit, continued through ages, of sitting for hours upon the hams and heels has had the curious effect of shortening the legs disproportionately. The average Japanese (man or woman) is normal in the proportions of the upper half of the body. Relatively he is, in the lower half, from a half-inch to an inch and a half too short. It is believed that a more nourishing diet, more exercise, and the use of chairs or some other apparatus which will allow a better circulation of the blood during sedentary attitudes, will in time add to the Japanese stature. Five years' examination of recruits enrolled at the age of twenty shows the following averages: height, 5 ft. 4½ in.; weight, 126.57 lbs.; chest measurement, 32.99 in.; cubic capacity of lungs, 3.531 centimetres. . . . Only one conscript in ten is taken, for although fully 200,000 are physically qualified, only 20,000 are enrolled annually for service with the colours. The flower of the population is in the army. Some light seems to be cast by these figures upon Japanese origins. Only 10.46 adult males out of every thousand in the empire attain the maximum [minimum] height for an infantry recruit. This maximum is 59.5 inches, as against 61 inches in England, 61.6 in Germany, and 60.06 in France. The Coreans are notably taller than the Japanese; and it is on the islands of Tsushima and Iki, in which Corean blood predominates, that the height of the men averages one inch more than on the main island, Honde. In the regions surrounding the great bays of Yedo and Osaka, as well as in the provinces lining the northwest coast, the people are conspicuously below the requisite standard. The cities as a rule are very deficient in the ratio of height, while the agricultural districts furnish over one-half of the conscripts."

REPORTS OF SOCIETIES.

ANGLO-RUSSIAN LITERARY SOCIETY.—(Tuesday, Sept. 4.)

E. A. CAZALET, Esq., president, in the chair.—A translation of Mr. P. A. Kuskow's paper in Russian, entitled "Our Ideals," was read. The subject was embodied in a dialogue between a Russian and a foreigner from Western Europe, who taunted the former on the absence of ideals. The tenor of the paper went to prove that the Russian peasant, with all his real and reputed barbarousness and vulgarity, possessed in many instances higher moral and religious ideals than Western Europe. The Russian said:—"Your ideal is to struggle with each other, our ideal is to struggle with ourselves. Your ideal is riches; we also have to earn money, but that is not our ideal. Our ideal is the rhyme translated as follows:

'Vlass gladly gave up all he had,
And with bare feet and poorly clad
His time and life to God he gave Free donations for his Church to crave.'

Your self-complacent rich man revels in his own importance; he is a worldly man in paradise. Our rich moujik is altogether in hell with his money; his roubles burn his hands; in the depths of his soul he considers himself a second Judas. He is called the devourer of the commune, the blood-sucker. In prayer before the holy image he doubts his right to turn to God, because he knows what his ideals demand of him. The great thing with you is the majority: it is your public opinion. All your business is decided by majorities, which are sometimes deceptive, like juries. Your Governments stoop to everything in order to obtain a majority. Your greatest genius [Napoleon?] won majorities by every trick and artifice, and yet even a true majority is seldom just. Sometimes an unimportant minority is the first to comprehend the truth. For you truth is in power, while our power is in truth. The crushed minorities of your parliaments are sometimes goaded into physical violence, and this parliamentary pugilism has a far-reaching meaning. Among the Russian people, in the management of their communes, there is a notion that all questions should be decided unanimously; and there have been examples where the majority and minority have referred the point at issue unanimously to one of the village elders, and have abided by his decision, even when it was favourable to the minority. You do not understand the love of our people for the Czar. To judge by your ideals you may even discover servility in that sentiment. I can assure you that he is our Supreme Elder, who brings our national disagreements to a general good understanding. It is in no way desirable for us that he should listen to the voice of the majority (even if it be bona fide): what we want is that he should listen to the voice of his own conscience, because we seek peace and justice, and not to get the better of each other. As regards liberty, our ideal is very different from yours. A peasant of Perm can serve as an illustration. He was a worthy man who possessed peculiar religious views, which he ventilated in an aggressive manner in Government spheres, but in no way interfering with the public. He was relegated to the Solovetski Monastery for admonition. The monks said to him, 'Bow to our holy saints, and, with God's blessing, be gone.' But he replied, 'I could not do it. Time must acquit me, and I believe it will do so; but if I am in the wrong, if all this merely appears to me to be the truth, then let the Solovetski Prison be my tomb'; and such it was for a score of years. All this, added a traveller who interviewed him, was told without any sign of resentment or indignation. No complaint, no recrimination, no reproach was directed against anyone. The poet Pushkin, the novelist Dostoevski in exile, and a young Grand Duke who was treated with undue severity by the tutors whom his father had appointed, never showed signs of vindictive resentment. The burden of the song of these good-natured Slavs was that everything was done out of a desire to benefit them; the means, however, were not dictated by the heart, but by the hard times in which they lived." The Russian added to his foreign interlocutor: "You do not envy this liberty of the soul, this disregard for petty, temporal grievances, but without this liberty can you hope to see God? But our highest ideal is to guard our vision from everything which might obstruct the free passage of God's light into it, and impede the liberty of the most important function of our spirit—i.e., the free action of our understanding. Every worldly advantage, every longing for and possession of it, only deprives a man of the unbiased freedom of his understanding. His thoughts are fettered to this benefit, like a convict to his wheelbarrow. But our people are, as a rule, indifferent to material well-being, and to that peculiar liberty which is requisite for its attainment. 'Put your soul in hell and you will be rich,' says a popular proverb: 'The love of riches splits up the understanding': 'They eat lustily, but sleep badly.' Another of your Western ideals is power. Our people know that those in authority are enslaved by ambition; that every power has functions to perform which are repugnant to the human soul; and, therefore, they step aside and consider every power, except that of the Czar, with a certain feeling of scorn, which is again clearly expressed in the proverb, 'The Czar shows favour, but the underling (dog-keeper) shows none.' The Czar—that is an altogether different affair: the Czar is an hereditary, permanent power, and the people bow down before it, as something immovable. Did this idea ever strike you when you read the slanders which are propagated about us in the press?" Examples were given to prove that Russians in exalted positions show more fellow feeling and consideration for the poorer classes than is the fashion in Western Europe. "A personage of high rank called on a grand old lady to wish her joy on her birthday, and in all seriousness conveyed to her the congratulations of his coachman. The Czar and the Grand Dukes walked on foot, and the Empress followed in a carriage, to the grave-yard the body of their old nurse. The spiritual cement which binds our social structure remains an enigma to you even to the present day, and your seductions only distract us. You and we are two distinct worlds. Some of your governors force a whole province to learn their language, while thousands of Russians acquire the language of the Yakuts in order not to inconvenience the barbarians with whom they have intercourse. From the number of acquittals, the Germans have drawn the conclusion that the public conscience in Russia is fifty times slacker than in Germany; but I say that the public conscience in Russia is fifty times more exacting towards itself than in Germany. Russia is a separate world, and not an empire. Do you know what the old-fashioned word for Russia—Rus—means? A tamchik or driver has one leg inside the coach box of his sledge, and the other leg, which is outside, is in Rus—such is the popular expression, meaning that it is free in endless space. We are so fond of freedom that we hate all written agreements, which our peasants consider to be devilish documents enslaving the soul. Treaties only lead to quarrels, while we desire peace and harmony. Even at the present time the French wish to draw up a treaty with us, but to what practical good can it lead? But our religious ideal is the root of all our ideals. Your theories about religious architecture, &c., are worth nothing, because religion should be in the heart. National proverbs express the substance of our beliefs: 'Man is not born for himself,' 'To live is to serve God,' and 'God builds what is His.' The last saying explains the two others. Our nation believes that, whatever each separate man may be, he is a living material in the great structure of the living God: hence the great respect in which human life is held, and even criminals are popularly called 'unfortunates.' Kindness, love, and mercy do not appear as virtues and merits, but only as means for the attainment of higher spiritual freedom, which alone attracts us. Your favourite phrase is 'material well-being,' our favourite phrase is 'saving the soul'; what you hope to reach by science and intellect we have attained by faith through the heart."

FINE ART.

Travels amongst American Indians, their Ancient Earth-works and Temples. By Vice-Admiral Lindesay Brine. (Sampson Low.)

ADMIRAL BRINE's readers cannot complain that the repast set before them has been spread with a parsimonious hand. It has evidently been his practice, when on his travels, to write up his log as regularly as on board ship; and the result is that he has produced a narrative of the most agreeably varied kind, in which reminiscences of Tieknor, Agassiz, Emerson, and Longfellow alternate with accounts of visits to museums and shell mounds, schools and naval depôts, beaver dams and ancient copper mines, leading up at length to his exploration of the great earth-works of Ohio and the ruined monuments of Chiapas and Yucatan. Long before making this American journey, he had carried an observant eye and an enquiring mind to many parts of the Old World while engaged in active service; and when he obtained leave from the Admiralty to visit North and Central America, he fully expected, though he had no definite theory of his own to establish, to find that the tribes in the West and North-West resembled the Manchu race whom he had seen in the north of China, that the Indians of Central America would show traces of kindred with the Malays, and that its ruined temples would exhibit architectural affinities with the Buddhist monasteries in Upper Burma and Cambodia. These anticipations were not fulfilled. The only resemblance to Asiatic peoples among the American Indians which seems to have actually struck him, was in the case of a Shoshone tribe near the borders of Oregon, in that part of the desert which is bounded on the west by the Sierra Nevada; and they reminded him of the people of the southern provinces of China.

As for the ruins, the Admiral's conclusion, based on a more prolonged study of historical authorities, as well as on his examination of the buildings themselves, is that they were built by immigrants from Mexico, belonging to the pre-Aztec or Toltec race, who disappeared, leaving behind them these monuments of a comparatively short occupation, at some date not long anterior to the Spanish conquest; and that the theory, dear to many Americanists, of a separate Maya civilisation, co-ordinate with but not based upon that of Mexico, consequently falls to the ground. In this opinion we entirely agree with him. But we must demur to his identification of the Toltec invaders of Guatemala with the mound-builders of the Mississippi valley. The main ground alleged for this startling conclusion is an undoubted resemblance which exists between the mounds of Mixco (a few miles west of Guatemala) and those of Cahokia; and a certain similarity of feature which the Admiral traces between the Kachiquels of Guatemala and the Dakota of North America is thrown into the scale as a make-weight. The mounds in question, small in size and only remarkable for the way in which they are grouped, appear in each case to have been the bases of huts or clusters of huts, which they served to protect against inundations. Coincidences of this nature surely afford the slenderest of grounds for arguing a direct ethnological connection. Nor can any greater importance be attributed to the resemblance which he finds between the earthworks of Patinamit, an ancient seat of the Kachiquels, and those of Fort Ancient, a fortified hill on the Little Miami river about thirty miles above its junction with the Ohio, of which a plan is given (p. 88). The structural contrasts between this huge earthwork, the embankments of which are four miles in circuit, enclosing an area of 140 acres, and similar works in the Old World, are very remarkable. The Admiral says:—

"There is no ditch. Nothing could more clearly mark the difference between this fortification and one that would have been made by a white race. An outer ditch is usually considered as not only of essential importance in works of defence, but its excavation supplies the earth required for the ramparts. It seems evident that these Indians in their method of defensive warfare did not always consider a ditch to be useful; or it is possible that, in consequence of not having shovels and pickaxes, they preferred obtaining earth in some other manner which they found more convenient" (p. 89).

The neighbouring farmers told him that all the earth used in making this immense fortification must have been brought from a distance in baskets. The Admiral, however, leans to the belief that it was taken from the surface of the land within the enclosure; and he thinks that as this surface is nearly level the builders must have lowered the entire area for the purpose of making the ramparts. There is another odd thing about Fort Ancient. There are no less than seventy gaps or openings in the embankments; and the purpose of these is a subject of controversy among antiquaries. Some hold that they were intended to facilitate the escape of water from the interior. To this it is objected that many of them are on level ground, from which no surplus water could possibly drain away. Others consider that they were once fenced with removable stockades, and were so constructed for the purpose of enabling the defenders to rush out on their assailants at several points simultaneously. To this it is objected that the openings sometimes occur in places where the slopes of the hill are so steep as to be almost inaccessible. The latter objection, however, does not seem equally applicable to the hypothesis that the fort is simply an ancient village, an enclosed area once more or less occupied by wigwams, and that the gaps are nothing but gates by which this primitive city was ordinarily entered in time of peace, and which could be easily filled up in time of war. If Thebes boasted a hundred gates, why should Fort Ancient not have had seventy? Such a theory seems the more reasonable, when it is considered that the hill on which the fort stands is surrounded by a country abounding in game, and adjoins a navigable river enabling the inhabitants to maintain communication with the Ohio and the Mississippi.

Having quitted the land of mounds, Admiral Brine crossed the prairies of Minnesota and Iowa, and proceeded by the Great Salt Lake to San Francisco, where he took steamer for San José, the port of Guatemala, on his way to the celebrated ruins of Palenque and Uxmal. He tells us nothing, so far as we observe, about either that was previously unknown; but his narrative is by no means uninteresting, and he gives several good photographic illustrations, including one from the so-called "Altarpiece of the Cross," which forms the frontispiece of the volume. The cross of Palenque, it is hardly necessary to say, has no connection with the Christian symbol of the same name, though at first sight there is a striking resemblance. The subject of the bas-relief to which it gives name is a sacrifice to the turkey, the principal domesticated animal of Mexico. This useful bird was solemnly worshipped, it seems, like the owl and the eagle, as a living fetish, previously to being killed and eaten; and from an extract cited in the volume before us, it appears that a superstition based on this ancient rite survived among the Indians of Yucatan as recently as the beginning of the present century. For ritual purposes the bird was decorated with sundry ornaments, and placed on the top of a stone pedestal designed to represent a tree, and consisting of a stem or trunk, and two branches; a meal of the paste of maize flour, moulded into a diminutive human figure, was then given to it. The deity having thus symbolically eaten the worshipper, the worshipper killed and ate the deity in right earnest. Such is the ceremonial depicted in the famous bas-relief of Palenque. A youth, probably the son of the chief who offers the sacrifice, stands on the other side of the pedestal holding a stalk of maize: and the growth of the tree from the soil is symbolised by the serpent-head of the earth goddess Cihuacohuatl, on which the pedestal stands. Representations of the worship of birds are familiar to students of the Mexican pinturas; the Vatican codex contains several examples. Admiral Brine, by the way, speaks of "the collection of ancient Mexican codices placed in the library of the Vatican." One codex does not make a collection, and there is only one ancient Mexican codex in the Vatican library. There is, indeed, besides this a manuscript on European foolscap paper, containing a number of coarsely-coloured mythological figures possibly drawn by native artists, many of which have explanations in Italian: but this manuscript, dating long after the conquest and evidently the work of a missionary—or rather of missionaries, for a careful examination detects in the writing the work of three different hands—cannot be properly called an ancient Mexican codex.

E. J. PAYNE.

NOTES ON ART AND ARCHAEOLOGY.

AN exhibition of drawings in black and white is announced for September 17 in the rooms of the Royal Institute of Water Colours, Piccadilly. The exhibition will consist chiefly of drawings made for the reprints of classical fiction, published by Messrs. J. M. Dent & Co. Among the artists represented are Mr. Aubrey Beardsley, Mr. Anning Bell, Mr. J. D. Batten, Mr. Cubitt Cooke, Mr. Walter Crane, Miss Erichsen, Mr. Granville Fell, Mr. William Hyde, Miss Bertha Newcombe, Mr. Herbert Railton, Mr. F. C. Tilney, and Mr. E. J. Wheeler. Messrs. Dent will also exhibit a selection of books in extra leather bindings, which have been designed by their workmen, and produced by them at Aldine House.

MR. GLEESON WHITE, who has hitherto edited The Studio, has resigned; Mr. Charles Holme, the proprietor of the magazine, will succeed him.

THE twentieth annual exhibition of the Sheffield Society of Artists will be opened in Cutlers' Hall, on Monday next, September 10, with an address by Prof. Hubert Herkomer.

MR. MEEHAN, the well-known bookseller at Bath, has now on view a very interesting collection of portraits, caricatures, views, and maps, connected with the past history of that city. Several sets by Rowlandson and Cruikshank are included, as well as an original pastille of Beau Nash.

MESSRS. J. C. DRUMMOND & Co., of Henrietta-street, Covent Garden, have sent some examples on a small scale of the photogravures of pictures produced by the Hanfstaengl process at Munich. Among the advantages of this process are that proofs can be submitted to the painter, for suggestion or alteration, while the plate is in process, and that the engraved plates can be printed from either at Munich or elsewhere. It is also stated that, out of fifty-two photogravures issued last year by members of the Printers' Association who do not engrave their own plates, no fewer than thirty-eight were executed by Herr Franz Hanfstaengl.

THE last number of Cornell Studies in Classical Philology (Ginn) consists of a paper on "The Cult of Asklepios," by Alice Walton, Ph.D., who dates from Leipzig. It is an attempt to give, in narrative form, a summary of the results that have been derived from recent archaeological research; and though the author acknowledges her obligations to Thraemer and Girard, she claims to have treated the subject with more completeness than any of her predecessors. After seven chapters—dealing with Asklepios as known to Homer and as an earth spirit, with his temples and their attendants, with medical procedure in the Asklepieia, with public ceremonial and private ritual—she gives several valuable appendices. The first is a list of the epithets of Asklepios, additional to those given in the supplement to Roscher's Lexicon der Mythologie. Next comes an index to ancient literature and inscriptions, elaborately classified and with full references. Then follows a geographical catalogue of the places in which Asklepios is known to have been worshipped, based mainly upon the literary and epigraphical evidence, which supplies about 207 Asklepieia, while 161 more are plausibly inferred from the types of coins, &c. Finally, we have a bibliography and an index of names and topics. Though not pretending to be original, this is a very solid piece of work.

THE STAGE.

THE Lyceum Theatre was to be opened to-night (Saturday) by Miss Lillian Russell, with the first performance of a comic opera, entitled "The Queen of Brilliants," adapted from the German by Mr. Brandon Thomas.

AFTER an interval of some years, the Theatre (Simpkin, Marshall & Co.) has again returned to the control of Mr. Frederick Hawkins, who founded it as long ago as 1878. In the depth of the dull season, nothing very "actual" was to be expected; but the editor has been fortunate in obtaining some contributions of general interest. He himself explains an incident in the life of Voltaire which has been curiously misrepresented, and we may likewise attribute to his pen a comparison of the stage to-day with what it was eighteen years ago. Two well-known dramatic critics write about the conditions of dramatic criticism—it is curious, by the way, that literary critics so seldom write about literary criticism; and a theatrical manager discusses the relation of the theatres to the County Council. Finally, we must mention two chapters of reminiscences, by Mr. Arthur W. à Beckett, of Fechter in the green room; and by Miss Braddon, of her early visits to the theatre, which seem to have begun when she was only three years of age. The photographic portraits of actors and actresses, with no accompanying letterpress, continue to be a prominent feature of this magazine.

MUSIC.

Primitive Music. By Richard Wallaschek. (Longmans.)

NOT in books, but among the songs of savage races, is to be found the earliest record of music; it is, therefore, impossible to over-estimate their importance in any inquiry respecting the origin and development of an art which to-day forms one of the mightiest forces of civilisation. The difficulties in the way of obtaining unadulterated savage music are great. It is essential not to forget that in many cases it has been modified by European influence—no doubt, for the most part, unconsciously. Again, savage songs when written down in our notation, even by competent musicians—which has certainly not always been the case—are only approximations. Missionaries, too, have done much to obliterate traces of primitive music, or to rob it of some of its characteristic features; to them it was merely a sign of heathenism, and, therefore, as our author remarks, to be "altogether pushed into oblivion." But whatever the difficulties, they must be faced if the subject is to be properly investigated.

Mr. Wallaschek's survey of savage music is of wonderful interest; yet in forming any opinion, or establishing any theory therefrom, great caution is necessary. Our author is the first to suggest such an attitude; but he gives many quotations from travellers' tales, and though there is no reason to doubt the good faith of the writers, one would often like to know how much weight their statements about music and musical performances ought to carry. Mr. Wallaschek comes to the conclusion that "a general view of primitive music shows us that in the most primitive state the main constituent of music has always been rhythm." This may have been so; still, it should be remembered that we listen to savage melody with modern ears, and hence can scarcely judge as to the effect and importance of one element of primitive music. Mr. Wallaschek, to emphasise his "rhythm" theory, tells us of the Damaras, that "their highest idea of a musical performance merely consists in the imitation of the galloping or trotting of various animals." Surely, however, that does not come under the designation of music! Neither, surely, can the Philippine "table-music," which is described as a "horrible din," and which "almost induced cramp in the stomach," count either as rhythm or as melody. So far as we are acquainted with negro melodies, we fully endorse our author's opinion that the greater number have been considerably modernised.

The chapter on "Instruments" is one of great importance. Our author denies that the drum, as stated by Carl Engel and Rowbotham, is the most ancient instrument; and he brings forward ethnological facts and archaeological discoveries with considerable skill in support of his argument. Mr. Wallaschek considers that the flute or fife was the earliest of instruments. In speaking of bowed instruments, he remarks: "Never has neglect of ethnological research led to such hypothetical results as in the history of the violin," and very interesting are his illustrations of primitive fiddling among savages.

In chapter iv., entitled "The Basis of our Musical System," the question of harmony is introduced. After quoting statements of various travellers testifying to the fact that the Hottentots, the Maoris, the natives of the Solomon and Fiji Islands, and other savage tribes "sing in harmony," Mr. Wallaschek boldly asserts that, "with these ethnological facts to hand, we may oppose the widespread theory of harmony and counterpoint being musical inventions of modern times." Of all musical questions, the one as to whether harmony was known to the ancients is, perhaps, the most vexed. Now the travellers on whose statements our author relies are mostly modern, and none very old; the earliest, we believe, is Kolbe, who was in Africa at the beginning of last century. Burchell, we are informed, "probably was the first European who ever touched the African soil in that part where he travelled; and, again, we read that 'the Maoris sang in thirds when Cook visited New Zealand for the first time.'" The "probably" weakens Burchell's evidence; and, again, Cook was not the first European to visit New Zealand. Willingly would we receive any proofs that harmony was known of old, but Mr. Wallaschek does not convince us that such was the case. Yet he certainly deserves praise for trying to collect the best evidence he could obtain. It will, perhaps, be fair to quote his concluding remarks on this subject:

"It may still be objected that those savages who know harmony now may have acquired it in the course of time (even without foreign influence), and may have been ignorant of it centuries ago. I think, however, I can take it for granted that there are still savage tribes whose culture has remained stationary ever since the stone age. If this is so, it seems, to say the least, extremely improbable that such tribes (as Bushmen, Australians) should at the same time have made any progress in music alone."

A section of this chapter is devoted to "The Scale." Our author sees no reason "to conclude that a period of pentatonic scales necessarily preceded the period of heptatonic ones." He is probably right; anyhow, learned writers before him have come to the same conclusion. The same, too, may be said of the remark that "the first and unique cause to settle the type of a regular scale is the instrument." The following forcible sentence, however, deserves quotation:

"We owe the scale not to nature (voice, ear, laws of sound, or animals), and not to science or artificial systems that were worked upon and thought out for centuries, but to the practical player and the qualities of his instrument."

In the chapter entitled "Text and Music" it is shown that in primitive times music was not a union of poetry with music. For the most part the words of the songs of savages have little or no meaning. The union of words with music in a form resembling our "recitative" implies, according to our author, a comparatively developed language. Dance and music, on the other hand, were intimately connected from the very beginning. Mr. Wallaschek believes that Wagner erred when he placed "the art of poetry third in the order of original art-forms." He returns to Wagner in his chapter on "Primitive Drama and Pantomime." Primitive drama was an organic union of music and gesture, but not of poetry; hence the union of the three arts "in equal rank to a single art-work is theoretically a contradiction, and practically an impossibility." The "Origin of Music" is discussed, and the following brief quotation from the summary will show the lines along which the argument runs: "I venture to conclude that the origin of music is to be sought in a general desire for rhythmical exercise, and that the 'time sense' is the psychical source from which it arises." The theories of Darwin and Spencer are, of course, noticed and criticised. And in "Heredity and Development in Music" our author, accepting Galton's and Weissman's theory of the non-heredity of acquired differences, explains progress in music by tradition and imitation. Could heredity explain, he asks, the "immense progress" which the opera has made from the days of Bellini and Donizetti to Richard Wagner, or which instrumental music has made from Haydn to Berlioz? The two cases mentioned scarcely come, however, within the line of argument; and even were it so, the "immense progress" would certainly be objected to by some musicians. Apart from this, however, our author brings forward strong reasons for his belief.

Mr. Wallaschek's book is a serious attempt to deal with a subject of paramount interest, and claims the attention of all who wish to study the earliest chapters in the history of music.

J. S. SHEDLOCK.

POPULAR EDITION, WITH PORTRAIT.

Large 4to, price 6d.

JOSEPH MAZZINI: a Memoir by E. A. V., with two Essays by MAZZINI: "THOUGHTS on DEMOCRACY" and "THE DUTIES of MAN."

"We doubt not it will have an immense circulation."—Echo.

"E. A. V.'s Memoir of Mazzini is, we are glad to see, now issued at sixpence, so that it can be procured and read by everyone interested in the development and growth of Democracy."—Full Mail Gazette.

"In its new form it should have thousands of new readers."—Weekly Dispatch.

NEW WORK BY DR. MACLAREN.

Crown 8vo, cloth boards, price 6s., post free.

THE WEARIED CHRIST, and other Sermons. By Rev. ALEXANDER MACLAREN, D.D.

"They show the same wonderful fertility of apt and beautiful illustrations, the same exquisite use of language, and the same direct heart-searching power which we are accustomed to find in all Dr. MacLaren's works."—Christian World Pulpit.

"They are fully up to his old level, and are still unrivalled in their own manner."—British Weekly.

"Very frank in tone, and modern in application."

The Bookman.

LONDON: ALEXANDER & SHEPHEARD, PUBLISHERS, 21 AND 22, FURNIVAL STREET, E.C.; and all Bookellers.

Now ready, large crown 8vo, nearly 500 pp., cloth, 6s., post free

HISTORY

OF THE

FREE CHURCHES OF ENGLAND

FROM THE REFORMATION TO 1851.

By HERBERT S. SKEATS.

With a Continuation to 1891, by CHAS. S. MIALl.

"Evidently the result of most laborious research and remarkable skill in the arrangement of facts....a useful work of reference and an interesting memorial of men and events that have left their mark on our national history."—Bradford Observer.

"A monument of painstaking and skilful work, which no one probably could have undertaken with so many advantages as Mr. Miall, or have accomplished with greater success."—Literary World.

"The leading members of all denominations will do well to get hold of this publication."—South Wales Daily News.

LONDON: ALEXANDER & SHEPHEARD, 21 AND 22 FURNIVAL STREET, E.C.

BLACKIE & SON'S EDUCATIONAL LIST.

FOR THE OXFORD LOCAL AND OTHER EXAMINATIONS, 1895.

Shakespeare's Coriolanus. Edited by WALTER DENT. Price 10d.

CONTENTS:—Date of the Play—Source of the Plot—The Story of Coriolanus—Characteristics of the Play—Text—Full Notes—Classified Index.

Introduction to Shakespeare. By EDWARD DOWDEN, Litt.D., LL.D., Professor of English Literature in the University of Dublin. Illustrated. Price 2s. 6d.

For Preliminary Examination.

Macaulay's Horatius and Battle of LAKE REGILLUS. With Introduction and Notes. Paper covers, price 6d.

Caesar's Gallic War. BOOKS I. and II. Edited, with Introduction, Notes, Exercises, and Vocabulary, by JOHN BROWN, B.A., sometime Scholar of Worcester College, Oxford. With Illustrations, Plans of Battles, and Map of Gaul. Price 1s. 6d. each.

Virgil's Aeneid. Book I. Edited, with Introduction, Notes, Exercises in Prose, and Vocabulary, by the Rev. A. J. CHURCH, M.A., ex-Professor of Latin, University College, London. Price 1s.

Xenophon's Anabasis. Book I. Edited by C. E. BROWN RIGG, M.A., Chief Classical Master in Magdalen College School, Oxford. Price 1s. 6d.

Latin Stories. Selections from Latin Prose Authors. Edited, with Notes, Vocabulary, Exercises, and an Introductory Note on Translation, by A. D. GODLEY, M.A., Fellow and Tutor of Magdalen College, Oxford. Price 1s. (Suitable as a practice-book in unseen translation.)

Latin Unseens. Passages in Prose and Verse, mainly from former Examination Papers. Paper covers, price 3d.

A Classical Compendium. Handbook to Greek and Latin Constructions. By C. E. BROWN RIGG, M.A., Chief Classical Master in Magdalen College School, Oxford. Price 2s. 6d.

A Synoptical Geography of the WORLD. A Concise Handbook for Examination Candidates and for General Reference. With a complete Series of Maps. Price 1s.

A Summary of British History. By the Rev. EDGAR SANDERSON, M.A. Price 1s.

French Stories. By MARGUERITE NINET, French Mistress, Girls' High School, Graham Street, Eaton Square. Second Edition. Price 1s. (Suitable for practice in Translation and Retranslation.)

A Modern French Reader. Edited by J. J. BEUZEMAKER, B.A., Examiner to the College of Preceptors. Price 1s. (Suitable for practice in Translation and Retranslation.)

Euclid's Elements of Geometry.

With Notes, Examples, and Exercises. Arranged by A. E. LAYNG, M.A., Head Master of Stafford Grammar School. Books I. to VI., with XI. and Appendix, and a wide Selection of Examination Papers. Price 4s. 6d.—KEY to Complete Euclid, 5s.; to Book I., 2s. 6d.

Books I. to IV. in 1 vol., 2s. 6d.; Book I., 1s.; II., 6d.; III., 1s.; IV., 6d.; V. and VI. together, 1s.; Book XI., with Appendix, 1s. 6d.

Elementary Text-Book of Trigonometry. By R. H. PINKERTON, B.A. Oxon. Enlarged Edition. Price 2s.

Preliminary Algebra. With Examples from Recent Examination Papers. By R. WYKE BAYLISS, B.A. Price 2s.

Algebra, up to and including Progressions and Scales of Notation. For Science Classes, Pupil Teachers, &c. By J. G. KERR, M.A. Price 2s. 6d.

Systematic Botany. By JOSEPH W. OLIVER, Lecturer on Botany, Birmingham Municipal Technical School. Price 4s. 6d.

Elementary Botany. By JOSEPH W. OLIVER, Lecturer on Botany and Geology at the Birmingham Municipal Technical School. Price 2s.

Heat, and the Principles of THERMODYNAMICS. With many Illustrations. By CHARLES H. DRAPER, D.Sc., B.A. Price 4s. 6d.

Hydrostatics and Pneumatics. By R. H. PINKERTON, B.A., Balliol College, Oxford. Price 4s. 6d.

Elementary Text-Book of DYNAMICS and HYDROSTATICS. By R. H. PINKERTON, B.A., Balliol College, Oxford. Price 3s. 6d.

Theoretical Mechanics. By R. H. PINKERTON, B.A. Oxon. Third Edition. Price 2s.

Light, Heat, and Sound. By CHARLES H. DRAPER, D.Sc. Lond., Head Master of Woolwich High School. Price 2s.

Elementary Inorganic Chemistry, Theoretical and Practical. With Examples in Chemical Arithmetic. By Professor A. HUMBOLDT SEXTON, F.R.S.E. Price 2s. 6d.

Earth-Knowledge. A Text-Book of Physiography. By W. JEROME HARRISON, F.G.S., and H. ROWLAND WAKEFIELD. Part I., ELEMENTARY, 1s. 6d.; Part II., ADVANCED, 2s.; also both Parts in 1 vol., 3s.

THIRTEENTH EDITION.

Deschanel's Natural Philosophy. Translated and Edited by Prof. J. D. EVERETT, D.C.L. F.R.S. With nearly 800 Wood Engravings and 3 Coloured Plates. Thirteenth Edition, thoroughly Revised and much Enlarged. Medium 8vo, cloth, 12s.; also in Part limp cloth, 4s. 6d. each.

Part I. MECHANICS, &c. | Part III. ELECTRICITY, &c.
Part II. HEAT. | Part IV. SOUND and LIGHT

Elementary Text-Book of Physics. By Prof. EVERETT. Seventh Edition. 2s. 6d.

Outlines of Natural Philosophy. By Prof. EVERETT. 4s.

A Text-Book of Organic Chemistry By A. BEHNTHSEN, Ph.D. Translated by GEORGE M'GOWAN, Ph.D. New Edition, thoroughly Revised and much Enlarged. 7s. 6d.

An Elementary Text-Book of Physiology. By J. M'GREGOR-ROBERTSON, M.A. New and Revised Edition. 4s.

Algebraic Factors. How to Find Them and How to Use Them. By Dr. W. T. KNIGHT. 2s.—KEY, 3s. 6d.

Mathematical Wrinkles for Matriculation and other Exams. By Dr. W. T. KNIGHT. 2s. 6d.

Mercantile Arithmetic. By E. T. PICKERING. 1s. 6d.

A History of the British Empire. With Pictorial Illustrations, Tables, Maps, and Plans. By the Rev. EDGAR SANDERSON, M.A. 2s. 6d.

Outlines of the World's History. By the Rev. EDGAR SANDERSON, M.A. With many Illustrations and Coloured Maps. 6s. 6d. Also separately:—Part I. ANCIENT, 1s.; Part II. GREEK and ROME, 2s.; Part III. MEDIEVAL, 1s.; Part IV. MODERN, 2s. 6d.

An Epitome of History, Ancient, Medieval, and Modern. For Higher Schools and Colleges. By CARL PLOETZ. Translated by W. B. TILLINGHAST. 7s. 6d.

A Synopsis of English History; or, Historical Note-Book. By HERBERT WILLS. 2s.

Baynham's Elocution. With Rules and Instructions. By GEO. W. BAYNHAM. Seventh Edition. 2s. 6d.

The Warwick Shakespeare. A New Series of the Greater Plays, suitable for Senior Scholars. Richard the Second. Edited by C. H. HEATFIELD, Litt.D. 1s. 6d.

Macbeth. Edited by EDMUND K. CHAMBERS, B.A. 1s.

Julius Caesar. Edited by ARTHUR D. INNES, M.A. 1s.

Hamlet. Edited by E. K. CHAMBERS, B.A. 1s. 6d.

Others in preparation.

Blackie's Junior School Shakespeare. A New Series, designed specially for Junior Scholars. 8d. each, with few exceptions.

The Tempest. Edited by ELIZABETH LEE. A Midsummer Night's Dream. Edited by W. F. BAUGUST, B.A.

The Merchant of Venice. Edited by G. H. ELY, B.A.

Henry the Fifth. Edited by W. BARRY, B.A.

King Richard II. Edited by W. BARRY, B.A.

Coriolanus. Edited by WALTER DENT. 10d.

Julius Caesar. Edited by WALTER DENT.

Henry the Eighth. Edited by G. H. ELY, B.A.

As You Like It. Edited by LIONEL W. LYDE, M.A. Others in preparation.

Annandale's Concise English Dictionary. Literary, Scientific, Etymological, and Pronouncing. New Edition. Revised and Extended. Cloth, 6s.; half-Roxburghe, 6s. 6d.; half-morocco, 8s.

Ogilvie's Student's English Dictionary. Etymological, Pronouncing, and Explanatory. With about 300 Engravings on Wood. Roxburghe, 7s. 6d.; half-calf, 10s. 6d.

Ogilvie's Smaller Dictionary of the ENGLISH LANGUAGE. Abridged from the "Student's Dictionary." Cloth, 2s. 6d.; Roxburghe, 3s. 6d.

* * DETAILED CATALOGUE OF EDUCATIONAL WORKS POST FREE ON APPLICATION.

LONDON: BLACKIE & SON, LIMITED, OLD BAILEY.

THE ACADEMY.

A WEEKLY REVIEW OF LITERATURE, SCIENCE, AND ART.

No. 1167.
[New Issue.]

SATURDAY, SEPTEMBER 15, 1894.

PRICE 3d.
[Registered as a Newspaper.]

SELECT LIST OF BOOKS IN THE University Tutorial Series.

- Analysis of a Simple Salt. With a Selection of Model Analyses. By WILLIAM BRIGGS, M.A., LL.B., F.C.S., and R. W. STEWART, D.Sc. Lond. Third Edition, with TABLES OF ANALYSIS (on linen), 2s. 6d.
- Astronomy, Elementary Mathematical. By C. W. C. BARLOW, M.A. Lond. and Camb., B.Sc. Lond., and G. H. BRYAN, M.A. Camb., Fellow of St. Peter's College. Second Edition, with ANSWERS. 8s. 6d.
- Coordinate Geometry: The Right Line and Circle. By WILLIAM BRIGGS, LL.B., B.A., F.C.S., and G. H. BRYAN, M.A. Second Edition. 3s. 6d. KEY, 4s. 6d. net.
- Coordinate Geometry, Worked Examples in. A Graduated Course on the Right Line and Circle. 2s. 6d.
References are made to the book-work of Coordinate Geometry.
- Dynamics, Text-Book of. By WILLIAM BRIGGS, M.A., LL.B., F.R.A.S., and G. H. BRYAN, M.A. 2s.
- English Language, The: Its History and Structure. By W. H. LOW, M.A. Lond. Second Edition. 3s. 6d.
- English Literature, The Intermediate Text-Book of. By W. H. LOW, M.A. Lond.
- VOL. I., to 1558. 3s. 6d. [In preparation.] VOL. III., 1660 to 1798. 3s. 6d.
" II., 1558 to 1660. 3s. 6d. " II. and III., bound together. 5s. 6d.
- The following Periods have already been issued in separate parts under the title of "A HISTORY OF ENGLISH LITERATURE":—1485 to 1580. 2s. 1620 to 1670. 2s. 1660 to 1714. 3s. 6d. 1714 to 1798. 2s.
- English History, The Intermediate Text-Book of. By C. S. FEARENSIDE, M.A. Oxon., and A. JOHNSON EVANS, M.A. Camb.
- VOL. I., to 1485. [In preparation.] VOL. III., 1603 to 1714. [Shortly.]
" II., 1485 to 1603. 5s. 6d. " IV., 1695 to 1801. 4s. 6d.
- The following Periods have already been issued separately:—1610 to 1670. 2s. 1660 to 1714. 3s. 6d. 1760 to 1798. 2s.
- Ethics, Manual of. By J. S. MACKENZIE, M.A., Fellow of Trinity College, Cambridge. Second Edition. 6s. 6d.
- Heat and Light, Elementary Text-Book of. By R. W. STEWART, D.Sc. Lond. Second Edition. 3s. 6d.
This Book contains 141 Diagrams.
- Heat, Text-Book of. (Volume II. of the Tutorial Physics.) By R. W. STEWART, D.Sc. Lond. Second Edition. 3s. 6d.
- Latin Composition and Syntax. With Copious Exercises. By A. H. ALLCROFT, M.A. Oxon., and J. H. HAYDON, M.A. Camb. and Lond. Third Edition. 2s. 6d.—KEY, 2s. 6d. net.
- Latin Grammar, The Tutorial. By B. J. HAYES, M.A. Lond., and W. F. MASON, M.A. Lond. Second Edition. 3s. 6d.
- Light, Text-Book of. (Volume III. of the Tutorial Physics.) Uniform with the "Text-Book of Heat." By R. W. STEWART, D.Sc. Lond. Second Edition. 3s. 6d.
- Logic, A Manual of. By J. WELTON, M.A. Lond. Two Vols. Vol. I. 10s. 6d. [Volume II. in preparation.]
- Magnetism and Electricity, Elementary Text-Book of: Being an Abridgment of the "Text-Book of Magnetism and Electricity." With 143 Diagrams and numerous Questions. By R. W. STEWART, D.Sc. Lond. 3s. 6d.
- Magnetism and Electricity, Text-Book of. (Volume IV. of the Tutorial Physics.) By R. W. STEWART, D.Sc. Second Edition. 5s. 6d.
- Mechanics and Hydrostatics, Worked Examples in. 1s. 6d.
- Mensuration and Spherical Geometry: Being Mensuration of the Simpler Figures and Geometrical Properties of the Sphere. By WM. BRIGGS, LL.B., B.A., F.C.S., and T. W. EDMONDSON, B.A. Lond. and Camb. 3s. 6d.
- Rome, The Tutorial History of, to A.D. 14. By A. H. ALLCROFT, M.A. Oxon., and W. F. MASON, M.A. Lond. 3s. 6d.
- Statics, Text-Book of. By WILLIAM BRIGGS, M.A., LL.B., F.R.A.S., and G. H. BRYAN, M.A.

EDITIONS OF THE CLASSICS.

With Introduction, Elementary Notes, and (in most cases) Index of Proper Names.

| | p. | d. | | p. | d. |
|--|----|----|---|------|-----|
| AESCHYLUS—Prometheus Vinculus | 2 | 6 | HORACE—Satires | 4 | 6 |
| ARISTOPHANES—Plutus | 2 | 6 | JUVENAL—Satires, I., III., IV. | 3 | 6 |
| CAESAR—Gallic War, I., V., VI., each 1s. 6d. VII. | 2 | 6 | LIVY, I., V., each 2s. 6d. III. | 3 | 6 |
| CICERO—Ad Atticum, IV. | 3 | 6 | OVID—Fasti, III., IV. | 2 | 6 |
| CICERO—De Amicitia | 1 | 6 | OVID—Tristia, I., III. | each | 1 6 |
| CICERO—De Finibus, I. | 2 | 6 | PLATO—Phaedo | 3 | 6 |
| CICERO—De Senectute | 1 | 6 | SALLUST—Catiline | 2 | 6 |
| CICERO—Pro Archia | 1 | 6 | SOPHOCLES—Antigone | 1 | 6 |
| CICERO—Pro Balbo | 1 | 6 | TACITUS—Annals, I. | 2 | 6 |
| CICERO—Pro Plancio | 2 | 6 | TACITUS—Annals, II. | 2 | 6 |
| HERODOTUS, VI. | 2 | 6 | TACITUS—Histories, I. | 3 | 6 |
| HERODOTUS, VIII. | 3 | 6 | THUCYDIDES, VII. | 3 | 6 |
| HOMER—Odyssey, IX. and X., XI. and XII., XIII. and XIV., each two books | 2 | 6 | VERGIL—Aeneid, I., III., V., VI., VII., IX., X | each | 1 6 |
| HORACE—Epistles | 3 | 6 | XENOPHON—Anabasis, I. | 1 | 6 |
| HORACE—Odes, I., II., III., IV. | 1 | 6 | XENOPHON—Hellenica, III., IV. | each | 3 6 |

Translations and Vocabularies (in order of the Text) are published to most of the above.

COMPLETE CATALOGUE OF OVER 300 BOOKS FREE ON APPLICATION.

London: W. B. CLIVE,
University Correspondence College Press Warehouse, 13, Booksellers Row, Strand, W.C.

TABLE OF CONTENTS . PAGE

| | |
|--|-----|
| BURTON'S ANATOMY OF MELANCHOLY, by ROBERT STEELE | 185 |
| BABE'S EIGHT HOURS FOR WORK, by J. A. HAMILTON | 187 |
| THE POETRY OF CANON O'HANLON, by LIONEL JOHNSON | 188 |
| NEW NOVELS, by GEORGE COTTERELL | 189 |
| HISTORICAL BOOKS | 190 |
| NOTES AND NEWS | 192 |
| ORIGINAL VERSE: "AUGUSTA WEESTER," by Dr. A. H. JAFF | 192 |
| MAOZINE AND REVIEWS | 192 |
| MR. T. FISHER UNWIN'S ANNOUNCEMENTS | 192 |
| MR. WILLIAM HEINEMANN'S ANNOUNCEMENTS | 193 |
| MESSRS. SWAN SONNENSCHEIN & CO.'S ANNOUNCEMENTS | 193 |
| MESSRS. METHUEN'S ANNOUNCEMENTS | 194 |
| MESSRS. JAMES NISBET & CO.'S ANNOUNCEMENTS | 195 |
| MESSRS. WELLS GARDNER, DARTON & CO.'S ANNOUNCEMENTS | 195 |
| SELECTED FOREIGN BOOKS | 195 |
| CORRESPONDENCE— | |
| Discovery of an Unknown Work of Maimonides, by Dr. E. Gaster; The Sources of Chaucer's Proverbes Tale, by Prof. Skeat; The Ogham X at Donard, by R. A. S. Macalister | 195 |
| MATHEMATICAL BOOKS | 196 |
| THE MEGALITHIC ART OF KALIDASA, by Col. G. A. JACOB | 196 |
| ANTHROPOLOGICAL JOTTINGS | 197 |
| PHILOLOGY NOTES | 197 |
| O'DONOGHUE'S PORTRAITS OF QUEEN ELIZABETH, by the late J. M. GRAY | 197 |
| NOTES ON ART AND ARCHAEOLOGY | 199 |
| OBITUARY: PROF. HELMHOLTZ, by J. S. SHEDLOCK | 199 |

TO INVALIDS.—A LIST OF MEDICAL MEN in all parts, willing to receive RESIDENT PATIENTS, giving full particulars and terms, sent gratis. The list includes private asylums, &c.; schools also recommended.—Address Mr. G. B. STOCKER, 8, Lancaster Place, Strand, W.C.

PICTURES FOR SALE.—OVERBECK'S "HOLY FAMILY," Two Portraits by Terborgh, and an Etching by Rembrandt; also Three old Russian Silver Plates.—Address "G. K.," Messrs. Street's, 30, Cornhill, E.C.

TYPE-WRITING.

AUTHORS, PUBLISHERS, &c.—Scientific, Literary, and Medical MSS. carefully and promptly typewritten by RAYNE & CO., 40, Norfolk Street, Strand, W.C. Private room for dictation. Highest references. Translations.

THE FLEET STREET TYPEWRITERS
115, FLEET STREET, E.C.
Lowest Charges. Highest Speed.
Every kind of Typewriting Work Done.
Price List—115, Fleet Street, London.

CHEAP TYPE-WRITERS' RIBBONS.—For Barlock, 16 yds., 2s. each; Two, 5s. 6d. Ribbons re-linked, 1s. each.—E. CARO, Mr. Newall, 101, Park Road, Bradford.

CATALOGUES

FOREIGN BOOKS and PERIODICALS promptly supplied on moderate terms.
CATALOGUES on application.
DULAU & CO., 37, SOHO SQUARE.

BAEDEKER'S & BADDELEY'S
TOURISTS' GUIDE BOOKS.
New fully detailed Catalogue sent post free on application
DULAU & CO., 37, SOHO SQUARE, LONDON, W.

FOREIGN BOOKS AT FOREIGN PRICES.

WILLIAMS & NORGATE,
Importers of Foreign Books,
11, HENRIETTA STREET, COVENT GARDEN,
AND
20, SOUTH FREDERICK STREET, EDINBURGH.
CATALOGUES post free on application.

TH. WOHLLEBEN,
FOREIGN BOOKSELLER,
45, GREAT RUSSELL STREET
(Opposite the British Museum),
Supplies all FOREIGN BOOKS and PERIODICALS at the most moderate prices.
Catalogues on application.

AGENCY FOR AMERICAN BOOKS.

G. P. PUTNAM'S SONS, PUBLISHERS
and BOOKSELLERS, of 27 and 29 West 23rd Street, New York, and 24, BEDFORD STREET, LONDON, W.C., desire to call the attention of the READING PUBLIC to the excellent facilities presented by their Branch House in London for filling, on the most favourable terms, orders for their own STANDARD PUBLICATIONS, and for ALL AMERICAN BOOKS and PERIODICALS.—CATALOGUES sent on application.

IMPORTANT.—PRINTING AND PUBLISHING
NEWSPAPERS, MAGAZINES, BOOKS,
&c.—KING, SELL & RAILTON, Limited, high-class Printers and Publishers, 12, Gough Square, 4, Bolt Court, Fleet Street, E.C., have specially-built Rotary and other fast Machines for printing and binding illustrated or other Publications.
Advice and assistance given to anyone wishing to commence New Journals.
Facilities upon the premises for Editorial Offices, free. Advertising and Publishing Departments conducted.
Telephone 2759. Telegraph, "Africanist, London."

ADVICE as to CHOICE of SCHOOLS.—

THE SCHOLASTIC ASSOCIATION (a body of Oxford and Cambridge Graduates) gives ADVICE and ASSISTANCE, without charge, to PARENTS and GUARDIANS in the SELECTION of SCHOOLS (for Boys or Girls), and Tutors for all Examinations at home and abroad.—A Statement of Requirements should be sent to the Manager, R. J. BEZON, M.A., 8, Lancaster Place, Strand.

THE ROYAL COLLEGE OF SCIENCE, LONDON,

THE ROYAL SCHOOL OF MINES.

WITH WHICH IS INCORPORATED

DEAN—THE RT. HON. T. H. HUXLEY, LL.D., F.R.S.

| | | |
|----------------------------------|--------|--|
| MECHANICS AND MATHEMATICS | | Professor Goodeve, M. A. |
| PHYSICS | | Professor A. W. Rucker, M. A., F.R.S. |
| ASTRONOMY | | Professor J. Norman Lockyer, C.B., F.R.S. |
| CHEMISTRY | | Professor W. A. Tilden, D.Sc., F.R.S. |
| BIOLOGY | | Professor (Hon.) The Rt. Hon. T. H. Huxley, LL.D., F.R.S. |
| GEOLOGY | | Professor J. W. Judd, F.R.S. |
| METALLURGY | | Professor W. C. Roberts-Austen, C.B., F.R.S. |
| MINING | | Professor C. Le Neve Foster, D.Sc., A.R.S.M., F.R.S. |
| AGRICULTURE | | Professor J. Wrightson, F.C.S. Francis Fladgate, Registrar. |

NEXT SESSION BEGINS OCTOBER 3RD.

Full Particulars can be obtained from the Registrar, Royal College of Science, South Kensington, and Prospectuses of Eyre & Spottiswoode, East Harding Street, Fleet Street, E.C., or of any Bookseller.

THE DURHAM COLLEGE of SCIENCE

NEWCASTLE-UPON-TYNE.

The College represents the Faculties of Science and Engineering in the University of Durham, and is open to Students of either sex. In addition to the Departments of Pure Science, complete Courses of Instruction are provided in Agriculture, Engineering, Naval Architecture, and Mining. There are also Departments of Literature, Classics, History, Modern Languages, Fine Art, &c.
A House of Residence for Women Students is attached to the College. The SESSION commences SEPTEMBER 24th, 1894. Full particulars will be found in the College Calendar, price 1s. Prospectuses will be forwarded on application free.
H. F. STOCKDALE, Secretary.

THE UNIVERSITY of ST. ANDREWS

GRANTS THE

DIPLOMA and TITLE of L.L.A. to WOMEN.

The Subjects of Examination may be selected from any seven out of thirty different subjects, the standard being the same as that for the M.A. Degree. The centres of examination are St. Andrews, Aberdeen, Bedford, Belfast, Birmingham, Bristol, Cardiff, Cheltenham, Cork, Dublin, Dumfries, Edinburgh, Inverness, Leeds, Leicester, Liverpool, London, Loughborough, Manchester, Newcastle-upon-Tyne, Paisley, Truro, &c.
For Prospectus, &c., apply to the SECRETARY, L.L.A. Scheme, the University, St. Andrews, N.B.

VICTORIA UNIVERSITY.

THE YORKSHIRE COLLEGE, LEEDS.

The Sixty-fourth Session of the Medical Department and the Twenty-first Session of the Department of Science, Technology, and Arts begin OCTOBER 8th.
The Classes prepare for Professions, Commerce, and University Degrees in Arts, Science, and Medicine. The Physical, Chemical, Biological, Engineering, and Leather Industries Laboratories, and the Weaving Sheds, Dyehouse, and Printing Rooms will be open daily for Practical Work.
The following Prospectuses may be had free from the REGISTRAR:—
1. For Regular Day Students.
2. For Occasional and Evening Students.
3. Classes in Agriculture.
4. For Medical Students.
A Hall of Residence for College Students has been established.

YORKSHIRE COLLEGE HALL of RESIDENCE (Limited), LYDDON HALL, LEEDS, under the direction of Mr. HERBERT ROWE, has been established as a Hall of Residence for Students of the Yorkshire College. Fee, £16 per term. Prospectus from the SECRETARY of the College.

UNIVERSITY COLLEGE, LONDON.

LECTURES ON ZOOLOGY.

The General COURSE of LECTURES on ZOOLOGY, by Professor W. F. R. WELDON, F.R.S., will COMMENCE on WEDNESDAY, OCTOBER 3rd, at 1 p.m.

LONDON SCHOOL of MEDICINE for WOMEN, 30, HANDEL STREET, BRUNSWICK SQUARE, W.C., and the ROYAL FREE HOSPITAL, prepare for all the Medical Examinations open to Women. Entrance Scholarship, value £30; Stuart Mill Scholarship, £30 a year for four years; Mackay Prizes of £20 each, &c.—Apply to SECRETARY at School.

SMALL SCHOOL for GENTLEMEN'S

SONS.—Country house; healthy hill district. Small classes; individual attention. Moderate terms.—OXFORD M.A., The Grange, Hildesheim, Essex.

DR. KLEIN has now added to the CIVIL SERVICE INSTITUTE, at 10, Cannon Street, E.C., a REGISTRATION DEPARTMENT for ALL the Scientific Professions. Principals of Schools at Home and Abroad, Rectors, Vicars, and Assistant Teachers may confidently rely upon the Doctor's long and varied experience in professional matters being placed promptly at their disposal.

Just published.

COAL-DUST an EXPLOSIVE AGENT,

as shown by an Examination of the Camerton Explosion. Crown 4to, Illustrated with 7 Plates. By DONALD M. D. STUART, F.G.S., Mining and Civil Engineer. London: Office of the Colliery Manager, 32, Rotherhithe Street; E. & F. N. Spon, 125, Strand, New York: Spon & Chamberlain, 12, Cortlandt Street. Or of the Author, Redland, Bristol.

"The object I have sought is to present a description of the Explosion; to locate its origin and trace its propagation; to enquire into the source and character of the gaseous mixtures to which the initial gaseous explosions, and the subsequent propagations were due; the nature and subtlety of the physical and chemical activities for the effects produced; and to indicate the conditions under which the explosion was commenced, propagated, and stopped."—AUTHOR'S PREFACE
Price 7s. 6d. net; free by post, 8s.

IMPORTANT WORK ON THE HISTORY OF THE NOVEL.

A GUIDE TO

BRITISH & AMERICAN NOVELS.

BEING A COMPREHENSIVE MANUAL TO BRITISH AND AMERICAN FICTION FROM THE EARLIEST PERIOD TO THE END OF 1893.

BY PERCY RUSSELL,

Author of "The Author's Manual," &c.

Crown 8vo, cloth, 300 pp., price 3s. 6d. net; by post, 3s. 10d.

THE GUIDE CONTAINS A COMPLETE HISTORY OF THE NOVEL, LIVING NOVELISTS, AND NOVELISTS OF THE PAST.

BY THE SAME AUTHOR.

THE AUTHOR'S MANUAL.

WITH PREFATORY REMARKS

BY MR. GLADSTONE.

Seventh and Cheap Edition. With New Preface, 304 pp., crown 8vo, cloth, price 3s. 6d. net; by post, 3s. 10d. With Portrait.

"... Mr. Russell's book is a very complete manual and guide for journalist and author. It is not a merely practical work—it is literary and appreciative of literature in its best sense.... We have little else but praise for the volume."—Westminster Review.

LONDON: DIGBY, LONG & CO., PUBLISHERS
18, BOUVERIE STREET, FLEET STREET, E.C.

ESTABLISHED 1851.

BIRKBECK BANK,

Southampton Buildings, Chancery Lane, London.
TWO-AND-A-HALF PER CENT. INTEREST allowed on DEPOSITS repayable on demand.
TWO PER CENT. ON CURRENT ACCOUNTS, on the minimum monthly balances, when not drawn below £100.
STOCKS, SHARES, and ANNUITIES purchased and sold.

SAVINGS DEPARTMENT.
For the encouragement of Thrift the Bank receives small sums on deposit, and allows interest monthly on each completed £1.

BIRKBECK BUILDING SOCIETY.

HOW TO PURCHASE A HOUSE

FOR TWO GUINEAS PER MONTH.

BIRKBECK FREEHOLD LAND SOCIETY.

HOW TO PURCHASE A PLOT OF LAND

FOR FIVE SHILLINGS PER MONTH.

The BIRKBECK ALMANACK, with full particulars, post free
FRANCIS RAVENSCROFT, Manager.

OLD SHIRTS RE-FITTED, Fine Irish Linen, 2s. or very best Irish Linen, returned free, ready to wear, 2s. 6d. Sample Shirt, for Dress and ordinary wear, any size, post free, 2s. 9d., 3s. 9d., 4s. 9d., 5s. 9d., or 6s. 9d. Twilled Night Shirts, 2s. 11d., 3s. 9d., 4s. 9d., or 5s. 9d. LINEN COLLARS and CUFFS. Best 4-fold Collars, 4s. 6d. and 5s. 6d. doz.; made exact to pattern, 2s. 9d. half-doz., post free. Napkins, 2s. 6d. per doz.; Dinner Napkins, 4s. 6d. per dozen; Table Cloths, 2 yards square, 2s. 9d. each.

IRISH LINEN

2½ yards by 3 yards, 5s. 6d.; Kitchen Table Cloths, 10½d. each; real Irish Linen Sheet, fully bleached, 2 yards wide, 1s. 11d. per yard; and Linen Diaper, 8½d. per yard; Nursery Diaper, 4½d. per yard; Surplice Linen, 7d. per yard; Glass Cloths, 3s. 6d. dozen. LINEN HUCKABACK TOWELS, 3s. 6d. per dozen; Damask Towels, 6s. 6d. per dozen; Turkish Bath Towels, 1s. each; Twilled Linen Pillow Cases, from 1s. 1d. each. IRISH CAMBRIC HANDKERCHIEFS.—Children's, 1s. 2d.; Ladies', 2s. 3d.; Gent's, 3s. 6d. Hemstitched—Ladies', 2s. 3d.; Gent's, 4s. 11d. per dozen. Better qualities equally cheap. Price Lists and Patterns of all kinds of Linen Goods and Hosiery sent to any part of the world, post free. Monograms, Crests, Coats of Arms, Initials, &c., woven and embroidered. Samples and Illustrated Price Lists post free to any part of the world.

B. & E. M'HUGH & CO., Limited, BELFAST

VINOLIA CREAM

Is a good Prescription

FOR

SUNBURN, INSECT BITES, and any SKIN IRRITATION.

1s. 1½d. and 1s. 9d. per Box.

THEATRES.

ADELPHI THEATRE.

A. and S. Gatti, Sole Proprietors and Managers.
THIS EVENING, at 7.45, THE FATAL CARD. Messrs. William Terriss, Murray, Carson, Charles Fulton, W. L. Abingdon, Richard Purdon, and Harry Nicholls; Mesdames Vane, Laura Linden, Sophie Larkin, and Miss Millward.

COMEDY THEATRE.

Sole Lessee and Manager, Mr. J. Comyns Carr.
THIS EVENING, at 8.15, THE NEW WOMAN. Mr. Fred Terry, Mr. Cyril Maude, Mr. J. G. Grahame, Mr. Wyea, Mr. Champion, Mr. Byron; Miss Rose Leclercq, Miss Alma Murray, Miss Laura Graves, Miss Gertrude Warden, Miss Rickards, and Miss Winifred Emery.

CRITERION THEATRE.

Lessee and Manager, Mr. Charles Wyndham.
THIS EVENING, at 8.0, HOT WATER. Messrs. Charles Hawtrey, Edward Righton, George Giddens, William Blakeley, Sydney Valentine, J. G. Taylor, F. Atherley, E. Dagnall, F. Vigay; Mesdames Edith Chester, Alice de Winton, E. Vining, K. Drew, A. Saker. Preceded, at 8.30, by HOME RULE.

DALY'S THEATRE, LEICESTER SQUARE.

THIS EVENING, at 8.15, A GAIRTY GIRL. Messrs. C. Hayden Coffin, Eric Lewis, Geo. Grossmith, jun., Lawrence D'Orsay, Farren-Soutar, R. Somerville, Gilbert Porteous, Charles Eaton, and Rutland Barrington; Mesdames Kate Cutler, Nellie Malone, Marie Studholme, Louis Pounds, Kate Haddon, Violet Robinson, Nina Martino, and Lottie Venne.

GAIETY THEATRE.

THIS EVENING, at 8.0, LITTLE JACK SHEPPARD. Messrs. Seymour Hicks, Willie Ward, E. M. Wood, E. W. Royce, W. Chessman, and Charles Danby; Mesdames Ellaline Terriss, Amy Andrade, Florence Levey, Georgina Preston, Lizzie Collier, Violet Monckton, Ethel Earle, Sutherland, Benton, Cannon, Henshawe, and Jessie Preston.

GARRICK THEATRE.

MR. WILLARD'S SEASON.
THIS EVENING, at 8.30, THE PROFESSOR'S LOVE STORY.
MATINEES SATURDAY and WEDNESDAY NEXT, at 2.30.

GLOBE THEATRE.

THIS EVENING, at 9, CHARLEY'S AUNT. Mr. W. S. Penley, Messrs. Walter Everard, Sidney Paxton, H. Farmer, Cecil Thornbury, and H. Reeves Smith; Mesdames Ada Branson, Emmie Meyrick, Kate Graves, Nina Boucicault, At 8, IN THE EYES OF THE WORLD.

LYCEUM THEATRE.

THIS EVENING, at 8, THE QUEEN OF BRILLIANTS. Messrs. Hubert Wilke, Arthur Williams, W. H. Denny, John Le Hay, Avon Saxon, Owen Westford, Fred Wright, jun., Compton Coultas, Geo. Honey, and Fred Storey; Madame Amadi, Miss Lizzie Ruggles, Miss Annie Moyers, Mesdames Leonard, Burle, Leigh, Comyna, and Miss Lillian Russell.

LYRIC THEATRE.

THIS EVENING, at 8.0, LITTLE CHRISTOPHER COLUMBUS (New Edition). Messrs. E. J. Lonnen, John F. Sheridan, F. Cook, Thompson, W. S. Laidlaw, H. Gregory; Mesdames Geraldine Umar, Maud Holland, M. Love, A. Newton, E. Greville, D. Thorne, F. Wilson, V. Cassell, M. Marsden, and Florence St. John, &c. At 7.15, THE HOUSE OF LORDS.

STRAND THEATRE.

THIS EVENING, at 8.45, OUR FLAT. Mesdames George Esmond, Annie Goward, May Edouin, Annie Esmond, Grace Lane, F. Loveridge; Messrs. C. Fawcett, H. Rosa, E. Hendrie, E. Silward, Cecil Paget, D. Gordon, and Willie Edouin. At 8, PARALLEL ATTACKS.

TERRY'S THEATRE.

THIS EVENING, at 9, THE FOUNDLING. Messrs. Charles Groves, Sydney Brough, Huntley Wright, Oswald Yorke, George Warde, Stanley Kennis; Mesdames Ellis Jeffreys, Emmeline Orford, Susie Vaughan, Lizzie Webster, Gwynne Herbert, Minnie Clifford, Fanny Erris. At 8.15, THEN FLOWERS GREW FAIRER.

TRAFALGAR THEATRE.

Proprietors, Mr. and Mrs. Wyatt.
THIS EVENING, at 9, THE CHINAMAN. Mr. Frank Wyatt, Messrs. Warren, Dreyton, Wentworth, John Tresahar, Mesdames Cicely Richards, Halkett, Kenward, Ripley, Carley, Clara Jacks. Preceded, at 8.15, by THE ELECTRIC SPARK.

VAUDEVILLE THEATRE.

THIS EVENING, at 9, THE NEW BOY. Messrs. Arthur Helmore, J. D. Beveridge, J. Beauchamp, S. Warden, K. Douglas, T. Palmer, F. Volpe, T. Kingston, J. L. Mackay; Mesdames Gladys Homfrey, May Paley, Eamé Beringer, A. Beet. Preceded, at 8.15, by LOYAL.

PALACE THEATRE.

THIS EVENING, at 7.45. Millie Hylton, Fanny Wentworth, Tom Fancourt, Hubertus, Dorothy Hanbury, Duncan's Collie Dogs, Nellie Christie, Cliff Ryland, H. Lamore, Mona Richard and his Serpentine Dancing Dogs, Miss Ethel Ross-Selwieke, S. Towers, and the TABLEAUX VIVANTS, &c.

OLYMPIA—TWICE DAILY.

CONSTANTINOPLE, 12 to 5, and 6 to 11. 2,000 Performers. Superb Spectacle. Stage larger than any six theatres combined. Glorious Gardens. Roumelian, Hungarian, Turkish, and English Bands. Continual Round of Enjoyment.

NEW WORKS.

THE CAMBRIDGE UNIVERSITY CALENDAR, 1894-1895.

[Now ready, price 6s. 6d. net.]

By the Rev. H. LATHAM, M.A., Master of Trinity Hall, Author of "Pastor Pastorum."

THE SERVICE OF ANGELS.

[Nearly ready.]

A STUDY of the ARGONAUTICA of VALERIUS FLACCU3. By WALTER C. SUMMERS, B.A., Fellow of St. John's College, Cambridge.

[Ready, 2s. 6d.]

CAMBRIDGE: DEIGHTON, BELL & CO.

London: G. BELL & SONS.

THE BEST AND CHEAPEST GERMAN GRAMMAR FOR SCHOOLS AND COLLEGES.

NEW EDITION READY IN A FEW DAYS.

MEISSNER (MATTHIAS).—A NEW PRACTICAL and EASY METHOD of LEARNING the GERMAN LANGUAGE.

Twenty-third Edition, Entirely Revised, price 2s. 6d.

PRESS OPINIONS.

"How to learn languages? The solution of this problem can be nowhere better found than in the new and improved system of learning languages by M. Meissner."

British Journal of Commerce.

"Is certainly one of the best books on the subject in our language."—Gentleman's Journal.

NOTE.—Bona fide teachers who wish to examine this excellent grammar with a view of introducing it into their schools, will receive a free copy on application to

TH. WOHLLEBEN,

GERMAN BOOKSELLER and PUBLISHER, 45, GREAT RUSSELL STREET, LONDON, W.C.

Now ready, large crown 8vo, nearly 800 pp., cloth, 6s., post free

HISTORY

OF THE

FREE CHURCHES OF ENGLAND

FROM THE REFORMATION TO 1851.

By HERBERT S. SKEATS.

With a Continuation to 1891, by CHAS. S. MIALl.

"Evidently the result of most laborious research and remarkable skill in the arrangement of facts..... a useful work of reference and an interesting memorial of men and events that have left their mark on our national history."

Bradford Observer.

"A monument of painstaking and skilful work, which no one probably could have undertaken with so many advantages as Mr. Miall, or have accomplished with greater success."

Literary World.

"The leading members of all denominations will do well to get hold of this publication."—South Wales Daily News.

LONDON: ALEXANDER & SHEPHEARD,

21 AND 22 FURNIVAL STREET, E.C.

NEW WORK BY DR. MACLAREN.

Crown 8vo, cloth boards, price 5s., post free.

THE WEARIED CHRIST, and other

Sermons. By Rev. ALEXANDER MACLAREN, D.D.

"They show the same wonderful fertility of apt and beautiful illustrations, the same exquisite use of language, and the same direct heart-searching power which we are accustomed to find in all Dr. MacLaren's works."—Christian World Pulpit.

"They are fully up to his old level, and are still unrivalled in their own manner."—British Weekly.

"Very frank in tone, and modern in application."

The Bookman.

LONDON: ALEXANDER & SHEPHEARD, PUBLISHERS,

21 AND 22, FURNIVAL STREET, E.C.; and all Booksellers.

NOW READY.

QUEEN VICTORIA'S DOLLS.

By FRANCES H. LOW.

With Forty Full-Page Coloured Illustrations and numerous Sketches and Initial Letters

By ALAN WRIGHT.

Handsomely bound in cloth and gold, with gilt leaves, Price 12s. 6d.

This Book is published with the gracious permission and approval of Her Majesty the Queen.

THE STRAND MAGAZINE

For SEPTEMBER

(EDITED BY GEORGE NEWNES)

CONTAINS:—

DISTINGUISHED WOMEN and their DOLLS. By Frances H. Low.

THE KING and QUEEN of DENMARK. By Mary Spencer-Warren.

THE LIKENESSES of SHAKESPEARE. By Alexander Cargill.

READING a PLAY. By Mary H. Tennyson.

GIANTS and DWARFS.—I. Illustrations from Old Prints.

AN EXPERT in HANDWRITING. By Harry How.

PECULIAR FURNITURE. By James Scott.

LOST in the AIR. From the French of Eugène Mouton.

THE EAGLE'S CRAG. By M. P. Shiel.

MOST TRULY ONE. By Edward Salaman.

ENGINE-DRIVERS and their WORK.—II. By Alfred T. Story.

MARTIN HEWITT, INVESTIGATOR.—VII. The Affair of the Tortoise. By Arthur Morrison.

PORTRAITS of CELEBRITIES at DIFFERENT TIMES of their LIVES: The Rev. the Hon. Edward Carr-Glynn, M.A.; the Crown Prince of Denmark; the Crown Princess of Denmark; the Maharajah Gaekwar of Baroda.

112 pages, with 137 Illustrations.

Price 6d., post free, 9d.

GEORGE NEWNES, LTD., LONDON, W.O.

NEW WORK in preparation by W. RUSSELL, Author of "An Invalid's Twelve Years' Experience"—"MAN: his Peculiarities, Weakness, Diseases, Degeneration, and Remedies."

POPULAR EDITION, WITH PORTRAIT.

Large 4to, price 6d.

JOSEPH MAZZINI: a Memoir by E. A. V., with two Essays by MAZZINI: "THOUGHTS on DEMOCRACY" and "THE DUTIES of MAN."

"E. A. V.'s Memoir of Mazzini is, we are glad to see, now issued at sixpence, so that it can be procured and read by everyone interested in the development and growth of Democracy."—Pall Mall Gazette.

LONDON: ALEXANDER & SHEPHEARD, FURNIVAL STREET, E.C.

To H.R.H. the PRINCE of WALES.

BRAND & CO.'S A1 SAUCE,

SOUPS, PRESERVED PROVISIONS

and

POTTED MEATS, and YORK and GAME

PIES. Also,

ESSENCE of BEEF, BEEF TEA,

TURTLE SOUP, and JELLY, and other

SPECIALITIES for INVALIDS.

CAUTION—BEWARE of IMITATIONS.

SOLE ADDRESS:—

11, LITTLE STANHOPE STREET,

MAYFAIR, W.

NATIONAL PROVIDENT INSTITUTION.
For Mutual Life Assurance.

Profits.—The whole are divided amongst the Assured. Already divided, £1,600,000.

At the division in 1892 there were nearly eight hundred Policies in respect of which not only were the Premiums entirely extinguished, but also Annuities were granted or Cash Bonuses paid, whilst in the case of many Policies the original sums assured are now more than doubled by the Bonus Additions. Applications for Agencies invited.

ARTHUR SMITH, Actuary and Secretary.

48, Gracechurch Street, London, E.C.

| | | | | | |
|----------------|-----|-----|-----|-----|------------|
| Invested Funds | ... | ... | ... | ... | £4,700,000 |
| Paid in Claims | ... | ... | ... | ... | £9,000,000 |

Death Duties provided for by Life Assurance.

RICHARD BENTLEY & SON'S LIST.

On Monday next will be published

In 1 vol., crown 8vo, 6s.

A NEW POPULAR EDITION
OF

MAARTEN MAARTEN'S THE GREATER GLORY.

"The Greater Glory" is a strangely beautiful book, but its greatest charm is not in any one scene, it is the gradual evolution of beauty out of beauty till the climax is reached in the 'greater glory' of the old baron's deathbed."—Guardian.

MAARTEN MAARTEN'S NOVELS.

Each in 1 vol., crown 8vo, 6s.

AN OLD MAID'S LOVE.

THE SIN of JOOST AVENLINGH.

GOD'S FOOL.

NOW READY.

A NEW NOVEL BY THE AUTHOR OF "NOT LIKE OTHER GIRLS," &c.

THE OLD OLD STORY

By ROSA NOUCHETTE CAREY,

Author of "Nellie's Memories," &c.

In 3 vols., crown 8vo.

NOW READY.

BY THE AUTHOR OF "OUGHT WE TO VISIT HER?"

THE ADVENTURESS.

By MRS. ANNIE EDWARDES,

Author of "A Girtion Girl," &c.

In 1 vol., crown 8vo, 6s.

"The local colour and tone of the little drama, the conversation at Negretti's Hotel at Nice, the 'dear tishep' and his satellites, the petty spite and ambitions are perfectly admirable. Juliana Tredennick is, perhaps, the most clever of all the author's studies in complex character; she is worthy of Thackeray's scalpel-pen."—World.

MRS. ANNIE EDWARDES'S NOVELS.

Each in 1 vol., crown 8vo, 6s.

OUGHT WE TO VISIT HER?

LEAH: a Woman of Fashion.

SUSAN FIELDING.

A GIRTON GIRL.

NOW READY.

WEDDED TO A GENIUS.

By NEIL CHRISTISON.

In 2 vols., crown 8vo.

"An interesting study in psychology."—Athenaeum.

MARY LINSKILL'S NOVELS.

Each in 1 vol., crown 8vo, 6s.

BETWEEN the HEATHER and the NORTHERN SEA.

THE HAVEN under the HILL.

IN EXCHANGE for a SOUL.

CLEVEDEN.

TALES of the NORTH RIDING.

RICHARD BENTLEY & SON, New Burlington Street
Publishers in Ordinary to Her Majesty the Queen.

Ready on the 25th.

THE SENILE HEART:

Its Symptoms, Sequelæ, and Treatment.

BY

GEORGE WILLIAM BALFOUR

M.D. (St. And.), LL.D. (Ed.), F.R.C.P.E.,

F.R.S.E.,

Consulting Physician to the Royal Infirmary, to the Royal Hospital for Sick Children, and to the Royal Public Dispensary, Edinburgh; Consulting Physician to Leith Hospital, formerly Physician to Chalmers Hospital, Edinburgh, &c.; Member of the University Court of St. Andrews.

In crown 8vo, cloth, 300 pages, Illustrated,
Price 5s.

CONTENTS.

CHAPTER.

- I. INTRODUCTORY.
- II. HOW THE HEART IS AFFECTED BY AGE.
- III. SYMPTOMS AND SIGNS OF THE SENILE HEART.
- IV. PALPITATION, TREMOR CORDIS, TACHYCARDIA.
- V. BRADYCARDIA, AND DELIRIUM CORDIS.
- VI. ANGINA PECTORIS.
- VII. CONCOMITANTS AND SEQUELÆ OF THE SENILE HEART. GOUT.
- VIII. CONCOMITANTS AND SEQUELÆ OF THE SENILE HEART. GLYCOSURIA, GOUTY KIDNEYS.
- IX. THE THERAPEUTICS OF THE SENILE HEART. GENERALITIES.
- X. THE THERAPEUTICS OF THE SENILE HEART. EXERCISE AND DIET.
- XI. THE THERAPEUTICS OF THE SENILE HEART. DRUGS LIKELY TO BE USEFUL, AND HOW TO USE THEM.
- XII. THE PROGNOSIS OF SPECIAL SYMPTOMS. RECAPITULATION OF TREATMENT WITH SPECIAL REFERENCE TO SYMPTOMS.

LONDON:

ADAM & CHARLES BLACK,
SOHO SQUARE.

MR. WM. HEINEMANN'S NEW NOVELS

AT ALL LIBRARIES AND BOOKSELLERS.

READY THIS DAY.

THE EBB-TIDE:

A Trio and Quartette.

By ROBERT LOUIS STEVENSON
AND

LLOYD OSBOURNE.

In One Volume, price 6s.

TWENTY-EIGHTH THOUSAND.

THE MANXMAN.

By HALL CAINE.

In One Volume, price 6s.

Mr. T. P. O'Connor in the Sun: "This is a very fine and great story—one of the finest and greatest of our time.... Mr. Hall Caine reaches heights which are attained only by the greatest masters of fiction..... I think of the great French writer Stendhal at the same moment as the great English writer..... In short, you feel what Mr. Howells said of Tolstoi: 'This is not like life; it is life.'..... He belongs to that small minority of the Great Elect of Literature."

BY THE SAME AUTHOR, price 8s. 6d. each.

THE BONDMAN.

THE SCAPEGOAT.

CAPT'N DAVY'S HONEYMOON.

BY W. E. NORRIS.

A VICTIM OF GOOD LUCK.

In 2 vols., crown 8vo, 12s., at all Libraries.

Speaker.—"A Victim of Good Luck" is one of those breezy stories of his in which the reader finds himself moving in good society, among men or women who are neither better nor worse than average humanity, but who always show good manners and good breeding.... Suffice it to say that the story is as readable as any we have yet had from the same pen."
Daily Telegraph.—"A Victim of Good Luck is one of the brightest novels of the year, which cannot but enhance its gifted author's well-deserved fame and popularity."

BY THE SAME AUTHOR, price 6s.

THE COUNTESS RADNA.

BY FRANK BARRETT.

THE JUSTIFICATION OF ANDREW LEBRUN.

In One Volume, crown 8vo, price 6s.

Scotsman.—"The story is an excellent example of Mr. Barrett's often proved art in setting forth in a matter-of-fact way a complicated and mysterious plot; and no one who begins it will be able to lay it down until he has finished it."

BY THE SAME AUTHOR, price 3s. 6d.

KITTY'S FATHER.

READY THIS DAY.

A COMMON STORY.

By IVAN GONTCHAROFF.

Translated from the Russian by CONSTANCE GARNETT.
With an Introduction by EDMUND GOSSE.

Cloth, 3s. 6d.; paper cover, 2s. 6d.

[Heinemann's International Library.]

THE PIONEER SERIES

OF ORIGINAL ONE-VOLUME NOVELS.

Athenaeum.—"If this series keeps up to its present high level of interest, novel-readers will have fresh cause for gratitude to Mr. Heinemann."

Post 8vo, in ornamental wrapper 2s. 6d. net; uniformly bound in cloth, 3s. net.

READY THIS DAY.

THE GREEN CARNATION.

PREVIOUSLY PUBLISHED.

JOANNA TRAILL, SPINSTER. By ANNIE E. HOLDSWORTH.

GEORGE MANDEVILLE'S HUSBAND
By C. E. RAIMOND.

THE WINGS of ICARUS. By Laurence ALMA TADEMA.

LONDON:

WM. HEINEMANN, 21, BEDFORD STREET, W.C.

SATURDAY, SEPTEMBER 15, 1894.

No. 1167, New Series.

THE EDITOR cannot undertake to return, or to correspond with the writers of, rejected manuscript.

It is particularly requested that all business letters regarding the supply of the paper, &c., may be addressed to the PUBLISHER, and not to the EDITOR.

LITERATURE.

The Anatomy of Melancholy. By Robert Burton. Edited by the Rev. A. R. Shilleto. With an Introduction by A. H. Bullen. In 3 vols. (Bell.)

EVERYONE who has read much medieval literature conceives, at some time or another, the ambition of editing Burton's Anatomy; and it is with regret he dismisses, as a last illusion of departed youth, the hope of meeting with a publisher who will undertake its publication in the proper way. In truth, it is not the perfect editor we require for a final edition of Burton—to the credit of our race, they are not infrequent—but the publisher with large views and larger patience. He of the Dictionary of National Biography, and the Trustees who kept Mr. Ward for years at the delightful task of reading the best romances in the world in manuscripts a joy to the handler and beholder, have indeed shown a fitting respect to the works they produce—"O si sic omnes!" Perchance their examples may bear fruit, and some day the world may welcome the final edition of Burton's Anatomy of Melancholy.

The task of the editor of Burton is peculiarly difficult, from the varying nature of the interest he arouses and the audience he appeals to. At no time has our author been without a band of followers and admirers. Five editions in his lifetime, three more in the seventeenth century, three issues even in the eighteenth century, and at least a dozen in our own, sufficiently attest this. Scholars and men of letters love him for his gift of apt quotation, the rare polish of his expressions, and that strange power of dealing convincingly with unfamiliar old-world subjects and materials, of heaping up co-ordinate phrases, nouns, and adjectives, which makes him, more truly than his eighteenth century pillager, our English Rabelais—doctor, divine, and writer. The many, less able to appreciate his wide reading, and the skill great enough to take the outward form of simplicity, love him for his quaint stories, half-hints, and expression of feelings in which they share: nay, even for the mistakes and credulity at which they can now afford to smile. The copy of the Anatomy we have just laid down was bought in camp after Chillianwalla, and carried in a soldier's kit through India.

On the other hand, the task will demand an extensive and peculiar range of reading in the editor. In the course of his work Burton quotes or refers to something like 1600 writers of all periods, nearly all in Latin (translations or originals). Even Froissart is quoted in Latin (we believe from Sleidan's abridgment), and Ariosto in English, since no Latin translation existed. His favourite classical authors are less read now than formerly; his system of medicine, of physics generally, belongs to the bygone days, and is unintelligible to most scholars; while the mere mechanical difficulties in verifying 100,000 quotations are enough to deter any but the boldest and most persevering of men. Yet the labour will be well repaid. As we follow Burton from author to author, we begin to grow into a knowledge and love of him; we see his mind at work, and the scraps he quotes interest us, not because Seneca or Maximus Tyrius wrote them, but because being said they are so exactly what Burton wanted to say that nothing else seemed fitting. But one of the chief pleasures of the editor will be to watch the growth of the writer as revealed in the Anatomy, for Burton is before all else the man of his book. Written after twenty years of study, obscurity, and disappointment, its success gave him fame, brought him preferment and ease, and supplied an interest to the autumn of his days. His self-revelation is greatest in the address of Democritus to the reader. Here we see his content with life, his love of Oxford and pride in his college, coming and growing with success. Thus, in his second edition, he says of himself:

"Preferment as I could never get, so am I not in debt for it, although my friends' providence, care, alacrity, and bounty was never wanting to do me good, yet either through mine own default, infelicity, want or neglect of opportunity, inequity of time's preposterous proceedings, my hopes were still frustrate, and I left behind, as a dolphin on shore, confined to my college, as Democritus to his garden, Diogenes to his tub, where I still continue, and lead a monastic life mihi et musis, sequestered from those tumults and troubles of the world" (ed. 1624, p. 3).

But, in the later editions, the passage runs thus:

"Greater preferment as I could never get, so am I not in debt for it, I have a competency (Laus Deo) from my noble and munificent Patrons, though I still live a collegiate student, as Democritus in his garden, and lead a monastic life, sequestered from those tumults and troubles of the world" (ed. 1638, p. 3).

The praise of "the most flourishing college in Europe" is not found in the earlier editions; his hatred of war and of the Jesuits grows stronger, he arrives at a clearer judgment of the position of the sectaries, and his apologies for and account of his work are much enlarged. Certain authors, too (but remarkably few), are only quoted in the later editions; and there is an unfailing source of study in the verbal changes he makes, his avoidance of repetition, and love of alliteration.

Our English Rabelais (as we have ventured to call him) presents many points of contact with his French predecessor. Burton does not often refer to Rabelais, but when he does he compares him to Lucian, no slight praise at the hands of such a Lucian-reader as Burton was. The differences between them are obvious—one writes a tale or tales, the other a methodical treatise; one is free and gross, as his time forced him to be, the other chaster in tone and language.

Yet the delicate way in which each of them treat of true love, while they revel in the exposure of its counterfeits, brings them near each other, as well as the way in which both range over the world of their days, the Frenchman exaggerating his praise and blame, the Englishman, with something of Chaucer's humour, putting the case so that we sometimes wonder whether he sees the folly he has made us mark, till we find that we have been an instrument in the wise old writer's hands, that he saw the humour and the folly of life. We see him laughing with us, laughing at us; and it is not till we remember the quiet city parson, "who always administered the sacrament in wafers," that we regain our early confidence in him, and make him our bosom friend.

Much might be said of Burton's method. Some writers have seen in the synopsis which heads each part of the book an additional proof of Burton's "whimsicality." On the contrary, it was characteristic, not of Burton, but of the early seventeenth century, and it was the only thing which made the writing of such a book possible. Time after time, as we take up the little Dutch 12mos and 16mos, we find the large folded synopsis, too often torn, which reveals to us the author's plan—law, divinity, politics, all are alike in this. We see in it the influence of the Schoolmen, of their encyclopedic plans and methodical complexity, preserved in full force in the universities, and in them alone. In this light we may call Burton the last of the Schoolmen; yet while his matter and method are medieval, the man is a modern: his prejudices, his desires, his standpoint, are those of the new world of science and religion.

We thus arrive at some sort of criterion by which we can judge any serious edition of Burton. The verification of his quotations, a sine qua non with some, is not even the most essential point—its value is its educational effect on the editor, the power it gives him of entering into Burton's mind; as regards the reader it is generally mere curiosity. "Did Burton really read these books?" "Are they merely dummy quotations?" are among the first questions one is asked. What is still wanted is an editor who shall explain the allusions now obscure, digress still more than Burton has done, give us in full, for example, "that famous testament of Grunnius Corocotta Porcellus" which "every schoolboy hath at his finger's ends" (or had in the good old times), and that epitaph of Aelia Laelia Crispis on which the melancholy man is advised to divert himself by writing a commentary (he will find some hints, if we mistake not, in the Theatrum Chemicum). We shall require of him some simple arrangement by which we can detect the more important additions to the text (omissions are very few), at least in the principal editions—for example, most of the additions in the sixth edition are to the chapters on Love. If the quotations are verified, they should be verified in books that Burton might have used, in any case the edition used should be quoted. A list of his library might be procured—the Bodleian has a list of the Latin books presented by his executors to the University, though it despised the English ones (now among its chief treasures), of which a catalogue would be difficult to make.

The edition before us has at first sight much to recommend it. It is nicely bound, though the decoration is, perhaps, more suitable to the Muses Library than to "Democritus on Diseases," as an eighteenth century label on one of our folios of Burton calls the book. It is enriched with a photograph of Burton from the painting in Brasenose, of which only those who have seen the original can judge the excellence. The simple device of cutting out the unnecessary background, and the skill of Messrs. Walker and Boutall, the process engravers, have given us a likeness of Burton which we can at last believe in and love. The book is worth buying for the portrait alone. The type is clear, the paper good, and the typography would be good judged by any other standard than that the Chiswick Press has set us for its own work—with them we are not used to "dropped" or imperfect letters. The somewhat "erratic" system (or want of system) on which the spelling of the Anatomy has been dealt with is naturally the cause of errors, and relieves us of the duty of correcting some, others are due to oversight—e.g., cola tura on II. 277 for colatura, the spacing before Baptista (III. 71), which turns a reference into nonsense. The publisher's note prefixed says:

"In the present volumes the text of the sixth edition of The Anatomy of Melancholy has been followed. . . . Burton's use of italics and capitals has been kept, but his erratic spelling has been somewhat altered in order to make it more consistent throughout."

In our judgment the revision of the spelling might have been more thorough: there seems to be little reason for halting between the two extremes of preserving entire the original spelling (only printer's spelling, be it remembered) and of bringing the whole into conformity with modern usage. Such words as "tetrick," "trivant," should, at any rate, be explained for the general reader.

The publishers have been fortunate in securing an introduction (24 pp.) by Mr. A. H. Bullen, the author of the notice of Burton in the Dictionary of National Biography. It gives a summary of the work, and of what is known as to the author's career. Let us extract from a passage we have read and re-read. Speaking in praise of Burton, Mr. Bullen says:—

"The huntsmen may be up in America, but we cannot lay aside the enchanting folio. They are already past their first sleep in China, but we turn another page, and another, and another. Sometimes, in the tingling silence of the night, as we shut the book at last when the firelight fades and the lamp burns low, it seems to us that the 'fantastic great old man' is sitting there in the armchair beside us. Stir the fire and fill the cup! Robert Burton redivivus, kindest spirit that ever ferried across the Styx, a health to you! You were a water-drinker, but to-night you shall do me right (Curas edaces dissipat Eivus), for since my days began I have loved you—you and Sir Thomas Browne, and Fuller, and Charles Lamb. Exact mathematician, curious calculator of nativities, how fares it with you? . . .

"Quo me, Bacche, rapis? Halloo, my fancy!"

I rave, dote, need a dose of hellebore, 'twere fit I take passage to Anticyra aboard the Ship of Fools. Si qua offensuncula facta est animi tui (as he said), if I have trod awry, extremam hanc oro veniam, I am resolved not to offend again. But I am tedious, I digress."

We regret that Mr. Bullen did not give us a short bibliographical description of the editions up to the sixth. It is needed: our copy of the sixth edition bears the Oxford imprint on the engraved title, while most copies have a London one.

Of Mr. Shilleto's work it is difficult to speak under the melancholy circumstances of the publication. He has, to use the publisher's words, "succeeded in verifying a large proportion of the classical quotations": say, from some thirty authors, and these the most often quoted. We cannot praise too highly the industry and knowledge of these authors shown by him. Unfortunately he has not given the references to the editions he used. We have missed, apparently, "the numerous passages from obscure post-classical authors," unless Erasmus, More, Poggio, and the English Poets are indicated in this way. These verifications are the chief feature of the edition; and in the rare cases where they are not exact, they will, at any rate, bring the reader very near the lines sought. Burton's references have always suffered from the printer, and even in this edition they are not safe. We cannot, however, speak in such high terms of the work done on the text of the author. If the text of the sixth edition has been followed, the editor has paid far too much deference to the judgment of Mr. Tegg. For example (i. 66), our editor (and Mr. Tegg) have "and a goodly person of an angel-like divine countenance." Burton wrote "angelick," and so most editions have it, the printer in the fifth making it "angelike." Another error is made (i. 43) by our editor (and Mr. Tegg), in printing "or that so much renowned Empedocles" as part of the translation of Lucretius iii. 1055-6 (there is an obvious error in Mr. Shilleto's citation), making nonsense of the passage. The quotation from Spenser (iii. 34) should have been verified: it comes from Book IV., not V. In iii. 8 Tegg is again followed: Note 6 belongs to the preceding page, and has nothing to do with p. 8.

Mr. Shilleto has englished some previously untranslated passages. How much help the average reader will get from "whether adoraments nourish" as a rendering of "an odores nutriant" (ii. 288), may be a moot question; but to translate "inversorum Apuleiorum" as "of Apuleiuses . . . that have been metamorphosed" (i. 46) seems calculated to confuse and mislead him. Burton himself explains his meaning: the world is full, not of men turned to asses, like Apuleius, but of asses in human likeness. The conjectural emendations of the text—few and far between—are not happy. The substitution of "Guinea" for "Guiana" would spoil the point of Burton's hint, that the voyage to Anticyra would be as little rewarded as Raleigh's, however high the hopes with which it was undertaken. "Virgilian" for "Virginian" (ii. 238) is unnecessary: Hakluyt was well known and much quoted in those days. A note on "Raphael de Urbino"—"The famous Raphael Sanzio was a native of Urbino"—might have been spared. The suggestion that Henry VIII.'s Commissioners were parties to the immorality they afterwards condemned in the convents they intended to suppress (iii. 134) is needless, untrue, and offensive. The "Taxa Camerae Apostolicae" (iii. 461) does not refer to Tetzels' sale of Indulgences, but to a well-known work of which a copy is preserved in the library at Trinity College, Dublin. The reader who does not know the scandalous medieval joke on the founder of the Gilbertines will not understand Burton's allusion (iii. 229) by the aid of a note giving the number in the order at the dissolution of the monasteries. Mr. Shilleto has discovered some difficulties in the text. The "crux" in i. 36 "parata" might have been cleared away by referring to any early edition: it is a misprint for "parasites" (fifth edition), changed in the eighth edition to "parrots." A serious case of neglect, too, is found in not systematising the references to the authors: the same work may be cited in four different ways.

An Index (45 pp.) has been contributed by the editor's brother. It is much fuller than any that has hitherto appeared, and we are grateful for it, though the principle on which it was constructed does not appear. Burton's own Index has not been used (a most amusing one, by the way). Jonson's name does not appear in it, though he is several times cited, and names and incidents are inserted or omitted casually. The story of the poison-maiden (i. 266) is not indexed; two references to Anytus are inserted, while a third—first in order of occurrence and precisely similar—is omitted.

There can be no doubt that Mr. Shilleto would have removed the blemishes we have pointed out, and completed his scheme before allowing it to appear. As it is, a work has been produced doomed to be speedily superseded. Mr. Shilleto will always have the credit of being the first of the editors of Burton: unfortunate fate has deprived him of the honour of being the only one. We can heartily commend the edition to those who are dissatisfied with the printing of Mr. Tegg or with the reprint from American "electros" lately dignified by the title of an edition; and, as we said before, the portrait of Burton alone should sell the book. But we cannot tell those who know and love our author that they will find any other features in the book: it does simply what the booksellers' editions have promised to do all this century—verify some of the quotations, and print the text with reasonable accuracy. Folios of Burton are still cheap; better buy one of them.

If we have failed in indicating the reasons of the love felt for our author to those who do not understand and share it, let them at least rejoice that a worse thing has not come on them—a Burton-Shakspeare controversy. Some years ago an American millionaire, convinced—as some even of his educated fellow countrymen seem still to be—that Shakspeare could not have written his plays, and disgusted with Bacon's character, hit on Burton as the real author. He came to England, had a concordance made of every word in the first edition of the Anatomy to prove the identity of vocabulary and expression, and unfortunately died a week after he made his crowning discovery—a final proof of Burton's authorship. It was—a copy of "Venus and Adonis," with the conclusive inscription, "My book, Robert Burton."

ROBERT STEELE.

Eight Hours for Work. By John Rae. (Macmillans.)

IN collecting a number of his contributions to periodicals and supplementing them with new chapters to form a book—Eight Hours for Work—Mr. John Rae has made a very opportune addition to the materials available for the discussion of workmen's hours of labour. He is a convinced, not to say an enthusiastic, Eight-Hour Man. He believes that not only a class, but the community at large, will gain by shorter hours; and he has reason for the faith that is in him. And his reason is that he has done what hardly any one had done before him. He has not been content to ratiocinate or to guess; he has gone to the facts, and by laborious collation and intelligent selection has arrived at a definite conclusion. "I was led to undertake the following inquiry," he says in his preface,

"because I could find no solid bottom in any of the current prognostications, favourable or unfavourable, as to the probable consequences of a general adoption of an eight-hours working day. They were all alike built on a little stock of assumptions about the natural effects of shorter hours, which nobody seemed to think it necessary to verify. Even the economists who ventured into the play, though they, perhaps, speculated with more system, still speculated with the same unverified materials and obtained accordingly only the same problematical results. It seemed, therefore, that if we wanted to know what was to happen now, the best way to begin was to find out what had happened before, and, instead of trusting to preconceptions of the natural effects of shorter hours, to ascertain, if possible, what their actual effects have been in the countries which have had experience of them."

Witnesses, of course, will prove most cases, and figures will prove anything; and Mr. Rae's method consists largely of citing the opinions of witnesses of all countries given before all sorts of commissions and inquiries, and extracting from the resulting blue-books and reports percentages and figures on a large scale. No doubt, therefore, it would be possible to confront his case with other serried ranks of witnesses, with contradictory quotations and irreconcilable figures drawn from similar storehouses. None the less, he appears to have collected his evidence with impartiality and to have done what may be done with so chaotic a material to balance opposite facts and arrive at trustworthy conclusions; and having worked in this spirit, the issue of it all at which he arrives he presents to us with real cogency and considerable force of conviction.

Experimental results of different systems and hours of labour are in truth no way lacking. Not to speak of the very various methods adopted in different countries from time to time, England itself has, as a matter of history, been steadily coming to a shorter and shorter day in most great trades. Even the day of eight hours has been tried, with good results in the main, on a larger scale and in more instances than hitherto the general reader has been at all aware of. The comparison of all these results is exceedingly difficult. In order to reduce different countries, different trades, and different epochs to a common denominator sufficiently exact to afford a really useful standard of comparison, all sorts of compensations and allowances have to be made, which, in detail, few even among experts are competent either to make or to criticise. But assuming this to have been fairly, if roughly, done, Mr. Rae's conclusion seems up to the present fairly in harmony with the facts. Broadly stated, it is this. In all manufacturing processes, however much machinery may have been improved, the efficiency of the human implement employed is of great, though varying, effect on the quality and the quantity of the product. This effect is far greater than masters are apt to suppose. Man does not live by wages alone: man does not run, as a steam-engine does, at an equable rate of speed and production, so long as it continues to get coal and oil and water in just consumption. Some leisure he must have—this is, indeed, a truism. But up to a point, and that a point not yet reached, the more leisure he has the more he can do in his hours of work. This, though an apparent paradox, is a practical truth, undoubtedly of great importance, and not very seriously doubted, at any rate in the great trades, up to the present limit of reduction of hours of labour. The possible and profitable limit of reduction has not yet been reached, says Mr. Rae. Men rapidly adjust themselves to new conditions, whether they be masters or hands. Better machinery and better arrangement on the masters' side, saving of spare minutes, punctuality, and, above all, increase of concentration, energy, and "go" on the men's part, make the output of the shorter day as great as that of the longer. The master does not suffer, and the community obtains an improved condition of its working classes. So it was when the eleven hour day came down to ten; and so when it fell to nine. Be it so. So it will be when the nine hour day becomes eight. That remains to be seen, though certainly there is considerable evidence on which to expect it. Facts have proved the masters wrong heretofore in so closely likening the man to the machine, and in saying "it stands to reason my mill will produce less in nine hours than in ten." That depends on whether the mill can run its hardest at ten; and, on the whole, experience goes to show that, though the revolutions of the engines remain the same, thrift of time and toil, system and goodwill, in the long run—such is the part humanity still plays in mechanism—get more work out of the mill in nine hours than in ten. It may be so even when nine hours fall to eight.

But after we have got the eight hour day, what then? Is it to be universal? is it to be compulsory? What effect will it have on the amount of work-seeking labour, relatively to the number of hands seeking work? What will the workman do with his increased leisure? To all these questions Mr. Rae returns a sober answer. It is certainly not to be universal. What harm does it do a porter at a country railway station to be on duty ten or eleven hours a day? It is certainly not to be compulsory. The trades know their own business best; let them elect—nationally or locally—to adopt the Eight Hours Act at such time and on such conditions as they can best arrange. It will not increase in the main the amount of work offering; it will not in the main find berths for fresh hands: its true recommendation is that the same hands will be made so much more efficient by shorter hours, that they will do as much work as before in eight-ninths of the time. No unemployed need apply—their panacea must be sought elsewhere.

If Mr. Rae's facts and figures prove anything, they certainly prove this last point. Ten hours' wage for an eight hour day is justified of its children, only because it is generally found that it is in truth ten hours' wage for ten hours' product in an eight hour day. The worst enemies of the eight hour movement, as it presents itself to economists of Mr. Rae's stamp, are the prophetic propagandists, who profess that if everybody works less the nation as a whole will earn more money and be able to pay more men the same wages as at present for less work. But where are the wages to come from to pay the new hands, if everybody is doing less? With some trifling exceptions, arising from extra shifts of men in particular industries, there is no prospect of the number of the unemployed being absorbed into occupation or even reduced substantially under the régime of a shorter working day. Shorter hours in past years have on each occasion left the unemployed where they were; nor does Mr. Rae profess to find them work. He is like the old trades' unionist, he sees his way to doing something for the aristocracy of labour, for the skilled energetic hands, who can get work even now and know how to keep it; but the rest are not to be made rich by a reform which will really widen the gulf between them and their abler fellows.

If for no other reason than that it does something in clear language and sound sense to meet this fallacy of the New Unionist advocates, this book is very welcome. The working classes may get along well enough with their present working hours. They may get along better with a shorter day, and it may be that the capitalist will be no worse off. But if a great change, touching personally perhaps one-third of the households in the country, were to be brought about on false pretences, and if it were found that to him that had wages more were given, and from him that had none there was taken away even that which he seemed to have—the hope of better things—the resulting disillusionment and discontent must have serious and might have disastrous consequences. The working classes are not very teachable except by experience; but any writer who helps to warn them against the pursuit of the impossible is among their best friends.

As civilisation is, after all, more precious than wealth, and a happy life better than high wages, perhaps the most momentous thing about the short working day is the workman's use of his leisure. It lies a little out of Mr. Rae's beat to discuss this, yet he is evidently hopeful that a good use will be made of it. In the middle of this century there was a pathetic longing among the better workmen for book-learning, and they gave their leisure hours to toil in schools. Now an increasing desire is noticed for the simple enjoyment of a home life, and probably in the next ten years there will be observed a rapidly growing desire for open-air physical recreation. Certainly, whether a shorter working day somewhat diminishes the annual output or somewhat contracts manufacturers' profits, or the reverse, matters little, if it produces in the majority of the intelligent artisan class a taste for thought and wholesome reading, for contentment in the happiness of their homes, and promotes the growth of mental and bodily vigour. This is a pious aspiration, and fate may frustrate it yet. Still, one is happier dreaming of that day than of a society of labouring men who work their politics to raise their wages, who revel in the dubious ethics of collectivist and emancipated households, and who take their recreation—sadly—in trampling out the beauties of expropriated recreation grounds.

J. A. HAMILTON.

The Poetical Works of Lageniensis. (Dublin: Duffy.)

CANON O'HANLON'S many works have long given him an eminent place in the ranks of the learned Irish clergy. As an hagiologist, he has few, if any, rivals. But among his more erudite labours, and the pursuits of an active ecclesiastical life, he has found time for the service of Muses less severe; and the various poems of "Lageniensis" have won a deserved reputation, wherever there are lovers of Irish legend, history, and antiquity. They are here collected into one volume, and publicly avowed by their author, though his title-page preserves the patriotic title of "Leinsterman," under which he has made himself a name and place among Irish poets. It is a volume which has many claims upon many readers; for almost every page is enriched by learned notes, or reminiscences of the writer's early days, which contain a wealth of information not to be neglected by students of Irish topography, hagiology, folklore, history, social customs, and traditions. Not Scott, nor Southey, was at greater pains to adorn and illustrate his works with a laborious and delightful commentary. It is an old fashion, and, like many old literary fashions somewhat fallen into neglect, an excellent practice: it associates poetry with learning, and these days are too much inclined to forget, or to despise, the possibility of that association.

The Canon's volume is divided into six parts, of which the two chief and longest are "The Land of Leix" and "Legend Lays of Ireland." The former is a poem in the Spenserian stanza, upon the famous principality, so celebrated in history and tradition, through its great line of chiefs, the house of the O'Mores. Leix roughly corresponds to Queen's County: that transformation, and the change of Offaly into King's County, having been effected in the reign of the Catholic Queen Mary and the Most Catholic King Philip, whose memories are preserved in Maryborough and Philipstown. This step was taken under the command, as Father Campion writes, of

"Thomas, Earle of Sussex, Lord Deputy, with whom came his brother-in-law, Sir Henry Sidney, treasurer. This deputy, to the inestimable benefit of the Realme, brought under obedience the disordered countreyes of Leix, Slewmerge, Ofalie, Inye, and Glenmalire, these late possessed by the Oconners, Omores, Odempseys, and other Irish rebels."

But the O'Mores were always, in Spenser's phrase about them, "up in a madding moode"; and Leix to this day remembers the prowess of Rory Ogue O'More; of his son Owny Mac Rory Ogue O'More, of Elizabethan fame; and of Roger or Rory O'More, their descendant, whose followers in the seventeenth century fought with the war-cry, "For God, our Lady, and Rory O'More." Canon O'Hanlon, in six cantos, celebrates the manhood, arma virosque, of his native region, and its natural beauty, its saints and scholars, its peasantry and folk-lore. He starts from Connall Cearnach, or the Victorious, foster-brother, cousin, and avenger of the great Cuchullain, with whom and Laoghairé he was one of the splendid triumvirate, towering above the rest of the Ultonian Red Branch Knights, the champions of Concobar Mac Nessa. From Connall sprang the lordly line of the O'Mores, princes of Leix. At the other end of history we have the praises of Grattan and O'Connell; while in the domain of sanctity and the Church's rule, we pass from Saint Ibar, Dubhtach the bard, and Saint Fiach of Sletty, to the memorable J. K. L. The poem flows from theme to theme, somewhat in the manner of "Childe Harold," mingling history and love of nature with deep personal feeling; and it also has the wistful note of the exile, being partly the work of years passed in America. But there is not, needless to say, a trace of bitterness or painful melancholy: it is penetrated with lovingkindness and with hope. The O'Mores of Dunamase are not transformed into peerless paladins, though they are justly extolled; the Cosbies of Stradbally are not sunk beneath humanity, though their cruelties are duly execrated. The poet has plenty of sorrows to sing of "old, unhappy, far-off things and battles long ago"; yet it is with Irish regret rather than with Irish rancour that he sings them. The Ireland and the Leix of his early memories are changed now, not in all things wisely and well. Here is many a fond allusion to old innocent country customs and things, now passed away: the Rinka dance, which

"in his earlier days the writer has witnessed more than once at country dancing parties given at farmers' houses, or at cross-roads in Leix, where the peasantry assembled. It is now almost obsolete in that part of Ireland."

Or take

"that plaintive air, transitional and wild, the Queen's County Ploughman's Whistle, which was listened to with rapt delight by the writer in his schoolboy days. Since then it has long ceased to be heard or known in the old territory of Leix."

Such lately faded memories, and those of a pre-historic time, are recorded with equal love and equal care: the writer's anti-quarianism is rooted in his affections.

"The sprites of buried heroes haunt white floods,
Or shout in whirlwinds; fancies light as air
With Fauns and Dryads filled our Celtic woods,
Peopled dark forests, hillslides, crochauns bare."

All this vast "Celtic phantasmagoria," the Danaan days and the Druid, which have peopled Ireland with their marvels and their beauties of legend, are remembered no less than the historic warriors of Clontarf,

"Who won abiding glory on the sea-worn plain."

Ireland is not only the Isle of Destiny, but the Isle of Memory. No review can give a just impression of the wealth of stirring and beautiful tradition in this poem, which springs from a great storehouse of learning indeed, but is far more than merely learned. "A people," wrote Gibbon of the Irish, "dissatisfied with their present condition, grasp at any vision of their past or future glories." No words could be more happily precise; but to past glories we should add past sufferings and sorrows. After enumerating the five chief families who usurped the lands of the ancient owners in Tudor times, Canon O'Hanlon says: "Time has scarcely yet allayed the bitter feelings with which several of the original invaders are yet regarded by the peasantry," instancing the mutilation and illusage of their monuments.

A less distressful subject is the natural beauty of Leix, from the Slieve Bloom Mountains in the west, the early shelter of Ossian's father, Finn Mac Cool, to Slieve-marie in the east. The poet chaunts the praises of his land with a patriotic enthusiasm like that of Virgil for Italy, of Scott for Scotland. "It is certainly," writes Mr. Standish O'Grady, "not to the credit of modern Ireland that the only poet whose imagination was touched by the wonderful beauty of our rivers was the Englishman Spenser." But Canon O'Hanlon has not forgotten the waters of Leix: Barrow, with his "tribute streams, renowned in deathless song"; Nore, and Suir, and Derryvarragh are celebrated here, as are all woods and vales and hills in this rich principality, both for their own charm and for the enchantments upon them of association with great memories and with old times. "The Land of Leix" is a true service to Irish literature, and to the best side of the Irish national cause.

The "Legend Lays of Ireland" are introduced by a long and valuable preface, dealing partly with the characteristics, partly with the bibliography, of Irish imaginative folk-lore. From this we can only quote the following passage, which contains nothing new, but which admirably portrays a state of society and a state of mind excellent in their day, and daily growing more hard to realise.

"To visit the light-hearted peasant's cabin, or to form one of its social circle during long winter evenings, is popularly known as courd-heaghing. It was the privilege of the author, and frequently availed of, during his schoolboy days. How agreeable to our youthful fancies the harmless and pleasant jokes of young and old at these humble cheerful re-unions? How many weird tales of goblin and fairy were told, and to auditors predisposed for receiving most wonderful descriptions and adventures with reverential assent! How many romantic and long-drawn narratives were spun out through the night by some professional story-teller, which were only varied by the rustic ballad, containing an almost interminable quantity of verses! The subject-matter for such tales beguiled the hours of evening rest, and often of field labour among our humble classes."

And now, upon reading these words of a living writer, one has visions of Dr. Douglas Hyde or Mr. Laiminie, painfully and anxiously gleaning the fields, once so fertile, for the lingering remnants of this ancient Celtic lore. Half a century has gone far towards "de-Celticising" the Irish Celt, and let the lovers of "common sense" or of commonplace be proud of it: but they must not expect the scholars and the poets, nor all the statesmen, nor all the clergy, to join them in their joy. But the days of the bards and shanachies are over, and perhaps it is idle to lament it now.

Canon O'Hanlon has told in verse twenty-four legends out of his collection of such matters; he tells them in various verse, spirited or grotesque, serious or light. The most pleasing of all is perhaps the longest, the Legend of Cullenagh, a story of the fairy hurlers. From "Paudyeen O'Kelly and the Weasel," a story recorded by Dr. Hyde, we learn that, when the Irish fairies play the national game of hurling, and when they indulge in the national sport of fighting, "it is necessary for the fairy host to have two live men beside them." No such reason is assigned for the fairies' demand of young Connor's help, nor was a second mortal present; but doubtless that reason was once part of this legend. One may regret, though the poet may here follow tradition, that Canon O'Hanlon, like Crofton Croker in so many tales, represents his hero as drunk. On his way from the fair, before the fairy messenger finds him, along the road

"The dust-drawn circles, tangents, sines,
And aught save rectilinear lines,
Gave mathematic demonstrations
Of awkward moves and dubious stations."

Too many Irish legends, in modern English dress, half disavow, with a blush, the truth of their wild incidents, by this device, shrinking from an honest flight into the land of wonder:

"Though many a past revolving year
Dissolved the reign of elfin fear,
Though hero and historian too,
Have vanished long from mortal view,
Yet Cullenagh remembers well
The tale old Connor loved to tell.

* * * * *
And who dare doubt, 'mid sceptics, stood
The paragon of hardihood."

The legend is told with equal force and grace, genially, and merrily, and well. The fairies figure in other forms: here, as in Croker's "Diarmid Bawn," we meet the Fear Darrig, or Red Man, a spirit of practical jokes; and the little shoemaker, the Leprechaun, perhaps best known by Allingham's poem. Here is O'Donoghue of Killarney, with his silver-shod charger; here are ghostly Culdees, and guarded treasures, and vanishing castles or islands of enchantment; the grim Dullahans, jovial Ganconers and Cluricauns, fairies all; stories of Saint Fintan, and of Mass said in open air in penal times: these and more are sung and richly annotated. It is pleasant, in times when church dignitaries, Catholic and Protestant, have not invariably shown a love, or even a toleration, of old Irish lore and legend, to find Canon O'Hanlon, in these poems and in his similar prose collection, not merely sanctioning, but actively recording, their humour, beauty, and imaginative charm. In a separate poem, "The Buried Lady," he tells a pathetic story of Eileen, daughter of MacDermott Roe, which is a fitting association for the churchyard of Kilronan, where lies Turlough Carolan, "last of the Irish bards," whose meeting with young Goldsmith, as Dr. Sigerson has it, "may fitly typify the meeting of the literatures of the old nation and of the Pale."

Upon the miscellaneous poems and sonnets there is not space to dwell, they are religious, memorial, and patriotic, all of no little deep sentiment and kindly grace. We will but say, that the reader of this book, when he has perused it from end to end, will marvel at the wealth of various knowledges, the double riches of science and art, poured into it by the erudition, skill, and patriotic devotion of its very reverend author: pius vates and de Hibernia bene meritus.

LIONEL JOHNSON.

NEW NOVELS.

A Cruel Dilemma. By Mary H. Tennyson. In 3 vols. (Frederick Warne.)

The Game of Life. By Darley Dale. In 3 vols. (Hutchinson.)

My Lady Dimple. By Lilie Crane. In 2 vols. (Remington.)

Panta Rye. By Ereinus and Another. (Sonnenschein.)

Clove Pink: a Study from Memory. By Anna C. Steele. (Chapman & Hall.)

In the Dwellings of Silence. By Walter Kennedy. (Heinemann.)

With the Help of the Angels. By Wilfrid Woodlam. (Ward & Downey.)

Set Free. By Aglaia. (Bristol: Arrow-smith.)

UNDER the not very distinctive title she has given to her book, Miss Tennyson has brought together a more or less cohesive group of human beings, and a strange mingling of truth and fiction. To the realm of fiction pure and unalloyed belongs that too charming Arabella Westall, whose fair countenance covers a profound depth of blackness, without showing any sign of what it hides. Her odious male accomplice, whom she persistently adores, and Jane, the stern and secret waiting-woman, belong also to that vein of invention which Charlotte Brontë, in Jane Eyre, was perhaps the first to strike. It comes about by the diabolical machinations of these persons that Ruth Forrest, the amiable and accomplished heroine, leaves her home, and goes almost penniless to London. Then begins the true-to-life part of the story. Ruth's experiences with cabmen, with landladies, and, above all, with dishonest picture-dealers and pawnbrokers—her struggles with poverty and her gradually sapped strength—are faithful pictures. The way of a girl who would make her own living is very hard. The innocent hopefulness and courage of Ruth Forrest are almost strangled in an ever-tightening coil of dishonesty and starvation. It is only one of those miracles which so frequently happen towards the close of a three-volume novel that saves her at last. There is an attempt at the tragic—a very successful attempt—in the end of the two schemers, Herbert and Arabella. Indeed, the book is successful throughout in this important respect, that it claims and enchains the reader's interest.

The game of life-chess, or chess-life, as played by Mr. Darley Dale's characters is a curious one. The pieces seem to move at their own sweet will, and it is difficult to see whether there are any specific sides. A hit is made here and there, but it is apparently only to the benefit of the individual piece; and at the end, to be quite candid, he would be a bold man who should say whether black or white had won. One other habit Mr. Darley Dale should look to. He interrogates his reader when he should instruct or entertain him, and the questions sometimes follow each other in a string, as on an examination paper. But apart from these things, and an irritating system of punctuation, The Game of Life is a good story, and the writing distinctly clever. One may feel that Claude Salmon and Mr. Frampton (name sacred to the memory of Frank Smedley!) are respectively very hardly used; but Claude stood in the way of John Heath's happiness, and there seems to be but one rule among novelists—higher, middle, and lower—when anybody named John is concerned. The character so named is bound to be good and worthy, and all his tribulation is made up to him on the last page, at whatever cost to the other characters. Of the portrayal of individuals in this book, the vignettes are perhaps the more successful and the full-length figures the less so. There is more grip and life about the secondary personages than about the principal ones. Miss Frampton, the cultivated and witty bachelor lady—you cannot call her an old maid—and the hysterical Mrs. Heath are especially sketched with some power.

My Lady Dimple is a story dealing with the deepest things of life, under a title which leads the reader to expect mere frivolity and playfulness. "My lady" herself is a child of earth, whose misfortune it was to be born in a convent and to be intended for a nun. The convent is in the Riviera, the nuns, presumably, all French; yet Nanette, when fate suddenly frees her and brings her to England, speaks excellent idiomatic

English, and only once does anybody notice her accent. These details are not too small to be a novelist's care, and all details should be rigorously truthful. This being said, the present writer has hardly anything but praise for Miss Crane's book. A story of incident it is, but the incident grows faithfully out of the characters. Little Nanette, with her purely sensuous charm, enslaves two men—one of them a man of strong spiritual instincts, who had lived only for his clerical work; and the other a handsome young man, passionate, idle, and vain, who, before Nanette's arrival on the scene, was prepared to be in love with Margaret Warner, a type of the strong, quiet-natured English girl. Complications, of course, ensue, amid which Nanette's warm Southern nature remains the same, and craves only for immediate and passionate joy; while Margaret's heart and soul come out of her great troubles like refined gold. Miss Crane's descriptions of persons and places appeal by their vividness very strongly to the mind's eye.

The story called Panta Rye is a rich jumble of bright but chaotic ideas, bearing the very impress of the undergraduate mind. Who else could so absolutely bubble over with things to be said in the very latest manner on every conceivable subject? Who else would index a novel, more especially with such items as "Babies, beauty (?) of, management of"; "Morality, a bad thing"; "Murder, a childish fault"; "Bridesmaids, kissing of the"; "Crypt of the Cyclo-magnies"—and so on? With its mingled audacity, shyness, wit, sententiousness—its fund of anecdote and unbounded joy in self-expression—the book literally smacks of the "junior college." It is with difficulty that you trace the story through all its wealth of curious matter, and it is with greater difficulty that you grasp the character of that hero among heroes, Panta Rye; but once known, you follow him with a true affection to the end of his adventures. The book begins with the wooing of a confirmed bachelor; it ends with the setting up, in a new American township, of a statue of Washington which had been got cheap. The statue totters, falls, crashes, and proves to be a mere petrified man in whose pockets a document important to the story is found. Yet all this is a mere "prelude"—so "Eremus and Another" say. To what it is a prelude they do not deign to tell us; but that they are capable of another book as clever, as muddled, as entertaining as this one cannot for a moment doubt.

Mrs. Steele's memory has played her very fair, for the personages in Clove Pink, who, she says, are "printed in colour" thereon, veritably live and move. There is always a sadness in remembered things, and the things in this book are no exception; but the clever writing and the brightness of some of the scenes afford relief. The poem at the beginning sets the keynote of the story, which reveals a mood of quiet observation, combined with a due sense of the humour and pathos of things—especially the pathos. Yet nowhere does the feeling sink into sentimentality, or become otherwise than beautiful. The events are hardly new. A girl meets a young man; they love and tell no one; he is injured in war and loses his memory of her; whence follow complications. Far more important, however, than novelty of events is the careful study of character; and in this Mrs. Steele shows some excellence. She gives us a good character-study in Linda Grey, whose "mind was essentially parochial"; who had a baby's ignorance and sulky obstinacy; who, when appealed to by her lover at a crisis in his life, would not release him from his engagement because she "had told everybody, and the trousseau was chosen and the cake was ordered, and the settlements, and the presents, and everything." He warned her that he should always love and ache for the other woman, but "You're sure to be kind to me," said Linda, comfortably; "you are always kind to everyone."

In the Dwellings of Silence contains certain elements of a story. That is to say, what stage-managers brutally call "the love-interest" is worked in, and there are a hero-lover and a villain-lover in the good old-fashioned style; but a story in the full sense of the word it is not, and can hardly have been intended to be. The aim of the book is to awaken enthusiasm for the Nihilists of Russia, and hatred for the Czar as the head and concentration of the tyranny against which they have struggled. Arrests, dungeons, the Siberian mines, an exciting escape, a pursuit, and various hairbreadth adventures, are among the inevitable details. By way of novelty in Siberian stories, there is added a tiger-fight, for which the majority of readers will be grateful.

Stories of small children who shine in obscure places, and afterwards turn out to be related to "peers of various degree," have been a fashion since Mrs. Hodgson Burnett invented little Lord Fauntleroy. Tom Browne, in With the Help of the Angels, has opinions rather more definitely formed than were those of his prototype Cedric; and the picture of him and his friend Gilbert Fairfax, the artist, setting out to see the world is both interesting and touching. How "we," as Tom said, painted portraits at twenty francs each, and tried garret-life—and did not like it—and made friends with gentle and simple, human and canine, Mr. Woollam tells in a simple and pleasant way. But it is a pity that Tom's triumphs should be won so uniformly by kindness, and that he should turn out to be related to a gouty, irascible man, since all this happened to the prototype aforesaid.

Gladys Sylvester, in Set Free, had been (as she said) "fed and clothed and educated for the purpose" of giving her impoverished family a leg-up by a brilliant marriage. A wooer with the necessary funds was found, and Gladys was caught in the toils of an unwelcome marriage. From these it was the duty and delight of a providential person named Selby to "set her free." He did this to the satisfaction of all parties, so that there is nothing more to be said.

GEORGE COTTERELL.

HISTORICAL BOOKS.

The Elements of English Constitutional History, from the Earliest Times to the Present Day. By F. C. Montague. (Longmans.) Mr. Montague informs us that "this little book is designed to give such an account of the growth of English institutions as may be intelligible to those who are only beginning to read history." It is simple justice to say that the task has been performed about as well as it could be, and this little manual may be unreservedly recommended to all teachers of history. As the writer truly says, "In writing a book of this kind it is impossible to be original," and the scope of his work does not present much field for detailed criticism. Mr. Montague has everywhere selected his authorities with care, and there is hardly a statement in his pages the accuracy of which can be impeached. The value of the book is greatly enhanced by its being carried down to the latest date; and perhaps the best part of it is the last chapter, which contains an excellent description of the constitutional changes of the present century, ending with the Local Government Act of 1888.

The Hall of Walthof; or, the Early Condition and Settlement of Hallamshire. By S. O. Addy. With Illustrations by W. Keeling, A. Winterbottom, and J. Moore. (Sheffield: Townsend; London: Nutt.) The statement in Domesday Book that Earl Walthof had no "aula" in Hallam has suggested the title for this handsomely printed book, which discusses various questions relating to the antiquities of Hallamshire. Perhaps not every reader of the ACADEMY may know that Hallamshire is the name of a district in South Yorkshire which includes the city (as it is now officially styled) of Sheffield. Mr. Addy writes attractively, and has collected a good deal of interesting material. If he would only learn that the picturesqueness of a hypothesis is not an element in its probability, he might gain a distinguished place among local antiquaries; but the lesson will evidently be hard to master. The volume abounds in highly ingenious but unfounded speculation. Much of the author's reasoning is based on etymological conjectures, which are for the most part either impossible or destitute of evidence. Mr. Addy knows that there is such a thing as philological science, and sometimes quotes such excellent authorities as Sweet or Sievers in support of his own views; but unfortunately he has almost in every case managed to misunderstand what they say. Mr. Sweet, for instance, will be greatly surprised to learn that his History of English Sounds affords any sanction for the notion that Fulwood means "folk-wood." Mr. Addy arrives at this conclusion by a chain of successive misinterpretations which are amusing from their ingenious plausibility, but which he could hardly have fallen into had he been less eager to find confirmation for his own guess. He attempts to support his derivation by the analogy of the German name Folchart-eswile (quoted from Förstemann), which he imagines to mean "folk-wood town," but which is really from the personal name Folchart. It would be unprofitable to go through the long list of Mr. Addy's etymological fallacies. The real value of the book, which is considerable, consists not in its speculations and inferences, but in the facts which the author has collected from documents and from personal observation. The chapter on "The Burgery or Corporation of Sheffield" is decidedly good, and the information given respecting local customs and superstitions should not be overlooked by students of folklore. On the whole, the volume, in spite of the defects to which we have referred, deserves the local success which it will probably obtain. We hope, however, that Mr. Addy will sometime do justice to his own powers, and achieve a wider reputation, by producing some archaeological work containing more of solid fact, and less of those fanciful hypothesis which may be applauded by the ignorant, but "make the judicious grieve." The illustrations reflect great credit on the skill of the local artists by whom they have been executed.

Furness and Cartmel Notes. By Henry Barber, M.D. (Ulverston; Atkinson; London; Elliot Stock.) This substantial and well-printed volume contains a large amount of information about that isolated fragment of Lancashire which used to have its ecclesiastical centre at Furness and now has its industrial centre at Barrow. It is handsomely illustrated; but the absence of a map is a grave defect, especially from the point of view of strangers. Just sixty pages are devoted to local etymology, about which subject—as readers of the ACADEMY know—the author entertains peculiar views. Far more valuable are the historical records, gathered sometimes from unpublished sources, and the stories of ancient customs. For example, we find here printed extracts from the original minutes of the parliamentary committee of sequestrators (in the Bodleian Library), and from the survey of church lands made in 1649 (in the Lambeth Library). In the chapter on Kirkby Old Hall there is a description of the family pictures, which were given away to the village carpenter by the last of the Kirkbys in 1771, and now widely scattered. Apart from their historic interest as portraits, it is quite possible that some of them may have been the work of such painters as Holbein, Lely, and Kneller. Another good chapter is that on Swarthmoor Hall, the home of Judge Fell, a very important personage during the Civil War, and a friend of George Fox. Not only is the meeting-house built by Fox still in existence, but also his Bible—a copy of the second edition of Cranmer's (1541), with lock and chain attached. We are told also of an old parish library preserved in the vestry of Cartmel Church, which contains (among many other old books) an early edition of the Faerie Queene, Pease's Book of Martyrs (in three volumes), a "Vinegar Bible," and a number of Elzevirs. This library is said to be in very bad condition; but a still worse fate has befallen a public circulating library started at Ulverston in 1797, which was dispersed sixteen years ago. We regret also the disappearance of another old Ulverston institution—the Town Bank Sunday-school, founded in 1787, in which Roman Catholics, Independents, and Quakers all took part.

History of Haddlesey. By the Rev. J. N. Worsfold. (Elliot Stock.) Haddlesey is a rural parish in the West Riding of Yorkshire, situate on the river Aire, within a few miles of Selby, and not far from Pontefract. Its ecclesiastical constitution dates only from 1874; but it is interesting to learn that this was only a revival of the independence granted to it under the Commonwealth. Whatever historical interest it possesses comes from the preceptory of the Templars at Temple Hirst, which has some claim to be the original of Sir Walter Scott's "Templehurst" in Ivanhoe. On the suppression of the Order, this preceptory was granted to the Darceys, one of whom took a prominent part in the Pilgrimage of Grace. Another great family connected with the place is that of the Stapletons, who have held land there from the thirteenth century. Mr. Worsfold, the rector of the parish, has industriously collected from charters and other old documents all the available facts concerning the early days of Haddlesey; while he has enlivened his pages by completing any narrative that touches upon his proper subject. We cannot call it a model parochial history; for constant digressions make the order of events very difficult to follow, and some readers will be offended by the constant effort after edification. But the book shows throughout genuine research and local patriotism. Among the illustrations we may specially mention the facsimile of a letter addressed by Oliver Cromwell to the constables and head-boroughs of West Haddlesey in 1648, which is still preserved in the parish.

The Registers of Bramfield, co. Suffolk. Edited by Thomas S. Hill. (Mitchell & Hughes.) Mr. Hill, rector of Thorington, having already printed his own parish registers, now places genealogists under a fresh obligation by publishing the registers of the adjoining parish of Bramfield. As might be anticipated, his work is a model of good editing. The registers begin in 1539, but are unfortunately lost for the period between 1596 and 1693, as seems to be the case with other villages in the neighbourhood. They fill just one hundred pages of print, and are elaborately indexed. In the preface, the editor points out some of their most interesting features, and supplies the gap (so far as possible) by giving the names of the churchwardens during the seventeenth century, and quoting from the churchwardens' accounts. On the occasion of the death of Edward VI., it is recorded that his successor, Queen Mary, was then living at Framyngham in Suffolk. There is also mention of a dispute about tithes and other ecclesiastical dues in 1556, which led to the excommunication of the defaulter. From MS. documents in his own possession, the editor is enabled to complete the story with the reconciliation that took place in the adjoining parish of Thorington. It is interesting to learn that the Rabett family have remained in Bramfield continuously since the first mention of them in these registers in 1563. The editor conjectures that they were originally traders at Dunwich, where one of the names was M.P. in the twelfth year of Edward IV. There are several instances of women being elected to the offices of overseer and surveyor, and also that of churchwarden—which last, we fancy, is not generally known. The oldest terrier of glebe, tithes, &c., is dated 1677; but there is evidence that a vicar towards the end of the sixteenth century compiled a book of customs, of which no trace now exists.

Round About the Crooked Spire. By Albert J. Foster. (Chapman & Hall.) The "crooked spire" is that of Chesterfield, the strange appearance of which is familiar to travellers by the Midland Railway. Mr. Foster's chapters on the town and neighbourhood do not display any profound antiquarian learning; but they are pleasantly written, and the information, so far as it goes, appears to be quite correct. The book will not fail to interest residents and visitors.

MUCH has been done of late years to illustrate the history and topography of Yorkshire, and some of this is due to the energies of Mr. W. G. B. Page of Hull. He has now printed and published four parts of a History of Hedon in the Seigniorship of Holderness, by Mr. Godfrey R. Park. The parish and borough of Hedon are conterminous and of small extent, only 312 acres; but the ancient records of its history are curious, and concern many of the old families of South-East Yorkshire. Mr. Park gives full lists of its mayors and parliamentary representatives with notes, a good account of the corporate plate and property of the borough, notices of its trade guilds, and the like. Such local monographs as this History of Hedon deserve appreciation and encouragement, as touching general history, beyond the immediate district in which they must of necessity be useful. It may be hoped that Mr. Page's enterprise will be rewarded. Three more parts will probably finish the work.

NOTES AND NEWS.

At present the only complete edition of Tennyson is that in nine volumes. We are glad, therefore, to learn that Messrs. Macmillan propose to issue very shortly a single-volume edition, which will add to the single volume of 1889 everything since published, and will also have (like that) a copy of the portrait engraved on steel by Mr. G. J. Stodart. In appearance, it will be uniform with the complete editions of the poems of Wordsworth, Coleridge, and Matthew Arnold.

MESSRS. R. BENTLEY & SON are about to publish a new edition of Dr. Mommsen's History of Rome, which the translator, Prof. Dickson, has revised throughout, so as to embody the author's recent changes and additions. It will contain a much fuller index, and will be issued in five volumes, to appear during the coming winter at monthly intervals, in crown octavo shape, and at a lower price than that of the existing edition.

WE are enabled to state that the term of partnership between Mr. Elkin Mathews and Mr. John Lane terminates at the end of this month. Mr. Mathews will retain the old premises, while Mr. Lane will open new offices opposite. The sign "The Bodley Head" and the telegraphic address "Bodleian" will in future be identified with Mr. Lane's business. As the result of a circular letter addressed to the authors, Mr. Mathews will continue to publish the books in the catalogue of the firm by Mr. Frederick Wedmore, the Rev. P. H. Wicksteed, Michael Field, Miss E. R. Chapman, Dr. Todhunter, J. A. Symonds, Mrs. De Guichy, Mr. F. W. Bourdillon, and Mr. Laurence Binyon; Mr. Lane being in future the publisher of those by Mr. Grant Allen, Mr. John Davidson, Lord De Tabley, George Egerton, Mr. Norman Gale, Dr. Garnett, Mr. Edmund Gosse, Mr. Kenneth Grahame, Mr. G. A. Greene, Dr. Gordon Hake, Mr. R. P. James, Mr. Le Gallienne, Mrs. Meynell, Mr. Allan Monkhouse, Mr. J. T. Nettlehip, Mr. J. A. Noble, Mr. Ernest Rhys, Mr. G. S. Street, Mr. Francis Thompson, and Mr. William Watson, as well as of the Yellow Book and the "Keynotes" series.

MESSRS. METHUEN & Co. announce the issue of a new series of "English Classics," under the general editorship of Mr. W. E. Henley, to be printed by Messrs. T. & A. Constable, of the Edinburgh University Press, on antique laid paper, with deckle edges and bound in buckram. In addition to the ordinary issue, there will be a small edition of seventy-five copies, on Japanese vellum. Poetry, fiction, drama, biography, letters and essays will be laid under contribution. Mr. R. L. Stevenson has undertaken an appreciation of Bunyan, by way of introduction to The Pilgrim's Progress. The first volume of the series, Tristram Shandy, with an introduction by Mr. Charles Whibley, will be issued immediately. It will be followed at intervals of a month or so by Congreve's Plays, with an introduction by Mr. G. S. Street; Walton's "Lives," with an introduction by Mr. Vernon Blackburn; The Adventures of Hajji Baba of Ispahan, with an introduction by Mr. E. G. Browne; Johnson's "Lives of the Poets," with an introduction by Mr. J. Hepburn Miller; and the Poems of Burns. Among the volumes in preparation are Lyly's Plays, with an introduction by Mr.

H. B. Marriot Watson; Gibbon's Autobiography, with an introduction by Mr. A. Wilson Verity; Pride and Prejudice, and others of Miss Austen's novels, with introductions by Mrs. Meynell; the Plays of Sheridan, with an introduction by Mr. Justin H. McCarthy; Joseph Andrews, with an introduction by Mr. G. W. Stevens; Boswell's Journey to the Hebrides, with an introduction by Mr. Hepburn Millar; Humphrey Clinker, with an introduction by Mr. David Hannay; and Shakspeare's Poems, with an introduction by the Hon. George Wyndham.

MESSRS. CASSELL & Co. will publish this autumn Mr. G. A. Sala's formal Autobiography, of which the recent book, entitled Things I have Seen and People I have Known, was only a prelude. It will fill two demy octavo volumes.

MESSRS. LONGMANS & Co. will publish next week—The Oracles ascribed to Matthew by Papias of Hierapolis: a Contribution to the Criticism of the New Testament, with appendices on the authorship of the "De Vita Contemplativa," the date of the Crucifixion, and the date of the martyrdom of Polycarp; and also a little volume entitled Studies of Nature on the Coast of Arran, by Mr. G. Milner, with illustrations by Mr. W. Noel Johnson.

The Soldiers' Pocket Bible, which is usually called Cromwell's Soldiers' Bible, was compiled by Edmund Calamy, and published by authority in 1643. The only copy of the first edition known in this country is that in the Library of the British Museum. This is being reproduced in facsimile by Messrs. Elliot Stock, with an introduction giving an account of the origin of the book and the various forms in which it was published subsequently, and a preface by Lord Wolseley.

MESSRS. CHATTO & WINDUS will inaugurate their new system of issuing library novels at net price of 5s. a volume, instead of the traditional price of half-a-guinea, with the publication of Mr. Grant Allen's "At Market Value," which has been running in Chambers's Journal.

MESSRS. THACKER, SPINK & Co., of Calcutta, announce the publication of a handsome book entitled The Image of War; or, Service on the Chin Hills, by Surgeon-Captain A. G. E. Newland. It will be illustrated with nearly two hundred photographs, of which 34 are reproduced as full-page plates by the colotype process. Mr. J. D. Macnabb, political officer in the South Chin Hills, contributes an historical introduction.

MR. PHILIP GREEN, of Essex-street, will shortly publish a new volume of sermons by the Rev. Stopford Brooke, entitled God and Christ. It will contain the last two sermons preached by him before leaving the Church of England, and the first two after he became a Unitarian. A Christmas booklet, containing four special discourses from this volume dealing with the Humanity of Jesus, will be issued next month. Mr. Green will also publish next week an essay on Some Modern Phases of the Doctrine of Atonement, by Dr. Vance Smith, dealing with Mr. Gladstone's position. A small book on Evolution and the Religion of the Future, by Miss Anna Swanwick, is also in the press.

"IN SHADOW OF SHAME" is the title of a new serial story, by Mr. Fitzgerald Molloy, which will be commenced in the number of Cassell's Saturday Journal published on September 19, in which will also begin a series of papers by Mr. Max Pemberton on "Celebrities of the Day," dealing with the turning points in their careers—Mr. Gladstone, Mr. Alma Tadema, Mr. Walter Besant, Mr. Henry Irving, and Mr. A. W. Pinero will be the subjects of this first article.

ORIGINAL VERSE.

AUGUSTA WEBSTER.

(In Memoriam, Sept. 7, 1894.)

CALM after storm, and after pain comes peace:
By pain, full-purchased peace is now with thee,
And surely sense of high serenity,
That in Death's kindly arms thou hast release.

Sweet singer, woman true, who ne'er didst cease,
In midst of lofty thinking, still to be
Helpmate of those in suffering, poverty,
Nor soughtest honours and ignoble ease.

We were the poorer that thou richer art,
Did we not know that spirits do not die;
But thro' their high aspirings still have part
In all the world's aspirings, chaste and high.
Thy genius quick and loving, must impart
High impulse till all song can be put by.

ALEXANDER H. JAPP.

MAGAZINES AND REVIEWS.

By far the most important article in the September number of The Antiquary is Sir Henry Howarth's address on "The Methods of Archaeological Research," which he delivered from the presidential chair at the Shrewsbury meeting of the Royal Archaeological Institute. It will, as a matter of course, appear in the Journal of that body, but we are unfeignedly glad that it has been also published here, where it will reach an entirely different class of readers. It is only during the present generation that the study of archaeology has been regarded as anything higher than a harmless fad. People knew that the remains of Greek and Roman art were valuable, because they had been told so at school and college; but that "old pots and pans," with axes and spears, could have any human interest for men of the enlightened nineteenth century they felt called upon somewhat fiercely to question. The climax of imbecility seemed to be reached when, not content with treasuring the rude objects found in our own barrows, some men were so simple as to import similar objects from barbarous lands and to institute comparisons between the two. Peter Pindar's once popular satire on Sir Joseph Banks is directed against the study of insects; but it may be taken as a picture of the feelings of ninety-nine out of every hundred persons in the days of our grandfathers, with regard to every scientific pursuit which did not pay, or was not pronounced to be in some way or other a handmaid to the then very narrow conception of the fine arts. Where almost everything is on so high a level of excellence, it is not easy—perhaps, indeed, not profitable—to make a selection from Sir Henry Howarth's address. We feel, however, that the cautions against rash generalisations, and the reminder given that there is hardly a subject on which our information is exhaustive, are of great value. The account given by Mr. Roach le Schœnix, of the museum at Nottingham is well done and very interesting. Nottingham contrasts favourably with the neighbouring city of Lincoln, in which there is at present no museum nor, so far as we have heard, any preparation being made for founding one. The correspondence here reproduced, as to the birthplace of Edward the Second, between Mr. Albert Hartshorne and Sir Llewelyn Turner, Deputy Constable of Carnarvon Castle, is highly curious. As we have no special knowledge on the subject, we cannot take sides in the controversy. If Sir Llewelyn Turner has a good case, he has certainly failed to put it in a favourable light.

THE COMING PUBLISHING SEASON.

MR. T. FISHER UNWIN'S ANNOUNCEMENTS.

"The History of Florence for the First Two Centuries, the Origin of the City and the Constitution of the Republic," by Prof. Pasquale Villari, translated by Mme. Linda Villari, illustrated; "Travels and Studies in the Far East," by Mr. Henry Norman, illustrated; the supplementary volume to "Climbing and Exploration in the Karakoram Himalayas," by W. M. Conway, with papers by Prof. T. G. Bonney, Dr. A. G. Butler, Mr. W. T. Thistlethorn-Dyer, Miss C. A. Raisin, Prof. Roy, &c., and a frontispiece portrait of the author; "A Literary History of the English People: from the Origins to the Renaissance," by M. J. J. Jusserand; the third volume of "The Revolution and the Empire," being the memoirs of Chancellor Pasquier, translated by Mr. Charles Emile Roche, with portraits; "Charles Bradlaugh: a Record of His Life and Work," by his daughter, Mrs. Hypatia Bradlaugh Bonner, with an account of his parliamentary struggle, his politics, and his attitude to religion, by Mr. J. M. Robertson, in 2 vols., illustrated; "Abraham Lincoln: His Speeches, Letters, State Papers, and Miscellaneous Writings," edited by Messrs. John G. Nicolay and John Hay; "The Breton Laws," by Mr. Laurence Ginnell; "Popular Sayings Dissected," by Mr. Wallace; "In the Guiana Forest," by Mr. James Rodway, illustrated; "The Mountains of California," by Mr. John Muir, illustrated; "The Story of Australian Exploration," by Mr. R. Thynne, illustrated; "An Encyclopædia of Proper Names" (uniform with the "Century Dictionary"); "Memoirs of a Short Life and Biographical Sketch of W. F. A. Gausser, translator of Potapenko's Works," edited by Canon Browne, illustrated.

Novels.—"The Lilac Sunbonnet," by the Rev. S. R. Crockett (and an édition de luxe of the author's "Stickit Minister"); "Majesty," by Louis Couperus, translated from the Dutch by Mr. A. Teixeira de Mattos; "The Devil's Playground, a Story of the Wild North-West," by Mr. John Mackie; "The Wish," by Hermann Sudermann, translated by Miss Lily Hinkel, with a biographical introduction by Miss Elizabeth Lee; "The Mark o' the De'il, and other Northumbrian Tales," by Mr. Howard Pease; "Both World Barred," by Mr. Sydney Kean; "Name this Child: a Story of Two," by Mr. Wilfrid Hugh Chesson, in 2 vols.; in the "Pseudonym Library"—"A Husband of no Importance," by Rita; "Lesser's Daughter," by Mrs. Andrew Dean; "Helen," by Oswald Valentine; in the "Autonym Library"—"By Reef and Palm," by Mr. Louis Becke, with a preface by the Earl of Pembroke; "A Bachelor Maid," by Mrs. Burton Harrison; "The Play Actress," by the Rev. S. R. Crockett; also "A Fancy Sketch," by Mr. George Rivers; "Mrs. Graud," by Mr. Papillon; "Gossip of the Caribbees: Sketches of Anglo-West Indian Life," by Mr. W. H. R. Trowbridge.

Children's Books.—In the "Children's Library"—"The Magic Oak-Tree, and other Stories," by the late Lord Brabourne, illustrated; an adapted version of "Robinson Crusoe," with the original illustrations by Cruickshank in separate form: "The Brounies around the World," written and illustrated by Mr. Palmer Cox; "Topsys and Turvys (number 2)," by Mr. P. S. Hewell, with coloured illustrations.

Poetry.—"Heart's Ease, or Poems of Rest and Unrest," by Mr. Theodore Titton; "When Life is Young: a Book of Poems for Young People," by Mrs. Mary Maples Dodge; "Five Books of Song," by Mr. R. W. Gilder, in one volume, illustrated by Miss Kate M. Warren, with a preface by the Rev. Stopford A. Brooke; "My Friend," a Sonnet Sequence, by Quex; "The Guest of Fire," by Miss Earle; a prose version of "Piers the Plowman"; and, in the Mermaid Series, the second and third volumes of the Best Plays of Ben Jonson.

Miscellaneous.—"Furth in Fields," by Mr. Hugh Haliburton; "Our Town, and Some of its People," by Mr. John Menzies, with a frontispiece; "A King of Dreams and Shadows," by Salik; "The English Abroad: Sketches by an Australian Cousin," by Miss Susan Gavan Duffy. "The Irish Song Book; with Original Irish Airs," edited with introduction and notes by Mr. Alfred Percival Graves, will be added to the "New Irish Library." "The Criminology Series" will commence with a translation by Miss Bella Duffy, edited by Mr. Douglas Morrison, of Prof. Lambroso's work on "The Female Offender"; and Mr. Morrison himself will contribute a volume on "Our Juvenile Offenders." In "The Story of the Nations"; "The Crusades," by Mr. T. A. Archer and Mr. Charles L. Kingsford. In the "Reformer's Bookshelf"—"Nihilism as It Is," by Stepniak, translated by Mrs. Vognich, with an introduction by Dr. Spence Watson; and "Claims of the Russian Liberals," by Mr. Felix Volkovsky. "Titled Corruption: The Sordid Origin of some Irish Peerages," by Mr. J. G. Swift MacNeill; a new edition of "The Tales of John Oliver Hobbes," in a collected form, with a portrait by Mr. Harold Spindler.

MR. WILLIAM HEINEMANN'S ANNOUNCEMENTS.

History and Memoirs.—"Letters of Samuel Taylor Coleridge," edited by Ernest Hartley Coleridge, with portraits and illustrations, in 2 vols.; "Memoirs of the Prince de Joinville," with drawings by the author, translated from the French by Lady Mary Loyd; "The Journals of the De Goncourts," selected and edited, with portraits; "Napoleon and the Fair Sex," from the French of Frédéric Masson, with portraits; "Royal Surroundings" (Catherine II.), from the French of K. Waliszewski, with portraits.

Educational.—New volumes of the "Great Educators"—"Rousseau and Education according to Nature," by Paul H. Hanus; "Horace Mann and Public Education in the United States," by Dr. Nicholas Murray Butler; "Thomas and Matthew Arnold and their Influence on Education," by Dr. J. G. Fitch.

Fine Art.—"Masterpieces of Greek Sculpture," from the German of Prof. Furtwängler, edited by Miss Eugenie Sellers, with plates and illustrations; "Seventeen Masterpieces of Rembrandt in the Cassel Gallery," with an essay by Frederick Wedmore, in portfolio; Michel's "Rembrandt: His Life, His Work, and His Time," edited by Frederick Wedmore, new and enlarged edition in monthly parts; "Catalogue of the Academy of Fine Arts in Venice," edited by E. M. Keary, with illustrations; "Catalogue of the Museo del Prado," by E. Lawson, with illustrations.

Poetry and the Drama.—In Russet and Silver," by Edmund Gosse; "A Century of German Lyrics," translated by Kate Freiligrath-Kroecker; "Hannele: a Dream Poem," by Gerhart Hauptmann, translated, with an introduction, by William Archer; to be followed by the same author's "Lonely Folk" and "The Weavers," "The Weaker Sex," "Lords and Commons," and "The Squire," completing the first series of plays by Arthur W. Pinero; also "The Second Mrs. Tanqueray," by the same author; the Plays of F. C. Burnand; "The First Step," a Play, by William Heinemann.

Fiction.—In 3 vols.—"In Haste and at Leisure," by Mrs. Lynn Linton; in 2 vols.—

"Her Own Folk," by Hector Malot, translated by Lady Mary Loyd; "A Drama in Dutch," by Z. Z.; "A Victim of Good Luck," by W. E. Norris; in 1 vol.—"The Ebb-Tide," by Robert Louis Stevenson and Lloyd Osbourne; "A Pastoral Played Out," by M. L. Pendered; "At the Gate of Samaria," by W. J. Locke; "A Daughter of this World," by F. Battershall; "Episodes," by G. S. Street; "The Green Carnation" and "An Altar of Earth" in the "Pioneer Series"; "A Common Story," from the Russian of Gontcharov and "Niobe," from the Norwegian of Jonas Lie, in "Heinemann's International Library"; and a complete uniform edition of "Björnsterne Björnson's Novels," with introductory notes by Edmund Gosse; and the following novels of Ivan Turgenev—"A House of Gentlefolk," "On the Eve," "Fathers and Children," "Smoke," and "Virgin Soil"; new editions of Miss Adeline Sergeant's "The Surrender of Margaret Bellarmine," and of "A Daughter of Musio," by G. Colmore.

Illustrated Christmas Books.—"A Battle and a Boy," by Blanche Willis Howard, with illustrations by J. McNeill Barbour; "The Attack on the Mill," Emile Zola, with new illustrations in black and colour, by E. Courboin; "Little Johannes," by F. Van Eeden, with an introduction by Andrew Lang.

Miscellaneous.—"Corrected Impressions," by George Saintsbury; "Manners, Customs, and Observances," by Leopold Wagner; "Degeneration," an Examination of the Laws and Results of Nineteenth Century Civilisation, by Max Nordau, in 2 vols.; also a fourth edition of "Alfred Lord Tennyson," by Arthur Waugh; "Israel among the Nations," by Anatole Leroy-Beaulieu.

MESSRS. SWAN SONNENSCHN & Co.'s ANNOUNCEMENTS.

Philosophy.—"Thoughts and Aspirations of the Ages: Extracts in Prose and Verse from the Great Religious Books of the World," edited by Dr. W. C. Coupland; "Natural Rights: a Criticism of some Political and Ethical Conceptions," by David G. Ritchie; "The Principles of Psychology," by G. F. Stout; "Sigwart's Logic," translated by Helen Dendy, in 2 vols.; "Ethical Discourses," by Leslie Stephen (volumes to follow by Prof. A. Sidgwick, J. H. Muirhead, David G. Ritchie, and others); "Spiritism: the Keystone of Christianity," by Mrs. Godfrey Clerk.

Science.—"A Student's Text-book of Botany," by Prof. Sidney H. Vines, illustrated, second half, completing the work; "Text-book of Embryology: Invertebrates," by Drs. Korschelt and Heider, of Berlin, translated and edited by Prof. E. L. Mark, of Harvard, and Dr. W. M. Woodworth, part i., illustrated; "The Cell: its Anatomy and Physiology," by Dr. Oscar Hertwig, of Berlin, translated and edited by Dr. H. J. Campbell, of Guy's Hospital, illustrated; "Text-book of Palaeontology for Zoological Students," by Theodore T. Groom, of the Yorkshire College, Leeds, illustrated, forming a supplement to Claus and Sedgwick's "Text-book of Zoology"; "Lectures on Human and Animal Psychology," by Prof. Wilhelm Wundt, of Leipzig, translated and edited by James Edward Creighton and Edward Bradford Titchener, of Cornell; "Handbook of Systematic Botany," by Prof. E. Warming, of Copenhagen, translated and edited by Prof. M. C. Potter, of the Durham College of Science, illustrated; "Introduction to Physiological Psychology," by Dr. Theodor Ziehen, with illustration, a new and revised edition; "Introduction to the Study of Zoology," by B. Lindsay, illustrated. In the "Young Collector Series": "Fishes," by the Rev. H. A. Macpherson; "Flowering Plants," by James Britten;

"Grasses," by W. Hutchinson; "Mammalia," by the Rev. H. A. Macpherson; "Pond Life," by E. A. Butler; "English Coins," by Llewellyn Jewitt, new edition; "Rainmaking and Sunshine," by John Collinson.

History, Geography, Travel, &c.—"Greek Constitutional Antiquities," by Dr. Gilbert, translated by E. Nicklin; "Annals of the English Peasantry," by Russell M. Garnier, in 2 vols.; "Records of the Hole Crafte and Fellowship of Masons; with a Chronicle of the History of the Worshipful Company of Masons of the City of London," by Edward Conder, jun., Master of the Masons' Company; "The Diary of a Cavalry Officer in the Peninsular and Waterloo Campaigns: 1809 to 1815," by the late Lieut.-Col. Tomkinson (16th Light Dragoons), edited by his son, James Tomkinson, maps and plates, new edition; "Mr. Picket Pin and His Friends: a Sketch of the Red Indian at Home," by Price Collier, illustrated from original drawings. "Social England Series," edited by Kenelm D. Cotes—"Introduction to the Social History of England," by the editor; "Chivalry," by F. W. Cornish, Vice-Provost of Eton; "Troubadours and Courts of Love," by J. F. Rowbotham; "The Fine Arts," by Prof. G. Baldwin Brown, of Edinburgh; "The English Manor," by Prof. Vinogradoff, of Moscow; "The King's Peace: a Historical Sketch of the English Law Courts," by F. A. Inderwick, Q.C.; "The Evolution of Household Implements," by Henry Balfour.

Belles Lettres and Art.—"George Romney and his Art," by Hilda Gamlin, with numerous photogravures, collotypes, and other reproductions of his pictures; "Prose Treatises of Richard Rolle of Hampole," edited from hitherto unpublished MSS. by Dr. Carl Horstmann, of Berlin, forming the first volume of the "Old English Library"; "The Best Books"—First Supplement, bringing the work down to the Midsummer of 1894, by William Swan Sonnenschein; "Leigh Hunt," by R. Brinsley Johnson, with a portrait; "Concordance to the Poetical Works of Milton," by the late John Bradshaw; "Randolph Lord de Vere, and other Poems," by the Rev. James Bownes; "Vox Amoris Dei, and other Poems," by Francis Osuaston; "Angeline, and other Poems," by Farel V. C. Serjeant.

Social Economics and Politics.—"Six Centuries of Work and Wages," by the late J. E. Thorold Rogers, new edition; "The Social Side of the Reformation," by E. Belfort Bax—Part I., "German Society at the Close of the Middle Ages"; Part II., "The Peasants' War"; Part III., "The Rise and Fall of the Anabaptists"; "Socialism: an Examination of its Nature, its Strength, and its Weakness, with Suggestions for Social Reform," by Prof. Richard T. Ely, of Wisconsin; "Social Science and Social Schemes," by James McClelland; "Workers on their Industries," a series of addresses delivered before the South Place Ethical Society; "The Land for the People: How to Obtain it and How to Manage it," by Charles Wicksteed, second edition, rewritten; "Three Months as a Factory Hand," by Paul Göhre, translated by Prof. R. T. Ely; "Moravian and Silesian Miners," by Dr. Benno Karpeles. In the "Social Science Series"—"Catholic Socialism," by Dr. Nitti, translated by M. Killea, with a preface by D. G. Ritchie; "The Progress and Prospects of Political Economy," by Prof. J. K. Ingram; "University Extension," by Dr. M. E. Sadler; "Social Studies," by Prof. Mavor; "Darwinism and Race Progress," by Prof. John Berry Haycraft, of the University College of South Wales; "A History of Tithes," by the Rev. H. W. Clarke; "Suicide and Insanity," by Dr. J. K. Strahan; "Work and Wages," by the late J. E. Thorold Rogers, new edition; "The Student's Marx," by Dr. Edward Aveling, new edition.

Educational.—"Concise Anglo-Saxon Dictionary for the Use of Students," by Dr. John R. Clark Hall; "A Student's Text-book of Universal History," by Dr. Emil Reich; "Progress in Language, with Special Reference to English," by Prof. Otto Jespersen; "Friedrich Froebel, and the Development of his Educational Ideas in his Life," by Dr. Hanschmann, translated by Fanny Franks; "Reports to the Gilchrist Trustees on Secondary Education and Training Colleges in the United States of America"—(1) "Training of Teachers," by Ada B. Bramwell and H. Millicent Hughes; (2) "Methods of Teaching," by Alice Zimmern; (3) "Education of Girls," by Sara A. Burstall; (4) "Graded Schools," by Mary H. Page; "Seyffert's Dictionary of Classical Antiquities," edited by the late Henry Nettleship and Dr. J. E. Sandys, school edition, revised, with more than 450 illustrations; "German History," by C. Abel-Musgrave; "Hartmann's Der Arme Heinrich," edited by Prof. John G. Robertson, of Queen Margaret College, Glasgow; "Sonnenschein's School Authors," new volumes—"Storm's Immensee," edited by Prof. John G. Robertson; "Select Readings in French Prose and Verse," edited by V. Oger (other volumes to follow, edited by Dr. Hermann Hager, of Manchester; Dr. Schüddekopf, of the Yorkshire College, Leeds; Dr. Alexander Thiele, of Queen Margaret College, Glasgow). In the "Parallel Grammar Series"—"Greek Syntax," by Prof. E. A. Sonnenschein, of the Mason College, Birmingham; "First Greek Reader and Writer," by Dr. J. E. Sandys; "Third German Reader and Writer," by Prof. Georg Fiedler, of the Mason College, Birmingham; "Fourth French Reader and Writer," by H. E. Berthou.

Fiction and Gift Books.—"The Wages of Sin," by "Lucas Malet," new edition; "The French Prisoner: a Romance of Dartmoor and the Western Seas," by Thomas A. Pinkerton; "The Member for Workshire; or, Church and State," by Thomas Aspdon; "A Narrow, Narrow World," by Edith Carrington, illustrated. New editions—"Margaret Dunmore: a Socialist Home," by J. H. Clapperton; "Three Great Lives," by Frances E. Cooke; "Bartholomew Legate," by Florence E. Gregg.

MESSRS. METHUEN'S ANNOUNCEMENTS.

Poetry.—"Ballads," by Rudyard Kipling; "English Lyrics," selected and edited by W. E. Henley; "The Golden Pomp: A Procession of English Lyrics from Surrey to Shirley," arranged by A. T. Quiller Couch; "Lyra Sacra": An Anthology of Sacred Verse, edited by the Rev. H. C. Beeching; "An Anthology of Irish Verse," edited by W. B. Yeats.

Illustrated Books.—"A Book of Fairy Tales," retold by S. Baring Gould, with illustrations and initial letters by Arthur J. Gaskin; "A Book of Nursery Songs and Rhymes," edited by S. Baring Gould, and illustrated by the students of the Birmingham Art School; "A Book of Christmas Verse," edited by the Rev. H. C. Beeching, and illustrated by Walter Crane; "The Battle of the Frogs and Mice," translated by Jane Barlow, and pictured by F. D. Bedford; "The Imitation of Christ," by Thomas A. Kempis, with an introduction by Archdeacon Farrar, illustrated by C. M. Gere; "The Christian Year," by John Keble, with an introduction and notes by the Rev. W. Lock, Sub-Warden of Keble College, illustrated by R. Anning Bell.

General Literature.—"Gibbon's Decline and Fall of the Roman Empire," a new edition, edited with notes and appendices and maps, by J. B. Bury; "A History of Egypt, from the Earliest Times to the Hyksos," by Prof. W. M. Flinders Petrie; "Egyptian Decorative Art," by Prof. W. M. Flinders Petrie, with 120 illustrations; "Egyptian Tales," edited by Prof. W. M. Flinders Petrie, illustrated by Tristram Ellis; "Southey's English Seamen" (Howard, Clifford, Hawkins, Drake, Cavendish), edited, with an introduction, by David Hannay; "John Ruskin: a Study," by Dr. Charles Waldstein, with a photogravure portrait after Prof. Herkomer; "A Book of English Prose," collected by W. E. Henley and Charles Whibley; "The Early Life of William Ewart Gladstone," by A. F. Robbins, with portraits; "The Deserts of South Central France," by S. Baring Gould, with numerous illustrations by F. D. Bedford, S. Hutton, &c., in 2 vols.; "A Garland of Country Song," English Folk Songs with their traditional melodies, collected and arranged by the Rev. S. Baring Gould and H. Fleetwood Sheppard; "The French Riviera," by Mrs. Oliphant and F. R. Oliphant, with illustrations and maps; "British Battles," by the Rev. H. B. George, with numerous plans; "The Pianoforte Sonata: Its Origin and Development," by J. S. Shedlock; "English Local Government," by Prof. E. Jenks; "A Primer of Tennyson," by Prof. W. M. Dixon; "The Age of the Condottieri: A Short History of Italy from 1409 to 1530," by Oscar Browning; "Religion in Boyhood: Notes on the Religious Training of Boys," by E. B. Layard, with a preface by J. R. Illingworth; "The Vaccination Question," by A. W. Hutton.

Leaders of Religion.—"Lancelot Andrewes, Bishop of Winchester," by the Rev. R. L. Ottley; "St. Augustine of Canterbury," by the Rev. Dr. E. L. Cutts, with a portrait; "Thomas Chalmers," by Mrs. Oliphant, second edition; "John Keble," by the Rev. Walter Lock, seventh edition.

English Classics.—"The Life and Opinions of Tristram Shandy," by Lawrence Sterne, with an introduction by Charles Whibley, in 2 vols.; "The Works of William Congreve," with an introduction by G. S. Street, in 2 vols.; "The Lives of Donne, Wotton, Hooker, Herbert, and Sanderson," by Isaac Walton, with an introduction by Vernon Blackburn; "The Adventures of Hadji Baba of Ispahan," by James Morier, with an introduction by E. S. Browne; "The Poems of Robert Burns," with an introduction by W. E. Henley, in 2 vols.; "The Lives of the English Poets," by Dr. Samuel Johnson, with an introduction by James Hepburn Millar, in 3 vols.

Classical Translations.—Lucian, Six Dialogues ("Nigrinus," "Icaro-Menippus," "The Cock," "The Ship," "The Parasite," "The Lover of Falsehood"), translated by S. T. Irwin; Sophocles, "Electra and Ajax," translated by E. D. A. Morshead; Tacitus, "Agricola and Germania," translated by R. B. Townshend; Cicero, Select Orations ("Pro Milone," "Pro Murena," "Philippic II., "In Catilinam"), translated by the Rev. H. E. D. Blakiston.

University Extension Series.—"The Earth," an Introduction to Physiography, by Evan Small; "Insect Life," by F. W. Theobald.

Social Questions of To-day.—"Women's Work," by Lady Dilke, Miss Bulley, and Miss Whitley.

Fiction.—"Kitty Alone," a romance of Devon life, by S. Baring Gould, in 3 vols.; "Matthew Austin," a story of English social life, by W. E. Norris, in 3 vols.; "The Trail of the Sword," a historical romance dealing with a stirring period in the history of Canada, by Gilbert Parker, in 2 vols.; "The God in the Car," a story of modern society, by Anthony Hope, in 2 vols.; "This Man's Dominion," by Mrs. Watson, in 2 vols.; "Round the Red Lamp," by A. Conan Doyle; "In the Midst of Alarms," by Robert Barr; "Subject to Vanity," by Margaret Benson, with illustrations; "Ant Diabolus Aut Nihil, and Other Stories," by X. L.; "Lizerunt, and other East End Idylls," by Arthur Morrison; "The Coming of Curculain," by Standish O'Grady, illustrated by Murray Smith.

School Books.—"A Vocabulary of Latin Idioms and Phrases," "Steps to Greek," and "A Shorter Greek Primer of Accidence and Syntax," by A. M. M. Stedman; "Selections from the Odyssey," with introduction and notes, by E. D. Stone; "The Elements of Electricity and Magnetism," by R. G. Steel, with numerous illustrations; "The English Citizen: His Rights and Duties," by H. E. Malden; "Index Poetarum Latinorum," a concordance to Latin Lyric Poets, by E. F. Benecke; "A Primer of Business," by S. Jackson; "Commercial Arithmetic," by F. G. Taylor.

MESSRS. JAMES NISBET & CO.'S ANNOUNCEMENTS.

General.—"Prayers for Heart and Home, being Morning and Evening Devotions for one Month for Family and Private Use," by the Rev. F. B. Meyer; "Words to the Laity," by the Archdeacon Sinclair; "Why do you not believe," by the Rev. Andrew Murray; "The New Acts of the Apostles," being Lectures on Foreign Missions delivered under the Duff Endowment, by the Rev. Dr. A. T. Pierson, with coloured chart showing the prevailing religions of the world and the progress of evangelisation; "Lyrics of a Long Life," by Dr. Newman Hall; "Morning Thoughts," with original verses, by Charlotte Murray; "When the Sun Riseth," by Miss Colville; "Great Principles of Divine Truth," by the late Canon Hoare, with portrait; "Hymns of Tersteegen, Suso, and others," edited by Mrs. Frances Bevan; "Calvinism Popularised," by H. A. Long, with portrait; "Youth's Ideals," by the Rev. J. Reid Howatt; "A Soldier's Daughter," being a short memorial of Miss Daniell, of Aldershot; "How to bring Men to Christ," by R. A. Torrey.

Biblical.—"The Holiest of All: an Exposition of the Hebrews," by the Rev. Andrew Murray; "Suggestive Scripture Reference Book," by the Rev. G. F. Bowes; "Step by Step through the Bible," Part III., being a Life of Christ for Children, by Miss Edith Ralph, with 12 illustrations; "The Books of Judges," by the Rev. Charles Lett Feltoe, being one of the Scripture Handbooks on the Historical Books of the Old Testament, with map; "The Bible by Modern Light," Vols. V. and VI., and "New Testament Hours," Vol. II., the Apostles: their Lives and Letters, Vol. I., Pentecost to Autumn, A.D. 45, with Epistles of James, Thessalonians and Galatians, by the Rev. Dr. Cunningham Geikie; new volumes of the "Biblical Illustrator," by Rev. Joseph Exell: "Romans," Vols. I. and II., "St. Peter's Epistles," "1 Corinthians."

Biographical.—"Life of Prebendary Gordon Calthrop," by the Rev. Arthur R. M. Finlayson, with portrait; "A Man's Gift: being the Life and Remains of the Rev. Dr. Alexander Macleod, of Birkenhead," by the Rev. A. G. Fleming, with estimate of his character by the Rev. Principal Fairbairn, with portrait; "A Broken Journey: Memoir of Mrs. William Beatty," by Mrs. G. S. Rea, illustrated.

Illustrated Stories.—"From Ploughshare to Pulpit," by Dr. Gordon Stables; "Lizette," by Mrs. Marshall; in the "Golden Ladder Series"—"The Mill on Sandy Creek," by the Rev. E. A. Rand; new volumes in the "Pilgrim Series"—"Naomi," by Mrs.

J. B. Webb; "Barriers Burned Away," by E. P. Roe; "Wych Hazel," by S. and A. Warner; "The Gold of Chickaree: a Sequel to 'Wych Hazel,'" by S. and A. Warner; "The Old Helmet," by Susan Warner; "The Young Marooners," by F. R. Goulding; "The Letter of Credit," by Susan Warner; in the "Golden Silence Series"—"Letting Lawson's Legacy," by Mrs. Marshall; "A Feast of Love," by Miss Hamilton; "Three Little Brothers," by Mrs. Marshall; "Three Little Sisters," by Mrs. Marshall; "Karl Krinken; or, Christmas Stocking," by Mrs. Marshall; in the "Dolly's Charge Series"—"Mona: the Story of the Fisher Girl," by H. S. Streatfeild; "Christian, the Boy of Leyden," by G. Norway; "Fan's Brother," by Miss Marshall; "Maitland's Money-box," by Lady Dunboyne; "Mountain Mill," by H. O. Coope.

MESSRS. WELLS GARDNER, DARTON & CO.'S ANNOUNCEMENTS.

"What is the Church? The Answer of the New Testament," by Canon Sanderson; "On the Art of Writing Fiction," containing contributions by W. E. Norris, S. Baring Gould, L. B. Walford, Prof. Church, Prof. Douglas, L. T. Meade, and others; "Stories for our Mothers' Union"; "A Young Wife's Ordeal," by Johanna von Woude; "A Garner of Gleanings, Grave and Gay," gathered by Lady Knightley, of Fawsley; "The New Floreat": A Letter to an Eton Boy on the Social Question, by the Rev. the Hon. James G. Adderley; "On the Green": Village Games, collected by G. F. E. Yeatman and Maud R. Hall; "A Feast of Stories from Foreign Lands," by James F. Cobb; "Fairy Tales from Grimm," with an introduction by S. Baring Gould, illustrated by Gordon Browne; "The Daughters who have not Revolted," by Christabel R. Coleridge; "Madge's Legacy," illustrated; "John's Lily," by Eleanor C. Price, illustrated; "Aylmer Court," by Henley I. Arden, illustrated; "Across two Seas," by H. A. Forde, illustrated; "My Lost Manuscript: the Romance of a School," by Maggie Symington; "Old Songs for Young Voices," with accompaniments, by Agnes L. Money; "Better than Toys for Girls and Boys, T. Pym At Home within," a new coloured book for brush and crayon work; "The Adventures of a Gun Room Monkey," by Arthur Lee Knight, illustrated by W. H. Overend; "The Harringtons at Home," by Ismay Thorn, illustrated by Gordon Browne; "Youthful Travellers," a Story-book for little Folk, with illustrations; "Where the Brook and River Meet," by Nellie Hellis; "The Story Album of Animals"; a new edition of "Poems written for a Child," by Two Friends; "Thoughts for the Sick," by Agnes L. Money; besides the annual volumes of Mothers in Council, edited by C. M. Yonge, Chatterbox, Sunday, The Prize, Leading Strings, Friendly Work, Friendly Leaves, The Young Standard Bearer, &c.

SELECTED FOREIGN BOOKS.

GENERAL LITERATURE, ART, ETC.

SCHREIBER, Th. Die hellenistischen Reliefbilder, hrg. u. erläutert. 11. Lfg. Leipzig: Engelmann. 24 M.
STUDIEN zur deutschen Kunstgeschichte. 4. Hft. Der Uebergangsstil im Elsaß. Ein Beitrag zur Baugeschichte des Mittelalters v. E. Polaczek. Strassburg: Heitz. 5 M.

THEOLOGY.

PETUCHOWSKI, M. Beiträge zur Bibelexegese des Talmud. I. Frankfurt-a-M.: Kaufmann. 5 M.
ROSENMAN, M. Studien zum Buche Tobit. Berlin: Mayer & Müller. 1 M. 50 Pf.
STOSCH, G. St. Paulus, der Apostel. Eine apologet. Studie. Leipzig: Faber. 3 M.

HISTORY, LAW, ETC.

ARCHIV, neues, der Gesellschaft f. ältere deutsche Geschichtskunde. 20. Bd. Hannover: Hahn. 12 M.
DARPE, F. Geschichte der Stadt Bochum, nebst Urkundenbuch. Bochum: Stumpf. 5 M.
DEMAY, Ernest. Recueil des lois sur la chasse en Europe et dans les principaux pays d'Amérique, d'Afrique et d'Asie. Paris: Firmin-Didot. 16 fr.
FROMMHOFF, G. Deutsche Rechtsgeschichte. Berlin: Heymann. 5 M.
GSAINDI, le Commandant. Le dernier Maréchal de France: Canrobert. Paris: Picard. 7 fr. 50 c.
NICOLLAUD, Ch. Casimir Périer, député de l'opposition, 1817-1830. Paris: Pion. 8 fr.
VUITTON, L. Le Voyage. Paris: Dentu. 15 fr.

PHYSICAL SCIENCE.

GÜMBEL, K. W. v. Geologie v. Bayern. 2. Bd. Geologische Beschreibung v. Bayern. Cassel: Fischer. 60 M.

PHILOLOGY.

DELITZSCH, F. Assyrisches Handwörterbuch. 1. Th. Leipzig: Hinrichs. 14 M.
MUEB-ARNOLD, W. A Concise Dictionary of the Assyrian Language (Assyrian-English-German). Part I. Berlin: Reuther. 5 M.
SIRAWAIHI's Buch üb. die Grammatik. Übers. u. erklärt v. G. Jahn. Berlin: Reuther. 4 M.
WUELFING, J. E. Die Syntax in den Werken Alfreds d. Grossen. 1. Thl. Bonn: Hanstein. 12 M.

CORRESPONDENCE.

DISCOVERY OF AN UNKNOWN WORK OF MAIMONIDES.

London: Sept. 9, 1894.

Of all the Jewish writers there is none so famous as Maimonides. Everything from his pen is held in high reverence, especially his works on philosophy and religious practice. It seems, therefore, almost incredible that Maimonides should have written a book that has up to the present day remained totally unknown. And yet this is a fact, however surprising it may be.

Some time ago I acquired some very valuable Hebrew MSS., which came from the East: among them a copy of the Pentateuch with the titles, which is probably the oldest in existence, and a small treatise entitled "Commentary on the Sacred and Profane Names of God in the Pentateuch," by Rabbi Moses ben Maimon, i.e., Maimonides. At first I naturally doubted the truth of this ascription; but a careful study of the contents has now totally dispelled my doubts, and convinced me of the extreme value of this hitherto unknown work of Maimonides. He quotes therein his Great Compendium, the Guide, and the Book on Precepts. The style is pure Hebrew, and has the peculiar grandeur of Maimonides. I have verified the references to those works, and found them exact. Also in the philosophical explanations there is absolute identity of thought between the new treatise and the Guide.

From these references, it seems that this treatise must have been the last work of his life, death supervening almost immediately after its completion, which would easily explain why it has remained unknown.

The treatise, as the title indicates, is a succinct guide to the scribe of the Sacred Scroll, that he may know which of the names of God is sacred and which denotes another deity and is profane. The reason is, that if a mistake occurs in the writing of a sacred name the whole column must be cut out, if the scroll is to be used in the religious service, while the names of other deities (strange gods) may be scratched out and corrected. Doubts have existed from ancient times, whether a word such as Adonay, in Gen. xviii., 3 means God or Lord, and Maimonides considered it his duty to set those doubts at rest and decide how such a word ought to be treated. He strengthens his assertions by referring to the Aramaic translation of Onkelos, who represents the traditional interpretation of the Synagogue. Maimonides therefore quotes him very often, which is another element of importance in this treatise. In many instances he gives philosophical and philological interpretations of the various names of God in the Bible. These are the only instances known of Maimonides writing in Hebrew on philosophical subjects, all his other philosophical writings being in Arabic.

I am now preparing an edition of this new treatise of Maimonides, with an English translation and explanatory notes.

M. GASTER.

THE SOURCES OF CHAUCER'S PRIORESSES TALE.

Cambridge: September 3, 1894.

I endeavoured to point out in the ACADEMY of September 1 that Chaucer took the leading ideas for his Prioresses Tale partly (as is well known) from one of the Miracles of Our Lady by Gautier de Coinci, and partly (as perhaps may not have been noticed before) from another of the same set of poems by the same author. I also gave, at the same time, an epitome of the latter story.

It has occurred to me that some readers may like to see this story somewhat more exactly represented. With this view, I venture to present a doggerel version of it, line for line, without claiming any very close exactitude for my translation. I fear the story is, even in the original, sufficiently dull; and I do not pretend to have in any way improved it.

I must note that I have omitted the moral at the end. It consists of thirteen lines, and is chiefly remarkable for complexity of rhymes. The last twelve lines end in -oie, -oier, -oia, -oies, -oit, and -oite. I do not care (as Chaucer says) to "follow such curiosity."

"THE CLERK OF CHARTRES."

"There lived at Chartres, as authors say,
A clerk, whose mood was proud and gay;
In pleasures of the world too curious.
Moreover, he was so luxurious
That every whim was uncontrolled.
His doings were so wild and bold,
That pleasure proved his only guide.
Of Easter or of Christmas-tide,
Of solemn vigil, or of feast,
He thought no more than does the beast.
He lost all sense of shame or law
That kept his fellow men in awe.
In short, he cared not to be good,
Whate'er he wished for, he pursued.
The spice of good that lingered last
Was this: on no account he passed—
However on intrigue intent,
However much on pleasure bent—
Before the Virgin's image dear,
But down he knelt and dropped a tear.
Then, on his knees, with rueful face,
He evermore implored her grace,
And piously would smite his breast.
In all his folly, with true zest
He loved the Saviour's Mother dear.

But guileful enemies drew near,
And so maltreated him one day
That soon upon his bier he lay,
Nor could his numerous sins confess.
Then every man spoke more or less
Of vengeance, that is folly's meed.
'To kill him was a righteous deed,'
The chorus cried, 'for all his days
He spent in vice's shameful ways.'
The clergy all, without remorse,
Resolved that such a sinful corpse
Should ne'er in holy bounds be placed;
Their burial-ground would be disgraced
If one should there be laid to rest
Who died a sinner, unconfessed.
So, in an outer ditch, they gave
The luckless clerk a felon's grave.
But She, whence thoughts of pity flow,
In whom all loving feelings glow,
Who to her worshippers shows grace,
Remembered this poor sinner's case.
The holy Queen, the Virgin bright,
Appeared, upon the thirtieth night,

To one of these most holy clerks;
And, after some severe remarks,
Asked for what cause or what excuse
Her chancellor had met abuse?
'Madam,' said he, 'as heaven is true,
Your chancellor I never knew;
I never saw your face before!'

The Virgin said, 'I set much store
By that lamented clerkly wight
Whom ye interred, the other night,
So vilely, in you loathsome place!
Ye did him, sir, this great disgrace
A month ago, not less nor more.
Yet many a time he knelt before
My image, clasping hands in prayer.
Whate'er his foolish pranks, 'tis fair
To own, he never meant but well.
His scalding tears full often fell
When reverently to me he prayed.
Then what can I but thus upbraid
Your conduct, when ye thus refuse him,
And like an outcast felon use him?
Now take him thence, for so I bid you,
And tell the clergy how I chide you;
Nor think you have forgiveness won,
Unless, ere sinks to-morrow's sun,
I find my friend, with honour dight,
New buried in your holiest site.'

The morn beholds the priest repeating
Before a crowded, awe-struck meeting,
With many a tear, the mandate given
So strictly by the Queen of Heaven.
All wonder with unfeigned surprise,
All cross themselves, with tearful eyes.
Both clerk and lay, in eager haste,
The slighted corse have soon displaced,
So eagerly they turned the ground.

Lo! in the sinner's mouth they found
A flower, as fragrant and as fair
As it had newly blossomed there;
And all beheld, with wondering dread,
The sinner's tongue as fresh and red
As is the new-blown rose in May.
As whole and uncorrupt it lay
As if its owner were alive.

Each gazer seems to see it strive
To move, as though it fain would pray,
And still some words of praise would say
To Christ and to His Mother dear.

With many a hotly falling tear
Was many a rueful face arrayed,
All spoke in prayer—'O holy Maid,
Who barest Christ, the Lord sublime,
How well that man employs his time
Who worships thee with humble fear!
O, holy Mary, Lady dear,
How well for every man and maid
Who humbly seeks Thy ready aid!'

Thus many a mournful tear they spill,
And when their long lament was still,
They raised the corse with reverence due,
And, 'midst a vast and contrite crew,
With well-sung mass and grief profound
They laid the clerk in holiest ground."

WALTER W. SKEAT.

THE OGHAM X AT DONARD.

Cambridge: Sept. 8, 1891.

In my letter on the above subject, in the ACADEMY of September 8, on p. 175, l. 16, for "and the horizontally crossed X also," read "as well as the translinear X." Further down, for lagini read Iagini (twice); for magi, Maggi read maqi, muqi; and for Lminagea read Lminagea.

These corrections are necessary, as the proof-sheet of my letter apparently did not reach the printers in time.

R. A. S. MACALISTER.

SCIENCE.

MATHEMATICAL BOOKS.

American Journal of Mathematics. Vol. XVI. Nos. 2 and 3. (Baltimore.) The earlier number opens with "Compound Determinants," in which W. H. Metzler deduces from certain relations of these determinants a theorem in symmetric and skew-symmetric determinants, and from this derives a theorem in matrices. Hence the paper relates to determinants and to matrices. References for proofs of several theorems are made to the ordinary text-books. Short articles follow on "The Order of Terms in a Semi-convergent Series," by H. P. Manning, and on "The Addition Theorems of Jacobi and Weierstrass," by E. Study. This latter is a new presentation of matter in the paper "Sphärische Trigonometrie, Orthogonale Substitutionen, und Elliptische Functionen" (Leipzig: Hirzel, 1893). A. Chessin writes at length upon the "Summation of Logarithmic and Exponential Series," and adds a short note on the general solution of Bessel's equation. Prof. F. Morley's paper on "Adjustable Cycloidal and Trochoidal Curves" contains an attempt to obtain generalisations of some well-known properties of these curves. The article is illustrated with numerous figures. A note on "Induced Linear Substitutions," by Prof. Franklin, concludes the number.

Dr. Craig commences No. 3 with a class of "Uniform Transcendental Functions," in which he gives a mode of forming a function of the kind indicated by the title, which has been discussed by M. Picard in the Comptes Rendus for 1878. M. G. Humbert contributes a long article "sur les Surfaces de Kummer Elliptiques." Mr. Basset, in contravention of views propounded by Mr. Love in his treatise on Elasticity, furnishes a memoir on "The Deformation of Thin Elastic Plates and Shells."

The Outlines of Quaternions. By Lieut.-Col. H. W. L. Hime. (Longmans.) Our first acquaintance with the subject of this work was made one night as we were crossing from Holyhead to Kingstown. It says much for Prof. Tait's article, "Quaternions" (in vol. I. of the Oxford, Cambridge, and Dublin Messenger of Mathematics), that its novelty to us and clearness enabled us to overcome the discomforts which sometimes accompany that passage. The paper contained the substance of a few elementary lectures delivered in 1858. In the following volume of the Messenger Prof. Kelland gave a brief exhibition of the elements of the subject, and of their application to some of the best-known problems of solid geometry. In his introduction to Quaternions (Kelland and Tait, 1883) Prof. Kelland writes:—

"There is no branch of mathematics in which results of such wide variety are deduced by one uniform process; there is no territory like this to be attacked and subjugated by a single weapon . . . the reader does not require to encumber his memory with a host of conclusions already arrived at in order to advance. Every problem is more or less self-contained!"

The author of the work under notice has built it up not only on the foundations of Hamilton, Tait, Kelland, and Hardy, but has also consulted Molenbroek's Théorie du Quaternions (1891), and one or two other works of authority. He eschews a preface, and avoids the collection of a number of illustrative exercises. The book consists of two parts: Subtraction and addition of vectors, and division and multiplication of two vectors. The former is divided into four chapters with sections, and the latter into thirteen chapters with sub-sections. With reference to exercises, we should state that chapter 13, "Illustrations in Quaternions," contains ten sections in which numerous examples are fully worked out. We have noted a few typographical errors, such as omission of accents, &c.; but these are easily detected by the reader. In the absence of a preface, we should infer that the author has aimed at producing a text-book suitable for junior students; and in this he appears to have succeeded. At any rate, we have read it with considerable interest.

Manual of Practical Logarithms. By W. N. Wilson. (Livington, Percival & Co.) This manual assumes such an acquaintance with the subject as may be gained from standard works on algebra and trigonometry, and attention is entirely devoted to elucidating methods of solution. The numerous illustrative examples are given exactly in the form in which they should be worked out in examinations. A very large number of examples for practice are given, and an extensive selection is made from examination papers in which logarithms play an important part. The moralist (Vanity Fair, chap. 36) advises his readers not to be intimate with gentlemen who live well on nothing a year, but "to take the calculations at second-hand, as you do logarithms, for to work them yourself, depend upon it, will cost you something considerable." The work before us reduces the logarithmic difficulty to a minimum, but it says nothing of the other.

Le Calcul Simplifié par les procédés mécaniques et graphiques. Par M. M. D'Ocagne. (Paris: Gauthier-Villars.) M. D'Ocagne, a rising young engineer, is already well known by his numerous contributions to mathematics. The Calcul Simplifié is made up of three papers read by him at conférences held in the Conservatoire National des Arts et Métiers (February 26, and March 5 and 19, 1893). The subject of the first conférence is "Les Instruments et les Machines Arithmétiques, Arithmographe Troncet, l'Additionneur Roth, l'Arithmomètre Thomas, la Machine Roth, les Machines Différentielles (Babbage, Scheutz, Bollée), Machines Tchebichef." A long note gives a "description et indication du mode d'emploi de la machine arithmétique à mouvement continu de M. Tchebichef." At the second conférence an account is given of "Les Instruments Logarithmiques, les Tracés Graphiques, les Tables Numériques ou Barèmes." The final conférence is taken up with "les Tables Graphiques ou Abaques, la Nomo-graphie." The whole subject is treated in considerable detail, and is illustrated with numerous plates. To the engineering student the pamphlet should be highly interesting.

THE MEGHADŪTA OF KĀLIDĀSA.

In the July number of the Journal of the Royal Asiatic Society there is a short notice of a new edition of this well-known poem, prepared, together with a Sinhalese paraphrase, by the Hon. T. B. Pānabokke of Ceylon. It was edited from a "unique manuscript" discovered in Kandy by Mr. William Gunatilaka, and exhibits many readings differing from those of Prof. H. H. Wilson's text published in 1813, and again in 1843. A list of the most important of these readings is appended to the notice in question, and I observe that many of them are found in an edition published in Calcutta by Madanamohana Tarkālakāra, in Samvat 1907 = 1850 A.D.

By far the most interesting, however, as well as the most important, edition of the Meghadūta is one just brought out by that indefatigable worker, Mr. Kāsināth Bāpu Pāthak, of Poona. It consists of the text, Mallinātha's commentary, the various readings supplied by five other commentaries and by Prof. Wilson, an English translation, and critical and explanatory notes. The chief interest, however, centres in the text, the source of which is indeed "unique." Mr. Pāthak found it embedded in Jināsena's well-known Jaina work, entitled Pārśvābhyudaya, by a process which he describes as follows:

"Each stanza in the Pārśvābhyudaya borrows one or two lines from the Meghadūta, the remaining lines being composed by Jināsena himself. In this way the entire poem of Kālidāsa is subjected to the process known as samasyā-pīṭana. By the well-known rules of this process Jināsena was bound to accept Kālidāsa's verses as he found them, without in the slightest way altering them; otherwise his reputation as a consummate master of versification would have suffered considerably. The whole performance is so clever, that a person who has not previously read or heard of the Cloud-messenger will hardly suspect that the Pārsadvhyudaya contains within itself an entire Brahmanical poem, though Jināsena states the fact at the end. It is clear, therefore, that the arrangement of the verses in the Pārsadvhyudaya is such as to make it all but impossible for subsequent scribes or commentators to tamper with the text. . . . These considerations will suffice to convince us that the Meghadūta preserved in the Pārsadvhyudaya, which contains 120 verses only, represents the text of the poem as it was known to Jināsena in the latter part of the eighth century" (Preface, pp. 14, 15).

The volume has for an introduction a lecture which was delivered before the Bombay branch of the Royal Asiatic Society in April last, in which the data available for determining the exact date of Kālidāsa are carefully examined. The conclusion arrived at, with the aid of Sir Alexander Cunningham's exhaustive paper on the Ephthalites or White Huns, is that the poet flourished in the first half of the sixth century; and I think this may be regarded as a final settlement of the question.

This is not the only date which has been satisfactorily determined for us by the researches of my learned friend; and his papers, entitled "Dharmakīrti and Śāṅkarācārya," "Bhartrihari and Kumārila," and "Was Bhartrihari a Buddhist?" which were contributed to the Journal of the Bombay branch of the Royal Asiatic Society in the years 1891, 1892, and 1893 respectively, together with one on "Kumārila in Digambara Jaina Literature," which was sent to the Oriental Congress of 1892, are of the highest value for fixing the real dates of those old writers and of many others who occupy less prominent positions among the Sanskrit literati of those early centuries.

G. A. JACOB (Colonel).

ANTHROPOLOGICAL JOTTINGS.

THE September number of the Geographical Journal (Edward Stanford) contains the first authentic account from an European eye-witness that has ever been published about that mysterious sub-Himalayan region known as Kafiristan. The author is Mr. G. S. Robertson, an Indian official, who spent more than a year exploring the country and making friends with the inhabitants. It is understood that he has also submitted a secret report to the Government; and we trust that no political scruples will be allowed to interfere with the publication of such an unique record of ethnographical exploration. For, though the Kafirs or Siah-Posh are not all that legend has made them out to be, undoubtedly they represent one of the very few pure races anywhere to be found, who have preserved their independence for centuries against their Mahommedan neighbours. On the present occasion, Mr. Robertson does not trouble himself with ethnical or linguistic questions, which, indeed, have already been fairly settled. He is content to give his own experiences, and to describe the general features of the country and the customs of the inhabitants. Their most striking mental characteristics are, he says, cupidity, jealousy of one another, and intertribal hatred: they will even call in the aid of Mahommedans, to avenge themselves on another Kafir tribe. On the other hand, they have strong family affection, and are capable of performing the greatest acts of self-sacrifice in war. They have no blood feuds, but the penalty for killing a fellow-tribesman is banishment, which has led to the establishment of cities of refuge. Full details are given of their religious ceremonies, which consist of dances, songs, and sacrifices, but no prayers. In this connexion, Mr. Robertson's testimony is the more valuable, because he seems to have had no preconceived opinions. "The spirit of a dead man becomes a shade, a mere shape, like the phantoms we see in a dream." The high position assigned both to orators and to pshurs, or inspired medicine-men, is also noticeable. Finally, Mr. Robertson hints that there is a secret valley in Kafiristan, where everything is even more strange than elsewhere, and where an unknown tongue is spoken, that sounds like a soft musical mewling.

Nor unworthy of being named with Mr. Robertson's paper on Kafiristan is one in the August number of the Geographical Journal, in which Mr. T. J. Aldridge, another English official, describes his exploration of the interior of Sierra Leone, which he penetrated to the distance of about 400 miles from the coast, making treaties and opening trade. There is, of course, nothing very new to learn about the West African negro, though it is instructive to hear that the further from European influence the higher the civilisation. Another curious fact is the influence everywhere exercised by Mahommedan missionaries, as purveyors of written fetishes. But the moral of the whole is that this populous, fertile, and fairly healthy country at the back of an historic British colony should have remained so long untraversed by any European.

NUMBER 1 of Part iii. of the Journal of the Asiatic Society of Bengal (London: Kegan Paul & Co.)—which is devoted to anthropology—contains two valuable articles. One of these, by the late Dr. James Wise, is an historical account of the Mahommedans of Eastern Bengal, giving details about the various sects that have arisen under Wahabi influence. As is well known, some of these sectaries have taken the lead in resistance to agrarian exactions, and it is interesting to learn that they take refuge in the alluvial islands which are directly managed by the Government. We notice that Dr. Wise does not confirm the common opinion that the Mahommedans of Bengal are superior in physique to their Hindu brethren. The other article, by Mr. S. E. Peal, entitled "Fading Histories," is full of curious information drawn from his thirty years' experience of the Assam frontier. A scientific explanation is given of the nomadic system of forest cultivation known as ghum—namely, that the rapid growth of natural grasses will not permit tillage to be continued on the same spot for more than three years. A new derivation is also given of the word "Naga," which has usually been connected with snakes and snake-worship. According to Mr. Peal the Assamese name is noga = folk, connected with the familiar Bengali lok or "logue," and the same word is found among the Dravidian Khonds and Uraon. Mr. Peal repeats his theory that exogamic marriage arose out of tribal communism, which latter he regards as the universal system of primitive man. We may also mention a paper on the nasal index, by Dr. R. Havelock Charles, of Lahore.

PHILOLOGY NOTES.

MR. CHARLES P. G. SCOTT has reprinted from the Transactions of the American Philological Association a second paper on "English Words which have gained or lost an Initial Consonant by Attraction," in continuation of a former one already noticed in the ACADEMY. On this occasion he deals mainly with proper names, beginning with those involving Saint.

For example: St. Osyth, in Essex, is locally pronounced "Toosy"; St. Ann has given rise to "Turnchapel"; St. Antony to "Tantony pig"; St. Audry to "tawdry"; and St. Andrew (possibly) to "dandy." In connexion with the last-mentioned word, Mr. Scott discusses "dandiprat," a dwarf and a small Tudor coin, both of which he would derive from a hypothetical dwarf in the reign of Henry VII. called Andrew Pratt. Another class of proper names that he deals with at length is the diminutives: Dick, Hob, Hodge, &c. His explanation of Dick is briefly this: Richard, Rick, Hick, old Ick, d'Ick—hence, Dickens, Dixon, &c.; Hob comes from "our (R)ob" and in its turn gives rise to Dobbin. Similarly, Hodge is from "our (R)oger," and has given rise to Dodge and Dod. Other words treated of at some length are: "courser"—a dealer in horses, "icicle," and "kin." As we said before, Mr. Scott displays throughout a most unusual acquaintance with the historical materials of his subject, combined with both ingenuity and humour.

FINE ART.

A Descriptive and Classified Catalogue of Portraits of Queen Elizabeth. By Freeman M. O'Donoghue. (Quaritch.)

WE have already had valuable lists and catalogues of the portraits of Henry VIII., Edward VI., Queen Mary Tudor, and Mary Queen of Scots, from such writers as Sir Francis Madden, John Gough Nichols, and Mr. George Scharf; and now Mr. O'Donoghue, of the British Museum, has produced, with much care and research, a catalogue of the portraits of Queen Elizabeth. In compiling this work Mr. O'Donoghue has made use of the catalogues of the South Kensington Portrait, Loan, and Miniature Exhibitions, and of the Tudor Exhibition held in the New Gallery; and he has been aided by the advice and suggestions of the Director of the National Portrait Gallery, and by unrestricted access to his invaluable series of annotated sketch-books, which represent the learned and patient study, during many years, of our chief authority on the subject of national portraiture. For particulars of the various engraved portraits of the Queen, the Print Room and Library of the British Museum, the Royal Library at Windsor, the Sutherland and Hope Collections at Oxford, and the Bibliothèque Nationale, Paris, have been laid under contribution; and to the various works of Hawkins, Franks, and Gruber, of De Gray Birch, King, and Drury Fortnum, are due the lists of medals, coins, seals, and gems portraying the monarch. The result is a very complete and valuable record of the representations of Queen Elizabeth, a book that will hold its place as the standard work of reference on the subject with which it deals.

In his introduction Mr. O. Donoghue gives an account of the artists working in England during the time of Elizabeth, by whom she may have been depicted, though the ascription of most of her portraits is merely conjectural, few of them bearing any signature or mark of the painter, the allegorical picture at Hampton Court, in which she appears with Juno, Venus, and Minerva, dated 1569, and bearing the initials of Lucas D'Hoero, and the portrait at Welbeck Abbey, inscribed with the initials of Marc Gheeraedts, being exceptions in this respect.

In addition to these two painters, Mr. O'Donoghue mentions Nicholas Lyzarde; Federigo Zucharo, who visited England in 1574, and to whom many portraits of Elizabeth are attributed with more or less probability, especially one at Great Hampton, which bears a mark like a "Z," that has been regarded as his initial; Richard Lyne, a painter and engraver who worked for Archbishop Parker, and may have painted the Queen during one of her visits to the prelate; Cornelius Ketel, who was in England from 1573 to 1581, and is stated to have painted her by order of the Earl of Hertford, during a royal visit to his mother, the Duchess of Somerset, at Hanworth, in 1578; and Richard Stevens, a Dutch statuary painter and engraver, to whom Walpole assigned the portrait of Elizabeth, in an elaborate dress patterned with animals, monsters, and flowers, at Hardwick Hall, because this artist worked for the Cavendish family, some of his receipts still remaining in the possession of the Duke of Devonshire. We have also George Gower, who in 1584 was appointed sergeant-painter to Queen Elizabeth, and was granted by patent the exclusive right "to make or cause to be made all and all manner of portraicts and pictures of our person phisognomy and proporcion of our bodye in oil cullers upon bourdes or canvas, or to grave the same on copper, or to cutt the same in woode, or to printe the same being cutte in copper or woode or otherwise,"

with the exception that Nicholas Hilliard was allowed to execute miniatures of the Queen "in small compasse in lymnyng only and not otherwise." Gower, however, appears to have held his office for only a short period, and none of his works have been identified. Another painter of the time was John de Critz, a Flemish artist patronised by Walsingham. In an annotated copy of Holland's "Bazilivologia"—I presume that formerly in the possession of Sir James Winter Lake—the engravings of Elizabeth, Walsingham, and Sidney, in that work, are stated to have been done from pictures belonging to De Critz, which perhaps were painted by himself; and, as sergeant-painter to James I., he certainly painted the effigy of Queen Elizabeth in Westminster Abbey, sculptured by Maximilian Powtran or Colt in 1605.

The account that is given of Nicholas Lyzarde is not strictly accurate. The statement that his only recorded work is "a table painted with the history of Ahasuerus" is incorrect; for his New Year's gift to Queen Mary Tudor in 1556 was "a table painted with the Maundy" (Nicholl's Illustrations—New Year Gifts to Queen Mary, p. 11); and he died, not in 1570, but in the following year, the burial of "Nicholas Lyzard, painter unto the Queen's majestie," appearing on April 5, 1571, in the register of St. Martin's-in-the-Fields, his will, dated February 14, 1570, being proved on April 20, 1571 (Archaeologia, vol. xxxix., p. 45).

The names of Francis and William Segar, John and Thomas Bettes, Rowland and Nicholas Lockey, Peter Cole, J. de Bruy, and Peake, are mentioned as those of painters of the time "whose works have sunk into oblivion"; and two miniaturists, Nicholas Hilliard and his pupil, Isaac Oliver or Olivier, receive a more detailed reference. The former, a native of Exeter, who was born in 1537 and died in 1619, possessed, as above noted, the exclusive right of portraying "in small compass" the features of the Queen, and he obtained a patent in similar terms from James I. He executed many miniatures of Elizabeth: that in the possession of Mr. Jeffrey Whitehead, showing her with a rose set in her yellow-brown hair, at the end of a MS. prayer-book that belonged to the Queen, which also contains a miniature of the Duke of Alençon by the same hand, is an especially admirable example of his work. He was a goldsmith by trade, and engraved the second Great Seal of the Queen in 1586, in which the monarch appears enthroned and crowned, with sceptre and ball in her hands, and as a reward he received a lease for twenty-one years of Poyle Stanmore, Middlesex. Oliver undoubtedly portrayed the Queen; but none of his renderings of her can be certainly identified, though a pen drawing at Windsor has been regarded as his original for the celebrated plate engraved by Crispin van de Passe, the elder.

To the names of these miniaturists should certainly have been added that of Levina Terling, daughter of Simon Benich, a miniaturist of Bruges. She worked in England, and appears to have married an Englishman. In 1558 she presented to Elizabeth, "The Queen's picture finely painted upon a card"; and, again, in 1561 there was presented "by Mrs. Levina Terling, the Queenes personne, and other personages in a box fynely painted." (Archaeologia, vol. xxxix., p. 39.) These works have not been identified; but the former of them, presented in the very year when Elizabeth became queen, and placed by her for safe-keeping in the hands of "Mrs. Newton," may possibly be the miniature, now lost, recorded by Mr. O'Donoghue as No. 7, with the entry from Vanderdoort's catalogue of the collection of Charles I.:—"Item, done upon the right light. In a white ivory box without a crystal, a certain lady's picture in her hair, in a gold bonelace little ruff, and black habit lined with white fur, with gold tissue sleeves, with one hand over another, supposed to have been Queen Elizabeth before she came to the crown. Done by an unknown hand." The three other miniatures entered by Vanderdoort as "in his Majesty's new erected cabinet-room within the cupboards at the present time at Whitehall," are all specifically assigned by him to Hilliard.

Among the other interesting contents of the introduction, I may mention the account by Nicholas Hilliard of his interview with the Queen: "When first I came in her Highness presence to drawe," extracted from that artist's unpublished treatise on miniature painting, the manuscript of which belonged successively to Vertue, to Walpole, and to David Laing, by whom it was bequeathed to the Edinburgh University. Hilliard records that the Queen remarked on the different methods of shading in various works of art, and, noticing that the Italians, who "had the name to be cunningest and to draw best, shadowed not," asked the reason for the introduction of shadows by painters, "seeing that best to shewe ons selfe nedeth no shadow of place, but rather the oppen light." Hilliard explained that the contrasts of chiaroscuro came from the light being admitted from a small or high window,

"which many workmen couet to worke in for ease to their sight, and to give unto them a grosser lyne, and a more aparant lyne to be deserved, and maketh the worke inbosc well, and shewe very wel afar of, which to Limning [miniature] work nedeth not, because it is to be veewed of nesesity in hand neare vnto the eye."

The Queen accordingly chose to be painted "in the open ally of a goodly garden, where no tree was neere": and the courtly artist concludes that "this her Ma^{tie} curiouse Demaund hath greatly bettered my jugment."

We have also the proclamation, drawn up in 1563 but never issued, in which, after stating that there had been produced portraits "in paynting, graving, and pryn-tyng, wherein is evidently shewn that hytherto none hath sufficiently expressed the national representation of hir Majesties person, favor, or grace," all artists are prohibited from representing the Queen "for a time, untill by some perfect patron and example the same may be by others followed;" and it is promised that "some coning person mete therefor shall shortly make a pourtraict of hir person or visage to be participated to others for satisfaction of hir loving subjects." In this connexion Mr. O'Donoghue quotes a passage from the preface to the "History of the World," where Raleigh states that "by the Queen's own commandment all pictures by unskilful and common painters were knocked to pieces and cast into the fire."

A series of valuable "personal descriptions" of the Queen by contemporaries follows the catalogue—beginning with a quotation from Roger Ascham, her preceptor, telling how, at the age of seventeen, she preferred in attire "a simple elegance to show and splendour, despising the outward adorning of plaiting the hair and wearing of gold"; and ending with an extract from Heutzner's "Journey into England," where he records his sight of the Queen, in her sixty-fifth year, "very majestic," resplendent in her crown, clad in silk shot with silver threads, and glittering with necklaces and collars of gold and pearls. Mr. O'Donoghue very truly remarks that "at no previous or subsequent period, and by no other individual, have such a variety and magnificence of attire been indulged in as by this extraordinary woman, and for this reason the various representations of her constitute one of the most interesting chapters in the history of portraiture and costume."

He discourses very learnedly on the fashions of the time, especially on the development of the ruff—which he has adopted as a basis of classification of the various portraits—from a frill decorating the edge of the collar in the reign of Henry VIII. and his two successors, through the circular "piped" forms, to the extraordinary erections attached to the shoulders, leaving the front of the neck bare, and rising high behind the head, that followed. And we have also interesting particulars regarding the successive shapes of the "farthingale," the "stomacher," the "partlet," the veil, and the fan.

The list of portraits enumerates eighty-three paintings, giving, in almost every case, descriptive particulars and a note of dimensions. It opens with the panel picture, now at Windsor, which is here assigned to the school of Holbein, and regarded as portraying Elizabeth at the age of about thirteen. In Vanderdoort's Catalogue it was attributed to Holbein himself, but we now know that this artist died in 1543, when Elizabeth was in her tenth year. Dr. Woltmann (Fortnightly Review, September, 1866) considered it as "the work of a Dutch artist; and, indeed, one of the best of those who were employed in England," and he believed that it portrayed the Princess at the age of fifteen or sixteen. Paul Heutzner also, who saw the picture at Whitehall in 1598, styles it "Queen Elizabeth at 16 years old"; but the period assumed by Mr. O'Donoghue is evidently nearer the truth, for the work is included in the catalogue of the pictures of Henry VIII., drawn up after his death in 1547.

Among the other paintings that are catalogued I may mention the fine full-length in the possession of Lord Dillon at Ditchley, painted to commemorate a royal visit to Sir Henry Lee, K.G., in 1592. The photogravure given as frontispiece of the volume shows that this picture has a long inscription on an intabature to our right, which, however, is not referred to in the description at p. 21. An interesting ceremonial group, including the Queen, is that at Sherborne, Dorset. It was engraved by Vertue as representing the royal visit to Hunsdon, Hertfordshire; but Mr. Sharp, in a learned paper in vol. xxiii. of the Archæological Journal, has proved that its subject is the procession of the Queen to Blackfriars in 1600, on the occasion of the marriage of Lord Herbert to the daughter of John, Lord Russell. Greater fidelity of portraiture than is here visible characterises the renderings of the Queen, in this the later period of her life, by Marc Gheeraedts at Welbeck and in University Library, Cambridge; and very curiously fantastic are the works in which she figures as Diana and as a huntress at Hatfield House and Hampton Court.

The drawings that are catalogued number only five, including the interesting rendering of the Queen receiving from George Gascoigne his "Tale of Hemetes the Hermit," prefixed to his autograph copy of that work in the British Museum. Nearly fifty miniatures and three hundred engravings are described; and over seventy items fall under the headings of medals, coins, gems, seals, and effigies.

The book represents an infinite amount of labour and research, and will prove a valuable aid to all students of national portraiture.

J. M. GRAY.

NOTES ON ART AND ARCHÆOLOGY.

THE Marquis of Lansdowne and Sir Charles Tennant have been appointed trustees of the National Gallery, to fill the two places vacant by the deaths of Sir H. A. Layard and Lord Hardinge.

THE private view of Messrs. J. M. Dent & Co.'s exhibitions of drawings in black and white, to be held in the galleries of the Royal Institute, is fixed for Monday next. The exhibition will remain open until September 29.

FOR the autumn exhibition, at the Nottingham Castle Art Museum, which opens at the end of the present month, Mr. G. H. Wallis has succeeded in getting together a comprehensive collection of the works of the so-called Cornish art brotherhoods. Some of the most notable pictures have been sent from the art galleries of other municipalities, while Sir George McCulloch and other private owners have generously contributed to the collection. Mr. Stanhope Forbes will be represented by "The Forging of the Anchor," and "The Village Philharmonic"; Mr. Frank Bramley by "Hopeless Dawn," and "Memories"; Mr. Chevallier T aylor by "The Departure of the Fishing Fleet," "The Summer Dinner Party," and "For Confirmation"; "Mr. Adrian Stokes by "Off St. Ives," and "Cornish Cliff." There will also be examples of the work of Mr. C. Napier Hemy, Mr. T. C. Gotch, Mr. Fred Hall, Mr. H. S. Tuke, and Mrs. Adrian Stokes, as well as some water colour drawings of Mr. Walter Langley.

THE last quarterly number of the American Journal of Archæology (London: Kegan Paul & Co.) consists mainly of a summary of recent discoveries, which alone fills 100 pages. The latest researches of M. de Morgan and M. Naville in Egypt, and the letters from Nubia of Prof. Sayce and Prof. Mahaffy, supply a great deal of material; while the excavations of the French School at Delphi are summarised at great length. With regard to the American expedition to Babylonia, we learn that Mr. Haynes—in continuation of the work at Nippur or Niffer, begun by Dr. Peters—has unearthed 8,000 tablets, besides other objects, and has found inscriptions below the debris that dates from the time of Sargon I. (3,800 B.C.). There are two original articles illustrated with plates. Mr. Nicholas B. Crosby describes a votive bas-relief found last year near Phaleron, with an inscription identifying three of the figures as Hermes, Echelos, and Basile; and he suggests a somewhat different mythological explanation than that given by Mr. Kavvadias. Mr. Allan Marquand describes a terracotta piece which he purchased at Siena, almost identical in composition with a portion of the group in the Moses panel of the second of Ghiberti's bronze gates for the Baptistery at Florence; and gives reasons for regarding it as a preliminary sketch from the hand of Ghiberti himself. We may also mention an æsthetic essay on "The Philosophy of Art," by Mr. A. L. Frothingham, senior, of Princeton.

MUSIC.

OBITUARY.

PROF. HELMHOLTZ.

THE science of music owes much to the investigations of Hermann Ludwig Ferdinand Helmholtz, who died at Charlottenburg last Saturday. He was born at Potsdam in 1821, and was teacher of anatomy at the Berlin Academy in 1848, professor of physiology at Königsberg in 1849, and at Heidelberg in 1858. He wrote many scientific works; but Die Lehre von den

Tonempfindungen als physiologische Grundlage für die Theorie der Musik, which was translated into English by the late A. J. Ellis under the title, "On the Sensations of Tone, as a Physiological Basis for the Theory of Music," is the one with which musicians are immediately concerned. Helmholtz's experiments with resonators resulted in a most complete analysis of musical tone, while his determination of the nature of the vowel sounds of the human voice is of the highest importance. The gain to science through the investigations of this learned and indefatigable worker is well-known, but they have also affected questions concerning the theory of music.

Moritz Hauptmann, the eminent German composer and theorist, wrote a work, entitled Die Natur der Harmonik und Metrik (1853), and his description of the minor triad as an "inverted major triad, or negation of the same," seems to have been the starting point of a new school of harmonists, of whom Dr. Arthur von Oettingen, professor of physics at Dorpat, and Dr. Hugo Riemann, of Wiesbaden, are, perhaps, the most distinguished representatives. In criticising and modifying Hauptmann, these and other writers were materially assisted by Helmholtz's investigations respecting the third and deeper tone generated when two notes are sounded together, which he termed "differential," in contradistinction to the "summational" tones which he himself discovered (the former had been known since the time of Tartini) and, indirectly, by his Physiology of the Minor Chord. It is not our present purpose to discuss the new "dual development" theory, as expounded by von Oettingen in his Harmoniesystem, and by Riemann in various works: they are merely mentioned to show the influence and outcome of Helmholtz's teaching.

Among the "Pop. Wissensch. Vorträge" published by Helmholtz at Brunswick (1865-76), there is one entitled "On the Physiological Causes of Harmony in Music," a lecture delivered in Bonn during the winter of 1857, which, written in simple, lucid language, may be recommended to readers who have not the time, and, possibly, not the inclination, to study the larger work above mentioned. These "Popular Lectures on Scientific Subjects" (1st series) appeared in English only last year, translated by E. Atkinson.

Helmholtz, in the address delivered on the occasion of his jubilee in 1891, reviewing his life's labours, compared himself to

"an Alpine climber, who, not knowing the way, ascends slowly and with toil, and is often compelled to retrace his steps because his progress is stopped; sometimes by reasoning, and sometimes by accident, he hits upon traces of a fresh path, which again leads him a little further; and, finally, when he has reached the goal, he finds to his annoyance a royal road on which he might have ridden up, if he had been clever enough to find at the outset the right starting point."

Helmholtz, like Darwin, was a quiet worker, and as modest as he was great.

J. S. SHEDLOCK.

MUSIC NOTES.

THE thirty-ninth annual series of Crystal Palace Saturday Concerts will commence on October 13. There will be twenty concerts—ten before, and ten after Christmas. Among the works performed here for the first time will be: Berlioz's Dramatic Symphony "Romeo and Juliet," Dvůřák's Fifth Symphony, Tschai-kowsky's Sixth Symphony, E. D'Albert's Pianoforte Concerto in E, and Dr. Mackenzie's "Britannia" Overture; the last-named will be the first piece in the programme of the first concert.

MESSRS. LONGMANS & CO.'S LIST.

NEW BOOK BY SIR EDWIN ARNOLD. WANDERING WORDS.

Reprinted by permission from Papers published in the Daily Telegraph and Foreign Journals and Magazines.

By Sir EDWIN ARNOLD, M.A., K.O.I.E., C.S.I.,
Author of "Seas and Lands," "The Light of Asia," &c.

With 23 Plates and 22 Illustrations in the Text from Drawings by Ben Boothby and from Photographs. 8vo, 19s.

MR. ASTOR'S NEW ROMANCE. A JOURNEY IN OTHER WORLDS. A Romance of the Future.

By JOHN JACOB ASTOR.

With 10 Illustrations. Crown 8vo, 6s.

"The story is so well done that it can scarcely fail to entertain enjoyably any one who takes it up."—Scotsman.

"Mr. Astor's 'Journey in other Worlds' is quite a good effort in the Jules Verne manner. There is plenty of stuff in this book, and the narrative is entertaining and well written."—Westminster Gazette.

"John Jacob Astor has eclipsed Jules Verne. His 'Journey in other Worlds' is more daring, more imaginative, and more resourceful than anything yet attempted by the French scientific romancer."—Morning Leader.

THE BADMINTON LIBRARY.

TWO NEW EDITIONS, REVISED, AND WITH NUMEROUS ADDITIONS.

TENNIS, LAWN TENNIS, RACKETS, and FIVES. By J. M. and C. G. BEATHCOTE, E. O. PLEYDELL-BOUVERIE, and A. C. AINGER. With Contributions by the Hon. A. LYTTELTON, W. C. MARSHALL, MISS L. DOB, H. W. W. WILBERFORCE, H. F. LAWFOED, &c. Third Edition, Revised, and with numerous Additions. With 79 Illustrations. Crown 8vo, 10s. 6d.

ATHLETICS and FOOTBALL. By MONTAGUE SHEARMAN. With a Contribution on Paper-Chasing by W. RYE, and an Introduction by Sir RICHARD WEBSTER, Q.C., M.P. Fourth Edition, Revised. With the addition to this Edition of Chapters on FOOTBALL in the UNITED STATES by WALTER CAMP, New Haven, Conn., and AUSTRALIAN FOOTBALL, by A. SUTHERLAND, Dromana, Victoria. With 51 Illustrations. Crown 8vo, 10s. 6d.

PROBLEMS of the FAR EAST. JAPAN—KOREA—CHINA. By the Hon. GEORGE N. CURZON, M.P., Fellow of All Souls College, Oxford; Author of "Russia in Central Asia," and "Persia." 1 vol., 8vo, with 2 Maps, 21 Full-page Illustrations and 29 Illustrations in the Text, price One Guinea.

"A very pleasant and a very useful book."—Athenaeum.

"This volume clearly puts before the world the problems and the future of the Far East. In its completeness and its knowledge it is emphatically the book of the day."—Graphic.

STUDIES of NATURE on the COAST of ARRAN. By GEORGE MILNER. Author of "Country Pleasures." With 10 Full-page Copperplates, and 12 Illustrations in the Text by W. Noel Johnson. Imp. 16mo, 6s. 6d. net. [On September 18.]

WOMAN the PREDOMINANT PARTNER. By Sir EDWARD SULLIVAN, Bart. 8vo, 1s. sewed.

PRACTICABLE SOCIALISM: Essays on Social Reform. By SAMUEL and HENRIETTA BARNETT. Second Edition, Revised and Enlarged. Crown 8vo, 6s.

COUNSELS of FAITH and PRACTICE: being Sermons preached on various occasions. By the Rev. W. C. E. NEWBOLT, M.A., Canon and Chancellor of St. Paul's. New and Enlarged Edition. Crown 8vo, 5s. [On September 18.]

THE ORACLES ASCRIBED to MATTHEW by PAPIAS of HIERAPOLIS: a Contribution to the Criticism of the New Testament. With Appendices on the Authorship of the De Vita Contemplativa, the Date of the Crucifixion, and the Date of the Martyrdom of Polycarp. Crown 8vo, 6s. [On September 18.]

LONGMANS' CIVIL ENGINEERING SERIES.

NOTES on DOCKS and DOCK CONSTRUCTION. By C. COLSON, M.Inst.C.E., Assistant Director of Works, Admiralty. Medium 8vo. 21s. net. [On September 18.]

NEW BOOK BY MRS. WALFORD.

"PLOUGHED"; and other Stories. By L. B. WALFORD, Author of "Mr. Smith," "One Good Guest," &c. Crown 8vo, 6s.

"The name of Mrs. Walford on the title-page of a book is always a guarantee that the matter contained therein will prove of interest, nor will the reader be disappointed in this her latest work."—Liverpool Post.

NEW NOVEL BY MR. HORNUNG.

THE UNBIDDEN GUEST. By E. W. HORNUNG, Author of "A Bride from the Bush," &c. Crown 8vo, 6s.

"A very vivid and impressive book, which abounds in strong passages, and is well sustained throughout.... harrowing and tragic in parts, but undeniably forcible and touching. It is, indeed, the best story we have yet read of Mr. Hornung's."—Westminster Gazette.

THE SILVER LIBRARY—New Volumes.

DAWN. By H. RIDER HAGGARD. With 16 Illustrations. Fortieth Thousand. Crown 8vo, price 3s. 6d. MR. MEESON'S WILL. By H. RIDER HAGGARD. With 18 Illustrations. Fifteenth Thousand. Crown 8vo, 3s. 6d.

LONDON: LONGMANS, GREEN & CO.
NEW YORK: 15 EAST 16TH STREET.

MUDIE'S SELECT LIBRARY,

For the CIRCULATION and SALE of all the BEST ENGLISH, FRENCH, GERMAN, ITALIAN, and SPANISH BOOKS.

TOWN SUBSCRIPTIONS from One Guinea per annum.
LONDON BOOK SOCIETY (for Weekly Exchange of Books at the Houses of Subscribers) from Two Guineas per annum.

COUNTRY SUBSCRIPTIONS from Two Guineas per annum.
N.B.—Two or three friends may unite in One Subscription and thus lessen the cost of carriage.

LIBRARY BOXES GRATIS.

Town and Village Clubs supplied on Liberal Terms
Prospectuses and Monthly Lists of Books gratis and post free.

SALE DEPARTMENT.

All the leading Books of the Past Seasons are on Sale, second-hand at greatly Reduced Prices.

LISTS GRATIS AND POST FREE.

MUDIE'S MANCHESTER LIBRARY
10 to 12, BARTON ARCADE, MANCHESTER,
Is in daily communication with this Library.

MUDIE'S SELECT LIBRARY, Limited,
30 to 34, NEW OXFORD STREET, LONDON;

241, Brompton Road, S.W.; and 48, Queen Victoria St., E.C.

THE AUTOTYPE COMPANY

Has the honour to announce the Publication of

NINETY-THREE DRAWINGS

BY

ALBERT DURER,

Reproduced in Facsimile from Originals in the British Museum, and accompanied by Descriptive Text by

SIDNEY COLVIN, M.A.,

Keeper of Prints and Drawings, British Museum.

"The British Museum collection, reproduced in this volume, is," says Professor Colvin, "a fairly complete and representative survey of the several phases of Durer's activity as a draughtsman and sketcher during all periods of his career."

The Volume is Imperial folio, half-morocco, Plates Linen-Guarded and Interleaved. Edition 100 Copies.

Price Six Guineas.

The AUTOTYPE FINE-ART CATALOGUE (New Edition), of 184 pages, with Illustrated Supplement, containing 65 Miniature Photographs of notable Autotypes, post free, ONE SHILLING.

"AUTOTYPE: a Decorative and Educational Art."

NEW PAMPHLET, FREE ON APPLICATION.

THE AUTOTYPE COMPANY,
74, New Oxford Street, London.

MESSRS. J. C. DRUMMOND & CO.,
ART REPRODUCERS,

14, HENRIETTA STREET, COVENT GARDEN, W.C.
Are the sole representatives in Great Britain of
HERR HANFSTAENGL, of Munich,
the well-known Artist in PHOTOGRAPHURE, now patronised by the leading London Art Publishing Firms. A large Collection of Important Plates always on view.

Process Blocks for the purpose of Ordinary Book Illustrations.

Messrs. DRUMMOND & CO. supply the cheapest and best Processes in the market, which are specially adapted to meet the wants of Antiquarians, Archaeologists, and those engaged in the investigation and publication of Parochial and Diocesan Records.

J. C. DRUMMOND & CO. invite attention to their Improved Rapid Photo-Mechanical Process For the Reproduction of Works of Art, Original MSS., Designs, Lace Manufactures, Photographs, Views, Book Illustrations, Artistic Advertisements, Catalogues, &c., &c., at a moderate cost. Specimens and price list on application.

Offices 14, HENRIETTA STREET, COVENT GARDEN LONDON

THE ACADEMY.

A WEEKLY REVIEW OF LITERATURE, SCIENCE, AND ART.

No. 1168.
[New Issue.]

SATURDAY, SEPTEMBER 22, 1894.

PRICE 3d.
[Registered as a Newspaper.]

SOCIETY FOR PROMOTING CHRISTIAN KNOWLEDGE.

THE DAWN of CIVILISATION. (Egypt and Chaldæa.)

By Professor MASPERO. Translated by M. L. McCLURE, and Edited by the Rev. Professor SAYCE. Profusely Illustrated. Imp. 8vo, cloth boards, 21s. [In the press.]

ART PICTURES from the OLD TESTAMENT: Sunday

Readings for the Young. A Series of 80 Illustrations from Original Drawings by Sir F. LEIGHTON, Bart., P.R.A., Sir E. BURNES JONES, Bart., E. J. POYNTER, R.A., G. F. WATTS, R.A., E. ARMYTAGE, R.A., F. MADON BROWN, S. SOLOMON, HOLMAN HUNT, &c., &c. With Letterpress Descriptions by ALEY FOX. Small 4to, cloth boards, 6s.

NOBLE WOMANHOOD: a Series of Biographical Sketches.

By G. BARNETT SMITH. Crown 8vo, cloth boards, 5s.

[The lives selected are the following:—PRINCESS ALICE, GRAND DUCHESS OF HESSE, FLORENCE NIGHTINGALE, FRANCES RIOLEY HAVERGAL, HARRIET BRECHER STOWE, SISTER DORA, LOUISA MAY ALCOTT, ELIZABETH FRY, FELICIA DOROTHEA HEMANS. This is a companion volume to "Eminent Christian Workers."]

ECCE ANCILLA DOMINI. Mary, the Mother of Our Lord.

By Mrs. RUNDLE CHARLES, Author of the "Schönberg-Cotta Family." Small post 8vo, Printed in red and black, cloth boards, 2s.

ATTILA and his CONQUERORS. By Mrs. Rundle Charles,

Author of the "Schönberg-Cotta Family." Crown 8vo, cloth boards, 3s. 6d.

JOAN the MAID: Deliverer of England and France. By

Mrs. RUNDLE CHARLES, Author of "The Chronicles of the Schönberg-Cotta Family." Demy 8vo, cloth boards, 3s. 6d.

SONGS, OLD and NEW. By Mrs. Rundle Charles, Author of "The Chronicles of the Schönberg-Cotta Family." Demy 16mo, cloth board, 3s.

THE "HIGHER CRITICISM" and the VERDICT of the MONUMENTS. By the Rev. A. H. SAYCE, Queen's College, Oxford. Demy 8vo. Second Edition. Buckram, bevelled boards, 7s. 6d.

"A really valuable and important work, perhaps the best which Prof. Sayce has yet written."—Academy.

THE CELTIC CHURCH in SCOTLAND: being an Introduction to the History of the Christian Church in Scotland down to the Death of St. Margaret. By the Right Rev. JOHN DOWDEN, D.D., Bishop of Edinburgh. Fcap. 8vo, cloth boards, 8s. 6d.

RELIGION in JAPAN: Shintoism, Buddhism, and CHRISTIANITY. By the Rev. G. A. COBBOLD. Post 8vo, cloth boards, 2s. 6d.

VERSES. By Christina G. Rossetti. Reprinted from

"Called to be Saints," "Time Flies," and "The Face of the Deep." Small post 8vo. Printed in red and black on hand-made paper, cloth boards, 3s. 6d.; limp roan, 5s.; levantine, 6s. 6d.; limp German calf, 7s.; limp morocco, 7s. 6d.

THE FACE of the DEEP. A Devotional Commentary on the Apocalypse. By CHRISTINA G. ROSSETTI, Author of "Time Flies," &c. Demy 8vo, cloth boards, 7s. 6d.

THE LIFE of GEORGE HERBERT of BEMERTON.

